Mr. REED. Mr. President, we are unable to hear the Senator on this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators to the right of the Chair are unable to hear the colloquy taking place between the two Senators on the other side.

Mr. ROOT. I was calling the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that there have always been going on double sets of proceedings under the penal statutes of the United States—proceedings for forfeiture, proceedings civil in form, and proceedings for punishment criminal in form, and I was just referring him to the well-known case of United States against Boyd. In that case, which was decided by the Supreme Court about 30 years ago, a firm of glass importers in New York had imported glass on which they fraudulently made an exemption under Government contract of a much larger amount than they were entitled to. The glass was seized, forfeiture proceedings were brought, and the glass was forfeited. At the same time they were indicted, tried, and convicted. The Supreme Court held that the forfeiture proceeding was a penal proceeding, and reversed the judgment on account of the improper admission of evidence, because they had been compelled to testify against themselves, but the conviction stood, a conviction which came after the judgment in the forfeiture proceedings, and the defendants served out their term in the penitentiary. Now, that is practically the situation which we have here.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from New York does not, I think, quite understand the point of my suggestion. I do not think there is any constitutional repugnance between a suit for such a forfeiture as is here provided on the part of an informer and a contemporaneous criminal prosecution by the Government. I think both may constitutionally proceed at the same time and both go to their end. My suggestion was that this proposed statute, however, precludes it. This bill seems to me to mean that if one proceeding is instituted the other can not be. That part of my objection would be entirely removed if the proposed statute were to provide that the two proceedings could go on at the same time, but unfortunately the two clauses are coupled together with the disjunctive "or," and, as I construe this language, the pendency of one, or certainly a judgment in one, would wholly bar the prosecution of the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has indicated that he intends to remove all doubt on that subject by offering an amendment to strike out "or" and insert "and."

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WHITE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know he had the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Of course the objection which the Senator from Iowa makes could be remedied, as suggested, by striking out "or" and inserting "and"; but I still think that is wholly unnecessary, because a civil action to recover a forfeiture is never a bar to a criminal action unless it is specifically made so by the provisions of the statute. The rule of evidence is different in each case.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I agree to that, but my very point is that this statute does make one——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there not much force in the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri that a statute of this kind is to be construed strictly, and no inference as to extending it can be indulged?

Mr. CUMMINS. The reason I did not offer the amendment suggested by the Senator is that I understand there is an amendment pending offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The friends of the provision are entitled to perfect it before any motion to strike out any part of it is submitted to the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, Mr. President, I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood it was the purpose of the Senator from South Carolina to do so.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I am not ordinarily in favor of statutes giving penalties to informers. I am rather opposed to it. I think such statutes should be enacted only when there is a real necessity for them. I think, however, that the provision that is sought to be stricken from the bill by the amendment under consideration is a proper one in this legislation.

The matter has been discussed from the standpoint of the undesirability of having prosecutions carried on by informers. That really is not the main purpose of the provision; neither is that the main effect to be accomplished by it. The statute will be more useful in deterring persons from violating it, and will accomplish more good in that way than in any other. Persons who contemplate violating this statute by importing contract labor will understand from the beginning that it is in the power of the party with whom they contract to punish them for it; whereas, if there is no such provision in the bill, then they will readily understand that it is next to impossible to convict them or punish them under the statute.

As has been suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], this is no innovation. Such provisions are contained in the statutes of nearly every State of the Union. Certainly they are found in the Federal Statutes. It is no innovation. Neither is it any change in principle, Mr. President.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will suggest to the Senator that this precise provision has been in operation since the passage of the law of 1897, and has not given rise to any trouble.

Mr. WHITE. Nor is it likely to give any trouble. As the Senator from Georgia has just stated, it has been in our immigration statutes, and the effect of this amendment will be to remove it from the statute. As I have already stated, the main purpose of this provision is to prevent violations of the law, and that is what is sought to accomplish. It is never the desire of government to punish. The primary object is to prevent law violations. The adoption of the provision of the bill sought to be stricken by the amendment will have that effect—to prevent violations of the law.

As I was about to say, this is not new in principle. Since the common law of nearly every State in the Union has been changed so as to allow parties interested in the result of suits to testify, the same principle is involved—that they can make money, that they can enrich themselves, by swearing falsely. Any plaintiff, or any defendant for that matter, in any suit in almost any State in the Union and the Federal courts of the country, has the same temptation held out to him that it is charged will be held out under the provision in question. Not only that, but under the general practice of the common law in the State and in the Federal courts immunities are offered daily to persons who are guilty of crime with a view of obtaining evidence to convict others who are no more guilty than they are. I should like to know how the gunmen in New York would have been convicted if it had not been for the immunity given the witnesses by the district attorney, Mr. Whitman.

Mr. President, I have had some experience with situations of this kind. I have seen immigrants who were induced to come to this country under misrepresentations as to conditions here, the conditions being exactly the reverse of what they were told the conditions were when they were induced to come—conditions that they were not willing to encounter or combat. But what were they to do? They were in a strange country, destitute of means, absolutely within the power of the party who imported them, and therefore they had to submit to and accept the situation as they found it, not as it had been represented to them. Unless immigrants are interested in some way in bringing the guilty parties to justice, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has already stated, it is next to impossible to sustain an action against the guilty parties. If these foreigners themselves are to be denied the right to participate in the recovery, then there will be no means of obtaining the evidence except to go to the country from which they emigrated, and then you encounter the difficulty of finding a witness who is familiar with the contract.

So I say, Mr. President, that the provision sought to be stricken from the bill ought to be allowed to remain, and that the amendment itself should not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, to strike out the word "or," beginning in line 19, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is not the amendment now before the Senate, is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; that perfects the text. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is to strike out a certain proposition that in a way is dependent upon that amendment. If the Senator will read Rule XVIII, he will see that it sustains the Chair's view about the matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course I shall not stop to discuss the matter, because it is not very important; but I desire to suggest to the Senator from Iowa and to the Senate and to the chairman of the committee that if the amendment I have offered is adopted I shall offer another amendment, which I think will meet the views of all and cover the case and yet leave the control of the matter in the Department of Justice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can only deal with such amendments as have been brought to the attention of the Chair.

Mr. REED. To be sure. I only wanted to suggest it before we vote on this amendment.

The further amendment to which I refer is to add at the end of line 18 the following:

The Department of Justice may, from any penalties recovered, pay rewards to persons, other than Government employees, who may furnish information leading to the recovery of any such penalties, or to the arrest and punishment of any person as hereinafter in this section provided.

Then, on line 19, page 14, strike out the word "or" and insert, "Provided, That," so that the section would read:

Provided, That for every violation of the provisions hereof the person violating the same may be prosecuted—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say to the Senator from Missouri that it is customary to give the Senate the benefit of the text as it will stand after the motion to strike out and insert has been presented to the Senate. The Chair was only dealing with such things as were brought to his attention.

Mr. REED. Yes. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that it would be better, instead of striking out the word "or" and inserting the word "and," to employ the language "Provided, That."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to be clearly understood. I am against the provision even if it is amended by the insertion of the word "and." I intend to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. I think it would be very unwise to allow any informer to bring a suit in his own name, control the suit, and enjoy the proceeds of it; but if the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri fails, then I am very anxious that the law shall not have the effect that I fear it will have if the word "or" is retained.

Mr. REED. Do I understand, then, that the Senator from Iowa did not offer the amendment to strike out "or" and insert "and," but merely suggested it in his remarks?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I offered the amendment.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I think it ought to be adopted so as to end that part of it, anyhow. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri in any event.

Mr. REED. I desire, then, to move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as follows: Strike out the word "or" and insert the words "Provided That."

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated at the desk so that the Senate will understand it.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 19, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, to strike out "or" and insert "and," by inserting, instead of "or," the words "Provided, That."

Mr. CUMMINS. That is entirely satisfactory to me. It means the same thing, in my opinion.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Missouri on the table.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I hope the last motion will not prevail, because I am sure that if the Senator from South Carolina carefully read this language in section 5, on page 14, he would recognize that the phraseology is much improved by adopting the words suggested by the Senator from Missouri, rather than by substituting "and" for "or." There is a plain, manifest improvement in the phraseology.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. He has a right to do that, because Rule XXI provides that—

Any motion or resolution may be withdrawn or modified by the mover at any time before a decision, amendment, or ordering of the yeas and nays.

None of those things has happened. The question is on laying on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, and accepted by the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary suggests that a matter of punctuation might be attended to, by striking out the semicolon after the words "United States" and inserting a colon. Unless there is objection, that will be done.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to make a statement so that those who are present will understand the situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indulge the Chair long enough to state the pending motion? The pending motion is the motion offered by the Senator from Missouri to strike out the language indicated by him.

Mr. REED. I think this language should be stricken out for the reasons that I have offered, and that other Senators have offered, because, first, it places the jurisdiction and control of this litigation in the hands of the first person who may rush into court and takes it out of the hands of the Federal authorities. Second, it is an action in which the informer, or the person bringing the suit—not necessarily the informer—gets all of the penalty. It is liable to be productive of both blackmail and perjury. Third, it is a qui tam action; and while that kind of action, as we all know, is an old action, nevertheless it is an action that has come into disrepute, is but seldom employed, and this is the most extreme example of it I have ever known.

There is, however, possibly some reason why the Department of Justice, being placed and kept in control of this litigation, should be empowered to offer rewards. So, if the amendment I have offered is adopted, in order to meet that view I shall offer the amendment I read a moment ago, empowering the Department of Justice, out of any penalties which may be recovered, to pay such rewards as the Department of Justice may think proper. That keeps the litigation in the hands of the Federal authorities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. REED and Mr. LODGE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND'S name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] from the city. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably detained at his home to-day on account of a death in his family. I will let this statement stand for the day.

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is not present. I was not able to secure a transfer, so I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I am released by him on this vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The roll call resulted—yeas 18, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Clapp	Johnson	O'Gorman	Sterling
Culberson	Jones	Overman	Thornton

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] the yeas are 18 and the nays 29. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] are present in the Chamber and failed to vote because they were paired. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. I desire to make a motion relating to this particular matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator please, I should like to take not more than three or four minutes, as I shall have to leave the Chamber.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have refrained from giving any expression of my views on any of the matters in the bill only as I have been compelled to vote upon the proposed amendments. There are one or two matters in the bill which to me seem to be vicious and compel me to vote against its final passage, and I desire to place upon the record in a very few minutes my reasons for voting against the bill itself.

Mr. President, the virtue or vice of any bill or legislative act is to be determined not so much by the declaration of some abstract principle as by its effect. I desire to look into the effect of this bill for a single moment. We have now adopted the illiteracy clause. What is the effect of the adoption of that clause when taken in connection with another clause which exempts a certain class of people from the illiteracy test?

I presume, Mr. President, that it is the object of the illiteracy test to protect American citizenship. If the object is to protect American citizenship, I do not see that it makes any great difference to us what may be the laws affecting people on the other side of the ocean; but here when we adopt our exception to the illiteracy test we immediately abandon the very purpose of that test in the bill, so far as it affects certain religionists or certain nationalities.

Let us see the effect of this provision. There is the general provision of the bill that all aliens over 16 years of age, showing a capacity of reading, who can not read the English language or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish, shall be excluded from entering into this country. Then on the very next page we have this provision:

> That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or the Secretary of Labor that they emigrated from the country of which they were last permanent residents for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution.

Mr. President, we all know what the Russian laws are. We all know that those of the religious faith—if you may call it a faith—called the Jewish are by those laws compelled to remain within certain sections of the Russian Empire. It makes little difference whether we regard the word "Jewish" as being descriptive of the religion of the Hebrew or whether it is descriptive of the race itself as descendants from Judea, the effect is the same; it operates only upon a particular class of people whom we call Jews.

Now, let us see the effect of this. We say by this legislation that if an Italian who is a Roman Catholic can not read or write he is an undesirable citizen, but if a Russian who happens to be a Jew can not read or write he becomes a desirable citizen because he is persecuted. I think we must admit that when any law of Russia is directed against the people of a race, and the religion and the race are conjoined, so that they have not the same right as every other people of that country, it is religious persecution. Therefore the immigrant who is attempting to enter into this country need only establish the statutory law of Russia in order to get free access, whether he can read or write or not.

Not only this, Mr. President, but what does this proposed law say to the German from Russia? We all know that an immense number of Germans something over 100 years ago settled around Odessa. Quite a number of them can not read or write. If that class of citizens who are members of the Greek Orthodox Church or of any Protestant denomination, or the Catholic denomination, seek to enter this country, we hold against them the test of illiteracy, but if one of the Jewish faith comes from Warsaw and seeks to enter this country the illiteracy bar will not be held against him because his race or his religion has been persecuted.

Mr. President, I did what I could to make this bill fair and just. I do not believe very much in the illiteracy clause, anyway. I do not think that the mentality of an individual whose traits of character have been impressed on him through tens and thousands of centuries of heredity is going to change his nature in the slightest degree by becoming capable of reading or writing. It is not an art which requires an immense amount of intellectuality for a person to be fully capable in it. Instead of making him a better citizen, if his characteristics are wrong, it enables him the better to become a bad citizen.

Now, let us admit the real truth of the provisions of this act. You raise the illiteracy test not because you believe it is a just and fair test, and while you may argue upon that basis, your real purpose is to keep out a certain number of people, desirable or undesirable. You say there are too many immigrants coming from southern Europe and you desire to keep them out. You can not make legislation for immigrants from one country and different legislation for immigrants coming from another country, because in one section of the country there are more illiterates than there are in the northern sections of Europe. Yet you attempt to accomplish this by keeping out a greater number by your illiteracy test, rather than by really defending American citizenship, by raising that test.

Mr. President, I wish the Russian Jew to come into this country if he is a good man, and I want our gates to be swung wide open for him. I equally want the Italian Roman Catholic to have exactly the same right that the Russian Jew has, so far as the gates of our ports are concerned. Yet you by your legislation say to the one, Notwithstanding you would make a very good citizen, you shall not enter into the United States; notwithstanding the fact that you might be the very best citizen, because you profess in reality a different faith from that mentioned as an exception and have been persecuted, you shall not enter through the portals to this land of promise.

Mr. President, the only way to avoid this injustice in our bill is by the adoption of the amendemnt that was offered and voted down which gives every race and every religionist exactly the same right. I myself can see no difference between the Russian who is not a Jew and the Russian who is a Jew coming to this country. We have a great many Russians in my State who are of the Greek Orthodox Church and many of them members of other churches. They are among our best citizens in developing the country. We want them here; we have no objection to them; but what we do object to and what I object to is saying that they shall not enter if they are illiterate, while their brother, professing a different religion or of a different race, may enter into the United States, though he is illiterate. In other words, the illiteracy clause ought to apply to every foreign citizen seeking entrance into this country or it ought not to apply to any of them, and because of the injustice of the proposed law as it now stands, I shall be satisfied myself to vote against its enactment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has a matter to offer.

Mr. REED. The amendment I desire to offer relates directly to the matter just passed upon, and if it will be equally agreeable to the Senator from Massachusetts, I should like to offer that amendment and let the Senate vote upon it.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out in section 5, page 14, line 14, the following language:

Or by any person——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Missouri pardon me a moment? Mr. President, I had offered an amendment which was pending which precedes in the bill the one the Senator is about to offer, and if the Senator will pardon me just one moment, I want to make an explanation in connection with it and then to withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that there is no such amendment pending, so far as the Chair is advised at the desk.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment was pending at page 9, line 12, after the word "prosecution." It was printed as an amendment intended to be offered and is upon the desk. Since that time the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], a member of the committee, has offered an amendment upon the same subject to come at a subsequent part of the bill. His amendment, in my opinion, is more specific, better, and reaches the object better and is in better phraseology. I therefore desire to withdraw mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission will be granted unless objection is made. The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED. In order that the Senate may understand it, I desire to state my amendment. I move to strike out of the bill the following language, appearing on page 14 and beginning with line 14:

Or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor in his own name and for his own benefit, including any such aliens thus offered or promised employment as aforesaid.

And to insert in lieu of said language, at the end of line 18, page 14, the following:

The Department of Justice may from any fines or penalties recovered pay rewards to the persons, other than Government employees, who may furnish information leading to the recovery of any such penalties or to the arrest and punishment of any person as hereinafter in this section provided.

Mr. President, that places the payment of the reward and the control of the litigation where it ought to be, namely, in the hands of the Department of Justice. It empowers that department to use a portion of, or, if they see fit, all, the penalties for the purpose of securing the information, but it avoids the objectionable practice of private individuals bringing suits and recovering penalties for their own benefit, and bringing the suits without the control of the Department of Justice.

Moreover, it adds to the bill this useful provision: Under the bill as it now stands the Department of Justice is not authorized to pay any reward to the man who brings information and causes the arrest of any person under the criminal provision of the act. The law is deficient in that respect, and it would supply it.

I have stated the matter, and that is all I desire to say.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now move the amendment to which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] referred. I have changed two words in it—in line 8 the words "take up," because that term is used generally in connection with our public lands, to the word "purchase."

I desire to say in regard to this amendment that it is carefully drawn for the purpose of permitting a limited class of Belgians who have been expelled from their own country to come here. It is necessary that they should be agricultural, and they would be, as a matter of fact, chiefly of the market-gardening class. An association or corporation has been formed to bring those persons here. The plan is to bring only families and to settle them in communities. It is strictly guarded. If it is desired to do anything for those unfortunate people, nothing could be more carefully guarded than this amendment. They must be agricultural immigrants; they must come here during the course of the European war or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, and they must come prepared to purchase land. The association or corporation is engaged in helping them. There are 25,000 Belgians in England, and they are scattered all through the countries where they have taken refuge.

Mr. ROOT. There are about a million in Holland.

Mr. LODGE. There are about a million in Holland, as the Senator from New York suggests; and among them there is a large number of men and women whose whole life has been given to agriculture, chiefly, as I have said, market gardening. This corporation or association is prepared to help them to purchase land and stock it sufficiently and give them sufficient buildings to begin as a community, removing in that way any tendency of loneliness to seek their compatriots in one of the larger cities. I move the amendment and ask that it be read.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may, I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts why he would extend this privilege to a Belgian who was engaged in agricultural pursuits and not extend it to another who might be engaged in manufacturing or other pursuits.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me we may well be careful how we enlarge the provision. The requests which came from the Belgian committees, the people interested in them, are embodied precisely in my amendment.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator a question. There happens just now to be a committee, as I understand the Senator, having under consideration a plan to relieve certain of the Belgian people. That committee plan is to take them to farms—a most admirable plan and one we can all give our hearty assent to—but suppose that two months from now, or the day after to-morrow, another committee, or this same committee, desires to furnish equal assistance to Belgians who are not farmers, but who are highly desirable as citizens, and who have certain arts and industries in which it is said they excel. Should we close the doors upon those people and should we so enact our legislation that other plans not yet developed will be cut off? Is it not possible—I am asking a somewhat complicated question—to frame this amendment so that these people may be assisted to come here whatever their occupation, and still throw sufficient safeguards around the amendment to prevent any abuse growing up under it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate does not know what the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts is. Before recognizing any other Senator, the Chair will direct the Secretary to read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE is, on page 12, line 18, after the word "guests," to insert:

Provided, That the provisions of this act relating to the illiteracy test, contract labor, or induced or assisted immigration shall not apply to agricultural immigrants from Belgium who come to the United States during the course of the present European war, or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said Belgian immigrants come prepared to take up land in the United States and become American citizens.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think we may well be content to do this. If we make the provision universal and general, I am not sure that we should get these people, and we might have a great many come here who would at once become a public charge. Moreover, the agricultural people are the ones who have suffered most. They have lost all their property; they have lost their opportunity in life; they have lost absolutely the work and the means of doing the work which they can do only in that one form. Those who are operatives engaged in manufacturing industries have no difficulty, and will have no difficulty in the future, certainly, in finding employment, because the industries in which they are engaged exist everywhere. We all know, moreover, that it is desirable to encourage agricultural immigration, and I think it is wiser to limit the provision than to make it too general. If we make it too general, I am afraid we may lose everything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How do the provisions of the Senator's amendment reconcile themselves with the most-favored-nation clause which is contained in most of our treaties?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suppose it may be said that there are several things in this bill which might possibly be brought under the favored-nation clause, but I think there would be some difficulty in bringing this precise amendment under it, because we impose a number of conditions which could not be fulfilled by the other nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one that could not be fulfilled; they could not come from Belgium. But suppose a German should present himself here?

Mr. LODGE. If you could find another country in precisely that situation, undoubtedly that objection would apply; but practically that is impossible.

Mr. POMERENE. This thought has suggested itself to my mind since the Senator has presented the amendment: I take it that this is not an effort to extend any privilege to Belgium as a kingdom or as a nation?

Mr. LODGE. Not at all.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly not. There are Germans, there are Frenchmen, there are Austrians, there are British subjects who are no more responsible for conditions that prevail in their respective countries than are the Belgians for the conditions that now affect them. I am now speaking of individuals. That being the case, why should a privilege of this kind be extended to the nationals of one nation and not to the nationals of other nations who may be similarly circumstanced?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when the nationals, subjects or citizens, of any other of these countries reach the condition of Belgium and of the Belgians, then I think we ought to do it. There is a whole population, practically, of 7,000,000 people who have been almost swept out of existence; their entire country is and has been for months a battle field, and they have been forced into exile. Entire towns and cities have been depopulated, and people wholly innocent——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I desire, with the permission of the Senator from Ohio, to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio, the Chair understands, yields.

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If it is the condition that has arisen in Belgium that we are dealing with, and not the causes that led up to it—if the distressed condition of the Belgians has been the cause of the proposed amendment, would it not be equally pertinent as to certain distressed Italians who have nothing? These Belgians have nothing, and somebody has got to provide means for them to buy farms. When they come here you can not make them go on the farms; once they are here and naturalized they will do as they please. Why could not that same thing occur if subjects of Italy should come and some corporation should picture to us the distressed condition of those Italians and say they would bring them here and put them on farms?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Italy has not been touched by the hand of war at all, while the whole world recognizes the condition of Belgium is different from that of any other country; it is different from anything we have ever seen. I am not going into the merits or the demerits of the question at all; but here are a people who have been exiled by the million from their country, who are being supported in Holland, in England, and here by charity. They are thrown on the charity of the world; their case is wholly different from that of the French or of the Germans or of the English or of the Russians, who have powerful Governments and large portions of their territory untouched by the hand of war.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, with all due respect to the learned Senator from Massachusetts, his answer to my first question was that this is not extending a special privilege to the Belgians as a nation or to the Belgian Kingdom. I concede that to be so; but now the Senator takes the position that because the misfortune which has been visited upon Belgium is greater in extent than that which has been visited upon any other nation, therefore we should give this privilege to the individual Belgians. My thought is while it is true that the Belgians have suffered—and words can not portray the extent to which they have suffered—yet at the same time that we are extending this privilege to the individual Belgians, there are individual Frenchmen, there are individual Germans, there are individual subjects of Great Britain who have suffered to the same extent. The Chair very pertinently put the question as to how we may distinguish here as between the nationals of one country and those of another. That is the thought that troubles me.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suppose that the nationals of another country who can prove the same facts might, if they see fit, raise the question of the favored-nation clause; I think it is very doubtful whether it would be sustained; but if it is necessary to avoid these objections, which to my surprise seem to arise here against this limited act of charity to those stricken people, then I will withdraw my amendment and ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to present his amendment, and I will support that instead of mine. People are afraid to name Belgium or Belgians in a matter of this sort; they are afraid it will jar on somebody's feelings. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As the Senator from Mississippi has already accepted the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from South Carolina will not avoid this subject in that way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion made by the Senator from South Carolina is not debatable. The Senator from South Carolina moves to lay the amendment on the table. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it; the noes have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the chief differences between the amendment as offered by me and the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] are these two: In my amendment I did not mention——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Mississippi offered any amendment? If the Senator from Massachusetts has withdrawn his amendment, there is nothing pending which can be debated.

Mr. LODGE. I have not withdrawn my amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if I may be permitted to make a statement, the chief differences between the two amendments are these: The Senator from Massachusetts, in his amendment, specifically names the Belgians, while, in my amendment, I did not name them, but described them so that the description could not apply to anybody but to the Belgians. Then I relieved them solely from the literacy test, whereas his amendment would relieve them from the assisted-immigration test. I think, perhaps, that my amendment is a little better in the first regard, while it is not nearly so good in the second respect. I described those persons in this way:

In cases where the territory of their country had received recognition by belligerent powers as neutral territory and where their land was invaded for no other reason than that their Government refused to consent to be invaded.

That description can apply to nobody but the Belgians.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] wants to know why the Belgians are in a different attitude. That is the reason why they are in a different attitude. Every national is affected by the act of the government of his country. The Governments of England, Germany, France, Austria, Russia, Servia, and Turkey have gone into this war; none of them were forced into it; and when I say that none of them were forced into it, I mean that none of them were physically forced into it; but Belgium was literally forced into it. It might have been a question of honor or of self-defense after a while in the other cases, but in the case of Belgium the request was made that she herself should violate her solemnly given obligation to defend her own neutrality, and notice was given that if she did not consent to violate her plighted word to defend her own neutrality, then she should be invaded. She was invaded, and the armies of both sides have fought all over her country. Her people desired war with nobody; they committed no crime under the sun except refusing to consent to be invaded, refusing to put themselves on record down through all eternity as cowards, but for no other reason the armies of both sides have devastated her soil and destroyed her factories. The farmers of Belgium have suffered more than any others. Their cattle and stock are gone, their agricultural implements are gone, the villages in which the farmers lived and from which they have been accustomed to go out to cultivate their fields are in many cases totally destroyed, and the people are exiles in Holland and in England. The Southern Commercial Congress is prepared, or thinks it is prepared, to place a great many of them upon cheap and good lands in the South. There is another corporation which is prepared to place some of them in the West, as I understand.

These people are in a totally different position from any other people in civilized times. There was a time, long, long years ago, when very many people very frequently were brought into that condition, when hordes of people, coming to the West from the East and to the South from the North, thought they had a right to overrun everything or anybody in order to find for themselves new homes and better opportunities for the future, but this is the first instance in modern civilized times of a people ever having suffered in this way.

I am criticizing nobody; I am absolutely neutral so far as this war is concerned, as every American ought to be. I recognize no interest of any description or any policy that has any right to appeal to me except American interest and American policies; but these people, men, women, and children, have appealed to my sympathy because they have suffered for no fault of their own or of their Government. They have been ground between the upper and nether millstones of warring nationalities when they themselves wanted to keep at peace and their Government wanted to keep at peace with all men and all nations.

In response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts, I suggest that perhaps if instead of the word "Belgium" in his amendment he would substitute the description found in my amendment and then leave the remainder of his amendment, it would be better than either mine or his now is, and that would free the amendment from the objection suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. Then nobody could invoke the favored-nation clause, because every nation in the world coming within this description would have this provision applied to its nationals.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator to suggest that I strike out the word "Belgium" in the amendment which I have proposed?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; and to insert "from any country where the territory of their country had received recognition by belligerent powers as neutral territory and where their land was invaded for no other reason than that their Government refused to consent for it to be invaded."

Mr. LODGE. That is, retain the first three lines of my amendment, reading:

Provided, That the provisions of this act relating to the illiteracy test, contract labor, or induced or assisted immigration shall not apply to agricultural immigrants——

Mr. WILLIAMS. "Coming from any country"——

Mr. LODGE (continuing)— coming from any country where the territory of their country had received recognition—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Why would it not accomplish the purpose to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts and send it to conference to be worked out there?

Mr. LODGE. I accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Mississippi, as far as I have power to do so.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be permitted to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Mississippi——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not until we find out what is presented to the Senate. The Chair will ask the Senator from Illinois to indulge him for a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I will read the amendment, Mr. President, if the Secretary will take it down. I move the following as an amendment:

Provided further, That the provisions of this act relating to the illiteracy test, contract labor, or induced or assisted immigration shall not apply to immigrants from any country in cases where the territory of their country had received recognition by belligerent powers as neutral territory and where their land was invaded for no other reason than that their Government refused to consent to be invaded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. "Consent for it to be invaded," it ought to be.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be permitted to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to a feature in his amendment that impresses me as having considerable prospect of embarrassment?

Mr. President, I do not know whether the purpose of the Senator is to have his amendment go to the committee or whether it is to be acted upon at this particular time.

Mr. LODGE. To be acted upon at this time. The committee has long since finished with the bill and this question must be decided here.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I heard some reference to a conference, but, having just come into the room, perhaps I did not gather the reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Illinois that he assumed that the differences between the two Houses would be worked out by the usual conference committee.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I understand what the Chair means. I thought that there had been some previous reference to a conference committee. I will say to the Senator that I regard that it would be a queer thing for us to enact a provision admitting to our shores any people whom we decide have been the subject of invasion by another country when their country was neutral. We could only do so by first deciding that some country had invaded them, and therefore we would render judgment by our action that they had been so invaded. Whatever defense the invading country might have had we would wholly overlook; we would simply render the judgment of the United States that a certain neutral country had been invaded, say, for instance, as in this case, by Germany. We would therefore create, as I see it, a cause of protest on the part of such countries because of our judgment against them, for they may have a reason to contend and may contend that their entrance into the country was dictated by considerations of national defense or of national preservation. I suggest, therefore, instead of the words "where the territory of their country had received recognition by belligerent powers as neutral territory and where their land was invaded," that there be inserted some such language as this, "any country suffering from the results of conflict or war," so as not to call for a judgment on our part that a country had been invaded, when the invaders may take the position that they were defending themselves.

That is the exact attitude, if I may so state to the Senator, who is a learned scholar in matters of foreign policy, which has been taken by many. Prof. Hugo Münsterberg and his colleagues have sent us a book—I have no doubt it is on the Senator's desk—in which it is contended in behalf of Germany, answering the very charge that the friends of Belgium make, that that country was invaded because, as the able Senator from Massachusetts said, it desired to be neutral, that Belgium was upon the eve of cooperating with France to assail Germany.

Whether they are right or wrong as to that, of course we do not know; but the fact that they make that contention I think would suggest that it would not be prudent for us to set up as a condition precedent a finding that a certain Government had been guilty of having invaded Belgium before we may allow Belgium or any other country to avail itself of the benefits of this act.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator has been discussing a portion of the amendment which is not mine. My amendment did not contain the words which he has been discussing. Those are in the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to say to the Senator that I just came into the Chamber and heard it as it was being read.

Mr. LODGE. I expressed my willingness to adopt the other, as objection was made to my amendment because it mentioned Belgium. We apparently have become so tender that we can not even mention Belgium and the sufferings of the Belgian people without fear that somebody will be offended.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator abandon the use of the term "Belgium" because he fears that under our treaties we would be embarrassed by its use?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; I do not think that the favored-nation clause——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would personally be very much gratified to take down every barrier between the Belgians and the United States and allow them to come in. I think we have in passing upon immigration questions to determine our wishes and our interests. I think the record of these people has been such that we may well be glad to hail them as fellow citizens; their condition certainly appeals to us, and I would myself, if we can legally do so, be delighted to remove every barrier and bring them here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will pardon me——

Mr. LODGE. I think I have the floor; I yielded to the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I do not think the favored-nation clause would have any practical operation if we name Belgium in the amendment unless some other country could produce immigrants to whom the same conditions applied. In that event they could undoubtedly make a point under the favored-nation clause, but I do not think it would hold or is a practical question, because this is temporary and relates to peculiar circumstances. However, there was objection made in the Senate that we should hurt somebody's feelings if we named Belgium, and I tried to avoid that objection, in the hope that we could get something we could all agree upon by taking the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, which names nobody, but contents itself with a description. I am inclined to think that my own form of amendment is on the whole the best and that the descriptive terms would require decision on international relations upon which they ought not to pass.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts while he is still upon the floor that there are a number of us who would very much prefer to vote flatly for the admission of the Belgians, provided the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who are more familiar with the subject than most of us, will advise us that no treaty complications would be produced by reason of using the specific term "Belgium."

Mr. LODGE. If you make it applicable to all Belgians by name without any of the conditions embodied in my amendment, why of course then you open questions under the favored-nation clause.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One moment, Mr. President. If you leave it as I have it with certain conditions put upon it others can not raise that question unless they are prepared to fulfill the same conditions.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield the floor, or just yield for an interruption?

Mr. LODGE. No; I yield for an interruption. I have no right to yield the floor.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not think there need be any apprehension under the favored-nation clause of our treaties. I do not think those treaties stand in the way of the adoption of this amendment at all, any more than they would stand in the way of an exceptional or occasional permit to allow particular individuals to come into the country.

This amendment, as drafted by the Senator from Massachusetts, and equally the amendment as framed by the Senator from Mississippi, is an amendment applying to a specific situation. It is not general; it is not permanent. It permits Belgians to come here in the course of the present European war, or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war. I read from the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I prefer the form of the Senator from Massachusetts to the form of the Senator from Mississippi because both of the suggestions of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and of the preference of the Senator from Ohio. I think it is much less objectionable to name the country than it is to describe the country by enumerating certain facts regarding which, as the Senator from Illinois well says, there may be controversy. I think, with the Senator from Georgia, that we had better say what we mean with regard to the admission of immigrants from Belgium.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question, if it is agreeable.

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Is there not danger that while this description now simply covers Belgium, in the future conditions might arise which would make it fit other countries whose immigrants will not be so desirable?

Mr. ROOT. The Senator means, I presume, if the form suggested by the Senator from Mississippi were adopted?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. That may be a reason why the form of the Senator from Massachusetts is preferable. I think, as it relates to a particular situation, dealing with a particular exigency which is recognized by every nation on earth, there is no need for us to be apprehensive of violating the favored-nation clauses of our treaties.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. Now, let me say one further thing, and I will refer to something the Senator from Ohio has said. I will yield to him now or I will say what I have to say first, just as he prefers.

Mr. POMERENE. Just in connection with what the Senator from New York was saying when this colloquy began, I should like to say that the language of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts limited this privilege to Belgians who were engaged in agriculture; in other words, to agricultural immigrants. Now, I saw the technical objection, so far as naming any particular country was concerned; but the trouble which has come upon Belgians who are engaged in agriculture has also befallen those who are engaged in lace making or in any other manufacturing industry, and I was not able to see why we should extend to a Belgian farmer a privilege that we were not willing to extend to a Belgian mechanic or artisan of one kind or another. More than that, as we were taking up this particular subject, it seemed to me that we could extend our hospitality to those who had suffered the horrors of that awful war, whether they were Germans or Austrians or French or British or Belgians. That was my position.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, let me tell the Senator from Ohio one reason for making this provision regarding Belgium. The people of Belgium no longer have a country. It has been taken away from them. They no longer have a Government to watch over them or provide for them. Their Government has been destroyed and exiled. They are wandering over the face of the earth without a home.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. One moment; I will not yield for a moment. There never has been, since the foundation of our Government, a people to whom the hearts of America have turned with as deep compassion or as strong a desire to give relief to suffering. There are no other people in the world without a Government to care for them. There are no other people in the world without a country.

It is but a few years since I passed through Belgium, and looked upon either side upon a garden. The whole country was a great garden of beauty and luxuriance, such as I had never imagined. The evidences of industry and thrift, of the existence of all those qualities which make a nation prosperous and happy, existed there to a degree that I have never seen surpassed anywhere in the world.

Now, those fields, which were so fertile, have been beaten down by the passing and repassing of armies. Those villages and towns have been destroyed. Two million of the people are exiles in foreign lands; without homes, for their homes have been destroyed; without means of living, for the fields that they tilled and from which they earned so rich harvests are covered by armies, and have been beaten down into a desert.

We are engaged in discussing a measure for the protection of the United States against undesirable immigrants. The proposal of the Senator from Massachusetts is that, while we are closing the door against them, we shall specially provide that we do not close the door against these homeless people, who have illustrated the highest and the best qualities of citizenship; that we shall except them and permit another means of succoring their distress, through the soil of the United States. Millions of dollars are being paid by our people to feed in their own land those that remain, and in Holland those that have left their land. Every day the stream continues of thousands of dollars, but that is temporary. The only way in which they can really be effectively succored is to enable them to begin producing. The production of the country has stopped, and this proposes to enable them to begin production in America.

There never has been, sir, within modern history a case like this. It is exceptional. It appeals to our best judgment in seeking to frame our law so that it will permit the entrance of the best material for citizenship, and it appeals to our noblest sympathies and the noblest sympathies of all the people of the United States. I think we should treat it as an exceptional case, and that it is better not to try to pretend that we are making a general provision applicable to all people.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to do so, I will allow my amendment to stand as originally offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well; then the direct proposition can be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When I first rose, it will be remembered that I suggested that in my opinion the amendment as drawn by the Senator from Massachusetts was more specific and better covered the case. I afterwards suggested the modifications merely to satisfy certain minds in the Senate. That was merely a tactical reason. I am now of the opinion that the amendment will be just as strong, if not stronger, in the shape in which he has offered it than in the shape in which I offered it, and I therefore very willingly withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that my amendment as originally offered may be the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be considered the pending question.

Mr. LODGE. The pending question is my amendment, with the single modification of "purchase" instead of the words "take up."

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask to have the amendment stated again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 18, after the word "guests," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the provisions of this act relating to the illiteracy test, contract labor, or induced or assisted immigration shall not apply to agricultural immigrants from Belgium who come to the United States during the course of the present European war or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said Belgium immigrants come prepared to purchase land in the United States and become American citizens.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I realize the danger and the difficulty of making exceptions in a bill like this, but I am inclined to favor the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. I prefer the amendment with the word "agricultural" in it to the amendment without it, because I do not know anything at all regarding the people engaged in factories and other occupations over there; but I had occasion, on the 2d of August last, to observe something of these Belgium farmers.

I was in Paris at the hotel facing the Gare du Nord Station, and the streets leading to that station had been roped off, so that there was an area of 3 or 4 acres in front of the station, an open space, into which there came on Saturday, August 1, and on the night of Saturday, and on Sunday, August 2, something like a thousand of these Belgian farmers. I inquired where they came from and how it was that so many of them seemed to be in France, and I was told that they had been engaged in harvesting in the wheat fields of France. Each of them was carrying his little sack—with his clothes, I suppose—and his scythe and hook which he had been using in harvesting the wheat crop.

I observed them over Saturday night and over Sunday as they were camped in this area awaiting trains to take them to their homes. They were proceeding as rapidly as possible to what they considered the protection of their homes and their country. I never saw a more orderly, a more sober, courteous, manly set of men anywhere, and I am quite sure that men of that kind would be an acquisition, especially to our agricultural industry in this country.

For that reason, together with sympathy for some of the views which have been expressed here, I am inclined to favor this amendment, and shall vote for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to suggest an amendment to the amendment to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. His amendment provides that these people shall be admitted "if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said Belgian immigrants come prepared to purchase land in the United States and become American citizens." I believe that ought to be "purchase privately owned lands."

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I make that suggestion, Mr. President, because it might interfere with our public-land laws if it were not specifically stated.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts accepts the modification suggested by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment as it is offered if we can not broaden it. I should be glad to strike out the term "agricultural" and let it apply to all immigrants, and to strike out the term "take up lands in the United States," so that it would broadly permit Belgian immigrants to come to the United States. They would have that right at any time, but I would not limit it to those who purchased or to those who come prepared to purchase. I would let it read, if I framed it to suit myself—or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said immigrants come prepared to become American citizens.

I move, Mr. President, to strike out the word "agricultural" before "immigrants," and to strike out, after the word "to," in the eighth line, the words "purchase land in the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "agricultural" where it appears before the word "immigrants" in line 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. So that the amendment will read:

Provided, That the provisions of this act relating to the illiteracy test, contract labor, or induced or assisted immigration shall not apply to immigrants from Belgium who come to the United States during the course of the present European war, or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said Belgium immigrants come prepared to become American citizens.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the Senator is going to limit the amendment by the words stricken out by him he ought to strike out all after the word "war," as follows: "If it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that such Belgian immigrants come prepared to become American citizens." I do not think that language ought to be in the amendment. I think, if we adopt the amendment that has been offered by the Senator from Georgia, it certainly will fall under the favored-nation clause, and I believe it will mean the defeat of the amendment. That is my opinion.

Mr. WALSH obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah why, by striking out the word "agricultural" and striking out the provision that they must be prepared to purchase lands, the amendment would fall any more under the favored-nation clause of our treaties than it would fall under the proposed terms of the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, with the amendments suggested by the Senator, it becomes so broad that all Belgians could enter the United States and be relieved from the illiteracy test, the contract-labor provision, and the provision as to induced or assisted immigration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I admit that.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore, I think it certainly would fall under the favored-nation clause of our treaties.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But why would it fall any more under it to let them broadly come in that way than to say that they could come if they were prepared to purchase lands in the United States? If it would fall in the one instance under the favored-nation clause to admit these Belgians broadly, growing out of their conditions incident to the war, if they did not come prepared to purchase lands, would it not equally fall under the restrictions of the favored-nation clause to say that Belgians alone could come if they were prepared to purchase lands?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true as far as the purchase of land is concerned, but that is not true as far as the word "agricultural" is concerned. The lands of the agricultural people of Belgium have been laid waste; their crops have been destroyed; they have been driven from the land. The mechanics and other classes of citizens of Belgium can in many cases secure employment in France, Holland, and England, but the farmer can not. The Belgian mechanic may be in the same position as the mechanics of other belligerent nations; and, if so, to allow them to enter under the proposed amendment certainly would fall, in my opinion, under the favored-nation clause.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If they have all been driven out of Belgium, practically, and are wanderers from their homes, would it not be equally as proper to admit one class as the other?

Mr. SMOOT. What I wished to impress upon the Senate, if I could, was that the agricultural people of Belgium are in an entirely different condition than the agricultural people of any other country; and that being the case, they would not fall under the favored-nation clause, in my opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It can all be properly worded in conference, anyhow.

Mr. SMOOT. And if we take that into consideration, and they are the facts, then it would fall under the favored-nation clause.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia should not prevail—and I shall vote for it myself—and the question recurs upon the amendment as it theretofore stood, I trust the amendment suggested by the Senator from Utah will not prevail. I think it should be left as it is. There is no reason whatever for——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means as I originally drew it, so as to read "purchase land," without saying "privately owned"?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir; because, Mr. President, we want to afford these people an opportunity to purchase agricultural lands, so far as agricultural lands can be purchased, from the Government of the United States, and from the States as well.

In my own State large areas of lands have been transferred by the Government of the United States to the State upon the consideration that the State shall reclaim these lands by works of irrigation under what is known as the Carey Land Act. The State has those lands for sale, and Belgians have already come to the Carey land projects in my State. A large colony have come within the last three years to take over homes upon one of these projects. We are delighted to have them as prospective citizens of our State. They are required to buy these lands from the State, and to enter into contracts with the contractor who carries on the works of irrigation to take water from the irrrigation works. We want to give every opportunity to those people to acquire Carey lands from the State, and thus it would be inadvisable to make the restriction suggested by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I had in mind the purchase of public land, but since he has called attention to the purchase of lands selected under the Carey Act I can see that the amendment suggested by me might interfere with the purchase of such lands. Therefore I will ask that the amendment proposed by me and agreed to may be reconsidered, and I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this amendment, as now presented, seems to me to be a most remarkable one.

I sympathize very much with the reasons given by the eloquent Senator from New York as to why we should help out the Belgians. I would be constrained to vote for an amendment that would carry out the ideas he presented; but this amendment does not do that at all. This amendment starts out by saying that an agricultural Belgian who has been deprived of his home, deprived of his occupation, and driven from his country, shall be permitted to come into this country; but not all of those can come in under the latter part of this remarkable amendment. Only the man who has money can come in.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I am afraid I did not have the good fortune to have the Senator's attention while I explained the amendment. It is drawn in conformity with the request of those persons and associations who are interested in bringing the Belgians here. They furnish the money. They do not expect the Belgians to do it.

Mr. JONES. They are going to buy the land for them, are they?

Mr. LODGE. They are going to buy the lands and stock them. They are prepared to give $2,500 to a family.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think that makes it even worse. I should like to know——

Mr. LODGE. Perhaps it does. It is charity. It may make it even worse.

Mr. JONES. I should like to know who the people composing this committee are, and where they propose to put these Belgians, and why it is that they are not helping some of the shoemakers of Belgium to get into the shoemaking industry in this country and get established there, and furnish them with funds, and furnish them with employment. They are suffering just as much as any agricultural immigrant who may want to come in here.

A man who is deprived of his occupation and deprived of his way of making a living is just as much entitled to help if he works in a factory as the man who works on a farm. If we are going to be generous to these people, let us be generous to them regardless of the occupation they have been following in Belgium, and regardless of the occupation they propose to follow in this country. Let us follow the principles of humanity pointed out so eloquently by the Senator from New York, and help out all of these poor people if they deserve help and assistance

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would like to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts who proposes this amendment to the fact, as I understand it, that Belgium is now an ally of one side in the great conflict in Europe, and in accordance with her pledge she refused to allow her neutrality to be overrun by one of the contending powers. That compact was made with one on the other side in the struggle. Therefore until the conflict shall have ended Belgium is to-day bound to put into her army every able-bodied man she can to sustain the position she now occupies. The Senator's amendment applies to those who during this war come here for agricultural purposes. Certainly none but the aged and those too young to engage in agricultural pursuits could come. Another clause reads "owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war," which, I presume, means to take into consideration their condition when the war shall have terminated. When the war shall be terminated, if it is terminated in favor of the side to which Belgium is a party, then they would go back. But the amendment would be inoperative under any circumstances so far as getting desirable citizens are concerned because of what I a moment ago said; the able-bodied in every walk of life are engaged in the war and will so continue to maintain the high standard held up by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Massachusetts. For that reason I can not see what we are going to gain except to bring from Belgium the decrepit, the old, and families whose heads and whose strong arms are engaged in the conflict.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I thank the Senator from Washington for allowing the interruption.

Mr. JONES. I thought the Senator from South Carolina was going to ask me a question or I would not have yielded, because I have only a word or two more to say with reference to this matter. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts, however, a question as to what he means by agricultural immigrants, whether those who were engaged in agriculture before they come here or who come here saying that they intend to engage in agriculture.

Mr. LODGE. Those engaged in agriculture.

Mr. JONES. In their own country?

Mr. LODGE. In their own country.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me that there might be some question about it, and that if a person were brought here saying he expected to engage in agriculture and wanted to engage in it he would probably be allowed to come in.

Mr. President, I do not just like the idea of passing legislation here to help those who apparently have organized some society to bring people here for their purpose, confining our legislation by terms to simply cover the people they want to bring here.

If we are going to pass this legislation because of our sympathy for the Belgians and the condition they are in, then it seems to me we can not discriminate between two classes of Belgians, the mechanical working class and the agricultural class, and that the reasons so eloquently given by the Senator from New York apply to one just as well as to the other. If we are going to pass this legislation, let us make it apply to all the people of Belgium, who have suffered equally in this terrible struggle. I myself doubt the wisdom of passing it. I would not be inclined to oppose it as a general proposition, but with the limitation put in I shall certainly vote against it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we made these limitations because of representations made to me by those who are interested in helping those unfortunate people to come here and make a new start in life. But I am entirely ready to vote for that amendment if it gives the same right to all immigrants from Belgium under the conditions stated in the amendment. I do not mean the agricultural conditions, but the other conditions. I shall vote for it in any form. If I can not open the door to them all, I will open the door to a part of them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, the appeal for the Belgians strikes we very strongly. Thirty-five years ago there came to the neighborhood of my home town a family of Belgians by the name of Prosper Berkesman. They settled there in my community and afterwards went to Georgia. I think the Senator from Georgia will perhaps recall the name. They went into the culture of fruit on the most extensive scale and they made for themselves great fortunes and a great mark in that community. They brought with them a great retinue of thrifty Belgians to work on their farm, a farm of about 400 acres. Many of those Belgians still remain there. They are a splendid class of citizens, thrifty, honest, frugal, and marvelously industrious. So I should like to do that which I could for the Belgians. Yet my heart and soul are big enough to reach beyond just that little State of Belgium. Why not take in those from Germany, from whence I have said my mother came? I would like to add those in Alsace and Lorraine. Those Provinces have been ravished by this hateful and horrid war.

I should like to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts; but I would suggest, as an amendment to it, to strike out the word "agricultural" and the words "from Belgium." Then it will take in humanity pretty completely.

It is remarkable to me how the Senator's mind seems to have changed. A day or two ago in the Senate the only test which was known to us was illiteracy—an immigrant must be able to read, and if he could not read, even though he was blessed with the form of Apollo, however desirable in the way of physique and general good health, all these things counted for nothing. He might be frugal, he might be honest and faithful; but if he could not read, that was the thing that should bar him out. To-day we learn that he is all right if he has the cash. Thrifty Massachusetts is still after money. Money is the desideratum. If you have the cash, I do not know who has the tract, but you will find that somebody in thrifty Connecticut or thrifty Massachusetts doubtless has the tract to sell to the Belgians. Now, when we have the cash, the purchase money, to pay for all these things, that is preeminent as against literacy—literacy counts for naught.

Now, my friend, I believe your heart is right; but, in all seriousness, if you want to aid down-stricken humanity who have been crushed beneath the heel of military despotism, whether it be in Belgium, whether it be in France, whether it be in Germany, or in the Provinces of Alsace or Lorraine, or in Russia's frigid zone, in Heaven's name, I ask you to strike out the word "agricultural." I am an agriculturist. I love the occupation and realize its great value to this land, but there are a million other avocations which are primarily necessary to the well-being of this country. Take the rich South, with its teeming acres that demand aid, the picking of cotton or the draining of swamps or reclaiming worn-out land, and in a thousand ways a more liberal system of immigration will aid it.

So I say, my friends, with all earnestness, strike out the word "agricultural," strike out the words "from Belgium," and then go forth again and let our Statue of Liberty in the harbor of New York mean what it was put there for—a shining light, a beacon for the downtrodden and the oppressed from every clime with clean bodies, sane minds, honest, faithful purposes, and the rest we can leave to the assimilation of this wonderful country, this God-blessed land.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no objection, as I have already said, to taking out the limitation as to agricultural immigrants or the limitation about the power to purchase lands which, of course, relates only to the relief of the assisted or the induced. The plan was not to plant it in New England. It is not a place to plant agricultural immigrants, I am sorry to say, except in a very few favorite places. The plan was to give them an opportunity in the still unoccupied lands of the South and West. But I am perfectly willing that the limitation should be taken off. However, I am not willing to take out the Belgium limitation. The whole purpose is to aid that particular unfortunate people who are adrift on the world without homes, without country, without a government. It has no meaning if it is broadened to cover the whole world.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not wish to criticize the generous spirit of humanity which moves Senators to offer this amendment. I sympathize with their feelings to the very limit. I am constrained to believe, however, that the possible complications and injuries to our own people and to the immigration law itself more than balance any probable good that can come to a few Belgians through this amendment.

That complications are involved in this proposition no thoughtful Senator will deny. Why the Belgians? Not because they are victims of dreadful war. Millions of other Europeans are similar victims. Are we not treading on at least questionable grounds, if indeed it is not dangerous, when we select a race from among belligerent races for special favors? It is intimated that Belgium has been outraged without provocation. Senators may so believe; the world may so believe; but Germany denies it. Are we to settle that question here? I am sorry that it has been raised.

The amendment annuls the prohibition against foreign contract labor. Where is this to end? It will surely rise to plague our country. And yet it is solemnly proposed to allow some men, organization, or corporation to contract with Belgian agriculturists to come into this country provided they purchase lands. Purchase where and of whom? Why agriculturists? Have not the farmers of the United States hard times enough that especial competition should now be forced upon them? There is no assurance, however, that these immigrants will remain on the farm, and everyone knows that we already have enough idle workmen.

I can not consent, Mr. President, to allow men to come in here to compete solely with farmers. I would not consent at this time to their coming in to compete with labor under existing conditions, because charity begins at home. Why, sir, we are amending our immigration laws for the benefit of our own people. We have quite a problem on our own hands at this minute, a big problem. Help the Belgians, as you ought. Every generous American is now helping that torn and distracted people, but in the meanwhile do not add to the distress of our own people. Do not complicate more our already perplexed foreign relations. Do not undermine our beneficent law against alien contract labor. At a time when a million idle, hungry American laborers are pleading for work in order that they may have bread, let us not add to their misery and despondency by legislating competition upon them. I must know more about this scheme of contracting with foreign laborers and be convinced of the magnitude of the proposed blessings to be conferred by this amendment before I can give it my support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I call for a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Chamberlain	Crawford	Fletcher
Bristow	Clapp	Culberson	Gallinger
Bryan	Clark, Wyo.	Cummins	Gore
Burton	Clarke, Ark.	Dillingham	Gronna

Hardwick	McCumber	Pomerene	Swanson
Hitchcock	McLean	Reed	Thomas
Hughes	Martine N. J.	Robinson	Thornton
James	Myers	Root	Townsend
Johnson	Nelson	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Jones	Norris	Shafroth	Walsh
Kenyon	O'Gorman	Sheppard	Weeks
Kern	Oliver	Simmons	White
Lane	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Lee, Md.	Page	Smith, Md.	Works
Lewis	Perkins	Smith, S. C.
Lippitt	Pittman	Smoot
Lodge	Poindexter	Sterling

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I should be very glad to have a provision in the form and going to the extent suggested by the Senator from Georgia, but I fear that the objection that that would open the door to the introduction of contract labor in the future would imperil the whole provision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I sought the ear of the Chair, just as the Senator from New York rose, for the purpose of stating that I am so much in favor of what is embodied in the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts that I am unwilling to jeopardize it by seeking to obtain what I would be very much gratified to see added by way of amendment. Therefore I wish to withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. I desire to renew the amendment, in substance anyway. I move to strike out the word "agricultural" and all after the word "war" in line 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, it is that exception be made from the exclusion rule of the bill for the Belgians who come here within a certain time to engage in the pursuit of agriculture. I can not see why they should be permitted to come here and engage in the pursuit of agriculture and not in other pursuits. That being the case, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is entirely proper. If the bill is to be amended by the exception suggested, then it should not be confined to agriculture only.

There is no occasion to invite people of other countries to come here and engage in agriculture and agriculture only. I can not understand why such a proposition should be made. Because a man happens to be engaged in farming in Europe, and because of conditions that exist there he becomes in want and we offer our country as an asylum for him, why should not the man who happens to be engaged in some mechanical work, some manufacturing establishment, be invited to come here and find a home as well while the conditions which now oppress him exist?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. JONES. It has been suggested, I understand, that if the word "agricultural" is stricken out, leaving it broader, that that would bring it under the terms of the favored-nation clause. Does the Senator know of anything in that clause to limit it to agricultural people?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I can not understand the purpose of inviting the people of a foreign nation to come here and engage in agriculture exclusively, and that is what it means. It seems to me it is a strange proceeding for the United States Senate to contemplate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it seems to me there is a very sound basis for the distinction concerning which the Senator from Kansas asks information. As I understand it, this law restricting immigration is particularly necessary by reason of the accumulation of people of foreign birth in the great industrial centers. The contract-labor law was originally enacted because those engaged in industrial pursuits in which large numbers of people were employed were in the habit of going abroad to obtain cheap labor and engage in those industries.

I suggested to the Senate a little while ago that we have some of those Belgian immigrants in my State engaged in agriculture. We hope that their number may be swelled very largely, indeed. We should like to hold out some inducement to come to our State to take up unappropriated lands owned by the General Government, as well as lands owned by the State. We do not want to subject ourselves to penalties that are generally imposed by this bill upon those who even offer inducements to people to come out.

On the other hand, Mr. President, the labor market, for instance, of the city of Butte, the chief industry of which is mining, is to-day glutted. We do not care to have the great mining companies in the city of Butte or the steamship companies that might be operating in connection with them offer any special inducements to bring other laboring men to the city of Butte in order to engage in competition with those employed there in the mines.

I suggest that simply to the Senator from Kansas as a very sound basis upon which to make a distinction between those who come here for the purpose of engaging in agricultural pursuits and those who come here to work for wages.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire of the Senator from Montana why it is that the industrial center of Butte is congested with labor while the farms of Montana are not?

Mr. WALSH. It is chiefly because it has been regarded as more profitable, I suppose.

Mr. BRISTOW. Exactly. Then, it is more profitable to work in the other industries of the United States than on the farm. Make it as profitable to follow the business of farming in the United States as it is in other industrial pursuits and you will find there will be more farmers, but instead of that you are inviting foreigners to come here to engage in the least profitable of our industries and excluding them from the industries that have been the most profitable.

Because the American farmer has not an organization here to exercise political power to defend his rights you would flood him with competition from everywhere, from every part of the earth, but there are organizations in industrial centers that can protect those employed in the industries, that can protest against the crowding of their centers with the unemployed, then we can exclude them; but the farming population that has not the political organization to protect its rights is not protected, nor is an effort being made to protect it apparently by the American Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana if it is any more an injury to the American public to create a surplus of labor in the city than it is to increase the surplus of the farming production? Both have a direct bearing upon the compensation for labor. We are already producing in the United States of every character of farm produce far more than we can use in the United States. We have a surplus of every single character of farm produce, and that surplus keeps the prices down except as it is now raised a little above the level because of the war conditions.

Then, if we have to protect labor against surplus because of its influence upon the value of labor, why should we not protect the farmer against more laborers upon the farm, who will increase his surplus of production and thereby diminish the value of his own labor?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to answer the Senator. There are quite a number of organizations in this country engaged in what seems to me a very commendable and praiseworthy effort to get numbers of people in the congested centers of the country to go out upon the farms. I think that ought to be encouraged.

Mr. President, I said some time ago that in all probability the mining center of Butte was congested rather than the agricultural districts, because those who went there thought it was more profitable. I do not agree with them. I think it would be eminently more profitable to them if they went out upon the farms. I rather sympathize with the Senator from North Dakota and with the Senator from Kansas, who are afraid, in the interest of the agriculturists of their own States, that their occupation is going to be overwhelmed with competition. I am very thankful that that sentiment does not prevail in my State at all. We are looking forward with a great deal of comfort to the time when our State will be annually producing, instead of 25,000,000 bushels of wheat, which it now produces, 100,000,000 bushels of wheat. I think I express the sentiments of the farmers of the State of Montana when I say that we are very desirous of having these people come here from Belgium in order to hurry the day when we shall have that production.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have heard this song of "back to the farm" ever since I have been in the Senate. It is an annual song, and its echoes never die, but I have never yet seen any good result from it. Population will always drift to the center of the greatest remuneration for labor; that is a law that you can not change. Make farming pay as well as do other vocations and you will not need these laudable efforts of which the Senator is speaking to get people back to the farm. Our sons leave the farm and go to the cities because for a given amount of labor they can get greater remuneration and more enjoyment out of life. You fill your cities to overflowing, and you are compelled to pass your laws which will be for the general benefit of the city laborer as against the farm laborer because of the great surplus in your cities and the consequent high prices of living, and thus by this jackscrew method every time organized labor raises its price it raises the price of everything that organized labor produces in the city. That again raises the prices of your rent and the things you must purchase in the city, and that again creates a higher price for your labor. So you are sending your prices upward and skyward all the time, while the unorganized farming element of the country can not raise the price of their labor to correspond with the constant increases in the prices of the articles which they are compelled to purchase.

The only thing that has helped the farmer out in the slightest degree this year has been the European war, which has created in the North a greater demand for foodstuffs, but which has injured the South just to the same extent that it has benefited the North by driving down the price of their principal product because of the lack of customers.

Mr. President, there are other vicious things in this proposition. First, you will pass the proposition to let the Jew enter as against the Christian in Russia. I never before heard that it was a particular crime to be a Christian any more than it was a crime to be a Jew, but you have provided that the illiterate Christian from Russia can not come in, while the illiterate Jew can come in. It would seem that the illiterate Roman Catholic from Italy is not a desirable citizen, but that the illiterate Jew from Russia is a desirable citizen.

Now, we are going a little further in this kind of one-sided political-play legislation to reach out and invite the Belgians into this country. Why not invite the Galicians? Galicia has been overrun and devastated by war; the Galicians are a good people; why not allow the Galicians, then, to come in if they desire to purchase farms in this country?

So Alsace has been overrun and devastated by war. Why not continue your beneficent legislation by declaring that the Alsatians shall also be allowed to come in? Normandy, and indeed all of northern France, has been overrun and devastated. Why not allow those people in northern France, also in the theater of war, to come in and have an exception for their benefit? The people in eastern Prussia have suffered somewhat. Why not allow the Prussians to come in from the section which was devastated in the early part of the war by the Russian invasion, and why, then, not go a step further and open the door, just as it ought to be opened, and continue to keep it open just as we have done in the past?

Mr. President, I deprecate the fact that we should allow politics, sympathy, and everything else to influence us in this legislation by making exceptions for one section of the world and for another section of the world. These people are all Caucasians; the percentage of good people in the several sections does not differ to any appreciable extent. If we are going to close the doors against any section, let us close them against all; if we are going to open them, let us be, just as we have been in the past, the asylum for the persecuted, whether it be on account of religion or race or whether it be because of the environment and the lack of ability or opportunity to make a living in their own home country. These gates ought not to be closed in the face of any who would make good citizens, and we have enough in our law to keep out the bad ones.

It does seem to me, Mr. President, that it is almost an insult to our sense of justice to provide that the Belgian may come here to compete with the farmer, who makes on an average about 20 cents a day throughout the United States, when he can not compete with the bricklayer, who gets $5.50 a day for eight hours' labor, thereby not only making your discrimination unjust against the farmer, but also making it unjust as between different nationalities.

I know that there is probably force enough back of this proposition to put it through, but I for one, having a sense of equal justice for all my fellow men and for all classes of American citizens as well as for foreign citizens, want to voice my protest against such one-sided legislation.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I shall occupy but a moment if the Senator will allow me. I presume everybody in the world admires the Belgians. From the way they have fought their fight we love them, and no one would go further to do them a kindness, to be generous with them, than would I. I have that feeling, and I do not wish to vote against any proposition which might be beneficial to them; yet at the same time, if you will look at this amendment calmly, you will see that it proposes to pay a bonus of $2,500 each, I am told, to the heads of families, farmers from Belgium, to come here and till the soil. I do not know who is to advance the money; but at any rate the Belgian comes here a good man and probably a good farmer—a man who will make a good citizen. He goes into competition with American farmers in their method of making a livelihood, while the farmers in the South, owing to the calamity of the European war, I am told, by the hundreds of thousands have been wiped out of business. The farmers on the Pacific coast who are in certain lines of industry—those raising hops and those raising fruit—have lost money; they are poor; they are hard up. Here we go and import a certain select portion of the Belgian people by a law which singles them out, and we bring them here backed with capital from Europe, and some, I am told, advanced by American citizens who wish to put a certain proportion of them into the South, where they are needed, I presume, in some ways, though not in the raising of cotton, I should judge, at this time; but they will come into competition with people who are already suffering from want from their efforts in agricultural lines.

I think the proposition ought to be broadened out. It is not quite a fair one; it is special legislation. There are a million men in America who are without work to-day, and a million women and children who have not too much to eat or to wear. We owe them also a little bit of consideration.

At the same time, as I say, I want to do all I can for the Belgians. I would much prefer at this time to make an appropriation out of the Treasury for the benefit of the Belgian people, whom I respect and admire, rather than in this circuitous method attempt to do an act of generosity at the expense of our farming community.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I simply desire to say a few words on this matter which is of vital importance to my State. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] asked the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] why most of these immigrants were employed in the mining industry in his State. I want to state that a great many of them are employed in the mining industry in my State. I am perfectly familiar with the character of the people who are employed in that industry who come from foreign countries.

The reason why they come to this country and why they go into this particular character of enterprises is not entirely because those industries pay more than do others, but because the people who conduct those classes of enterprises in this country seek such labor. While there is a law against contract labor, there are many ways of avoiding it, even though the letter of the law is not violated.

We do know that such immigrants are invited here for the purpose of going into those enterprises in competition with American labor. They come here as laborers, whether they come under a contract before they start or with the knowledge that they will obtain a contract after their arrival. Those classes of people are not agriculturists. They have no knowledge of farms at all; they are not fit for farming when they get here. They simply enter into competition with our day laborers in this country; and the object of this legislation is to prevent that if it be possible to do so. Too great an influx of such immigrants also lowers our standard of living, and our object is to prevent that.

The Senator from North Dakota has said they will come in competition with the farmers of his State. He said that to-day we are producing more in this country than the country needs, than the country can use. That may be true; but the world is not producing more to-day than the world demands; in fact, the statisticians in every country admit that the supply is decreasing in proportion to the demand; and one of the greatest problems to be solved to-day, not only in this country but in every other country, is to increase the production of foodstuffs to meet the demands of the peoples of the world. The Senator can not take the demand of our own country solely because we ship our products to every country. I think he knows that the greatest problem that we have to-day is to reduce the cost of living for the man who is existing on a fixed wage and a fixed salary. I do not think it is a broad stand to take to say that we will curtail the production of foodstuffs in the interest of any locality or of any community. The surplus over home consumption has been rapidly and steadily decreasing in the last few years, and our economists have warned us that in the near future we will have difficulty in supplying the domestic demand.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is labor generally producing more than the world demands to-day any more than is labor on the farm? Does not the world demand the products of labor to a greater extent than it can possibly get to-day, the same as it is demanding the products of labor in the shape of food?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is not the same demand for physical labor in the manufacturing industries as there is to-day in the industries for the production of food.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; but is there not a demand for the product of that physical labor in the world to-day as much as there is a demand for food?

Mr. PITTMAN. If there were the same demand for it, there would be the same demand for manufactured products as for foodstuffs. I think that answers the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think it does, because I do not know that there is any great demand for our farm products to-day, except in one particular line. We find no great demand for our cotton, which is the product of farm labor. The conditions of the world at war have prevented the export and the consumption of that article, and the world is suffering to-day in labor circles because of the inability to export the products of that labor. We are all suffering from the same cause.

Mr. PITTMAN. The foreign demand exists to-day the same as ever. The supplying of that demand may be interfered with by artificial conditions, but the fact remains, and it is not capable of dispute, that the demand for foodstuffs is increasing at a greater ratio than the production of foodstuffs in the world; and the condition in the market to-day for meat and for wheat proves that beyond a doubt; and it does not require any argument whatever. Our own Department of Agriculture to-day is doing everything in its power to bring to the attention of this country—not only to the attention of legislative bodies, but to the attention of the people as a whole—the fact that something must be done to increase the supply of foodstuffs throughout the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I want to ask him in regard to the statement that there is a greater growing demand for food products. Food products, such as wheat, flour, fruit, and everything of that character, have increased in quantity far beyond any other products in the world during the last 10 years. During the last 10 years in the United States alone we have increased over 50 per cent, and many other countries of the world, such as Argentina, have increased their production even 2,500 per cent in that time. There is, however, no product of labor that is increasing so rapidly throughout the world as are food products.

Mr. PITTMAN. I may say to the Senator that there is a growing tendency, especially on the part of people in the ordinary walks of life, to eat more wholesome food, and we want to uphold that standard of life.

I desire to say to the Senator, also, that while the production of wheat in the world may have increased and the production of meat may have increased, the consumption of meat and the consumption of wheat have increased in proportion. If that were not so, then the price of wheat and the price of meat would not be so high to-day that the ordinary man working for ordinary wages can eat meat but on rare occasions.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me once more, I have had occasion to examine food statistics quite closely, because my State is exclusively an agricultural and food-producing State; and, as a matter of fact, the amount of consumption of wheat per capita in the United States is going down all the time instead of increasing.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is that on account of the price?

Mr. McCUMBER. A few years ago it was 8 bushels per capita; now it is down to a little over 5 bushels per capita. Of course the size and capacity of the human stomach has not changed a great deal; but we are getting more of the imported products, such as fruits and articles of that kind, than we used to get, and are varying our table diet a great deal more than we used to do 20 or 25 years ago. As a matter of fact, while the principal food products are increasing in quantity beyond any other products in the world, the amount of consumption is actually going down.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator from North Dakota, and then I will yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not think that the farmer in times of peace, for instance, has been getting too much for his farm products, does he?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think he has been getting an adequate price in comparison with what other classes of people of this country have been receiving for the products of their labor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, the Senator, I am afraid, has not lived in a food-producing State for the last two years——

Mr. PITTMAN. Not exclusively.

Mr. McCUMBER. Or he scarcely would have made that assertion. Taking the price of this labor that you are now defending—and I certainly want to defend labor and I want to defend the farmer alike—as a matter of fact, he was getting less, until the war broke out, in increased food products six or eight months ago than he had been getting through all of the years past, except a few years from 1893 to 1897.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, before this war commenced, or before it was even suspected, our Agricultural Department was warning the people of this country that there was danger of a shortage in foodstuffs, not only in this country but throughout the world. They were urging all kinds of economies in agriculture and teaching advanced methods of farming for the purpose of meeting that very condition. The price of foodstuffs had already risen. The situation is here. The Senator may live in an exclusively agricultural State; he may be satisfied to see the prices of foodstuffs go up so high that only a few people can eat them, so that he may benefit his people. We have farmers in our States as well as other characters of labor, and I would not do those farmers the injustice to say that they wanted to prevent the tilling of the land of this country to enhance the value of their foodstuffs. That was the argument used by the Senator from North Dakota. He opposed letting these men in because he did not want a bigger surplus of foodstuffs in this country; and that may be the issue. That is the issue that he laid down.

I want to say that the farmers of our State are not in favor of restricting the production of foodstuffs in this country. They want to increase them; and while the Senator from North Dakota states that there has been no increased capacity on the part of men to eat, I want to say that there has been an increase in desire for better food and an increased use of such food by those who could afford it. Such food should be in the reach of all.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to know whether or not the Senator understands the condition under which some of the laborers of this country are compelled to live and the kind of foodstuffs that they are required to eat?

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have the Senator name some of the food products that the farmer is getting excessive prices for, or has received excessive prices for, during recent years?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer the Senator about that. I will take my own State for illustration. In our State they are to-day getting in the neighborhood of 15 cents a pound for meat on foot. You remember what it was a few years ago. If not, I can tell you that a few years ago they were not getting 4 cents a pound. It is not so much a question as to whether that price is excessive as to whether the supply will continue to decrease and the price increase.

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator please state the character of meat that is selling on foot at 15 cents a pound? Will the Senator please tell us what live animals are selling at 15 cents a pound in Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. They are getting 15 cents a pound.

Mr. BRISTOW. For what?

Mr. PITTMAN. For calves.

Mr. BRISTOW. For veal?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; for veal.

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator please state what other food products except veal are bringing an excessive price?

Mr. PITTMAN. Beef, mutton, pork, and vegetables are proportionately high. If the Senator wants to know more, I will refer him to the Agricultural Department at Washington to determine that question.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why not refer it to the market where the farmer sells his products?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will tell you why. I do not want to go into a statistical argument with the Senator upon this subject, because the whole world knows it; because everybody out through this country to-day is crying out on account of the high cost of living; because the Democratic Party, if the Senator please, has promised to attempt to reduce the high cost of living, and the Republican Party has admitted the high cost of living, and throughout this country it is a fact denied by none.

Let me say to the Senator that while the cost of foodstuffs has increased in accordance with the law of supply and demand, the cost of labor, which is fixed by wage and by salary, does not advance in the same proportion, because there is a restriction upon it that is harder to overcome. I wish simply to finish this by saying to the Senator that we have in our State land that is capable of producing crops, but we have not the people to cultivate that land. The people of our State are satisfied with their enterprises and are engaged in those enterprises, but our State has invited the world to come there and utilize some of the richest of lands that can be found in any State. California to-day, through its chambers of commerce and big institutions, is inviting farmers to come and take up that land. Throughout all the West, where the land is not all taken up, they are inviting farmers to come in and occupy and cultivate it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. PITTMAN. In just a second. They are inviting them to come out there and take up land. They are not inviting men that are not agriculturists and farmers; they are not inviting the class of people who know nothing about it to do that work; but they do want their land farmed and they do want good farmers to take up those lands.

I am satisfied with the Belgians; I think their history denominates them as a people worthy of becoming citizens of this country. This bill leaves it to us to determine whether or not their intentions are to become farmers, whether they are farmers, and whether they intend to become citizens. I would be willing to have them come, and also the people of any other of the big civilized countries of the world, for that purpose. I know that we want them out there; we want to increase the products of our State; we want to reduce taxation by it; and we want to enable the people who live in that State and in this country to be able to enjoy the products of this country at a reasonable rate. I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada has referred to conditions in California. That matter has been agitated in my State very lately. Some of the civic organizations in that State have gone to the extent of sending out warnings against any laborers coming to California, because there are more laborers there now than can secure jobs. Many of them are out of employment.

We can very well sympathize with the Belgians; we do, all of us; but we have no right, Mr. President, to invite the Belgians or to allow them to come in here as laborers, if each one of them is going to displace an American laborer, and that is precisely the condition that would exist in my State. We do not need laborers in California any more than they do in Montana or in Nevada, but we do need farmers and farm hands. We are usually short of labor of that kind; but it will be a misfortune to the State of California if there were to be any considerable influx of labor immigrants from Belgium or elsewhere.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the amendment that I am discussing now is limited exclusively to those who are farmers and who come here for the purpose of becoming citizens and engaging in farming enterprises.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And purchasing land.

Mr. PITTMAN. And purchasing land. I am opposed, as is the Senator from California, to bringing into this country hordes of laborers. I have always been opposed to it. His State does not need them; our State does not need them; we have already enough, if not too many, of that kind. What we need is another class of laborers who understand farming, who understand producing foodstuffs for the class of labor that we already have. That is all that this amendment applies to; and I think that the Senator's State does want agriculturists; I know that our State wants agriculturists.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand that this amendment, as it is now proposed, only admits Belgian agricultural laborers who are to become purchasers of land?

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as proposed.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 18, after the word "guests," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the provisions of this act relating to the illiteracy test, contract labor, or induced or assisted immigration shall not apply to agricultural immigrants from Belgium who come to the United States during the course of the present European war, or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said Belgian immigrants come prepared to purchase land in the United States and become American citizens.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I do not want to take the Senator's time, but if he will permit me I should like to say that I am not in agreement with the position taken by the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Kansas. I come from an agricultural State, and one of the very serious things with which the farmers of my State have to deal is the question of securing farm hands; in fact, I think that in a great part of this country one reason why farms are abandoned and untilled is that it is impossible to secure farm hands. They are in the factories; they are working eight hours a day in the towns; they are accustomed to quit when the hands of the clock reach a certain place on the dial; they do not like the 12-hour labor they are required to perform on the farms.

I regret that the change was made here requiring that these people shall be purchasers of land. One thing we want, I think, through the agricultural regions of the West is these sturdy sons of Belgium who are suffering from the disasters of the war, who have been deprived of everything they have on earth except their strong hands, and who might be glad to come here and go out on these farms and perform the work for which there is such a great demand.

If the Senator will permit me just one word further, I wish to make this observation: In my State, at least, for a number of years we have maintained, out of the liberal appropriation made by the State legislature, a bureau called the commission of immigration. One of the purposes of that commission is to present the claims of our State as a successful agricultural region to the worthy settlers in Europe for the purpose of having them come into our midst and increase the number of the tillers of the soil in our State and cultivate lands that are now idle.

I do not take the view that it is against the interest of the farmers in the West to encourage the bringing in of worthy immigrants who will make good farmers and open up new fields, and, more than that, the bringing in of a class of farm labor that is so largely demanded by the farmers themselves.

I would gladly support this amendment if the provision requiring these people to be purchasers of land were stricken out of it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield the floor. I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. JONES. I just want to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels obliged to recognize the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I just want to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that the word "purchase" was put in here awhile ago because it seems that there has been some association or organization formed that apparently proposes to advance money to these people or sell them lands; and they will probably take a mortgage at a pretty high rate of interest from these people whom they know to be industrious and sober and temperate people, and probably will keep them in a sort of state of peonage for 4, or 5, or 6, or 8, or 10 years.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not in favor of any such thing as that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nothing like that is proposed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield, and to whom?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply wanted to answer the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor and had yielded to the Senator from Nevada. I have no desire to take anybody else off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unadvised that the Senator had the floor.

Mr. REED. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say to the Senator from South Dakota that upon his first proposition, as to which he said he was not in agreement with the Senator from North Dakota, he finds himself entirely in agreement. I did not say anything against agricultural laborers coming into this country. We would welcome them. We need them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may have misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. We can not get them; but this amendment does not provide for agricultural laborers. It provides for those who come here with money enough to purchase a farm. It does not say how big the farm shall be or how little it shall be. It may be an acre or it may be a thousand acres—whatever the Secretary thinks should be the standard.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understood the Senator to object to worthy Belgians who might come over with the money in their pockets and desire to purchase one of our South Dakota or North Dakota farms. I am sure our people would welcome them with open arms.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is good ground for objection on that line; but the main objection I made was that we seek to create a surplus of farm products and to bring in all of those who produce farm products, for the very purpose of driving down the value of those products by reason of the surplus, while at the same time we study to keep out the farm labor that we need to produce them. That is the viciousness of this proposition.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator that that danger is very remote. I have not felt that we were in any very great danger that we were going to have too many farmers, too many farm hands, too many rich acres under cultivation producing too much food, because it would reduce prices. I have seen nothing to create great concern upon that score.

Mr. McCUMBER. When I was selling grain for a little over 50 cents a bushel before this war commenced I recognized that difficulty. When oats had gone down to 22 cents a bushel and farm labor was $3 a day, I found there was some difficulty along the line of making ends meet. When barley, which costs us over 50 cents a bushel to raise, was only bringing 32 cents a bushel, I found some difficulty in selling enough barley to pay for the labor.

The Senator says we need to take up our farms. That would enrich the State; it would make more taxable property than we now have, and it may be very laudable to get more farmers into our State; but the fact exists, nevertheless, that if we are compelled to hire all the labor upon the farm, under conditions outside of this abnormal war condition, we can not pay the labor and raise enough upon our farms to keep them running. I know something about that, because I have tried it; and I tried it for a number of years until I found that I would have to leave the acres uncultivated because we could not get the labor to take care of it at prices we could afford to pay.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to see a lot of good Belgian farm hands out on the farms in my State.

Mr. McCUMBER. Where the farmer himself, who lives off his farm, does his own work, and his child less than 14 years of age does a man's work, or a woman's work, he will exist; but if you had the same rules applying to his labor that you have in the cities in regard to child labor, and the number of hours of labor, every one of them would be in bankruptcy in six months.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] speaks of the congestion in the labor centers, and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] refers to the absence of labor on the farms. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] complains that the farmer can not make a profit in his business because of the price he has to pay for labor.

The remarks of these three Senators point out a very serious economic situation, in my opinion, in the United States. If, as has been remarked, the wages paid on the farm the year round were as much, for the same amount of work, as the wages paid in the cities the American boy to-day would not be leaving the farm and going to the city. That is as true as any axiom. The reason that the American boy leaves the farm is because there is no profit in working on the farm.

What is the condition within a radius of 100 miles of this Capitol to-day? There are thousands and tens of thousands of laborers on American farms east of the Allegheny Mountains who are working for a dollar and a quarter a day and boarding themselves.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I think that statement must be taken with some qualification. These men are usually provided with habitations, so that the question of rent does not concern them. They are almost invariably allowed a certain part of the product of the farm itself.

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is entirely mistaken. I am not referring to that class of labor which lives on the farm and is furnished a house and other perquisites. They do not get a dollar and a quarter a day. They get a dollar a day or less.

Mr. CLAPP. Many of them get a dollar and a quarter a day.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, concede that they get a dollar and a quarter a day. Suppose they get a dollar and a half. The Senator can not mention a farmer within a hundred miles of the Capitol at Washington who is paying for day labor to-day more than a dollar and a half a day in the field, and the laborer boarding himself, in his own house, independent of the farm.

Mr. CLAPP. No; but the Senator from Minnesota can demonstrate that a man on a farm, working for a dollar a day and boarding himself, is better off than a man in the city who tramps the streets for work. I say the Senator is mistaken in the economic principle underlying the discussion. It is not the fact that the boy gets more in the city, but there is something about the city that attracts and allures; there is something in the very matter of the aggregation of population that draws. I am in hearty sympathy with the Senator's provision, but we have got to go deeper than that.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I dislike to disagree with my friend from Minnesota, but I utterly disagree with him. It is more attractive to live in the city, under the electric lights, when you get paid $4 a day for eight hours or when you get paid fifty, sixty, or seventy-five dollars a month for eight hours' labor; and when you offer that to the American youth in lieu of a dollar and a quarter a day and boarding himself or a dollar and a half a day and boarding himself and finding his own lodging he will take the $4 a day or the fifty or sixty or seventy-five dollars a month and live in the city. But, conversely, if you will pay the people who live in the cities and work in the factories or work in the stores a dollar and a quarter a day and let them board themselves or give them $4 a day to go on the farm, they will flock to the farm and not to the city.

Mr. CLAPP. You could not get them to the farm, with the allurements of the city, if you were to drive them there with a bayonet.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator is entirely mistaken. He does not understand the American farmer and the American youth.

Mr. CLAPP. I am not speaking of the American farmer. I am speaking of these people who throng the cities. To-day men do not have to walk the highways among the farms looking for work. They are walking the highways in the cities looking for work. If you talk to them and urge them to go on the farms, they will tell you "No; they were not born to be farmers." There is the trouble, and we may just as well face this question. There is something in the thought of people gathering in cities that allures people there. They think the city life is superior. The moving pictures are one thing, the street crowds are another, and so we might go on down the list. They seem to think there is something superior in city life; but, low as farm wages are, the average man working for wages on the farm is doing better with his wages.

You can not solve the economic problem in this country on this basis. I quite agree with the Senator that we do not sufficiently encourage farming. I quite agree with him that the farmer, not being represented here in an organized, concrete force, does not get his share of the legislative pork barrel; but, for all that, we have got to go back of that condition to find the solution of this problem.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. Just a minute; I want to reply to my friend from Minnesota, and then I will yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I thought perhaps I could adjust this matter.

Mr. BRISTOW. With due respect to the opinions of my friend from Minnesota, which I always respect, his remarks just made are an actual slander on American character and the American farmer and youth. He does not come to the city to go to the picture shows. He comes to the city because he gets better wages in the city than he does on the farm.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I can not submit to that suggestion. I am not speaking of the farmer boy. I am speaking of the boys and the men who throng the cities.

Mr. BRISTOW. But why does the farmer's boy leave the farm and go to the city? He leaves the farm and goes to the city because he gets better wages in the city for less labor and can buy more of the comforts and luxuries of life with the wages he gets. The reason why the farmer does not pay better wages than are paid by the street car companies and the corporations and the employers of labor in the city is because he can not sell his product for enough to justify paying more wages.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Kansas now prepared to yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wanted to make a suggestion which, it seems to me, may have some bearing upon this matter and upon matters which are coming up later.

During the last five years over 500,000 American farmers have left American farms and have gone to acquire lands in Canada. At the same time that has happened we have had tied up in our Western States a territory as large as New England and Maryland and Virginia combined, which has as good soil as ever lay outdoors. When we get around, after a while, to considering the bills dealing with that subject, I hope our farmer friends will bear in mind that it is not only a case of the boy leaving the farm and going to the city, but, under our public-land laws, we are driving the farmer to take oath under another form of government and to claim protection under another flag.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, as I was proposing to say before I was interrupted, the naked facts are that, with all the sentimental propaganda that is going on, with the slogan of "Back to the farm," the reason why the American boy, with his intelligence and his education, does not continue to farm and follow the vocation of his father is because he can not make as much money, he can not get as good wages on the farm for the same amount of labor. Why, the ordinary farm hand in the United States is working now for from twenty to thirty-five dollars a month, depending upon the locality in which he lives; and what does he do? He is up at 5 o'clock in the morning, and he starts out to feed the stock and attend to what the farmer calls "the chores." By daylight he is out at work in the field. He works until it is dark, and when he has done his farm work and gets in he has put in from 12 to 14 hours a day.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BRISTOW. In just a moment. For that he gets less than half what the average laborer gets in the cities for doing half as much work. The American boy with some intelligence concludes that he can get more money for his labor in the city than in the country; and he goes to the city and leaves his poor old father, who has been on the farm all his life, to stay there and hire the best man he can get to take his place.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to a statement that I understood the Senator from North Dakota to make—that the farm laborers in his State are getting $3 a day.

Mr. BRISTOW. They get that in harvest time and press seasons; yes.

Mr. JAMES. Apparently the farmer can afford to pay that price.

Mr. BRISTOW. He can not afford to pay it. If the Senator from Kentucky is familiar with the farming regions of his own State and other States, he knows that the American farmer to-day, if you will eliminate the price of wheat because of the unusual condition in Europe now, is not making as much on his wheat as he did years ago. The facts are that until this war broke out in Europe the farmers of the United States were selling their wheat at a loss. The Senator from Nevada has mentioned one product of the farm that is bringing a high price, and that is veal; but the average American laborer does not eat much veal.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say that he not only does not eat much veal, but he does not eat much meat of any kind, with the present price of meat. But let me ask the Senator one other question. Is the Senator contending that the farmers are not prosperous?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am contending that the farmer is not making as much money, outside of the increased price due to this war, as he made years ago, and that farm products are now a drug on the American market.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like the opinion of the Senator as to whether or not the farmers are prosperous at this time.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why, they are in certain sections of the country; yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Are they prosperous in Virginia?

Mr. BRISTOW. Not very; no. They are very prosperous in Kansas.

Mr. PITTMAN. They are prosperous in Kansas?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. The reason why I asked the Senator if they were prosperous in Virginia was that I was informed there had been a number of farms purchased in Virginia recently.

Mr. BRISTOW. Probably there have been. I do not know.

Mr. PITTMAN. And I had an idea that probably that was true. But the farmers are prosperous in Kansas?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the farmers are prosperous in Kansas, are they not able to pay good wages to their laborers?

Mr. BRISTOW. The farmers are prosperous in Kansas since this war broke out and the price of wheat went up 40 cents a bushel. Until the war broke out they were selling their wheat for 60 cents, which was less than cost. The Senator can not mention a single farm product that sells for an excessive price when it leaves the farm. I will say that veal sells for an abnormally high price for some reason, due to the fastidious tastes of certain American people, but the great majority of the products of the farm are not bringing an excessive price as they leave the farm. They are down in the market. They are a drug upon the market. The farmers outside of the wheat-growing region, where there is an excessive price for wheat now, caused by the European war, are selling their stock, from the poultry to the fat steer, at a reduced price and a lower price than they have been able to get for them for years.

Mr. PITTMAN. Beef, mutton, pork, hay, grain, hides, and wool were higher in 1913 and 1914, before the war commenced, than they were in 1911 or 1912. Is it not a fact that the buying of good agricultural land at the present time is recognized as a good investment?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is not.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not?

Mr. BRISTOW. No, sir; and if the Senator is informed, he knows that agricultural lands are now a drug on the market.

Mr. PITTMAN. When and where did that happen? It certainly is not true in our State.

Mr. BRISTOW. It has been happening ever since the present Democratic administration came in. [Laughter.]

Mr. PITTMAN. Why, the farming industry prior to the war was so active that even some of our Senators were called back to the farm. Does not the Senator known that a great many persons have been purchasing farm lands in the last year? As a matter of fact, 10,000,000 acres of land were patented up as homesteads in this country during the last year. Does not that indicate that the farming industry is a prosperous one?

I know Senators right in this body who, within a very short time, have purchased farms throughout this country. Probably the fact has come to the attention of the Senator himself that they have been purchasing farms throughout this country. Is it not a fact that the records of the manufacturing industries show that the farmers all over this country to-day are indulging in the luxury known as the automobile? Is it not a fact that the great financial institutions of this country are to-day reporting greater prosperity among the farmers than among any other character of people in this country, and was not that so prior to the European war? I know it was so in my State.

I do not think the Senator will deny that that is the situation; but he says the young men are leaving the farm for the city. Probably that is true. The Senator from Minnesota has given very fairly the probable reason for that. If the young men who are raised on the farm prefer to enter other kinds of business pursuits, then does it not become necessary, if we want our lands cultivated, to hunt up those farmers who do want to farm? That condition exists. The young men who are raised on the farms will not do as their fathers did—buy land near home and start farming. They go to the cities. It makes no difference why they go to the cities; they do not follow the agricultural pursuits of their fathers.

What we are faced with is this problem: We have good land to produce products for this country. We want it to produce, because the country needs those products. We can not get the sons of our farmers, as the Senator says, to take up those lands. Now, we simply invite an intelligent, high-class agricultural people, who are driven out of their own country by war, to come over here and help cultivate our land, increase its productiveness, add to the wealth of our country, and relieve our people from the burden of an insufficient supply of foodstuffs. That is all we are asking.

Mr. BRISTOW. I live in a part of the country where a great many immigrants have come from Europe in the years that have passed and settled upon farms. They were farmers and they made good citizens, and, being of German and Norwegian birth, they are frugal and prosperous as a rule, and their children adapt themselves to American institutions and American habits. They belong to that race which has developed and made our country what it is, coming from that section of Europe from which most of our ancestors came. Their children, as soon as they are educated and as soon as they arrive at the age of maturity and begin to do for themselves, follow the same example that the American boy follows—he whose ancestors and parents have been in this country for a longer period—they go to the cities, where they get better wages and where life is easier.

It is a false economic proposition to say that you can bring men who know nothing about an American farm and put them on the farm and conclude that because they are farmers they are going to farm. To get men to farm you have got to make farming attractive to the American people.

The bone and sinew of American life is in the agricultural class. Indeed, I do not believe a republican form of government can exist unless the rank and file of the population of the country is an agricultural population. They are the most conservative, they are the most intelligent, as a rule, in exercising the duties of citizenship; and when you substitute for the American farmer a foreign population similar to that which now congests our industrial centers you have done an irreparable injury to American citizenship. Indeed, in my opinion, it would be fatal to the institutions of our country if the real character of the American farmer were changed, and when by legislation it is proposed to break down still further the agricultural interests of our country by throwing it wide open, not only competing in the markets of the world and the markets of his own country with the products of every other country on earth, without any protective-tariff duties such as has the manufacturing products. You now make the American farmer compete in the markets of his own country and the world with every other farmer on earth. Not satisfied with that, it is proposed to invite the foreign farmers to come here and sit down side by side with the American farmer and in time put him out of business by competition even more severe than he is now compelled to meet in the markets of his own country by foreign farmers. These foreign farmers will bring with them the standard of living of the foreign peasant.

Such legislation as is proposed in this amendment is an injury and an outrage to the American agricultural interests of the country. We say we want farm hands. The way to get farm hands is to pay them better wages; and you can not pay them better wages unless the farmer can get more for the products of his farm than he gets to-day.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas what is the rate of farm wages in Kansas?

Mr. BRISTOW. It ranges from $25 to $35 a month.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Does that include board?

Mr. BRISTOW. In some instances, it does; in others, it does not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I mean generally speaking.

Mr. BRISTOW. Generally speaking the wages would be $25 or $30 a month.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What would the Senator estimate that would amount to per month, everything included?

Mr. BRISTOW. I should think $40 to $45; but wages in Kansas are much higher than in many other sections.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator permit me to make a statement?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the most discouraging feature of modern immigration has been the fact that while probably 90 per cent of the 15,000,000 immigrants who have come to this country in the last few years are either common or farm laborers, it has been an impossibility to get them to go to the rural communities and take positions upon farms. In the investigation which the commission made in the industries of this country they picked out certain races to see what they were getting. I find that of the Polish, Slovak, South Italian, North Italian, Hungarians, Lithuanians, Croatians, Greeks, Ruthenians, and Bulgarians, the average that they received yearly was $391.90, which is less than the farm laborer is getting, according to the statement of the Senator from Kansas.

I have been convinced from my investigation of this subject that it would be decidedly better for the men who have always lived in agricultural regions and done agricultural labor if, when the come to this country, they would go to the agricultural communities and take employment on the farm, where they could live comfortably and where they would be vastly better off financially and in physical comfort and in advantages generally, than to go to the cities.

But I find with our view of distribution, with every effort we have made under the law, with all the encouragement that has been given by States to invite them to do so, it has been absolutely impossible to encourage immigrant laborers to the rural communities. Where we have in some instances secured men to go on farms and work, they would work for a single season, then they would become lonesome. They want the companionship of their own race, and they go to some central locality where the people of that race live and enjoy the same language and enjoy the same methods of living, and where, briefly stated, they can find those things that are more agreeable to them.

It is a deplorable fact that they all go to the cities. All experience shows that where the first colony of a particular race goes there all the rest go. They follow them as sheep follow a bellwether. Take the whole history of immigration and you will find that that is the fact.

With the growth of our manufactures more of this modern immigration came from eastern and southern Europe, and where the first colonies from south Italy, or from any of the Balkan States, Russia, or Austria-Hungary went, those from the same neighborhood have gone to the same place, and they have followed it right along year after year, and it has been almost impossible to turn them.

I was interested to test that matter. I found by having a record kept in Ellis Island for a whole year that more than 80 per cent of all the immigrants who came in during that year had in their possession when they landed railroad tickets taking them from New York to the point of their destination in the United States. They had been in correspondence with their brothers, their cousins, their relatives in this country, and they were going where their brothers or other relatives had gone. In 80 per cent of the cases they reported the fact that they were going to join friends. It has seemed utterly impossible to turn them. I think a large proportion of them had been agricultural laborers, but it was utterly impossible to induce them to go into country districts and become segregated one from another and work among the farmers. That is a discouraging problem. I do not know how we are ever going to bring it about.

I think the wages paid in Kansas to-day to the laboring men are altogether better than the wages paid to the men I have mentioned, where they are working in the basic industries of the country. I do not think there is the slightest danger of their going into the States and competing with agricultural labor or reducing their products.

But I am opposed to this amendment. I agree with the Senator from Kansas. I do not believe that we ought in any way to break down the contract-labor law at the present time, as is provided.

Then, too, what does the amendment mean? It says "contract labor, or induced or assisted immigration, shall not apply to agricultural immigrants." What does that mean? It does not mean farm owners. The broad application of it would be farm laborers, so that they may come in very freely.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is not the end of the sentence. If the Senator will read the whole of it, he will see that it is those who are agriculturists who come here for a certain purpose, not to work as agricultural laborers. If the Senator will read it through, he will see that that is what it does.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Those "who come to the United States during the course of the present European war or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said Belgian immigrants come prepared to purchase 'or take up' land in the United States and become American citizens." Come prepared to do that? How are we going to determine that question?

Mr. CLAPP. The word "purchase," I understand, has been adopted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Instead of "take up"?

Mr. CLAPP. I made a notation of a motion to reconsider that language which has already been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I can see no use for this amendment. I quite agree with the Senator from Kansas, although I base my opinion upon reasons perhaps different from those which seem important to him.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Vermont will pardon me for breaking into his statement, I think the reasons for the condition which the Senator describes as to the destination of the immigrant that he answers the question himself. It is an element of human nature, I think, that men like to associate with those of common origin and common language and common views. We are a social animal and we must mingle with each other. It is perfectly natural that the foreigner coming to this country, a strange country, among strange people, should want to get among his own countrymen.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is true; they follow the racial instinct.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is impossible for him to have that social relation in the farming regions of our country that he has in the densely populated region in Europe from which he comes, because our conditions are so different. So he will not go on an American farm as a farm laborer. He might go for a little while, but he will get lonesome and go to the city.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator will permit me, he will not go there as the purchaser of a farm. The great bulk of these men have been common laborers in countries where it was impossible for them to purchase the soil. They have not the instinct of purchase or of independent action, becoming factors as managers of farms. They are simply common farm laborers working for a small per diem. I do not think the particular immigration I speak of come to this country with the thought of becoming possessors of farms. I called attention the other day in speaking on the subject to the fact that during the last 10 years we received about 5,000,000 immigrants from Russia and Austria-Hungary, and yet the census of 1910 shows that of those classes less than 1 per cent were found to be managers of farms or tenants. It shows that they will not come here with the purpose of acquiring farms. They have not been educated to the ownership of farms. They have not the instinct of ownership or of securing ownership. So they go, as the Senator has said, where they can live in colonies under circumstances agreeable to them and get a rate of wages that is infinitely above what they are getting at home. That is about the statement upon which I based my idea as to the causes of the movement of immigration.

Mr. BRISTOW. The foreigners whom the Senator has been describing came to this country because they thought they could better their conditions, and they go to these centers where they can be with their own people and where they can get employment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator please, they do just what they have done all their lifetime, work for wages.

Mr. BRISTOW. They work for wages and get enough to live on comfortably.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And be employed.

Mr. BRISTOW. But this discussion has proceeded upon the theory that it is necessary to get into this country some producing classes that will bring down the cost of living.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] laid great emphasis upon the promises of the Democratic Party to reduce the cost of living, and he offers as an argument this amendment, by which means the price of farm products may be reduced.

If the Senator will give his attention to the real evils that result in the high cost of living, he will look some place else than at the American farm. I remember, when my family left home this fall, a remark I heard made was that the price of eggs was 21 cents a dozen at home. When they arrived in Washington, a distance of some 1,200 or 1,300 miles, the price ran from 50 cents to 55 cents a dozen. Why this difference? That represents the toll which is exacted between the farmer and the consumer. That is the way the high cost of living comes in. It is not because of the high price the farmer gets for his products. I remember, as every Senator here who has reached the half-century mark remembers, when wheat was $2 a bushel. Before this war began wheat west of the Mississippi River averaged about 60 cents.

The price of living is not due to what the farmer gets for his product. If the farmer in America to-day had to pay the same wages for labor that are paid in the cities, there is not a farmer who would not go bankrupt in a year; he could not run his farm. He has got to work day by day with his own hands from 12 to 14 hours a day, and if by reason of superior intelligence or excessive industry and hardship, which he voluntarily undergoes, and the most frugal living, at the end of 20 or 25 years he is able to buy a cheap automobile, then he is held up to the American people by Members of the United States Senate as a plutocrat who deserves to be injured by importing foreigners to compete with him in his line of business.

As I said before, you not only throw down every bar that would protect the price of his products from foreign competition, but you now propose to undertake to further reduce the price of his products by opening wide the gates and permit all kinds of labor that will compete direct with him to come in. But you bar out the laborers that would compete with the labor of the manufacturing or industrial centers.

I know that the American farmers are not organized into a concrete organization to have representatives in the National Capital who can go to committee rooms of Senators and make certain demands and, if those demands are not met, enforce them by votes cast in mass at the polls. The farmer is an independent, hard-working citizen, the bone and sinew of American life, who has been the butt of legislation by special interests from the beginning, and it seems never too late for the American Congress to go directly after him in any effort they make to reduce the cost of living. They try to reduce the price of what he produces, but do not attack the influences and the combinations that exploit him and multiply the price of his product after it leaves the farm. That is the spirit which permeates and controls in the legislation that is now proposed, and I denounce it as unjust.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment by striking out of line 8 the words "prepared to take up land in the United States," or, as I think it now reads, "to purchase land in the United States," and insert "with intent to engage in the work of agriculture," so that it will read:

That said Belgian immigrants come with intent to engage in the work of agriculture in the United States and become American citizens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please send his amendment to the desk, and the Secretary will state it to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. After the word "come," in line 8, strike out the words "prepared to purchase land" and insert "with intent to engage in the work of agriculture," so as to read:

If it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said Belgian immigrants come with intent to engage in the work of agriculture in the United States and become American citizens.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment, as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], does not mean what is desired by those who would like to see these Belgian immigrants get out on our farms as farm laborers or even as farm purchasers, because to say that they must come prepared to purchase farms does not even necessarily imply that they will use the money for any such purpose. As I construe the amendment as proposed, it gives ground for a suggestion that some organization, perhaps in the East, will furnish the funds, and without being subject to the prohibitions of the contract-labor clauses of the law, they will get these people over here and have them under contract labor; and where they may go and what they may do after they arrive here will be a matter of conjecture.

I am not anxious to serve any such purpose as that; but I can say, so far as all my observation in the West and in the agricultural regions is concerned—and I have spent all my life there—that the one great and serious problem everywhere in the northern part of the Mississippi Valley region is to secure farm labor. I know well-to-do men, prosperous farmers, who are past middle age, who are working like slaves, because it is absolutely necessary for them to do so in order to have their fields cultivated, because they can not get labor out there. Take the poor Belgian, stripped of everything in the world but good health and strong arms and horny hands, and if we could get him out into my State on the farm, working for some man like the men I have mentioned, it would be a blessing both to the farmer and to the Belgian immigrant.

I do not believe such immigrant ought to be excluded because he does not show that he has sufficient cash in his pocket or on deposit in the bank which will enable him on his arrival to purchase a farm. I believe, considering the conditions in Belgium, which we want to alleviate, and the condition of our western farms, where labor is so sorely needed, and considering the character of the immigrants, who have made a paradise in their own country in the cultivation of the soil, that we ought to give them an opportunity as farm laborers, although they may have nothing, although neighbors or associations of farmers out there may have to send their transportation to them so as to have them come to this country and to go out and engage in farm labor without being purchasers of farms.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to understand the Senator's proposed amendment. Is it to take out the words "contract labor"?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have not put those words into the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. LODGE. I see the Senator has struck them out.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have not done so in the amendment which is now before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. But the Senator has not yet offered the amendment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I was going to offer the amendment as another matter entirely, to strike out those words unless the Senator from Massachusetts can give me some satisfactory reason why they should remain in the amendment.

But the point which my proposed amendment to the Senator's amendment reaches, and the only point it reaches, is that the Commissioner of Immigration, or whatever the name of the officer may be, shall be satisfied upon inquiry that the Belgian immigrant comes with the intent to engage in the work of agriculture; whether as a farm hand or as a farm purchaser is not the material thing.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator from South Dakota about that; his amendment enlarges and liberalizes it; and, so far as I am concerned, I am very glad to modify my amendment by adopting the Senator's language in reference to engaging in farm labor, instead of being prepared to purchase land. I think it is better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts accepts the amendment suggested by the Senator from South Dakota, and it now constitutes a part of the pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I also desire to modify my amendment by striking out the words "contract labor."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was going to propose that as another amendment. I did not want to have one involve the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment before the vote is taken on this amendment. I confess that in the almost 14 years during which I have been here I have seldom referred to sections of the country or to different classes of occupations. Unless a measure can be justified upon some principle, I do not think it should be incorporated in legislation at all. One day we spend our money like water in this country employing commissions on the part of States to induce people to come into those States to take up farms and go to farming. The next day we are told that it will not do in an act of Congress to permit farmers to come here, because it will bring a great many additional farmers in competition with our farmers who are here. Somewhere in the world-wide equation we have got to meet in competition all of humanity.

It is true that in one sense the Belgians have suffered more in the controversy in Europe than have any other people; but there are thousands of people in Europe who are the unfortunate victims of the war, over which they have no control, for they do not yet seem to have grown to that point where they can turn their arms against tyranny. In consequence they are now turning them against one another, and they have no control over this awful war; they are being destroyed, so far as property goes, by the war; they are being rendered homeless by the war. I can not understand, Mr. President, why we should single out a particular class of people, a particular nationality or race in this theater of destruction in Europe.

This amendment proceeds upon the theory—and there can only be one theory in the mind of the author of the amendment—that we are letting down what has been insisted upon here as a test of immigration, the illiteracy test; we are letting it down as a favor, out of sympathy to those who are unusually distressed under war conditions. So far as the Belgian is concerned, by the literacy test those who are qualified can come in under the present terms of the law; but this takes down the bar of illiteracy as to the Belgians upon the ground that those people have become the subjects of our sympathy and of the asylum principle of our immigration laws. I understand, Mr. President, that the contract-labor provision has gone out, and that the provision requiring purchase of land has also gone out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota is right about that.

Mr. CLAPP. The insertion of the provision requiring the purchase of land shows how nearly the Senate comes at times to violating fundamental principles. We have a measure here designed to reach an afflicted people, and yet for a while it was the solemn decision of the Senate that it should apply only to that class of Belgians who did have something, who were able to come here and establish with the means of purchase at their command new homes upon our soil. Fortunately that provision has gone out. We still have this narrow thought, beginning in this amendment, that it shall be limited only to the people of Belgium. If there is any reason on earth why we should take down the literacy test as to the Belgians, the same reason applies to any other of the people who are distressed by the awful war in Europe.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise purely for information, not to antagonize the argument that is now being made by the Senator from Minnesota. This amendment, as it has finally been reduced, is limited to the exemption of the Belgians from the literacy test of the proposed statute.

Mr. CLAPP. And the "assisted-immigration" provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the proportion of illiteracy among the Belgians? I am inquiring as to that because I want to know how many people this provision would let in who could not come in under the law as it is now proposed in the bill of the committee.

Mr. CLAPP. I presume the number is very slight indeed; but the amendment is a recognition that there are people in Belgium who can not pass the necessary literacy test, to whom, on account of their distressed condition, we should open the door, provided they come here proclaiming their purpose to be farmers.

Mr. CUMMINS. In order to prepare the way for another question, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the proportion of illiteracy amongst the Belgians? [A pause.] The chairman of the committee seems to be absorbed in some weightier subject, and I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LODGE. It is very low, but I can not lay my hand now on the figures.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have not those figures in my notes, but it is very low, indeed—among the lowest in all of Europe.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon; I was not giving close attention at the time; but the percentage of illiteracy amongst the Belgians, according to the latest figures we have, is 12.7.

Mr. LODGE. It is very low.

Mr. CUMMINS. Twelve per cent; so that of a thousand Belgians who might come in here there would be something like 120 who might be unable to read or write. It therefore appears that we are trying to make this exception to the general rule to accommodate and relieve that very small number of people who might come in from Belgium. I only rose to indicate that, in my opinion, the controversy is a tempest in a teapot.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I quite agree that, like many other matters, it is a tempest in a teapot. We get far afield here; we raise false and imaginary issues; we have stirred up the country on the literacy test; but I do not believe that as yet one person in a hundred throughout this country knows that we have taken from the literacy test the exemption which recognizes the asylum principle in our immigration laws. But that does not alter the case. If we should extend now this favor to illiterate Belgians because illiterate Belgians have without their fault been placed in a terrible condition we should recognize that same principle as to all other nations during the continuance of the present European war, because of circumstances or conditions growing out of the war. The Pole, whose land to-day is likewise being war swept by this awful war, also needs our sympathy, if we are going to indulge in sympathy, just as much as does the Belgian. The people of the other countries and sections which are liable before this storm is over to be devastated just as badly as has been the country which we call Belgium are entitled to the same consideration. What I am trying to urge is that we get away from the eternal talk of this section or that section, this class or that class, and deal with general principles in legislation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Minnesota, lest he may have misunderstood me——

Mr. CLAPP. No; I did not misunderstand the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. That that was my very purpose in rising. To accommodate or convenience a very few unfortunate Belgians, it seems to me that we are about to wreck a general principle.

Mr. CLAPP. The point that I was discussing was not deflected by the suggestion of the Senator; I was dealing with the general proposition.

Mr. JONES and Mr. O'GORMAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. CLAPP. I yield a moment to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Iowa and to the Senator from Minnesota that the amendment as it now stands is still further limited to agricultural Belgians, and not to Belgians generally.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I intended to remark something upon that. I think the provision is utterly unworkable and impracticable. No human being can determine what an "agricultural immigrant" is.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Or how long he will remain an agricultural immigrant.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume that that is meant to describe a former condition; that is, a condition in the country from which he comes. Will you say that a boy who has worked three months or six months on a farm at some time in his life is an agricultural immigrant? It is to me absurd, and can never be put into operation.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do not desire to intrude any remarks regarding the pending amendment further than to correct a statement inadvertently made a moment ago, that the percentage of illiteracy in Belgium is 12. The fact is, according to latest statistics, that the percentage is 8.5.

Mr. CLAPP. Still less, then.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have before me from the department a table bringing the averages up to the end of the fiscal year 1913. That table gives the illiteracy in the country of origin, and of the population of Belgium over 10 years of age it is 12.7 per cent. Those figures, as I understand, were obtained through the Bureau of Immigration here in Washington.

Mr. O'GORMAN. My authority for the statement I have just made is the World Almanac and Encyclopedia for 1914, a publication which is generally regarded as accurate and trustworthy. In that book it is stated that the percentage of illiteracy is 8.5.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, be that as it may——

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire if there is not a difference in the basis of the computation as between the Senator from New York and the Senator from South Carolina? Was not the Senator from South Carolina speaking of the Belgians who came to the United States and was not the Senator from New York referring to the Belgians as they live at home?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The table gives the figures for illiteracy in country of origin; it gives the population over 10 years of age; gives those countries in which there is compulsory education; gives the percentage of illiteracy by the countries from which immigrants come; and in Belgium the percentage of illiteracy is given as in the country of origin at 12.7. The basis of calculation is population over 10 years of age; that is all I know.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the fact remains that we are holding out here a favor born of sympathy. We are reaching a hand out through the literacy test and extending it only to the people of Belgium. Of course, I can understand how the people of that country have aroused the interest of the world; but the people of Belgium are situated, so far as their homes may be destroyed, their property destroyed, and their families broken up, just as the people of other parts of the war zone of Europe are situated. We extend the asylum principle through the wall of the illiteracy test to the unfortunate in one land. I believe we should extend it to the unfortunate in others. For that reason, Mr. President, I move as an amendment in lines 3 and 4 to strike out the words "from Belgium," in line 5 to strike out the word "or," and in line 8 to strike out the word "Belgium," so that it will read:

Immigrants who come to the United States during the course of the present Europeon war owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said immigrants come—declaring their purpose to become farmers.

Under the amendment recently adopted—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota is an improvement, I think, on the original amendment; but for the life of me I can not understand why the benefits of this amendment should be extended only to farmers or farm laborers, which is now proposed. I do not understand why it should be limited to Belgians. I am going to vote for it, in whatever way it is necessary to vote for it, because it is an enlargement, a broadening of this bill; but what the Senator from Minnesota has said in regard to the condition of these people is absolutely correct.

There is a difference between the Belgian Government's situation and the German Government's situation and the English Government's situation. There is a different issue presented there, but it is an issue between Governments. The Belgian Government insists that it was in a condition of absolute neutrality and that without having raised its finger its territory was invaded, and that is true; but, Mr. President, when you go beneath that mere technicality this is what you find: The German Government states: "We invaded Belgium because our own country was about to be invaded." The French Government states: "Our country was invaded." The Frenchman says: "My country was invaded and my home was destroyed," just as the Belgian citizen makes the same statement.

Now, this is a bill for the relief not of Governments but of people. The Frenchman's home having been destroyed, he is in just as helpless a condition as the Belgian whose home has been destroyed. The French individual had no more to do with bringing on this war than the Belgian individual had to do with it. Neither did the individuals of either of those nationalities have any more or any less to do with bringing on the war than the German citizen. He had nothing to say about it. His Government began a war, and if his home is destroyed and if it is therefore necessary for him to find harbor elsewhere, he should have the same privilege.

What was said by the Senator from New Jersey in regard to Alsace-Lorraine is equally true. What did the people of that country have to do with saying whether or not there should be war? If we are to extend hospitality and charity to the individual, it ought to reach all individuals similarly situated, regardless of the technicalities which spring out of the relations of the government or which particular Government first struck a blow. Moreover, if we are to have regard to the humanity of it, let us see how that will work out for a moment.

The Belgian finds his country taken away from him. The touching and eloquent words of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] found a response in my heart, as they do in the heart of every man who thinks rightly and feels rightly. The Belgian's home was taken away. He was without fault, and, mayhap, he can never return to that home in safety. But if you turn to Alsace-Lorraine you will find there a condition where the farmer's fields have been destroyed; his home has been burned; his condition is equally pitiable. He is equally without offense, and, mayhap, when this war is over, he will find it unsafe to return to his home, as does the Belgian. If Germany shall succeed in holding that country, how many of the Alsatians will be brought to trial and possibly to severe punishment? On the other hand, if France shall hold that country, how will she deal with certain citizens, particularly of German birth, who may have been inhabitants of that country and who may have warred against her?

I do not know; I do not undertake to say; but I do know that war is a very cruel thing. I do know that when the passions of men are aroused revenges are likely to be taken. I need not call the attention of men from the Southland, who passed through the reconstruction period, to the truth of that statement.

So all these people, as peoples, are without fault. Each of the Governments claim that it is without fault. The people, at least, are without fault. They never voted a war. They never brought on a war. When the war is over somebody is going to suffer, and somebody is suffering now.

We find ourselves called upon to aid and assist. Millions of dollars have been sent from this country to assist the people on the other side. We are about to pass a bill that prohibits assisting immigrants to come to these shores; that prohibits the immigration of men because they can not read and write. The proposition contained in the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is that we shall except the Belgian from the literacy test and from the assistance clause. I say that it ought to be extended also to the Alsatian, who is just as good a citizen as the Belgian, in my opinion; and possibly to the German, for Germany may find her fields are overrun before this war is over. Why not to all of these people?

Mr. President, I am not acquainted with the parliamentary situation; but I propose to offer the amendment I am about to read, and if it is not now in order I shall offer it when the proper parliamentary situation presents itself. I want to ask the Senators' attention to it carefully, because I believe it meets all these objections, and I do not believe it is objectionable on the ground that it will permit a general influx of foreigners. It is as follows:

The provisions of this bill relating to illiteracy or assisted immigrants—

Not contract laborers; now—

shall not apply to immigrants who come to the United States during or within one year after the close of the present European war, owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war: Provided—

Here is the safeguard—

The Commissioner General of Immigration shall find as a fact that the immigrant is otherwise qualified—

That is, that he has the health, the condition of mind and body and character required by the bill—and that he is attached to our institutions, intends to become a citizen of the United States, and that the immigrant will not become a public charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that the amendment is in order.

Mr. REED. I thank the Chair. Now, that does not indiscriminately admit them. It does not give them the privilege of coming as of right. They must convince the Commissioner General of Immigration that they are coming here well intentioned to our Government; that they are not going to be public charges; that they are sound in body and sound in mind and sound in morals; but it gives him the privilege of permitting them to come, provided they can show all of these things, and that they will not become public charges. In a word, it permits societies, organizations, and individuals to send over to those countries to furnish the means to bring those peoples here and to provide temporary assistance for them when they are here, either upon farms or in any other place, and provides that when those facts are shown the Commissioner General of Immigration can allow these people to come in. He can very easily stop any attempt to break down the protection of our immigration law, because it is vested in his discretion.

Mr. President, I think that opens the door to all alike, and yet I do not think it opens the door wide enough to flood this country with undesirables. I offer that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I have no objection to the proviso in his amendment. It is needless, however, because the provisions to which the exception is made are named. If he wants to make sure that the other provisions which are named in his proviso are retained, he only has to add, after the word "immigrant," the words "otherwise eligible."

Mr. REED. That is already in the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. "Otherwise eligible"? Well, that covers everything. There is no need of the proviso, then.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; the proviso does have an important effect. Let me read it:

Provided, The Commissioner General of Immigration shall find as a fact that the immigrant is otherwise qualified and that he is attached to our institutions, intends to become a citizen of the United States—

That is new, is it not?

Mr. LODGE. That is new; yes.

Mr. REED (reading):

And that the immigrant will not become a public charge.

That also is new.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; "otherwise eligible" will cover that.

Mr. REED. Well, "otherwise eligible." Under the law as it stands, and without this amendment, the immigrant who has a certain amount of money can come here. There are no questions asked. It is presumed that he is self-sustaining. This requires an affirmative finding. There is that distinction. There is the further distinction that under the law as it is framed in this bill an immigrant would be held to be not self-sustaining, possibly, who might be permitted to come in under this measure.

To illustrate, suppose an immigrant were to come here destitute—without any money. He would be turned back as a pauper under our present law, but under this bill if the Commissioner General of Immigration should find that a society or organization was going to receive him, going to provide him with work, or going to put him on one of these farms that the Senator said some society contemplated arranging for, then the Commissioner General of Immigration would be warranted in finding that the man would not become a public charge.

So I think there is a very considerable difference between this amendment and the other one.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will please send the amendment to the desk, and the Secretary will state it to the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Secretary state the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to ask the Senator from Missouri a question, not to debate his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Missouri understand that his amendment would except these immigrants from the operation of section 6 as a whole?

Mr. REED. No; I do not understand that it would. I did not intend that it should. I meant that it should cover just what is stated—that is, the assistance of an immigrant. It would permit the assistance of an immigrant coming under these conditions. He would not be turned back because he had been assisted, and he would not be turned back merely because he was illiterate.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if the Senator's amendment has the words "otherwise eligible," that covers section 6 and all the sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Secretary state the amendment to the Senate; then Senators will better understand how it applies. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Missouri proposes, in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered, the following:

The provisions of this bill relating to illiteracy or assisted immigrants shall not apply to immigrants who come to the United States during or within one year after the close of the present European war owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war: Provided, That the Commissioner General of Immigration shall find as a fact that the immigrant is otherwise qualified, and that he is attached to our institutions, intends to become a citizen of the United States, and that the immigrant will not become a public charge.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Missouri just what process will be used to determine whether an immigrant is or is not attached to our institutions. We all remember the old story about the man who landed on our shores, and they asked him his politics, and he said he was "again the Government." Now, just how we are going to find out whether or not a man who comes here from Belgium or Poland, or any other part of the civilized or uncivilized world, is attached to our institutions is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. CLAPP. It is done every day.

Mr. REED. May I answer the Senator?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I should like to have my question answered.

Mr. REED. It is the question that is ordinarily put in every court when an alien is seeking naturalization; it is the usual legal phraseology; and it means to call for the ascertainment of the question of fact whether or not the individual comes here well disposed toward the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. But that question is not put to all the other immigrants who come in.

Mr. REED. I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator cites the case of a man who goes before a court to be naturalized. After he has been a resident of the United States presumably for four or five years he might well have some knowledge of our institutions; but how these ignorant people coming from abroad—and many of them, in fact most of them, are ignorant of our system of government—can answer that question intelligently, or why they should be asked to answer it, I do not quite understand. Of course, however, I care nothing about it. I am going to vote against all of these propositions to open the doors to the people whose situation has been discussed this afternoon. Unfortunately, I was detained in the Committee on Appropriations and have not heard the debate, but I have a general idea of the ground it has covered. Inasmuch as I am going to vote against all amendments and against the proposition itself, of course I am not very much concerned about this; and yet it does strike me as being rather an extraordinary condition to impose upon these immigrants, if they are to be admitted at all.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts introduced contained a provision to the effect that they intended to become citizens of the United States. Of course they could not become citizens of the United States unless they were well disposed toward this country. They would have to show that to a court, and that is involved necessarily in the proposition contained as the Senator from Massachusetts drew it. In writing the amendment I simply included that phraseology. It is not difficult however to understand or to apply. The Commissioner General of Immigration being confronted with the fact that a thousand refugees were coming here, let us say, from Belgium, and that they were being assisted by some society of kindly disposed people, and, therefore, that they would be barred under the general provisions of the immigration bill, would have to make it his business, through himself or his agents, to inquire where these people came from, what kind of people they were, are they criminals or are they anarchists, do they believe in government, are they coming here to be good, law-abiding citizens? He would satisfy himself in that way, and he would satisfy himself whether they intended to come permanently and to become citizens, and having satisfied himself he would waive the literacy test.

Now, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] would say to the man who could not read or write, "No matter how sound you are in body, no matter how you are in mind, no matter how much patriotism there may be in your heart, no matter though you have stood and fought for your home and fireside and wife and children, no matter though you have gone into the red jaws of death, I will send you back because you can not read and write." The Senator from New Hampshire would not do any such thing if it was put to him as an individual proposition, because he is too kind-hearted a man.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the original amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Before the vote is taken I want to add one clause to it. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts seems to me to be somewhat deficient, "owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war." It means that they may come after the war has closed, I take it. So in my proposed amendment, line 5, I would insert, after the word "war":

Or within one year after the termination owing to circumstances and conditions arising out of the war.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to putting in that limitation of time, but I do object to the other.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I will take them one at a time.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read.

Mr. CLAPP. First, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "war," in line 5, "or within one year after its termination," so as to read:

During the course of the present European war, or within one year after its termination, or owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to unless there is objection. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, the one objection that might have been made to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri was that it broke down the distinction between those who were to come here ostensibly as farm laborers or farmers eventually and those who might come indiscriminately for all classes of work. So I will offer the amendment which I first proposed, in lines 3 and 4, to strike out the words "from Belgium," and in line 8 strike out the word "Belgian."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr SMITH of South Carolina. Before the question is put I wish to make merely one statement. This debate has developed the fact that practically all who oppose the amendment have advanced the idea that it is dangerous, and those who have advocated it have taken the trouble to explain wherein in their opinion it would not jeopardize the continuity and the effect of the bill as well as jeopardize us with foreign countries. I hope all those who are in favor of the pending bill being held in its present form will vote down all these amendments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move to strike out of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts the words "the illiteracy test."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In this connection I should like to say I fail to see how the war would have any bearing upon the ability of anyone who otherwise might be admitted by this amendment to pass the literacy test. The war has been of very short duration, and the country particularly affected by this amendment has one of the best systems of public schools of any country in the world, and while we may on account of the unusual circumstances in which Belgium is situated extend the so-called asylum principle to some extent through sympathy, or modify the restriction so as to allow organizations in this country to assist and solicit the immigration of those people, there is nothing peculiar about the situation which would justify us in striking out the literacy test contained in the bill. If there is virtue in that test as it stands in the bill, there is virtue in the same test applied to this particular class of people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment as it now stands.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 18, after the word "guests," insert:

Provided further, That the provisions of this act relating to the illiteracy test or induced or assisted immigration shall not apply to agricultural immigrants from Belgium who come to the United States during the course of the present European war or within one year after its termination owing to circumstances or conditions arising from the war, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner General of Immigration that said Belgian immigrants come with intent to engage in work of agriculture in the United States and become American citizens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We have been making a very liberal application of our rule. The Chair will not seek the benefit of it. Is the call for the yeas and nays sustained?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is unavoidably absent from the city. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. FLETCHER'S name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is detained from the Senate on business of the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I explained the situation Thursday, and feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 22, as follows:

So Mr. LODGE's amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer an amendment to the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the word "Belgian" and insert in lieu thereof the following——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has just been adopted, and the amendment to the amendment can not be offered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can it be done in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I reserve the right to offer the amendment in the Senate. I ask to have it stated at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] will propose in the Senate the following amendment:

Strike out the word "Belgium" in the portion just agreed to and insert in lieu thereof:

Any country whose territory has been violated contrary to the provisions of articles 1 and 2 of the convention respecting the rights and duties of neutral powers and persons in war on land, ratified between the United States of America and other powers on February 23, 1909.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent to present for printing and reference to the committee an amendment to the legislative, and so forth, appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no further amendments be offered, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I now offer the amendment of which I gave notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington submits an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, in the amendment agreed to, line 1, after the word "guests,' 'strike out the word "Belgium" and insert:

Any country whose territory has been violated contrary to the provisions of articles 1 and 2 of the convention respecting the rights and duties of neutral powers and persons in war on land, ratified between the United States of America and other powers on February 23, 1909.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word in regard to the amendment. I am very much inclined to think that, so far as its actual operation is concerned, the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which has been discussed so long and which was adopted, will be a perfect dead letter.

A short time ago in the tariff bill we undertook to incorporate a provision discriminating in favor of American ships. When it came to put it into operation we were confronted by the objections of foreign countries based upon our treaties. Similar objection will undoubtedly be made to this amendment under what is commonly designated as "the favored-nation clause." The result of that objection would not be that immigrants from other countries would be admitted because those from Belgium are admitted, but the result would be that the amendment would not be enforced; it would be, as I have said, a perfect dead letter.

If there is a real intention to accomplish the object set out in the amendment, and a general provision such as that which I have just proposed is adopted, which is applicable to any country in the world coming within those general terms, no such objection could be made by a foreign country under a treaty, and it could be put into effect.

I am not particularly concerned about this amendment, but I do think, if we are going to undertake to extend the benefit of asylum to the Belgians, we ought to do it in an effective way. There is no more difficulty in determining who is entitled to admission into this country under this proposed amendment than there is to determine who is entitled under half a dozen other provisions of the bill such as deal with the immigrant's mental condition, his ability to earn a living, whether or not he is liable to become a public charge, or whether or not he is psychopathically inferior, or something of that kind which the bill provides.

The convention between the United States and various other countries entitled "Convention respecting the rights and duties of neutral powers and persons in war on land," which was ratified by the United States on February 23, 1909, being translated contains a list of the signatories to it; and the first one that I notice in the English translation is "His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia," and the second one is the "President of the United States of America." So that the United States of America, being one of the great signatories of the convention, has a very substantial ground for making a violation of it one of the subjects to be considered in its immigration laws and in determining the qualification of aliens for admission to this country. Article 1 of this convention is in the following language:

The territory of neutral powers is inviolable.

Article 2 is in the following language:

Belligerents are forbidden to move troops or convoys of either munitions of war or supplies across the territory of a neutral power.

Now, I make bold to say, Mr. President, that in the case of Belgium both the first and second articles of this convention have been violated, and citizens of that country would come within the terms of this amendment. I do not think that there is any other country at the present time that would be so subject. I think Belgium stands out as the great solitary exception in the entire world. But the terms are general; no one could complain; and it would give effect to this provision.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I entirely sympathize with what the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has just said, and yet I think that all that he has said constitutes a better matter of argument upon the part of the Government of the United States, if anybody should raise the favored-nation clause; if anybody should attempt to raise it, then all we have to do is to point to those two articles of the treaty which the Senator has just read and also point to the treaty of 1830, or whatever it was, between Prussia and France and Great Britain neutralizing Belgium. All that is a matter of argument, and it does not seem to me that the favored-nation clause could be raised against this provision any more if we fail to mention the name or merely refer to some article of some treaty or use a description than if we did mention the name but were able to prove that Belgium was in this peculiar condition. It seems to me that all that might very well be relegated to the diplomatists as a matter of argument, if the question is ever raised, and I apprehend that it never will be raised.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a new section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. It shall be the duty of the Department of Labor and the Department of Commerce to closely observe the industrial conditions of the country, and if at any time it shall be the opinion of either department that the immigrants to be expected in the immediate future by reason of their number or character will materially increase the number of unemployed people of the United States or reduce our standard of compensation to wageworkers, the department which so finds or believes shall at once report the same directly to Congress, with such facts as may be at hand and such reasons as may be pertinent to the conclusions reached.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as that seems to me in line with the purpose of the bill, as chairman of the committee I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when the name of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He is absent, and as I am not advised as to how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote "yea."

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. FLETCHER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent on business of the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (when Mr. PENROSE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is absent from the Senate on account of illness. He stands paired on this vote with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PITTMAN (when Mr. SAULSBURY's name was called). I am requested to state that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is absent on official business and that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have an understanding with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], with whom I am paired, and I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but in consequence of information given me by his colleague and by the Senator from Massachusetts, and in consequence of a telegram received by his secretary from him, I know that he would vote "yea" if present. I therefore consider myself freed from the pair, and I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who I understand would vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP. While I made the statement early this morning, I think it is only proper to repeat it, that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably detained at his home on account of a death in his family.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family, and, as announced by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], he is paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair, is absent. So I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is necessarily absent from the Senate and is paired. I am informed by his secretary that he has received a telegram from him stating that if he were present he would vote for the bill.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. ASHURST. I rise to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is unavoidably absent, and that, if present, he would vote in favor of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; and

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON].

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 7, as follows:

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 19906. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ROOT presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. OLIVER presented a memorial of Liberty Grange, No. 1182, Patrons of Husbandry, of Port Allegany, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation placing the delivery of mail in rural districts upon a contract basis, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. NORRIS presented a petition of the Western Swedish Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Ong, Nebr., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. H. J. Matthews, of Burwell, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the pensions of widows of Civil War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KERN presented a petition of 136 citizens of Bremen, Ind., praying for the prohibition of the exportation of ammunition, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of West Terre Haute and Goshen, Ind., remonstrating against the transmission of anti-Catholic publications through the mail, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of Frank Britton Camp, United Spanish War Veterans, of Crawfordsville, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to widows and orphans of Spanish War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Elkhart, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a volunteer officers' retired list, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 7102) granting a pension to John E. Halaas (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 7103) for the relief of W. R. Wells; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 7104) granting a pension to John Hamilton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MCLEAN:

A bill (S. 7105) granting a pension to Sue F. B. Prindle (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7106) granting an increase of pension to Susan Bryant (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES:

A bill (S. 7107) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Metropolis, Ill.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 7108) to authorize the purchase or construction of six new vessels, with all necessary equipment, for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and providing for additional surveys by the Coast and Geodetic Survey; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 7109) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 7110) granting an increase of pension to Mary Jane Drew; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 7111) granting a pension to George A. Atkinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 7112) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to muster Dr. John A. Bobb, deceased, a brigade surgeon, with rank of major, from assistant surgeon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 7113) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Rogers (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. SMITH of Michigan):

A bill (S. 7114) for the relief of Ethel Proctor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 7115) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin S. Wilbur (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7116) granting a pension to Sarah Spencer (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7117) granting an increase of pension to Fernando W. Moon (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7118) granting a pension to Lola I. Pope (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7119) granting an increase of pension to Imogene M. Burke (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 7120) for the relief of persons making simultaneous settlements on the same tract of the public lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. HARDWICK:

A bill (S. 7121) for the relief of the heirs of Solomon Cohen; and

A bill (S. 7122) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry D. Geddings; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 7123) to create a tariff board; to the Committee on Finance.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 217) to repeal an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $26,000 for the purchase of a tract of land known as the Macauley ranch, adjoining the United States Army post at Fort Missoula, Mont., for the use and benefit of the post as a target range, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 20347) which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $27,500 for assistance to the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on the District of Columbia, etc., of one clerk each at $2,750, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 19909), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Senate Document No. 225, Sixtieth Congress, first session, entitled "Development of the American Ocean Mail Service and American Commerce," is out of print, and there have been many calls for it. I move that 1,000 copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., Saturday, January 2, 1915) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 4, 1915, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 2, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless, praise, and magnify Thy holy name, O God our Father, for the continuation of Thy gifts unto the children of men. In the sweep of time another year has passed into history, and we most earnestly pray that we may be the better prepared by its experiences to enter upon the new year, that it may bring to all Thy children peace, happiness, and good will, that Thy kingdom may be advanced and Thy will be done in every heart. In the name and spirit of Him who taught us life and the immortality of the soul. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday was read and approved.

CHARLES A. COULSON.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13698, to correct the military record of Charles A. Coulson, and concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 13698. A bill to correct the military record of Charles A. Coulson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was read.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20150, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, Thursday I yielded one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOSS], and he has not occupied the whole of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I sympathize with those who express impatience at the progress of rural-credit legislation, but I can not believe it possible that this legislation will be agreed to by the House without a full discussion of the principles which necessarily will give shape to the measure that will finally be adopted. I have been scrupulously careful to avoid any personal references which in any way can reflect to the discredit of any Member. I trust that it will not be considered discourteous, while I am discussing a principle applying to the entire subject of mortgage banking and not the provision of any particular bill, if I should prefer to continue until I shall have presented the arguments as I have prepared them without yielding to any gentleman on the floor.

When I was discussing the Moss bill and the Bulkley bill I was glad to yield to Members, even to the extent of being taken off the floor by the discussion that ensued before my remarks were concluded. But I am discussing no particular bill now, and I trust I may be permitted to continue in a connected manner.

We now turn to the land-purchase act of Ireland which has been cited as a reason why our Government should extend direct financial assistance to the proposed system of mortgage banks. The activities of Sir Horace Plunkett and of his associates who organized the Irish Agricultural Organization Society are not projected toward the granting of land-mortgage credit, but to the organization of personal credit and of cooperation in production and distribution of agricultural products. The condition of Ireland at the time the land-purchase act was enacted is depicted by Herrick in his Rural Credits, as follows:

The country had appealed to God, to the State, to humanity, for sympathy, for aid, for dollars, and had become a mendicant among the nations. Steps had been taken, it is true, to solve the land question, but "fair rents," although fixed by the courts at a reasonable figure, were more than the tenants could pay. Nearly one-half of the inhabitants of Ireland had emigrated beyond the seas, and most of those who remained were living in mud huts or squalid hovels, inflamed with mutinous rage against the Government. The plight of the farming class was most wretched of all, for on account of their crude methods of cultivation and marketing foreign competitors were underselling them in the staple products for which the soil was best adapted, and the meager gains were shared between the landlords and the "gombeen" men.

Even these miseries alone were not sufficient to cause the English Government to enact the land-purchase act. Under the laws of the United Kingdom the Irish tenants owned the improvements on the lands or estates. These improvements had been constructed at their expense, and the law recognized the tenants' right of ownership. Thus there grew up a dual ownership, which was peculiar to Ireland alone. There were two owners with adverse interests, with different nationality and different residence—one, the landlord owning the land, living in England, and drawing rents, and the other, the tenant owning the improvements, living in Ireland, and cultivating the soil. This condition not only led to ill feeling, but to actual warfare and to near revolution. Out of this difficult situation grew the land-purchase act.

It would be interesting and perhaps instructive to continue this review so as to include all the countries which have adopted a program of social reform; but I have cited the leading nations of Europe which have the largest interests and the longest experience with mortgage banking. It can not be gainsaid that social reform has been an important factor in inspiring the founding of the State-endowed type of mortgage-banking institutions in European countries.

I wish to direct particular attention to the degree of service extended to agriculture by institutions which are founded and controlled by private initiative as compared with those which are endowed by the State in whole or in considerable part, either by subscription to capital stock or by a guaranty of debentures. In order to secure a considerable degree of thoroughness without continuing at too great length I will confine myself to the institutions of Germany. I have called attention to the important fact that the Credit Foncier holds less than 10 per cent of the rural mortgages in France. I will also be able to submit figures showing that State-endowed banks only hold 5 per cent of such mortgages in Germany. I do not include the mutual associations of borrowers, generally known as landschafts among State-aid institutions. These do not have capital stock and the State does not in any manner guarantee their debentures. They are pure associations of borrowers, each member of which pledges individual mortgage security to the whole society in return for debenture bonds of the association and resting solely on the collective mortgages held by the association plus the liability assumed by the individual members for the payment of the debts of the association. Thus in no proper sense can it be said that these institutions have received grants of public money to loan to their members or to purchase any part of their bond issue; neither does the Government credit in any manner sustain the selling price of the bonds. The Government has extended the advantages of strict supervision and has conferred many extraordinary privileges which relate principally to the summary processes of collecting debts and of foreclosing mortgages without the ordinary delays or processes of law; they are also given judicial powers to fine their membership and to compel various kinds of personal services, either with or without compensation, while their membership in turn can not question these decrees of their officers or appeal to the courts to arbitrate any grievance any member may hold against his association.

In discussing State aid in relation to the landschaft associations, Cahill says:

Government grants were made to the earliest associations, but they were inconsiderable in amount and were rather advances to meet general initial expenses of organization and establishment. Thus the Kur and Neumarket Credit Institute obtained £3,000. After the Napoleonic wars certain assistance appears to have been granted in certain cases, but the amounts were not large (p. 42).

In this connection it should be stated that during the Napoleonic war Napoleon levied tribute on the landschaft associations in Germany and robbed them of all their reserves and available funds. It is thus probable that grants of public funds to meet organization expenses did not equal in amounts the tribute levied by the hand of war. These mutual associations are the parent bodies of all mortgage banks as we are now considering that term, and thus it is established that mortgage credit, based upon debenture land bonds, was founded and established without grants of Government capital or credit; and these institutions present a successful history since the eventful day of July 25, 1770, a period of 144 years.

In Germany these associations originally were aristocratic and admitted only the higher classes of society to membership. It has only been recently that progressive ideas and democratic forces in society influenced their management, and I call attention particularly to the very important fact that this change of management, which is entirely in the interest of the small farmer, was brought about by the private joint-stock mortgage banks and not the State-endowed institutions, so highly lauded by the gentleman from Ohio.

Thus it is established that private capital and private enterprise engaged in mortgage banking actually revolutionized the business methods and destroyed the privileges in the credit world which caste had conferred and sought to perpetuate. I quote again from Cahill, page 53:

ACTIVE MODERN POLICY OF ASSOCIATIONS.

Within the last generation these institutions have, in general, shown themselves to be quite alive to progressive ideas. They have extended their eligibility for membership so as to include owners of small properties; they have increased the proportionate loans upon the security of property; they have introduced new branches of allied activity (e. g., banking and insurance); and they have adopted more flexible business methods, though always consistent with absolute security for bondholders. This general awakening is due to many causes, but not least has been the influence of the joint-stock banks. As a result it no longer occurs that a leading German organization of agriculturists, in high dissatisfaction with the backwardness of these associations, energetically advocates—as it happened in the early sixties—the foundation of joint-stock mortgage banks.

No higher tribute to the efficiency and usefulness or to the popularity among the farmers of Germany of the private mortgage banks can be paid than is contained in this extract. Every close student of German banking knows that the landschaft associations have approached closely to the business methods of their popular rivals. Each association has organized a private joint-stock bank to carry on the business of general banking, including the making of mortgage loans to nonmembers of the associations; and they make their loans in cash rather than in debenture bonds, as formerly; and that in all the new landschafts mutual liability is abolished and every borrowing member is responsible only for the amount of his own obligation. I submit this indisputable evidence that mortgage banking was originated without Government endowment and that the popular present-day methods were originated and introduced by privately owned and controlled banking institutions. It now only remains to show that State-endowed institutions do not carry any considerable part of the burdens of extending mortgage credit to the men actually engaged in agricultural pursuits in the German Empire and I will have completed my case.

The total farm mortgage indebtedness of Germany is estimated at $2,000,000,000. That sum was stated to our commission by speakers assigned by the German Government to discuss the subject of German mortgage credit before us. I have noticed the same figures are given by writers of repute, so I will accept them. This vast sum is distributed among the different classes of mortgage banking institutions as follows:

Savings banks	$850,000,000
Landschaft associations	750,000,000
Joint-stock banks	170,000,000
State and provincial banks	100,000,000

(See Economic Quarterly for August.)

It thus appears that the mortgage banks in the German Empire which have been established for the whole of a State, Province, or of a district within a Province and whose liabilities are guaranteed by the public authority of such area only grant 5 per cent of the loans on rural real estate. In speaking of these banks which have been organized in Prussia, Dr. Augsbin, in his address at Berlin before the United States commission, said:

In the second place we must consider the district aid banks. These banks were founded about 50 years ago by the Provinces at the suggestion of the Prussian Government. The object was to further by means of these banks all works of general utility undertaken by the small communities and townships. The annuity banks of Prussia were established in Prussia in 1850 for the purpose of facilitating the redemption of old servitudes, encumbering the lands of peasants from feudal times, so as to enable the peasant farmer to buy off the feudal dues encumbering his lands. But I think that this form of credit is of no interest to the American farmer, who only needs cheap amortization credit on long-term mortgages to increase his productive powers, and only organizations similar to the Raffeisen or the German Landschaften are of real importance to him. (P. 392).

With these curt words this eminent authority dismissed the State-endowed institutions of Prussia and disposed of the contention which the gentleman from Ohio professes to believe is threatening to wreck this legislation now proposed to this honorable body. I may say in concluding this discussion of these State-endowed mortgage banks in Germany that much of their business is quite familiar to American citizens and is the same class of expenditures as we carry on under direct public authority, such as the issue of bonds for drainage, irrigation, and road building, or by municipalities to own and operate public utilities, such as waterworks, municipal lighting systems, street railways, and similar public improvement enterprises. I am told that the State of Massachusetts guarantees the bonds issued by certain improvement districts to construct a system of public waterworks. Indiana likewise delegates public authority to the issue of bonds to improve lands lying in certain drainage districts. This kind of public improvement is so familiar with us that it does not merit extended discussion, yet it accounts for the organization of many State-endowed mortgage banks in Europe or more particularly in Germany.

There are many other special factors which operate in Europe and which are not present in the United States. Luzzatti, who is the father of cooperative rural credit in Italy, in an address before our commission, in Rome, stated that the savings which Italian emigrants in the United States send back to their native country did more to render possible the extension and upward march of credit in Italy than all the efforts of the ministers of the treasury—and Luzzatti is one of those ministers. If it be true that the savings of our foreign-born citizens which are sent back to the European Continent is a greater factor than any aid which the Government is able to extend in establishing systems of rural credit in those countries, then shall it be contended and can it be true that rural credit can not be successfully organized in this country without the grants of direct subvention from the Federal Treasury? But it is said that no successful mortgage system has ever been organized for small borrowers without such aid. This statement deserves some attention and elaboration.

The tracts of land in Europe are very small as compared with farms in the United States. I saw many farms in Germany which were mere strips of land not exceeding 30 feet in width. There were three Americans in our party in a tramp through rural Germany. We took photographs of many German farms so small that a person standing at each corner of the strip would show in the Kodak picture. German loans are made on the basis of the income of the land and not on its actual commercial value. In a general way this is true of all unrecallable long-time loans on the Continent. The theory is that only amounts can be safely loaned on a tract of land which can be repaid out of the income after deducting the cost of cultivation. All speculative values are excluded; and the income values are those taken by the German Government in assessing taxes. The result has been to make it difficult for small landowners to secure accommodations from those institutions which issue debenture bonds and are thus under the strict supervision of the Government. This one element has done more to limit the volume of rural business done by joint-stock banks in Germany than any other thing. The two joint-stock banks in Germany which do so large a proportion of the rural-loan business have been given the right to make an independent appraisement, and thus actually advance a larger proportion of the real value of the land than other private banks are permitted to do.

This feature accounts in part for the large business done by the savings banks, which charge a slightly higher rate and do not grant unrecallable loans. If the small farmer were to accept the small advance which he could get under their system of appraisement under a first mortgage and then be forced to borrow under a second from a private lender, the high rate on the second mortgage more than counterbalances the lower rate on the first mortgage. Naturally the borrower prefers to make his terms with savings banks or with private lenders. It is the system of valuation and not any defects in the system of banks which causes the results which are commonly pointed out as defects in the system of decentralized European banks. In a centralized system, like that of France, the cost of negotiating the loans adds to the difficulty by making the expense prohibitive to small borrowers in the remote parts of the Republic. In general, it may be said that a successful system of land-mortgage credit must contain the instrumentality to carry the machinery in some form to close proximity to the lands of the borrower.

I have thus demonstrated, first, that mortgage banking business based on land bonds was founded without the aid of public cash or public credit; second, that its methods of administration were perfected and made popular with the average farmer by the ability and energy of private bankers; and, finally, that the vast volume of all rural mortgage business is transacted by agencies operating without Government credit or Government cash. I therefore submit that in the face of this record there can be no justification for the contention that no useful rural-credits legislation can be perfected except by the grant of public money or the hypothecation of the public credit.

The attitude of Secretary Houston has been called into question, and there has been a concerted effort to make it appear that the administration has abandoned rural-credit legislation. I sympathize with those who may express an impatience at the delay in securing tangible results. However, there is no room for a charge that the legislation is being designedly delayed. It was generally admitted that our commercial system of banking was the poorest in the world, but years were spent in discussion and education, and it finally required the firmness and influence of the present administration to overcome the difficulties and to enact the Federal reserve law. The system has barely gotten into operation, and the administration is nearly two years in power.

The gentleman from Ohio referred to Mr. Herrick. For this reason it may be of interest to those who are criticizing the delay to mention that I had the honor on my return from Europe to deliver a message from Ambassador Herrick to Secretary Houston, urging careful consideration on the part of the administration of any proposed legislation on this subject, and expressing the opinion that the greatest danger was that enthusiasm rather than thorough knowledge might seek to dictate the terms of the law.

President Wilson personally assured our commission of his interest in this legislation, and that it was his desire that bills might be framed and presented to Congress at an early date. Without attempting to dictate the terms or draft of any measure which our commission might undertake to frame, the President frankly stated his objection to any direct grant of public money or to the guaranty by the Federal Government of the securities which might be issued by the proposed mortgage banks. He expressed cordial approval of the proposal to exempt mortgages and land bonds based upon them from all forms of Federal and local taxation, not as a subvention from the State to the banks, but as a measure of justice and advantage to the debtor. He approved the creation of adequate machinery within the Federal Government to give whatever assistance that might be thought to be helpful and necessary in the organization and supervision of these proposed instrumentalities. I have never understood from any authoritative source that the President has altered these views; on the contrary, he has appeared before Congress and has asserted them in a state paper or address. It remains also to say that the President expressed himself cordially in favor of chartering by the Federal Government of a system of personal-credit banks, which should be designed particularly for the use and benefit of the tenant class of farmers wherever such banks might be needed or helpful to the agricultural interests of the Nation.

Secretary Houston has at all times been interested in the progress of this legislation, and has never hesitated to express his personal views or to offer the assistance of the experts in his department. He promptly organized a division on rural credits and began a systematic study of the condition of agricultural credit in the United States, a work which was never before attempted by any authority. In his annual report he states that his department is now in position to give assistance to any committee of Congress to frame a personal-credit law, a work which so far as I am aware has not as yet been attempted by any Member of either House.

I beg to call your attention to the statement in regard to personal credits contained in the Secretary's annual report on page 31. I quote as follows:

> The students of rural credit recognize the desirability of another piece of legislation which may properly be had at the hands of the several States or of the Federal Government, namely, legislation authorizing and encouraging local personal cooperative credit associations. Some States have already taken steps in this direction and others are contemplating taking them. The Department of Agriculture has made earnest investigations in this field and is in position to offer suggestions as to legislation and as to the form and operations of rural-credit cooperative associations.

The Secretary has thus placed his great department in a position well in advance of that occupied by Congress on this subject. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] complains that the Secretary failed to make his position clear as to what kind of an instrumentality he favored. The Secretary in his report discusses the question with great directness and frankness. The failure of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] to comprehend the Secretary's position is due to the fact that he failed to quote the Secretary's language entire. In his quotation from the Secretary's report he omitted one sentence, though quoting all other connecting sentences. This one sentence would have made the meaning clear. The Secretary said:

> The chief difference of opinion arises over whether there should be special aid furnished by the Government. There seems to be no emergency which requires or justifies the use of the Government's cash or the Government's credit.

The gentleman from Ohio failed to quote that last sentence, though he did quote in another connection the sentence which immediately follows it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. BULKLEY. I intend to print with my remarks the entire discussion of Secretary Houston on rural credits and omit nothing. I notice the gentleman has quoted a part of a sentence from the Secretary's report, and I hope that when he prints his remarks the whole of that sentence will be put in.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The gentleman is mistaken as to any division of sentences. The sentences are taken entire, though but a part of the paragraph appears. The entire paragraph will appear in Secretary Houston's letter, which will appear as a part of my remarks.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman also quote the President's message when he said that we would not take up rural-credit legislation at this session?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I shall always be glad, on any proper occasion, to quote any official utterance which President Wilson may make.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman comment on the fact that there are only two States in the Union that could take advantage of rural-credit provisions on account of the record and foreclosure laws of any Federal act that might possibly give rural credits to the people? There are only two States in the Union that could take advantage of it, and those are Iowa and Wisconsin.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in reply to my friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], I beg to say that the Moss-Fletcher bill as it is drawn can go into operation in every State in the Union without any further action on the part of State or Federal authority. The debentures can not be accepted as a legal investment for trust funds except in those States whose laws respecting land titles, exemptions, and foreclosures are considered to be such as to give proper security to the debentures which may be issued. This decision is left to the commissioner of land banks under the bill as it was originally drawn. I am informed that the Bulkley-Hollis bill does not differ radically from the Moss bill in these provisions except that the specific requirements of State laws are not set out in the Bulkley bill but are left to the discretionary power of the Federal supervising power. It is not the intention of either bill, as I understand the Bulkley bill, to interfere with State laws. We designedly drew the commission bill so as to offer inducements to State authorities to adopt uniform State regulations concerning land registration, conveying, and exemptions, but the operation of the law is not dependent upon the State adopting such regulations.

This language of the Secretary supports the position assumed by the United States commission in its report. Our language is as follows:

GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL AID UNWISE AND UNNECESSARY.

In considering the question of the establishment of institutions under Federal charter, naturally the question of Government aid came under discussion. The commission, from the beginning, has been convinced that not only was Government aid unnecessary, but that it would be unwise. The farmers of the country do not desire any special privileges, and the idea of special privilege is, moreover, antagonistic to the spirit of our institutions. Government subvention is not needed. The security of our farms, the value of which is reported to be over $40,000,000,000 and yielding an annual product of the gross value approaching $10,000,000,000, is ample for the creation of a liquid security, which will be readily accepted by investors and which will enable the farmer to use his asset of land as readily as the merchant uses his stock of goods. The farmer needs no special privilege and wants no special privilege, and none should be extended to him.

On the same page of his report the Secretary gives his opinion as to the type of an institution which should be chartered. He says:

It is the judgment of the best students of economic conditions here that there is needed to supplement existing agencies a proper land-mortgage banking system operating through private funds just as other banking institutions operate, and this judgment is shared by the leaders of economic thought abroad.

Here is again a clear statement as to the type of institution the Secretary approves, and is in strong support of the recommendation of the United States commission. On page 30 of our report we used the following language:

Moreover, the commission became strongly convinced that the individual institution is best suited to the American people, and that the exercise of governmental activities should be largely confined to a rigid supervision, after allowing the widest latitude to individual effort and initiative.

Again, on page 29 of the Secretary's annual report, he reviews the main provisions of the Moss-Fletcher bill and of the Bulkley-Hollis bill, and concludes by saying:

A plan of this kind, operating through private funds, should work safely, and would probably result in a short time in systematizing credit transactions in rural districts and in reducing the interest rate.

Here is a specific indorsement by the Secretary of the principles contained in the Moss-Fletcher bill with no qualifying clauses. The Secretary has never been called upon to indorse specifically the language of the various sections of the bill. Its authors did not present it as a finished bill. It was presented as a basis for a successful and scientific system of land mortgage banks suited to American needs and conditions, and as such its principles have the complete indorsement of the administration.

Senator HOLLIS has stated on the floor of the Senate that the Bulkley-Hollis bill in all its principal features is similar to the Moss-Fletcher bill, but that they had modified some of its provisions and, in his opinion, had improved it. The Bulkley-Hollis bill is not acceptable to the administration in so far as it includes the principle of grants of public money and grants of the public faith and credit of the United States to sustain the selling price of their securities.

The issue is thus joined. I yield to no man in my desire to give the American farmer every legitimate advantage which can flow from wise legislation, but I am willing to take my stand with the administration. The American people have faith in the wisdom, patriotism, and integrity of President Wilson. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They are willing to trust his interpretation of our platform promises. The Democratic Party has never promised subventions or subsidies to any class of the American people, and the rank and file will gladly support the responsible leadership of the party in its refusal to yield to demands for a violation of our fundamental principles; and I desire to go on record now as predicting that this legislation will be enacted under the administration of Woodrow Wilson and agreeably to the promises and pledges of the Democratic Party. [Applause.]

I take pleasure in submitting the following letter from Secretary Houston. The Secretary's position was perfectly understood by every careful reader of his annual report, but as some have professed to be in doubt the Secretary calls attention to those passages of his report which clearly define his attitude and express his friendship toward this proposed legislation. His letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 2, 1915.

Hon. RALPH W. MOSS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MOSS: Of course I am greatly interested in rural credits and in securing proper Federal and State legislation on the subject at the earliest possible moment. The subject is a very difficult one and it is of the utmost importance that the right beginning should be made. In spite of very clear expressions in my annual report and in public statements I have made, an erroneous impression concerning my attitude has been conveyed to the public in several ways and especially through the headlines of some of the newspapers. In some cases the headlines indicate that I am opposed to rural-credits legislation, notwithstanding the fact that the subject matter of the news items indicates very clearly that I favor rural-credits legislation, including not only a land-mortgage banking system, but also cooperative personal-credit institutions. It has been difficult for me to see how anyone could misinterpret my statements. It is true that I have not entered at length into a discussion of the details of proposed measures. I have consciously avoided doing so. It is our uniform practice to avoid commenting in detail on proposals pending in the Congress, except when committees of the Congress refer measures to the department for comment. Notwithstanding this practice I have indicated in my report in a general way some of the features of measures pending in Congress with a favorable expression of opinion. You know, of course, of the President's interest in rural-credits legislation and recall his message to Congress December 2, 1913, in which he presented "the urgent necessity that special provision be made also for facilitating the credits needed by the farmers of the country." He pointed out that the pending Federal reserve bill would do the farmers a great service; that it would put them on an equal footing with other business men and masters of enterprise; and that "what they need and should obtain is legislation which will make their own abundant and substantial credit resources available as a foundation for joint concerted local action in their own behalf in getting the capital they must use." In this message the President expressed the hope that the committees of the Senate and the House would address themselves to this matter with the most fruitful results. May I call your attention to a few passages in my annual report on the subject of rural credits? The matter is discussed in the annual report for 1914, pages 26 to 32, inclusive. See quotations in attached appendix.

Reference has been made to Mr. Herrick's recent book on rural credits, and attention has been especially called to his review of the character and extent of State aid in Europe to rural-credit institutions. If attention is not directed to Mr. Herrick's explanation of why State aid was extended in Europe and to his definite expression of view that European action does not furnish precedent for such action in this country and that aid from the Government's Treasury or credit is not needed in the United States, a false impression may be conveyed. As a matter of fact, Mr. Herrick is definitely opposed to the use of the Federal Government's funds or credit for the support of rural-credit institutions. The following quotations from his book will make his position quite clear.

Very truly, yours, D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

QUOTATIONS.

THE PROBLEM.

Closely related to the production and distribution of farm products is the securing of capital by farmers on better terms. This problem has attracted the profound attention of the country and still awaits a full solution. The problem is one of extending the banking machinery and facilities more intimately into the country districts for the convenience and the assistance of the rural population and of the effective mobilization and utilization of the resources of the country people themselves.

AID THROUGH GOVERNMENT MONEY OR CREDIT.

The chief difference of opinion arises over whether there should be special aid furnished by the Government. There seems to be no emergency which requires or justifies Government assistance to the farmers directly through the use of the Government's cash or the Government's credit. The American farmer is sturdy, independent, and self-reliant. He is not in the condition of serfdom or semiserfdom in which were some of the European peoples for whom Government aid was extended in some form or other during the last century. He is not in the condition of many of the Irish farmers for whom encouragement and aid have been furnished through the land-purchase act. As a matter of fact, the American farmers are more prosperous than any other farming class in the world. As a class they are certainly as prosperous as any other great section of the people—as prosperous as the merchants, the teachers, the clerks, or the mechanics. It is necessary only that the Government, so far as geographic and physical conditions permit, provide machinery for the benefit of the agricultural classes as satisfactory as that provided for any other class, and this the Government has attempted and is attempting to do.

LAND-MORTGAGE BANKING SYSTEM NEEDED.

It is the judgment of the best students of economic conditions here that there is needed to supplement existing agencies a proper land-mortgage banking system operating through private funds, just as other banking institutions operate, and this judgment is shared by the leaders of economic thought abroad.

Notwithstanding the fact, however, that the people of the United States have ampler financial agencies than any other in the world, and have developed the habit of using these agencies to a greater extent than any other people, students of rural problems have been keenly alive to the need of further improvements. They have insisted upon extensions of the national banking facilities and the creation of special agencies in intimate touch with farmers with a special view to the betterment of financial conditions in the country. At least two definite measures have been prepared and have received special consideration. They are similar in many respects. They provide, in brief, for land-mortgage associations with small capital, which may make loans on farm mortgages within a district of a State or within a State to the extent of 50 per cent of the real values of the farms. The money arising from such loans is to be used for productive purposes on the farm on which the security is based. It is contemplated in one way or another, either through separate associations or through a central agency, that debenture bonds may be blanketed on the mortgages and offered to the public. It is proposed that the operations of the system shall be supervised by a central agency in Washington and that there shall be adequate safeguards in the way of examination and inspection. It is thought by students of the question that such debenture bonds would be safe, would attract capital, and would bring into the investment field, especially, small holdings scattered through the country which do not now easily find satisfactory investments. A plan of this kind, operating through private funds, should work safely and would probably result in a short time in systematizing credit transactions in rural districts and in reducing the rate of interest.

COOPERATIVE PERSONAL-CREDIT UNIONS NEEDED.

The students of rural credit recognize the desirability of another piece of legislation which may probably be had at the hands of the several States or of the Federal Government, namely, legislation authorizing and encouraging local personal cooperative credit associations. Some States have already taken steps in this direction and others are contemplating taking them. The Department of Agriculture has made earnest investigations in this field, and is in position to offer suggestions as to legislation and as to the forms and operations of rural credit cooperative associations. Such associations as these will perhaps render their largest service in the sections of the country where there are many small farmers whose individual resources may not be sufficient to enable them to secure the requisite credit. Their largest field for operation would probably be the South. Characteristics of such associations of small farmers are unlimited liability of members, the pledging of the faith of each to the other and of the whole to the lender, the use of funds for clearly defined productive purposes, and the supervision by the association of the use made of the funds. It has been objected that the feature of unlimited liability will prevent the organization of such associations in this country, but in certain sections of the country the liability of small farmers is already unlimited, and this could not be said to be an insurmountable obstacle.

The quotations from Herrick's Rural Credits referred to by Secretary Houston are as follows:

NEEDED ACTION IN UNITED STATES VERSUS STATE AID (P. 480).

The first step to be taken in order to extend cooperation and to introduce cooperative credit among farmers is, of course, the enactment of proper legislation. Already there are good laws on cooperative associations in many States. These ought to be codified in every State and the bad laws repealed. Wherever it could be done without interfering with present development and existing conditions, the laws on cooperation in each State should be reduced to one statutory act. There does not have to be one law for credit societies and separate laws for associations for other cooperative purposes. One law could be made to fit them all; and this would be the best plan, because then the regulations would become standardized as regards organization, administration, and management. The farmers of the United States do not need any special privileges or State aid. If methods were simplified and technicalities eliminated, cooperation, or organized individualism, based on private initiative and mutual self-help, would eventually be applied to all their activities. They would accomplish this most quickly and successfully by starting with the credit society as the local unit formed and operated on the principles of Raiffeisen.

EFFECT OF COOPERATION ON INTEREST.

Character of security: A great deal of misinformation on European cooperation has crept into the United States. The societies, it has been asserted again and again, grant cheap and easy credit at interest far below current rates, down to 3 and even 2 per cent, upon character alone. No statement could be further from the truth. Only in Italy is character credit ever accorded, and there, too, only now and then by Luzzatti's urban banks in the form of "honor loans" to indigent persons out of a small portion of their profits which they can afford to lose set aside each year as a pure act of charity. With this small exception there is no cooperative credit society in Europe which does not demand of borrowers as safe security as is exacted by an ordinary bank. Moreover, interest rates are never below those on sound and marketable securities except where the State has advanced public funds to be distributed in free or cheap loans.

The nearest the societies come to extending credit on character is when they permit a member to draw against an uncovered open account up to an agreed amount. Only those members who have unencumbered and readily attachable property, however, are allowed this privilege, while the agreed amount of the account is fixed at considerably less than the ascertained value of their property. Chattel mortgages and pledges of personal property are not uncommon, while the credit societies have been tempted even to assist members to acquire small holdings on real estate mortgages and have invested their surpluses in such securities. Serious consequences have resulted from this practice. The entire rural cooperative system of the Grand Duchy of Hesse has been shaken to its foundation by thus tying up funds of the credit societies, but bitter experience is gradually teaching cooperatives to let real estate mortgages alone. The preferred security is the indorsement of one or more responsible parties, and, with the rare exceptions noted, the societies will not extend credit on anything less. The societies themselves are able to borrow upon no other security than the collective liability of their members, and this is what is meant in speaking of the character credit which is available for cooperatives.

The interest rate for loans, discounts, and acceptances by European rural cooperative credit societies after they have been firmly established is never more than that charged merchants by the ordinary banks in their locality, while in the German Raiffeisen societies it may be less than the commercial rate, for a reason already explained. The American farmers should disabuse their minds of the stories recently told them of the fabulously cheap money in the European credit societies. There is enough good in cooperation to assure its spread, when once it becomes understood, throughout the United States without the invention of fictitious advantages. The granting of agricultural credit is expensive to the ordinary lender because of the costs of examining the securities offered and of making recoveries, and is not profitable unless it yields an interest rate sufficiently high to cover all costs and risks.

STATE AID—HISTORY (PP. 13–15).

Many governments assisted and even created institutions whose purpose was to compensate dispossessed lords or supply them with capital to hire labor in place of the liberated serfs, or to furnish these freedmen with the means to purchase farms; and this plan is still being followed to encourage young men to go back to the land or to remain upon it.

But wherever this intervention occurs it is motivated by the old feudal notion which led kings to believe that the land and its occupants belonged to them and should be subject to their particular care. As the rights and duties dropped away from the lords they passed over to the kings and finally lodged in constitutional governments. Feudalism was frequently replaced by paternalism. England, Sweden, Norway, Germany, and some of the flourishing small States did not develop along this line, but all the other large agricultural nations took this bent, and treated the agricultural classes as dependent wards, if they gave them any friendly consideration at all.

Literature teems with stories of the ignorance, poverty, and degradation of the continental European peasants up to a half century ago. Masses of them are still so poor that they do most of their work by hand, carry their produce to markets on their backs or in carts drawn by themselves or their wives, and are forced to use every miserable little economy to keep body and soul together. To call an American farmer a peasant would be to insult him, although the equivalents of the word in foreign languages convey no offensive meaning. This shows what agricultural conditions in Europe are as viewed by American eyes. The majority of peasants are landless or own plots too small to be mortgaged and have no chance to obtain more on their own standing alone. Hence they are able to get real estate credit only by cooperation or from institutions assisted or privileged by the state.

The feudal system did not gain foothold on American soil, so the United States has never had a complicated variety of tenures and gradation of ranks, the removal of which called for severe remedies. The principles of equality which presided at the Nation's birth have been constantly manifested by avoiding special and using general laws wherever it has been possible to do so. Special legislation, either for individuals or classes, would now be revolutionary and also would deaden the spirit of those who should rely upon it. The American farmers are better men than the European peasantry. Furthermore, they are the most independent and self-reliant part of the country's population. It does not seem likely that they will demand privileges and special favors devised for conditions which have no parallel in this country and which would do them in the long run more harm than good.

STATE AID—FRANCE—EFFECT (PP. 344–345).

Nothing, however, has yet come to light to enable a forecast to be made of the direction which future development will take. Indeed, the future is very uncertain. State aid, which has been so lavishly extended in France, has registered a conspicuous failure when considered from the viewpoint of the hopes entertained in 1899. Even its partisans are far from satisfied with the progress made, and are now contemplating amendments to the laws in order to bring about vital changes in the Credit Agricole Mutuel. To say nothing of the dependence upon funds officially supplied, the intimate relations between the system and the Government bind together the financial destinities of both. The occurrence of a great war, for instance, which only served to prove the absolute solidity of the self-reliant Germany system in 1870, might imperil the very existence of this French State-aided system. No one can foretell, of course, what will happen; but perhaps, as the years roll on, larger numbers of members of the Credit Agricole Mutuel will appreciate the value of the principles of self-help maintained by the Federation of the Farmers and Workmen's Bank, with unlimited liability, and, in a lesser degree, by the Central Federation, and then the full meed of praise will be bestowed upon Rostand, Rayneri, and especially upon Louis Durand, who for over a generation have been fighting the good fight for mutual self-help and pure cooperation.

STATE AID—AUSTRIA-HUNGARY—EFFECT (PP. 378-379).

The success achieved by this Crown-devised and State-aided cooperative credit system of Hungary was a surprise even to those who conceived it. The system was established purely as an experiment, but it now covers 7,777, or over one-half, of the parishes of Hungary. It has stamped out usury and revived agriculture within that area, and has given a strong impetus to the cooperative movement which is now spreading throughout the land. But it has defects and shortcomings which are becoming more apparent with time.

The intervention of the State has deadened the spirit of self-help. The arrangement which deprives the farmers of direct representation in the management of the center, and even compels them to accept persons not of their own choosing for certain offices in the local societies, violates the important principle of cooperation and retards the development of individual independence. Great numbers of the societies have been formed and are managed by the priests, teachers, notaries, or large landowners in the neighborhood, and the members have no mutual feeling for one another, but join simply with the object of benefiting themselves alone. The artificiality arising from this outside control has created distrust of the system in banking circles. Coupled with this distrust is the enmity aroused by the official favoritism displayed and the class legislation enacted for farmers, and as a result the center, which is now mostly agricultural, finds difficulty in negotiating its debentures and rediscounting the paper of the local societies. Indeed, the system is badly in want of money for extending its activities, and the minister of agriculture recently acknowledged that unless it can attract more deposits or establish better relations with existing financial institutions, the State will have to be called upon for further assistance.

STATE AID—ITALY—CHARACTER (P. 363).

None of these various central banks which the Government has set up for central, southern, and insular Italy is allowed to do business with the farmers directly if there are any rural banks, consortiums, or agricultural bodies, either of an incorporated or cooperative form, to serve as intermediaries, and all are expected to encourage the formation of such intermediaries, particularly of the cooperative kind, while they have the right to inspect and supervise the reorganization, if necessary, of those with which they have dealings. These central banks are, in fact, the official organs of the Government for introducing cooperative credit among poor or ignorant farmers who lack the standing and initiative to help themselves. Several of them were called into existence and endowed with public funds in consequence of earthquakes, pests, and plagues, which devastated wide areas, and they assisted, it is true, all who applied until normal conditions were restored. But usually they give preference to the smallest loans offering the highest security. The banks of Naples and Sicily are allowed considerable discretion, but strict rules for according credit have been laid down for the rest. In Liguria, for instance, the maximum loan is $600 for three years. The money may be used only for the purchase of live stock, implements, or machinery. Loans of $200 may be granted for two years for the purchase of fertilizer or for the necessaries for planting biennial crops. Loans for the same amount may be granted for only one year for other purposes of cultivation and harvesting. It will be seen that these State-aided banks of Italy are not for large or well-to-do farmers.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] to use some of his time now.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I have no requests for time. I desire, however, to discuss briefly one or two provisions in the bill, and it will be quite satisfactory to me, and I am sure it will be to this side of the House, to begin the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule, if there may be an understanding that when certain items are reached the five-minute rule will not be enforced. I will say to the committee that I will not consume probably more than 20 minutes or possibly half an hour.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, that will be entirely satisfactory to this side of the House. I also have a statement from the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the effect that they desire to discuss certain features of the Choctaw matter when it is reached under the five-minute rule, but that now they are willing to begin with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say again to the gentleman that I am quite willing to have the bill taken up now for amendment under the five-minute rule if we may have that understanding.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that when a certain item which I wish to discuss for a longer time than five minutes is reached under the five-minute rule I may have 30 minutes, and if the request is granted I will waive the time that is assigned to me in general debate, which is an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that when a certain item in the bill in which he is interested is reached he may have 30 minutes in which to discuss it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] may proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington may proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, what I desire to do is to call to the attention of the Members of Congress here, and to those who may read this morning's RECORD, the fact that the unfinished business on Calendar Wednesday is the consideration of a death-liability statute that is supposed to affect the ocean only, but which does affect every coast State and all the Great Lakes States, and which takes away from the States jurisdiction in the matter of death on steamboats, which is very broad, and which substitutes an archaic, ancient, out-of-date statute, that it would be an absolute disgrace for this Congress to pass. I hope that the Members of Congress who have not been paying any attention to that statute will consider it and study it before next Calendar Wednesday. I believe, for instance, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], who is going to be governor in that State soon, if he would look at the statute would be crusading against it and fighting it in every way possible. I believe that gentlemen from the Great Lakes region would fight it, and also gentlemen from Florida and Louisiana and Texas, and all coast States. Jurisdiction is to be taken from the States, and it is not to be fully restored as to its most substantial remedies to the Federal Government. If it was going to be retained in its entirety and effectiveness it would be different, but they are going to wipe out to a great extent the chance of widows and orphans and those who have claims against steamboats collecting them by giving jurisdiction over to the Federal judges in the admiralty court, where there is no jury trial. In the State courts there is a jury trial. It seeks to take away a great many of the privileges that claimants have by applying the most archaic rules known to the lawyers of the Shipping Trust.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chairman of the committee if it is not possible at this time for us to make some unanimous-consent agreement with reference to taking up the Choctaw item, fixing the time for debate, and the division of the time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be agreeable to both sides that when we reach that item the gentleman from Mississippi shall control 30 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma 30 minutes, as we had agreed on Thursday.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think that I have ever agreed to that, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] have 30 minutes each of general debate. Why not by unanimous consent change that so that it will be taken out of the general debate and the time be consumed when that item in the bill is reached under the five-minute rule?

Mr. HARRISON. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that agreement be made.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he might make it 45 minutes on a side.

Mr. MANN. That would not limit the time under the five-minute rule.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman could get time always.

Mr. MANN. That can be done at that time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that when the Choctaw item in the bill is reached under the five-minute rule, under the head of the Five Civilized Tribes, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] may have 30 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] 30 minutes in which to discuss the item.

Mr. MANN. That is, transfer the 30 minutes of general debate to debate under the five-minute rule when that item is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that when the item in the bill relating to the Choctaws is reached the gentleman from Mississippi may have 30 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. That does not interfere with the ordinary procedure under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. No. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and in full compensation for all offices the salaries for which are provided for herein for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, namely:

For the survey, resurvey, classification, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey or allotment of Indian lands, $125,000, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purposes and to remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the survey, resurvey, classification, or allotment of any land in severalty on the public domain to any Indian, whether of the Navajo or other tribes, within the State of New Mexico and the State of Arizona, who was not residing upon the public domain prior to June 30, 1914.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I see that this item is decreased from $150,000 to $125,000. How much unexpended balance is there for the last fiscal year? My recollection is that the commissioner or Secretary, in making his report, says that this allotment work has very materially decreased.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that the unexpended balance is $89,241.59.

Mr. MANN. If they had an unexpended balance of $89,000 out of an appropriation of $150,000, with the statement of the department that the work of the department is materially decreased, what is the need of making an appropriation now almost as large as was made before?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because they have outstanding contracts with persons to do certain surveying work that have not yet matured, and they are still being employed in carrying out that work, and it is necessary, in order to meet those contracts that have not yet matured, that this balance be withheld.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the report of the Commissioner of the Indian Office on page 44 has this to say:

During the past two years the quantity of allotment work handled in the field has decreased materially. A few years ago the office had as many as 18 allotting agents in the field at one time, while to-day we have but three. This is due partly to the fact that practically all the Indians on reservations containing lands susceptible of agricultural development without irrigation have been allotted.

Now, if that is the case, what is the necessity of making a larger appropriation. That does not indicate that there are a lot of outstanding contracts. What is the necessity of making a large appropriation and swell the appropriation if the money is not to be expended?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to House Document No. 1287, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting a statement of cost of survey and allotment work, Indian Service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, in which they set out in full each item of expenditure and how expended and where, and it is a complete statement.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and that indicates that there is no need for that large appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a justification for the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. It is a justification for what they have expended, but it is not a justification for making an appropriation much larger than they need for that particular service.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I have none of these lands in my State, and I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] who has a lot in his State.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will state that when I saw, as I did see the other day, the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in reference to allotment work which the gentleman from Illinois has just read it occurred to me, in view of the fact that the hearings disclose that there had been an unexpended balance of $89,000 last year of this appropriation, that the amount could be further reduced. I took the matter up with the Indian Office, called their attention to the report, and also called their attention to what their estimates showed with reference to the unexpended balance, and they went over the matter fully with me and showed that they would need this money for the next fiscal year by showing the different reservations where allotment work is being done, and that much of it is used in the survey on Indian reservations where the money is paid to the General Land Office, which does that work. They also called attention to the fact that under the present practice allotments are being made by the superintendents at agencies instead of regular alloting agents, and that there was a great deal of work being conducted in the way of allotment, and a full written statement of it is being prepared, but has not yet reached me from the Indian Office; and I am going to ask leave to extend in the RECORD the statement justifying the necessity for having $125,000 for the next fiscal year for the work of survey and allotment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a minute more. Of course, if they need the money, I am quite satisfied. The statement in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not indicate that they need the money. The commissioner is a very good commissioner, but he ought not to make such a sloppy statement in his report if the facts do not justify it. His report indicated they do not need the money. Now, the information he furnishes the gentleman from South Dakota says that they do need the money. Well, he ought to be more careful, for we are supposed to read his annual report, but we are not supposed to know his private opinion.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the statement which was furnished by the Indian Office in reference to this item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

With reference to allotting agents, while it is true that the number of these officers has been greatly diminished, yet in making these decreases advantage has been taken of the provisions of section 9 of the act of June 25, 1910 (35 Stat. L., 855–859), which authorizes allotments to be made on reservations by the superintendents or agents in charge. In your own State, on the Cheyenne River, Rosebud, Crow Creek, and Standing Rock Reservations, allotments have been and are now being made by the superintendents. On the Pine Ridge Reservation Mr. Bates is still employed as allotting agent, and although his work is nearing a close, yet under the law allotments may be made to newly born children as long as any lands remain unallotted.

The estimate of $125,000 for surveying and allotting Indian reservations is a conservative one. Probably $75,000 of this amount will be required by the General Land Office in survey work, notably on the Northern Cheyenne or Tongue River Reservation, Mont., to complete surveys of the Pueblos in New Mexico, to survey the Papago or San Xavier Reservation in Arizona, for additional work on various Chippewa reservations in Minnesota, to survey the Goshute Reservation in Utah, and to survey various Mission Indian reservations in California, where little "inside work" has been done and where the reservation boundaries have not been properly identified. This would leave $50,000 for allotment work, including salaries, and for forage, equipment, materials, various other incidental expenditures, and for emergency work.

Allotments are now being made on the Gila River Reservation in Arizona, where there are several thousand Indians to be provided with land. On the Hoopa Valley Reservation, Cal., surveys are required, and there are approximately 500 Indians to be allotted. There are also about the same number to be allotted on the Duck Valley Reservation in Nevada. It may be added that many of the tracts purchased for Indians in California under the acts of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 325–333), April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 70–76), and subsequent acts, have not yet been subdivided for the purpose of allotments in severalty, and that while the expense for surveying and platting of each tract would not be large, yet in the aggregate the cost will be considerable, as we bought lands for about 40 bands. This work has not received specific attention heretofore, as the funds appropriated were needed for more pressing work elsewhere.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of obtaining some information. I see at the bottom of this paragraph, the last three lines, these words:

Who was not residing upon the public domain prior to June 30, 1914.

Why was that incorporated in the bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is on the second page of the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. The last paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (reading). "Provided that no part of said sum shall be used for the survey, resurvey," lines 11 to 17, inclusive?

Mr. HARRISON. No; just the last three lines of that paragraph containing the words "who was not residing upon the public domain prior to June 30, 1914."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was for this reason. That the Navajo Indians of the States of New Mexico and Arizona have heretofore been permitted to go off the reservation and take land as citizens of the United States could take it under the public-land laws of the United States.

It seems that at that date they were forbidden. There was a provision in the last Indian appropriation bill to the effect that thereafter they could not take that land, and that is the reason for this.

Mr. HARRISON. That is now permanent law?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; that is permanent law now.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman, further, Is the work that is required respecting the appraisement of these lands finished now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This provision, as the gentleman will see, does not provide for the appraisement. It says:

That no part of said sum shall be used for the survey, resurvey, classification, or allotment of any land in severalty on the public domain to any Indian—

And so forth, and it does not provide for an appraisement.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I asked about, whether there was any necessity for a further appropriation for appraisement purposes, and if not, since in prior bills it has been carried, whether the work of appraisement is now over?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think so. But it is not estimated for by the department.

Mr. HARRISON. Previously the word "appraisement" was included with the terms "reclassification and allotment."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. The reason for that was that allotments were made to the Indians, and then there was an unsurveyed domain, belonging to the tribe, that had to be sold and that had to be estimated for and appraised; and that is the reason why the word "appraisement" was left in the bill then. There is no reservation of that character now.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipes lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, or loss of water rights, including expenses of necessary surveys and investigations to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects and power and reservoir sites on Indian reservations in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act of June 25, 1910, $250,000, reimbursable as provided in the act of August 1, 1914, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act or for which public funds are or may be available under any other act of Congress; for pay of one chief inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $4,000; one assistant inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $2,500; for traveling and incidental expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, including sleeping-car fare and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field and away from designated headquarters, $3,200; in all, $259,700: Provided also, That not to exceed seven superintendents of irrigation, six of whom shall be skilled irrigation engineers and one competent to pass upon water rights, and one field-cost accountant, may be employed: Provided further, That the proceeds of sales of material utilized for temporary irrigation work and structures shall be covered into the appropriation made therefor and be available for the purpose of the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes a point of order on the paragraph just read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To what item?

Mr. MANN. To the paragraph. This covers the repair of ditches and the purchase and use of tools and appliances and everything of that sort, and is made available until expended. I am aware that this item was carried in other appropriations, but inserted by another body. But what is the necessity and object of making an appropriation for maintenance of irrigation ditches available until expended, contrary to all the ordinary principles which we adopt in making appropriations? I can understand why it may be desirable and necessary to make an appropriation for construction of irrigation ditches available until expended, but, for maintenance and repair, why is not that a current item, to be taken care of without accumulating a large surplus?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman please indicate the page and line on which that occurs?

Mr. MANN. Page 3, line 5.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That must have been an oversight. I do not think it is necessary for that to remain there.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, that, I take it, applies to the first part of the paragraph, for the construction, repair, and maintenance.

Mr. MANN. It would apply to everything in the paragraph.

Mr. CARTER. It would not be necessary for it to apply to maintenance, but it has been the rule, as the gentleman knows, to make it apply to construction.

Mr. MANN. Where we make a specific appropriation for the construction of an irrigation ditch it has been quite customary to make the appropriation available until expended, and there is very good reason why it is necessary; but where we make a general appropriation every year for maintenance and repair, including some construction, I can not see any reason why that should be made available until expended.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I think that follows the language of the bill last year, but I agree with the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MANN. It does follow the language of the bill. Of course, it is true that the Indian Office, like every other bureau and department of the Government, would like to have appropriations made which they can hold until they want to use them; but after all it is better in making these appropriations to make them annual, as far as possible, so that we shall know something about how much money is likely to be expended in the ensuing year, because we will have to provide for the raising of the amount.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will offer a motion to strike out the words "to remain available until expended."

Mr. MANN. I will move to strike it out on a point of order, and also, at the bottom of page 3, the item which provides that the proceeds of sale of material used for temporary irrigation work and structures shall be covered into the appropriation made therefor and shall be available for the purposes of the appropriation. What is the necessity of violating the usual rule that we have that the proceeds of sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to that going out.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit an interruption, I will state that it has been the policy of the Committee on Indian Affairs not to carry any such provision, and I had supposed this was out. I think it is in there inadvertently, and it ought to go out.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the language on page 3, line 5, "to remain available until expended," and also to the last proviso following the word "employed," on line 21 of page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to discuss the point or order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I concede the point of order on both.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order on the whole paragraph. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice you have an item here for the pay of one chief inspector of irrigation, on lines 9 and 10 of page 3, and on line 11 "one assistant inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $2,500." Are those new offices?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are not.

Mr. HARRISON. Are those provided for by law?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman what is meant by "traveling and incidental expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, including sleeping-car fare and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence"? Do you intend to mean by that that one traveling in the field in the discharge of his duties gets $3 a day for subsistence, and in addition to that he gets his actual traveling expenses; that is, lodging and railroad fare, and all those things?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is for traveling and incidental expenses, including sleeping-car fare and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence, when actually employed on duty in the field and away from the designated headquarters.

Mr. HARRISON. Would it not be better if the paragraph were made to read "For actual necessary traveling expenses when actually employed on duty in the field and away from designated headquarters"? Would not that include all necessary expenses of subsistence and lodging and travel?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the language carried in all the appropriations for any similar service, and this has to be in that shape so as to be audited properly.

Mr. HARRISON. It does not have to be in that shape because the other items are carried in this form, does it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The language has been used in all the bills for many years.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think the other form would be better?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would be subject to some objection.

Mr. HARRISON. If the actual necessary traveling expenses of one of these inspectors were paid they might not amount to as much as the railroad fare and $3 per diem for subsistence.

Mr. CARTER. I think it would amount to a great deal more than $3 per diem. The object of putting in the $3 per diem was to fix an amount which they might not exceed, so that they might not pad their expenses, and in order that there might be a definite amount over which they should not go.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOSTER. I renew the point of order for a moment.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. If the gentleman will yield, I wish to ask him a question for information.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How many Indians are the United States caring for at this time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are something over 300,000 in the United States. About 101,000 of them are in Oklahoma and the rest are distributed throughout the United States, mainly in New Mexico, Arizona, South Dakota, and Montana, I believe.

Mr. FALCONER. And some in California.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Are any of them located in the State of Michigan?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have an Indian school in Michigan whose pupils are being cared for, and there are possibly a few scattered bands of Indians elsewhere in the State.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he has made any general investigation or had specific hearings to determine how the irrigation carried on by the Indian Bureau articulates with the irrigation carried on under the general reclamation act of 1902? The gentleman will recall that while I was on the committee we used to wonder and tried to determine if there was not a good deal of duplication of work between the two bureaus; and I want to ask if there have been any new developments in the last few years as to the irrigation carried on by the Indian Bureau and the irrigation carried on by the regularly constituted irrigation bureau under the act of 1902?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that the new bureaus are both under the Secretary of the Interior, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And I will say that the appointments have been made with a view to having harmony between them, and I do not think that at the present time there is any friction between the Indian irrigation service and the irrigation by the Reclamation Service.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not particularly have in mind any personal hostility or personal antagonism that there might be between the two bureaus; but as the chairman of the committee well knows, they are both under the Interior Department, both appointed by the Interior Department, and both conducted there, with the Indian Department as a last resort for the Indian irrigation. I wondered if the chairman of the committee had ever conceived of a plan whereby the general Reclamation Service and the Indian reclamation service might be brought together, and not have two bureaus operating.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not see how that could be done, because of the fact that, as the gentleman well knows, the public lands are under the control of his committee, and we have a Public Land Commissioner and an Indian Commissioner. Each one of them has jurisdiction of lands. The lands may be in the hands of white citizens of the United States and a strip may run through an Indian reservation or an Indian reservation may border upon them. It is necessary for the two to act in harmony, and yet each must act within his respective jurisdiction.

Mr. FERRIS. I know it is necessary for them to act in harmony; but as both bureaus are under one head, every time we take up an irrigation matter in the Indian Office or every time we take up an irrigation matter in the General Reclamation Office we finally wind up in the Secretary's office; and I have been wondering if we could not hurdle one of these bureaus and get to the Secretary of the Interior a little quicker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not see how it would be possible, considering the rights of the citizens who are not wards of the Government and the rights of the wards of the Government, one being presided over in one bureau and the other in another.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no specific amendment to offer, and no point of order to make, and no particular criticism about it. It simply seems to me that if the two services could be brought together and consolidated into one, so that you could get your finger on what they were both doing, and how they were doing it, and how much money was being spent, it would be a good idea to have the work done in that way. I wish the Indian Committee—and the chairman knows I am very fond of every member of that committee—would look into the advisability of trying to blend the two bureaus under the Interior Department and see if they could not save a little money.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. Would not the gentleman's committee, over which he presides as chairman, have jurisdiction of legislation of this kind?

Mr. FERRIS. We of the Public Lands Committee have no jurisdiction of irrigation matters. As the gentleman from Indiana well knows, they have a regular Committee on Irrigation, and irrigation matters go to that committee. We do not have anything at all to do with irrigation.

Mr. COX. Your committee has general jurisdiction over matters relating to the Interior Department, has it not?

Mr. FERRIS. We have to do with the disposition of the public lands.

Mr. COX. And with nothing else?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; a number of things; and we have something to do with the establishment of parks, although we do not appropriate for them.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman is clearly right in his idea as to what ought to be done.

Mr. FERRIS. Here is the Interior Department, which is the head of the irrigation system. The Secretary of the Interior finally determines whether there shall be any Indian irrigation or not, and whether there shall be any public-land irrigation or not, and we finally wind up in his office. It does not make any difference which one of the bureaus we go to, the question whether or not there shall be any irrigation is determined in that office. Why can not the same Reclamation Service, lawfully constituted under the act of 1902, handle this entire matter, and let it be one comprehensive system, so that when the gentleman from Indiana or myself make an inquiry as to how much money has been expended for irrigation, or to know how much irrigation has been actually going on, we can find out without ramification through so many departments or bureaus?

Mr. COX. What committee of the House would have jurisdiction of the two bureaus if it was combined?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the Committee on Irrigation, probably. The House parliamentarian passes on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the observations of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] in regard to the two reclamation services under the Interior Department. It had occurred to me, as it has to the gentleman from Oklahoma, that it might be possible and proper to consolidate the two services, but after investigation of the matter pretty carefully, in connection with an enterprise with which I am familiar, I came to the conclusion that it would not be wise to attempt to have the Reclamation Service carry on the work under the Indian Bureau.

It will occur to the gentleman from Oklahoma what some of the difficulties are. First, the Reclamation Service in general is a work under a special fund, and has to do largely with great enterprises. Further, that service carries on its work largely by contract, and builds its projects very permanently and very thoroughly and finishes carefully. The same permanence and careful finish is not required on all Indian work. The Indian reclamation bureau claims to have made a better record for economy than has the Reclamation Service. That may in part be due to the fact that the Indian Bureau has been of the opinion, and I think properly, that in constructing these Indian projects it was not necessary to build them in all cases as permanently as the Reclamation Service builds its projects.

Further, and I think this is the most serious obstacle in the way of consolidating the two services, it is desirable that the Indian labor should be employed so far as possible in the construction of these reclamation projects or ditches and canals on the Indian reservations. Possibly that employment increases the cost of the project in some cases, although not ordinarily, but I doubt if there would be as much Indian employment under the Reclamation Service as is had under the Indian Service. It is almost as important to teach the Indians how to work and how to build and maintain reclamation projects as it is to reclaim their lands, and the Indian Service endeavors, in building the projects, to train the Indians themselves in the construction of irrigation work and to give them a training under which they will be able to maintain them after they are built. The Indian irrigation construction, take it all together, from the repair and upkeep of projects built and the execution of projects under way to the inaugurations of projects large and small, is so intimately associated with the numberless other activities of the Indian Service on behalf of the Indians that it should be kept directly under the supervision and control of the bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, is there a point of order pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] reserved a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the officers, the engineer, and the assistant inspector of irrigation. There is no law to authorize it.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] said that there was.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The general authority for the Indian Bureau in the control of the Indians' property by the United States Government will be found in the United States Statutes at Large, volume 24, when the Bureau of Indian Affairs was organized under the War Department.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs has been exercising jurisdiction ever since. These Indians are the wards of the Government, and, as has been frequently decided by the courts, it is the duty of the Government to control the property and take care of the property. In these arid Western States, where there is no water, they can not produce the crops unless they can get water on it, and as a part of the duty of the Government to control the property and put it in condition for the Indians they organized this bureau of irrigation, and they have to-day this service, with the officers, for the purpose of building dams, ditches, and supplying the Indians with water and making the land valuable. It comes under the general authority of the United States as exercised for nearly 100 years for the control of the Indians' property, and never has been questioned.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the only question is as to this act of 1910, which does not give the authority for the appointment of these officers, nor does it create these offices. I do not think there is any provision of law for the creation of the offices.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Texas any citation for the Chair that authorizes these offices?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was authorized after the bureau had taken into consideration the necessity for the irrigation. It carried with it the authorization of the right to appoint the men for the care of the irrigation projects, the dams, and so forth. It is in force now, and nearly all of them are being operated under the control of the Government. The Government having first adopted the project, appropriating the money for carrying them into effect, they are now distributing the water to the Indians in different parts of the country. It is absolutely necessary that these officers should have the care of the property of these Indians in the manner that is suggested here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course there is no question that this appropriation is in order so far as the repair and maintenance of the irrigation projects are concerned. I am inclined to think from the laws that we have passed that it is in order as to the construction of irrigation ditches where no more than $20,000 can be used in one place. That part that appropriates specifically for officials is probably subject to a point of order, but it was originally put in as a limitation; and is it not wiser to let it remain in as a limitation rather than to give to the department authority to pay such salary to them as it may choose out of the lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, my colleague may be correct as to that, and yet I think there ought to be some provision for these positions, if they are to be put in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Of course, you can not very well make specific provision of law providing for these places, because they may need them this year and they may not need them this year. That is left to Congress to determine; but they might employ a skilled irrigation engineer at a higher salary than $4,000 a year, if you make a lump-sum appropriation and do not put in a limitation. There is no doubt that we have authority to make appropriations for irrigation purposes, I think, and certainly for repair and maintenance; and is it not wiser, if we do that, to appropriate specifically for some of the higher-salaried offices rather than to leave it to the department?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state that the act of 1910 fully provides for these officials, and if the Chair has any doubt about it I will send the statute up to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will accept the statement of the gentleman from Texas that the act fully provides for that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does; and I would like to have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HARRISON:
Page 3, line 12, after the figures "$2,500" strike out everything in that line and lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"For actual, necessary traveling expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, when actually employed on duty in the field and away from designated headquarters, $3,200."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be modified so that it will read down to "$3,200" in line 16. It strikes out all of line 16 as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 12, after the figures "$2,500," strike out everything in that line and in lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 down to the figures "$3,200" and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"For actual, necessary traveling expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, when actually employed on duty in the field and away from designated headquarters."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this amendment is in the interest of economy. The provision as it reads now is for traveling and incidental expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, including sleeping-car fare and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty, and so forth. In other words, the way the provision reads now it might give one authority not only to put in an account for the actual traveling expenses, but also for incidental expenses, and railroad fare and sleeping-car fare, and allow $3 per day in addition to that with which to buy food. I submit that in all of the appropriation bills, as a rule, such provision as this read for actual or necessary traveling expenses, and in my opinion there is no good reason why, because the department in the past has written this provision in this way, it should not be changed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe it might increase the amount allowed? Suppose one were to go into a dining car and order a meal that cost possibly $5. This is limited to $3 a day. I think the amendment would result in enlarging the amount instead of decreasing it.

Mr. HARRISON. I can not see how a man is going to spend over $3 a day on a trip for necessary subsistence unless he is unreasonably extravagant—at least more so than would justify these employees from being—and if you give him actual, necessary traveling expenses, if he is a good man and if he is honest with the department, he is going to put in his account with the expenses incurred, which were actually and necessarily expended, but in this way, if a man while out on duty spent only 25 cents for a meal during the whole day, he could put in his account for $3 and make $2.75 on the transaction.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this language is inserted in the interest of economy. Some of the employees, such as those in other departments, are allowed as high as $5 a day, and I think the uniform rate is $4. In the Indian Service we have limited it to $3, which is the minimum amount. I am quite certain that unless it is limited there will be extravagance, and it will cause some of the employees of the Government, in my opinion, to get into trouble, because they will be charged with excessive traveling expenses or expenses for subsistence. This language certainly ought to remain in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, this is in keeping with the action of the House during this session of the House. We have provided that Members of the House should receive only necessary and actual traveling expenses for themselves and family.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman cite any case where it has been so limited changing from the practice that has heretofore obtained?

Mr. HARRISON. On the question of mileage we have provided that only necessary and actual traveling expenses shall be to ourselves for ourselves and the members of our families.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is with respect to Members of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I recall in the Consular and Diplomatic bill that we let it read that way. That is my recollection about it, and my recollection is that the other bills so provide.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Mississippi is in error. I do not know whether he intends by his amendment to cover subsistence as a part of the allowance or not. The amendment does not so state.

Mr. HARRISON. That was my intention.

Mr. MANN. It would not be covered by "traveling expenses," I think.

Now, the practice has been, in recent years, to put in these limitations. It is inevitable that after a little while a man who is allowed his actual subsistence stopping at hotels will have a subsistence account of more than $3 a day, and even where he is stopping at country hotels as would be the case here, I take it. Some of the departments allow $5. The tendency of Congress in recent years has been to cut the amount down. In the Post Office appropriation bill some years ago we reduced the amount to certain inspectors from $4 to $3 a day at the outside, and most of them now pay $4 a day, and if we do not allow $4 a day in lieu of subsistence what we would pay would be $5 or $6 a day. The $3 a day limitation for subsistence to a man who is traveling is economy to the Government, because that is less than he probably spends.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $75,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 2, page 4, that the figures "$75,000" be stricken out and "$125,000" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 2, strike out the figures "$75,000" and insert "$125,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard, because it strikes me as a very strange and peculiar action of the Committee on Indian Affairs that in this day of intense prohibition feeling, when the prohibition sentiment has become so strong throughout this country that only two weeks ago a majority of this House voted for national prohibition, that that committee should attempt to economize by reducing the appropriation to stop the illicit sale of liquor among the Indians. I doubt that any other committee of this House would have the audacity at this time to withhold from a branch of this Government a sufficient sum to suppress this hellish traffic, the illicit sale of liquor among the Indians of this country. Especially am I surprised when I read from the hearings before the committee this language used by the assistant commissioner, Mr. Meritt. I read from page 28, where he says—and I want to say right here they asked in the estimates for this work $125,000. That is what the Bureau of Indian Affairs desired, and went further and said they could use $200,000. Mr. Meritt says:

In this connection I wish to say that Commissioner Sells is exceedingly interested in this item, and we both feel that a much larger appropriation than is requested could be used in the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians throughout the United States. The commissioner was busy at the office with important matters and could not appear before the committee to-day, but asked that I especially emphasize the urgency of a much increased appropriation for this work. We could use probably $200,000 to good advantage in the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding that appeal from the Indian Department, stating that they could use $200,000 in this work, the committee in their generosity have only appropriated $75,000 for the work. It strikes me if there is one item appropriated for in this bill that is just this is the one item. A liberal appropriation should be in this bill to suppress this illicit liquor traffic. I am again surprised, Mr. Chairman, that with three Members on the Committee on Indian Affairs from the progressive and prohibition State of Oklahoma, where they have embedded in the very constitution of that State the prohibition of sale of liquor, that they, being on that committee, should allow an appropriation bill to come out of the committee reducing this appropriation for this most temperate, deserving, and laudable work. I sincerely hope that the Committee on Indian Affairs will repudiate their action in cutting down this appropriation by voting for my amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. We have given a sufficient amount of money to protect the Indians, and if the committee will turn to line 17, page 8, they will find this language:

For pay of Indian police, including chiefs of police at not to exceed $50 per month each and privates at not to exceed $30 per month each, to be employed in maintaining order, for purchase of equipments and supplies and for rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $150,000.

Now, the object of giving this $150,000 to these Indian police was to protect the Indians of the country from the trouble that we find in the Indian country and prevent them from having intoxicating drinks.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield to me in that connection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman does not mean to say that this appropriation to employ police is used specifically for the suppression of the illicit traffic of intoxicating drinks?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As the gentleman has stated, it is one of the greatest evils in the country, and one of the greatest duties these Indian police have to perform, and the great trouble they have to contend with is to prevent these bootleggers from invading these reservations. I have been on these reservations, I will say to the gentleman, and have examined into this matter very carefully, and that is one of the greatest duties that these police have to perform at the present time. If whisky is taken away from these Indians, they are peaceful people and attend to their own business strictly and do as well, if not better, than many white persons if you can stop this liquor traffic.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, if the gentleman's argument is good with respect to appropriations for the Indian police, may I ask the gentleman why he reduced the appropriation from $200,000 in that item in 1914 and in 1915 to $150,000 this time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For the reason that nearly all the Indians, I presume 75 per cent of them, are in States now that have State prohibition, and it is the duty of the State courts and the State sheriffs and the State constables and the entire constabulary force of every State to prevent the sale of these intoxicants; and you will find in every State where these Indians are living that the officers of the county and State are doing their best to protect the Indians from the sale of these intoxicating liquors.

And not only that, but let me state to the gentleman further that the Federal courts have jurisdiction, and the Federal courts have their marshals and deputy marshals all over the United States, and they are seeking out these bootleggers and they are sending them by swarms to the various United States penitentiaries; and the State officers are doing the very same thing.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the gentleman has made a very good argument in support of my motion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not, Mr. Chairman. In connection with these other means that we have of protecting these Indians we have given them a sufficient amount, and more than a sufficient amount, for this service.

Mr. FALCONER. The gentleman from Texas has just stated that quite a considerable territory that was formerly wet, where Indians lived, is now dry. The gentleman makes the argument, then, that prohibition does prohibit?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does in that territory of which I am speaking. But the gentleman knows as well as everybody else that there are bootleggers everywhere in the States. There are bootleggers in the city of Washington and other places.

Mr. FALCONER. Did the gentleman take that into consideration when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made his representations in his report on page 22 that he could use $225,000 in this service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They can use perhaps a million dollars, for that matter, but we do not think it is necessary. We think the Indians are perfectly protected with the amount recommended here—$75,000.

Mr. FALCONER. Was the fact that the State of Oklahoma went dry taken into the consideration of the matter by Commissioner Sells?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can not tell what entered his mind. I can not read men's minds.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If it costs $75,000, or $100,000, or $125,000, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] suggests, to enforce prohibition in the Indian Territory, what is the gentleman's calculation of how much it would cost to enforce national prohibition throughout the States of the Union?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is a better authority than I am on this question, and he can answer his own question.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will be adopted. It is only a difference of $25,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. A difference of $50,000.

Mr. WEBB. I want to offer an amendment to make it $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment to the amendment: Strike out "$125,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, the reason why I move to make the amount $100,000 is because that is what has been appropriated for the last three or four years by this Congress for that work. I do not understand that the $150,000 that is to be appropriated under another section is to be used at all for protecting the Indian nation or the Indian people from the liquor traffic. The $150,000 that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] refers to in the bill is for the purpose of keeping order among the poor Indians whom some white man has made drunk and put them in jail for disorder. It is much better to prevent crime than to punish it after it is committed, and the $100,000 is suggested here for the purpose of preventing crime, whereas it is proposed to appropriate $150,000 for punishing crime after the crime has been committed, due to the introduction of "firewater" by "bootleggers," usually trifling white men.

I do not think this Government has ever adopted the golden rule in its treatment of the Indian. I think perhaps the saddest page in all the history of our country is the story of the American Indian and his treatment by the white man. He is as helpless as a child when you set whisky before him. I am told that he will part with anything he has, even with his wearing apparel, in order to get whisky. I think it is bad to economize to the extent of $25,000 when we owe to the Indian in this country every protection that can be thrown around him, and especially protection from the greatest evil that can attack him, and that is liquor. I hope the House will put the amount at least to $100,000, which has been appropriated heretofore. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs says he can use $200,000. I am willing to appropriate that, and even willing to appropriate a million dollars in order to protect the American Indian, who is fast fading away.

Mr. MANN. Did I understand that the Indian police were used only to detect drunkenness where it is found to exist, and not to prevent the sale of liquor to these Indians?

Mr. WEBB. I believe so, chiefly.

Mr. MANN. Is it not the duty of the police everywhere to prevent the illicit sale of liquor?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; but we have those special officers that were appropriated for a year ago for the purpose of preventing the importation of liquor into the Indian country.

Mr. MANN. I can not understand the argument of the gentleman, that the Indian police have no duty at all in the way of inspection and prevention.

Mr. WEBB. Their duty ought to be to detect "bootleggers"; but their chief duty, as set forth in this bill, is to "maintain order," and when they find an Indian drunk they take charge of him and put him in the calaboose, or jail.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not that keeping order?

Mr. WEBB. I suppose the principal duty is to keep the Indians quiet after they become drunk; not for the purpose of detecting the violation of the law in regard to introducing and selling liquor in Indian country.

Mr. MANN. I suppose if they detected a drunken Indian, that would be the best way to find out that there had been an illicit sale of liquor.

Mr. WEBB. In possibly 9 cases out of 10 the poor Indian would not know the name of the man who sold him the liquor.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. In the hearings had upon the Indian appropriation bill, Mr. Meritt, who appeared before the committee, makes this answer to a question:

Mr. MERITT. It is one of the most important things in the Indian Service, that they be protected from liquor.

The CHAIRMAN. Then why not combine the two items?

Mr. MERITT. For the reason that we require all employees of the Indian Service to assist in this work, not only the Indian police, but superintendents and all employees of the Indian Service are expected to assist in preventing the sale of liquors to the Indian.

Mr. WEBB. If that is the case, why not appropriate $100,000 to prevent the importation of liquor into the Indian country, or into the country adjacent to the Indian country, where the poor fellow can not get hold of it and be destroyed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WEBB. I ask for one more minute, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Last year, as I understand, the officers who drew this fund procured indictments to the extent that fines amounting to $91,000 were imposed upon violators of this law against the importation of whisky into the Indian country, and that $91,000 was turned into the Public Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Was it collected?

Mr. WEBB. Of course.

Mr. MANN. Of course it was not.

Mr. WEBB. Of course it was collected. But whether that fund is self-sustaining or not, it is a bad place to begin economy. We can begin it somewhere else with a better effect and thus protect the morals and the very life of the Indian, and at the same time protect the law-abiding white men who live among the Indians. We owe it to this pitiful and rapidly disappearing race to protect them in every possible way from the ravages of whisky. I hope either my amendment or that of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will be adopted.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a very high regard for the opinion of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I do not wish to disregard his request for any increased appropriation for this item without there being offered a better reason than has been offered by the chairman of the committee. The Committee on Indian Affairs was not able to find any evidence that would be a good or sufficient reason for decreasing this appropriation to $75,000. A year ago, according to the report given in the hearings, $94,964.29 was expended by the Bureau of Indian Affairs in suppressing the liquor traffic among the Indians. Some of the inspectors in charge of this work are, to my own personal knowledge, rendering excellent service in this work in some of the Western States. As the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] has remarked, "Prevention is the thing most desired in this matter." That can be accomplished best by the work of these inspectors. I am led to believe that the expenditures last year were not extravagant and unnecessary, and that the service needs every man now employed in this work, and that next year $125,000 can be expended to very good advantage. So I trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, raising the amount to $125,000, will prevail.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina is mistaken about the purposes for which the Indian policemen are used. I can speak so far as my own State is concerned, because there is where I have had most opportunity to observe. One of their chief duties in the State of Oklahoma is to prevent the illicit sale of whisky to Indians, to prevent Indians getting possession of whisky. I do not think they have any jurisdiction, in Oklahoma at least, over any such misdemeanors as "drunk and disorderly." They ferret out whisky peddlers and bootleggers and give information to the proper authorities, so that they may be arrested and prosecuted. Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], in charge of this bill, gave one very potent reason why the appropriation for the suppression of the liquor traffic might be less expensive, and that is because many of the States in which the Indians reside are prohibition States. It should not take so many officers or so much expense to enforce the law in a prohibition State as it does in a State where they have the open saloon and the sale of liquor.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. NORTON. Has the gentleman any facts or figures, or have any facts or figures been submitted to the committee, on which the gentleman can base the statement that the amount being expended could be safely reduced? Is it not a fact that his statement to that effect is a mere gratuitous one, not based on any particular and definite information?

Mr. CARTER. No; my statement is not gratuitous. Certainly I would not say that the Indian Bureau should be held down too closely in the funds that are given them for the suppression of the liquor traffic; but my statement is based upon personal observation. Before we had statehood in Oklahoma the western half of it—Oklahoma Territory—was a wet country and whisky was sold all over it. I should say it took more money to suppress the liquor traffic among the Indians then on that side of the State and there was more drunkenness among the Indians than there is to-day. Since we have State-wide prohibition in Oklahoma, I think it should take less money to-day, and I know there is less drunkenness among the Indians than there was before we had prohibition on that side of the State.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman know of a single case where an unnecessary expenditure has been made or where an unnecessary inspector has been employed in this service?

Mr. CARTER. I am not familiar with that. I could not say whether there is or not. I could not say whether they have too many or too few.

Mr. NORTON. The expenditure provided for now exceeds $100,000 a year.

Mr. CARTER. No; they had $100,000 last year.

Mr. NORTON. The report indicates that there are more men to be employed next year.

Mr. CARTER. They had $100,000 last year and spent $94,000. Now, here is one thing that we must look to when we go to make an appropriation. It is just as well to be frank with the committee. The Indian Committee expects that it is going to have to agree to more than $75,000 for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians; and, so far as I am personally concerned, I have no expectation that we can avoid appropriating $125,000 or $150,000. I have no intention, so far as I am concerned, to try to hamper the Indian Service in the funds it should have for the suppression of the liquor traffic; but we all know what will be done to this item when it reaches another legislative body. I have no doubt in the world that when this bill comes back to the House it will contain an appropriation for ample funds, perhaps more than the commissioner asks for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question for information.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman can ask the question in my time.

Mr. MILLER. Has the gentleman any inside information which leads him to make the statement he has just made? By inside information, I mean, has the gentleman any information as to what the other legislative body in the Capitol is likely to do with this item?

Mr. CARTER. Like Patrick Henry, I can only judge of the future by the experience of the past.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman will be one of the conferees. Does the gentleman really think that this item will be increased to as much as $125,000?

Mr. CARTER. I do not think there is a particle of doubt about it, and I do not think the gentleman has any doubt about it.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, yes; I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Can the gentleman inform the committee how much this item was five years ago?

Mr. CARTER. I do not have that particular information at hand.

Mr. MILLER. I can tell him. When I became a member of the committee the first year it was $40,000. As the gentleman has correctly stated, prior to that it was more expensive to enforce the liquor traffic in regions where most of the Indians are than it has been since. Notwithstanding this, the Indian Committee of the House has always favored a reasonable appropriation and has enlarged it from year to year. Does the gentleman think the state of the liquor traffic in the United States to-day, having in mind what he has said about the ease with which it can be enforced and the dry territory being enlarged—does the gentleman think that the situation in the United States is such as to justify or require a marked increase in this appropriation?

Mr. CARTER. I think there is a much closer supervision of the Indian now than has been in the past in reference to the traffic in intoxicating liquor. I think more money is being spent and more effort is being made to keep whisky away from the Indians than was formerly the case.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman favor any part of this money being spent to suppress the liquor traffic among the whites?

Mr. CARTER. I will let the white man answer that for himself. I would not take any part of it away from the Indian.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think that any part of this appropriation made in this bill should be used to suppress liquor traffic among the whites?

Mr. CARTER. Not any that is appropriated in the Indian bill.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Oklahoma, among his other splendid attributes, is very artful in his answers. Does the gentleman think that this appropriation should be increased above $100,000 to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to possibly enforce prohibition in white territory?

Mr. CARTER. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is a matter over which the Indian Committee has no jurisdiction, and the commissioner would not have supervision over the white man, anyway.

Mr. MILLER. Would it be legal for the commissioner to spend any part of this sum for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the whites?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, the gentleman is a so much better lawyer than I ever hope to be that I do not want him to ask me to give him an expert legal opinion.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. With the permission of the gentleman from Oklahoma, I would like to say that I think they could expend some part of this appropriation in enforcing the law among the whites if it affected the Indians, which might be the case, even though it involved some white people.

Mr. MILLER. I think no one could controvert that proposition.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. MILLER. No; my question is a little broader than that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think that that would be a good thing in some parts of his district?

Mr. MILLER. Well, having regard to the distance my district is from South Dakota, I do not think there is any need of suppressing any evil that might crop up from the outside.

Mr. FALCONER. If the gentleman will yield, is it not true, as the gentleman from Oklahoma knows, that in suppressing the liquor traffic among the Indians the white man is nearly always involved? As a matter of fact, is not the money expended in keeping the white man, the bootlegger, from selling liquor to the Indians?

Mr. MILLER. That is suppressing liquor traffic among the Indians, and that is the special purpose, and what the money ought to be used for. That is the man who ought to be suppressed, the bootlegger, also the man that stands behind the bar and sells liquor to the Indians, be he white, brown, black, or yellow.

Mr. CARTER. I understood the gentleman's question to be, Did I think any part of this money should be used to suppress the liquor traffic among the white people?

Mr. MILLER. That was exactly my question.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Oklahoma in attempting to answer the gentleman from Minnesota fails to make one distinction. I would like to answer the question from my standpoint, that if liquor traffic among the whites was against the Federal law it would be the duty of Congress to appropriate money to prevent it and to enforce the law. That is all this does. Liquor traffic is unlawful among the Indians, and this appropriation is or ought to be for the purpose of enforcing the law.

Now, the gentleman from Oklohama [Mr. CARTER] made a very novel argument a moment ago, which I do not think I ever heard before on the floor of the House, intimating that an increase was after all desirable, but that this should go as it is in order to be used as trading stock when the bill gets into conference. I do not believe that this House, in reference to this item or any other item, should fail to put into the bill what the committee thinks ought to go in at the time the House deliberates on the question. If an increase is desirable, we ought to put it into the bill now, and I do believe it is desirable, because there is nothing that can be done for the benefit of the Indians of greater importance than the suppression of the liquor traffic among them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was not there more whisky sold among the Indians and more bootlegging done 11 or 15 years ago than there is now?

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is true, but I undertake to say that if we should spend $200,000 it would do the Indians more good in the use of that money now for the suppression of the liquor traffic among them than in expending millions for them in other ways.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We commenced with $25,000, and the appropriation has grown from year to year until they want two or three hundred thousand dollars. Where will it end?

Mr. LENROOT. I hope it will end in the complete suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that a great many Indians have become citizens of the States and vote in prohibition States, and that we are fast eliminating the Indian question and driving out whisky among the Indians with the money that we are spending? It seems that the more we do the more we are asked to do.

Mr. LENROOT. I think not; but I wish to say just this, Mr. Chairman: This money is expended not in taking the place of Indian policemen, is not expended on reservations, but it is expended outside of the reservation in the detection of persons who sell the liquor. Arresting an Indian and fining or imprisoning him does little or nothing toward suppressing the liquor traffic.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to note that, as usual, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is interested in this highly important subject. He has Indian reservations in his district, and it is an important matter to him. I will ask the gentleman if the State of Wisconsin has laws prohibiting the sale of liquor to Indians?

Mr. LENROOT. I think not.

Mr. MILLER. The State of Minnesota has very strong laws, even stronger than the Federal law, and I was under the impression that Wisconsin had.

Mr. LENROOT. We rely entirely upon the Federal law.

Mr. MILLER. The point I was about to make is that every time we enlarge this we in some way cause the States, respectively, to relinquish their activity in this regard, and that it would not be proper, in my judgment, to increase this to a point so that the State will say that the Federal Government is going to look after the whole thing.

Mr. LENROOT. I quite agree with the gentleman in that regard.

Mr. MILLER. The only way that we can take care of the Indians in these matters is to have the active cooperation of the State governments, and that we have not had up to this time.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the gentleman is entirely correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of increasing this appropriation, and it is about the only appropriation that I know of that I am in favor of increasing. A few years ago we were making an appropriation, I think, of $25,000, and doing the work very well. There was very little drunkenness among the Indians. We then increased it to $50,000, then to $75,000, and then to $100,000, and now they want to increase it to $125,000. While this has been going on various of the States have become prohibition States and have prohibited entirely the sale of liquor in those States, and then we passed the Webb law, which made it unlawful to take liquor into a State contrary to the law of the State. It seems that every move we make increases the need of appropriating money to enforce the nonsale of liquor to the Indians. I think we ought to prevent the sale of liquor to the Indians, yet Arizona has just gone dry, and we will need to expend more money next year in Arizona, where they can not have saloons, to prevent the sale of liquor to the Indians than we did last year when they did have saloons. That is no reflection upon the prohibition proposition, but it indicates, after all, that it is not so very easy by legislation to say that men shall not gratify their appetites if they have an opportunity. During this time we have disbanded the Indians from tribes and have made them citizens, and as fast as we make them citizens, the prohibition against the sale of liquor to them still being in existence, we have to expend more money to keep them sober. I had supposed that citizenship had a sobering influence upon ordinary people, but it seems to have an inverse effect upon our Indian citizens. The faster they become citizens, the more we need to keep them in sober citizenship.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that the last statement of the gentleman is an accurate statement, that there is very little trouble in enforcing the law in what is known as a closed Indian reservation, and the fact that we are opening up Indian reservations and towns are being established and white people are moving in among the Indians makes it very much more difficult to enforce the law as to prohibition than when the reservations were closed. So the statement of the gentleman is borne out by the facts.

Mr. MANN. Of course, or I would not have made it; but it also shows that these States which declare for prohibition, even having a law making it unlawful to take liquor into the States, require something more than law to enforce prohibition.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FALCONER. I do not know what they do in the State of Arizona, but in the State of Washington the provision of the bill was to the effect that prohibition would go into effect January 1, 1916. This appropriation covers 1916, and the State of Washington during 1916 will be no drier than it was in 1914.

Mr. MANN. If it goes into effect the 1st of January, 1916, why will it not be drier during that year?

Mr. FALCONER. It will after 1916, but we have all of 1915 to go through with it yet.

Mr. MANN. I did not refer to the State of Washington.

Mr. FALCONER. How about the State of Arizona?

Mr. MANN. Arizona is now dry, and the State of Washington will be dry theoretically from the 1st of January, 1916, and this bill covers the first six months of 1916.

Mr. FOWLER rose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Illinois proceeds I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I object to the provision that it close as to all amendments, as I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he would not accept an amendment making it $200,000 instead of $100,000?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. That all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. I have an amendment that I desire to offer to the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Washington desires to have five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will make it 12 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that there is a marked degree of progression among the Indians. Many of them are becoming civilized and are given full citizenship in a measure equal to that of the white people. I have no doubt that where the suppression of intoxicating liquor is enforced the Indians have a much better opportunity for the purposes of improvement than in those localities where the suppression is not literally enforced. The environments of a man have much to do with his progress in life, and as long as the Indian is surrounded with these debauching environments he, like mankind everywhere, will become more or less contaminated by those influences. It is no argument, Mr. Chairman, to say because it takes money to enforce prohibition that prohibition laws are not desirable. If prohibition laws have a tendency to cleanse communities, if such laws give communities a better opportunity for a higher civilization, then they are to be encouraged, the same as other good laws. I understand that there remains only $5,000 unexpended balance out of $100,000 appropriated for this purpose in the last bill. That being true, Mr. Chairman, I take it that it will require as much money to enforce prohibition among the Indians as it has heretofore, and in order that the work may not be checked and halted, I think this House could do itself no greater honor than to appropriate enough money to see that the Indians are protected. Mr. Chairman, it is a common practice of gentlemen who are opposed to certain measures to urge a condition of expenditure which has resulted in more or less failure, just as these gentlemen who are opposed to prohibition are urging that the expenditure of money does not secure prohibition. Neither does the expenditure of money prohibit murder, robbery, and rape. You could just as well say that you ought not to appropriate money to punish those who commit such vile crimes as to say that you should not appropriate money to enforce prohibition laws. It is the certainty of the enforcement of the criminal law that gives society security and protection from the criminal. You can not carry out this law without appropriating enough money to enforce it, and I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina as a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEBB. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, as I understood it, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] stated that he was willing to accept an amendment making the amount $200,000.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman can not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRYAN: Page 4, line 2, add the following: "The sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage within 25 miles of any Indian reservation is hereby prohibited. Any person violating this provision shall be subject to a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new legislation, and therefore subject to a point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment under the agreement that I should have five minutes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will reserve the point of order for five minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. While the point of order is being reserved I want to say just a word in reference to the point of order. From the argument of the gentleman from Illinois and from others here on the floor the expenditures of the Government for the suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians is being increased from day to day, and I understand under the Holman rule any amendment which tends to decrease an expenditure is in order. Now, the point may be somewhat speculative and quite untenable as a parliamentary argument, but the prohibiting of the sale of liquor within 25 miles of one of these Indian reservations would decrease the expenditure and the expenses of the Government in enforcing the law on the reservation.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. Does not the gentleman think it will cost more to enforce such a law within a zone of 25 miles of an Indian reservation than without it?

Mr. BRYAN. We are only dealing with the cost on the reservation, not outside of the Indian reservation, and, Mr. Chairman, I hope the chairman of this committee will not do as he suggests here and make a point of order against this, although it is new legislation and subject to the point. I think that the committee ought to be very glad, inasmuch as, in principle, I understand the Democratic Party and some gentlemen over there are dry, but only in vote on national prohibition are they otherwise.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think Congress, if it wanted to, has authority to say that a strip of territory 25 miles outside of a reservation in a State in which the laws permitted the license of the liquor traffic should be dry?

Mr. BRYAN. I think the national sovereignty is sufficient to authorize us to protect our own reservations by creating an area about them where liquor can not be sold. We have the right to prohibit the sale of liquor within the reservations, and we have the right to prohibit it on the borders of the reservations.

Mr. MANN. Make it a thousand miles away.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. I would like to make it within a thousand miles of the reservation. Let somebody move to amend it by making it a thousand miles. Let some of these "dry" men who vote against national prohibition do that; men who are so "dry" that you can burn them on the liquor proposition. [Laughter.] When you come in here with an amendment to wipe out the traffic in the entire country they vote "damp"; I will not say "wet." You can make it a thousand miles and suit me that much better. This committee being an Indian Committee, and therefore a "dry" committee, it ought not to make a point of order against this amendment, and it ought to encourage us in protecting these reservations. At our military posts we have the right to create a dry area around the military posts in order to protect the military from the brothels and saloons that would gather around the posts, and I think this amendment goes to the very heart of the proposition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to tht gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the National Government has the authority to prohibit the sale of liquor near a military post?

Mr. BRYAN. I would say "yes" to that.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know what the authority is.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman is a constitutional lawyer, and I understand that under the rules of this House a gentleman advocating a constitutional point has the burden placed upon him to present the constitutional authority.

Mr. MANN. It is certain that it can not be done except through the State.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the gentleman is wrong about it. If we pass it here, I know——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself is a great constitutional lawyer, and——

Mr. BRYAN. I know that if we pass it it will be constitutional, and if we pass it we shall be doing something substantial. I am absolutely safe in taking that position as to constitutionality, for the "if" is a very big "if" in this particular case.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington says that this Committee on Indian Affairs is a "dry" committee. What authority has the gentleman for that statement?

Mr. BRYAN. I will take as the latest test the roll call that we had the other day.

Mr. HARRISON. They have just brought in a bill that reduces the amount to be expended for this service.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman ought to know whether his colleagues are dry or wet.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] make the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination, maintenance of hospitals and sanatoriums, for incidental and all other expenses for their proper conduct and managements, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expenses of transporting Indian patients to and from such hospitals and sanatoriums, and for the correction of sanitary defects in Indian homes, $350,000: Provided, That not to exceed $90,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection and equipment of new hospitals for the use of Indians; and no hospital shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $15,000, including equipment: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually a detailed report as to all moneys expended in the erection and maintenance of hospitals and sanatoriums as provided for herein.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I would like to offer.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question? I notice in this appropriation of $350,000 it is provided that $90,000 of it is to be used for the erection and equipment of new hospitals for the use of the Indians. Where are the new hospitals to be located and used?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARRISON. Do you propose to let him expend $90,000 just where he wants to?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They asked for that amount, and it is impossible for us to determine in advance what reservations are needing those hospitals the worst. They are acting upon the intelligence and information which they get from the inspectors out in the field concerning the urgent need of the Indians.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Commissioner of Indian Affairs say he needed this money?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. He did not state where he intended to build the hospitals?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; that is not necessary. I think they have general supervision of the funds, and they will build the hospitals where they are most needed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will not make a point of order on this paragraph. To my mind this is a very important provision for the Indians. It has been demonstrated time and time again by reports made by those in authority with reference to the Indians that they are suffering from tuberculosis, trachoma, and other diseases of a character that have depopulated them very much, and something of this kind is necessary.

For instance, take trachoma: It is so important that those persons suffering from this disease should be separated from those who are not afflicted with it that it is very necessary that we should have some arrangement of this kind.

I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I do not believe that the discretion lodged with the department in this matter is being abused. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is limited so that he can not establish and build and equip a hospital at an expense exceeding $15,000. These patients with the peculiar disease I speak of, such as trachoma, which is infectious, are to be separated from the well persons. It is, to my mind, so important that if we must do anything for these Indians to prevent blindness and death among them, we ought to make some such provision.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs ought, at least in his recommendation to the committee for this appropriation, state where he expects these hospitals to be built and where they are needed, so that the committee and the House may know about the necessity?

Mr. FOSTER. That might be so, and yet I think that in a matter of this kind, where we have confidence in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs—which I believe we have—he should have the discretion of locating these hospitals, after an investigation, where they will do the Indians the most good.

I remember when this item was up before that I took some little interest in it, because I believed it was one of the most important items in this bill then up for consideration. I submit to my friend from Mississippi that in view of the conditions that exist now among the Indians in reference to these particular diseases, such as trachoma and tuberculosis, in which the greatest care must be used if we are to stamp out those diseases and help the afflicted, we ought to have this appropriation in the bill, permitting the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to establish these hospitals and conduct them in such a way that the patients may be properly treated. They can not get that treatment while they remain in their homes in the condition in which they are, and we can only provide it by removing the Indians from their present surroundings and placing them in hospitals, where they can receive proper treatment needed to stamp out the disease. You can not cure trachoma in any other way. It requires the best care and sanitary conditions to save those people from becoming blind or from having diseased eyes as long as they live, and I suggest to my friend and earnestly beg of him that he withdraw the point of order from this provision and allow it to remain in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, as I remember it, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs brought in separate items for either two or three hospitals, and as to this item he asked for an appropriation of a less amount than we appropriated. My eyes do not catch the amount just at this moment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The sum of $300,000 was estimated for, for relieving distress; $100,000 for correcting sanitary defects in Indian homes, and then there was a specific appropriation for a hospital at Fort Lapwai, and for the Sac and Fox Agency in Iowa, and the committee consolidated all of those items, which were separately estimated for, and made an appropriation of $300,000 in all.

Mr. CARTER. So that one hospital will be located at Fort Lapwai and the other at the Sac and Fox Agency. I take it the commissioner himself is not now able to locate the others, and he may not know where to locate all of them until conditions arise in the future.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice in the report it says that the proposed hospital in the Choctaw Nation is to cost $50,000. Is that one of them?

Mr. CARTER. The hospital in the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma was built from tribal funds, and was appropriated for in the last appropriation. No part of this money goes to any part of Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRISON. That is not included in this $90,000.

Mr. CARTER. None of it.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. How much of this money will be appropriated to sectarian institutions?

Mr. CARTER. None of it.

Mr. SISSON. Of this lump sum of $350,000?

Mr. CARTER. To relieve distress, do you mean?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. None of it goes to sectarian institutions.

Mr. SISSON. It says:

> Maintenance of hospitals and sanatoriums, for incidental and all other expenses for their proper conduct and management, including pay of employees—

And so forth.

Does the gentleman know that none of these institutions are under sectarian control?

Mr. CARTER. I am confident that none of them are under sectarian control.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will permit, this refers to hospitals that have been established by the Government.

Mr. CARTER. That is true. We established several of them last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Last year this item was under consideration and some of these hospitals were authorized. These are the institutions which are now being provided for, as I understand, in this bill, and this money goes to those hospitals that are so established.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to the gentleman's item, but I do not want any of these appropriations to be made for the benefit of any school under sectarian control.

Mr. FOSTER. No part of the money will be so used.

Mr. CARTER. This does not go to a school. It goes for hospitals.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman is absolutely sure that none of this money can or will be paid to any institution under sectarian control, I will not offer the amendment; but I intended to offer an amendment providing that none of this money should be paid to any institution under sectarian control.

Mr. CARTER. This money could not be paid to an institution under sectarian control. It is—

> To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases.

That is done entirely by the service. The only Indian institutions operated by churches are schools.

Mr. SISSON. There is nothing in this bill, however, that would prevent it, if we make the appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. I doubt if the comptroller would approve any voucher for that purpose.

Mr. SISSON. I will state frankly to the gentleman——

Mr. CARTER. Let me answer the gentleman's question. I doubt if the comptroller would approve of a voucher for an institution outside of the regular service, under this language.

Mr. SISSON. If it appears on its face I am sure he could not do it, because there is a statute providing that no money or property or anything of value shall be appropriated to sectarian institutions of any kind or character. The statute is very sweeping, but my information is that in the Indian appropriation bill somewhere there is perhaps an item under which some of the various churches are getting the benefit of some of the funds paid to the schools or to hospitals under their control, in spite of that statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I want five minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. We are discussing this under a point of order that has been reserved. There is no five-minute limitation on that.

Mr. CARTER. While not required by the rules, we sometimes discuss these points under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserved the point of order. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma ask for five minutes more?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state to the gentleman that I have no objection to his item, provided none of this money is to go to any institution under sectarian control.

Mr. CARTER. I can assure the gentleman that none of it will go to such an institution.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not only will none of it be so expended, but it can not be so expended under existing law. Not a dollar appropriated by the Indian appropriation bill can be so expended. The only money that goes to sectarian institutions is money belonging to the Indians, which may be expended as they desire; money that is due them, that they personally may direct the use of, for the education of their children in sectarian schools. No money appropriated from the Public Treasury can be so used except in fulfillment of a treaty.

Mr. SISSON. With the further permission of the gentleman from Oklahoma, in order that we may get at the truth, as I understand, some of the Indian tribes made treaties a number of years ago with churches in relation to payment out of tribal funds. A statute was passed in 1896——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say to the gentleman that I think he is mistaken in assuming that there were any treaties between Indians and any churches. The gentleman is mistaken in that assumption. There is a law that provides that no money appropriated out of the Treasury as a gratuity can be used in the support or maintenance of sectarian schools.

Mr. SISSON. I am thoroughly familiar with that statute.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that the only money that is used, and that is in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court, is money in the Treasury belonging to the Indians under some treaty or agreement. If an individual Indian elects to take his share of that money and use it to support his child in a sectarian school, he can do it the same as the gentleman from Mississippi or I could do if we wanted to educate our child in a sectarian school.

Mr. SISSON. In the debate some years ago, in reference to the passage of this statute which the gentleman speaks of, there was something said about treaties made a number of years ago, when the Indians had tribal governments out in the Dakotas and in Oregon and Montana where they made arrangements with certain churches—Methodist, Episcopal, and Catholic Churches—to establish certain institutions to which tribes were to pay so much for the education of their children.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There may have been some such discussion at the time the legislation was passed prohibiting the use of public money in supporting sectarian schools, but it may have been provided that it would not take effect until some time in the future, in order that it would not interfere with existing contracts.

Mr. SISSON. Is the gentleman sure that the contracts or treaties with the Indians have expired?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not know anything about any treaties or agreements between the Indians, but I do know that there are no Indian tribes that pay this money; it is simply individual Indians that have a share in the funds.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman know how much is paid out of the Indian funds to religious institutions?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not recall the amount, but my recollection is that it appears in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, showing how much and where it is paid. If not in the last report, I am sure it appears in some of the reports made heretofore.

Mr. MANN. I think the only committee of the House that reports on the appropriation of money to be paid to sectarian institutions is the committee of which the gentleman from Mississippi is a member; and, if I recollect right, he is a member of the subcommittee that reports the bill that does it.

Mr. SISSON. I am conscious of that fact, and I have attacked these items as vigorously as I could and tried to get a full investigation.

Mr. MANN. There is no other committee that reports it.

Mr. SISSON. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. MANN. I am.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] may give expert testimony on this item because he is a doctor, but at that he has only faintly described the deplorable health condition of the Indians. I have traveled over several Indian reservations, and it has been my privilege to make some close observations of these matters. I am sure their state of health is more deplorable than even my good friend from Illinois has surmised. Most of us are aware that the Indians' worst afflictions are tuberculosis and trachoma. Many of them live in miserably bad ventilated log cabins with nothing but mother earth for a floor, and it is a waste of time to discuss the conduciveness of such conditions to these two dread diseases.

Last fall I was traveling over an Indian reservation with a United States Senator, and we came to an Indian school. As we went into the superintendent's house we left him engaged in conversation with an Indian outside, and when he came in the Senator said, "What were you talking to that fellow about?" The superintendent said, "He brought a child to school which has trachoma." "What did you do about it," the Senator inquired. The superintendent replied, "Sent her back home." Then the Senator asked, "How many other children has he?" "Two at home and one in school," replied the superintendent. "So," said the Senator, "you have sent this child back to infect the other children, the father and mother, and probably many others on the reservation. Why did you not keep her here?" The superintendent answered, "Because we have no hospital."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think all medical authorities agree that the best way to cure this disease of trachoma, so prevalent among the Indians, and to keep the infection from spreading is by segregation. How are you going to segregate without proper hospital facilities? If you have a hospital, you may segregate trachoma at certain stages and effect a permanent cure. Even tuberculosis may be cured in its primary stages and relief given to patients in advanced cases if you have hospitals properly located. But without hospitals any cure or even improvement in the health condition of the Indian, so far as these two diseases are concerned, is absolutely impossible. Without hospitals you are forced to send the infected person back upon the reservation into the badly ventilated, crowded log cabin to infect his sisters, brothers, mother, father, children, and, in fact, all other members of the tribe. If there is any matter which is important, it is the health of the individual, and if there is any necessity which is urgent it is that for hospitals on or near the different reservations, where these two maladies can be properly treated and alleviated. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will not insist upon his point of order to strike this hospital item out, thereby leaving the afflicted Indian in the deplorable condition where he can not be segregated, but must die of tuberculosis or become blind from trachoma.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I notice that in 1914 the appropriation was $200,000, and there was an unexpended balance of $27,608. The current appropriation is $300,000. Has the gentleman any information or was any given to the committee as to the probability of this money being expended, or will there be a relatively large unexpended balance for the fiscal year of 1915?

Mr. CARTER. The committee has reported $165,000, all told, less than that requested by the department. As has been stated by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], several other items for the health of the Indians were eliminated and all items for the care of their health were consolidated in this one item.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It was $200,000 in 1914.

Mr. CARTER. Prior to this time other items had been carried in other parts of the bill, which have been eliminated.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does that account for the increase from $200,000 to $300,000?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I call attention to the fact that under the appropriation for the present year six hospitals are being constructed and will be ready for occupancy in July next of the fiscal year, and that that will involve an expense that we did not have last year.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will permit, for the purpose of constructing these hospitals this amount was increased in the current law—the year 1915—from $200,000 to $300,000?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It certainly was; yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In the present bill you increase that amount still $50,000 more?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to explain that? On line 12, page 4, he will see an item for the correction of sanitary defects in Indian homes——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The committee had an estimate of $100,000, and also a specific appropriation for two hospitals, which was not included in the estimate. That refers to this.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Then it was a consolidation of appropriations rather than an increase for the purpose of constructing hospitals?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not at all. It was a decrease from the estimates, giving them the same amount they had last year, assuming that they would erect six additional hospitals costing not to exceed $15,000 each.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The purpose of the current law is to erect these other hospitals at a cost of $15,000 each?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the intention.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I am merely asking for information and had no other purpose in mind.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that there were eliminated from this bill in other items $40,000 for a hospital at Lapwai, $20,000 for a Sac and Fox hospital, and $100,000 for correcting sanitary defects, which makes, in all, $165,000.

Mr. MANN. They eliminated them from the estimates, but not from the appropriations.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I was about to ask that question—if that elimination were not made from the estimates and not from former appropriations.

Mr. CARTER. From the estimates; in the bill submitted by the department.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This is an increase of $100,000 over the appropriation for the year 1914?

Mr. CARTER. Fifty thousand dollars in this item.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. Does the gentleman from Mississippi insist upon his point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he knows whether or not this fund is reimbursable?

Mr. FOSTER. I think not.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman think it ought to be reimbursable?

Mr. FOSTER. My judgment is that those Indians——

Mr. HARRISON. Where they are able?

Mr. FOSTER. Where they are able, it might properly be done.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that part of the paragraph, lines 13 to 17, as follows:

Provided, That not to exceed $90,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection and equipment of new hospitals for the use of Indians; and no hospital shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $15,000, including equipment.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman wants to strike out the hospitals?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The reason why I make this point of order is because I believe it is a bad precedent to establish for any bureau to be given that broad discretion, to spend money even to the amount of $90,000, without first furnishing to the House facts that will warrant the expenditure and at least an idea where they expect to build these hospitals and how, and so forth.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this is subject to a point of order, for the reason that it limits the amount carried here. It is for $350,000, and this only designates how it shall be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman furnish the Chair any law which authorizes the erection of these hospitals?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Only in the general Indian law. Anything that is necessary for the purpose of their protection and welfare would come under the general provisions of the original law creating the Indian Bureau, and I think one of the most essential features of the bill is that we shall protect the health of these Indians by these small hospitals. We guard it carefully in line 17 by stating that they shall be constructed at a cost of not to exceed $15,000 each. There is no question but that we can build hospitals for the purpose of protecting them from diseases and providing for their health and comfort, but we limit it in line 17 to a cost of $15,000 each.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not regard this proviso as a limitation on the appropriation, because it specifically authorizes the erection of new hospitals at a cost of not to exceed $15,000 each.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is a limitation on the amount that we propose to give in gross. It is $90,000, and we are apportioning out the $90,000 so as to build six hospitals at $15,000 each.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Chair that the general language of the law that has been cited by the gentleman from Texas would not give them authority, without specific authority of law, to construct hospitals. To my mind the language is clearly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it is subject to the point of order. It is new legislation. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 13, strike out the figures "$350,000" and insert the figures "$300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAGE of North Carolina) there were—ayes 8, noes 14.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding, after the word "herein," in line 21, the following: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may employ to aid in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph physicians who have not a civil-service status."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up his amendment?—which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 21, after the word "herein," insert the following: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may employ to aid in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph physicians who have not a civil-service status."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would the gentleman object to adding the words "in his discretion" after the word "may"?

Mr. MILLER. I think the word "may" includes, with the following words, "in his discretion," but I have no objection to including them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to have that language added, if the gentleman has no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I will accept the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be allowed to modify his amendment.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment by inserting, after the word "may," in the first line, the words "in his discretion," so that the amendment as amended will read: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion," etc.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment in order that I may have an expression from the members of the committee whether they really want to help the Indians. That is all this amounts to. You can appropriate all the money in the United States Treasury to suppress trachoma and tuberculosis among the Indians in the United States and at the same time tie the hands of the administrative officer to spend the money only by utilizing the services of civil-service hired doctors and you will not have gained a single step of advantage. I think that is a pretty fairly strong statement to make. I do not know but if I had more emphatic language at my command I would use that. I do not know what the attitude of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs is upon this question, because I have never discussed it with him. I know what the attitude of other administrative officers has been in times past on this proposition. I know the evidence of my own eyes, for I have seen on many, many reservations throughout the United States evidence that is not open to doubt, not capable of unbelief. As I have stated before on other occasions, I now repeat, the civil-service process secures for the Indian Service physicians of one of two classes. Either young men just graduated from college, without training and experience and who are not at all qualified to handle the highly specialized work of combating trachoma and tuberculosis, or men who have been out of college a reasonable length of time and made a failure in their practice. A man of professional education and standing who has made a failure of his practice and who has not been able to earn a livelihood practicing his profession during a period of years in a community is not fit to spend this money and get a salary from the United States, at the same time working havoc among the Indians.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the Indian Office finds it needs a physician and advertises for bids for physicians to look after the sick Indians and announces it will not pay more than $760 per annum, what kind of a doctor do you expect to get for that sum?

Mr. MILLER. We can not expect to get any kind of a doctor, and this is as far as they can go now under civil-service rules, only it is $720 instead of $760. This is the limit of the amount that can be paid except to a physician secured from the civil service. This is the kind of doctors they are getting, and I know whereof I speak. It is just the kind of doctors who will spend your $350,000, and I know whereof I speak. You can not get physicians for $720 a year, nor can you get a man fit to do this work for $1,000 a year or $1,400, the practical maximum under the civil service. Think of hiring a physician capable of entering upon this grand humanitarian work and going out among the Indians and working for their welfare, as we desire this money shall be expended, for $1,000 a year or $720 a year! You can not get them and you can never deceive yourself into thinking you can get them. I know the Civil Service Commission will write and request that this amendment be stricken out if we adopt it; but are you trying to protect the Civil Service Commission in having a complete control of all branches of your Government, or are you really trying to help the Indians? You can not do both.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER. I have seen many and many a young man go out among the Indians and then remain a short time in a position he did not like, ask for a chance to be transferred, and leave, and all the period of time that was spent there was absolutely wasted, because he did nothing for the Indians except draw his salary. I have seen other physicians of middle life, of middle age. I have watched their work, and I knew that they were a failure in their profession because they made a failure of their work there. I have seen Indians moving along with legs broken and twisted, growing in an inhuman and grotesque fashion, and a physician sitting down who would not so much as bandage them up. That is the class of men you get and that is the class of men you will continue to get until you permit the Secretary of the Interior to go out and make contracts with reputable physicians who are capable of handling this great scourge. Oh, every once in awhile you can lift your hands in horror and get on your knees and pray, if you want to, that the terrible scourge of tuberculosis and trachoma will flee from the Indian, and then you come in here and tie the hands of your administrative officials so as to make it possible for the ravages of these diseases to continue. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the debate be limited to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been reserved on this amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I reserved it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I indorse the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] in reference to the medical treatment that the Indians receive.

I was very much in hopes that when these hospitals were established the care and treatment of the Indian would be improved. It is true, as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota, that you can not get a physician, unless it is some young man just starting into practice and wants a little experience, to go out and take charge of one of those places, or else some one who has been a failure in the practice. I hope the time will come when the medical department of the Indian Service will be transferred to the Public Health Service, where I have always believed it ought to be. To-day we have scattered through different departments of our Government a lot of medical services that ought to be placed under the control of the Public Health Service. I do not mean by that that we should establish a great public health service, but I do believe you would get better work and better service if it were placed in the hands of that particular bureau which is looking after that kind of work all the time.

The Indian Commissioner, of course, is limited in the amount of money that he can pay to these physicians, and if this restriction is taken away, as the gentleman says, it will permit him to employ men who will be able to give better service.

Mr. MANN. Where is the limitation?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the amount that he can pay under the civil service. I understood that from the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. You should not take all the gentleman's statements seriously.

Mr. FOSTER. If the present law fixes the amount that can be paid for these physicians——

Mr. MANN. The law does not fix it.

Mr. MILLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The law does fix it. Fourteen hundred dollars is the maximum that can be paid in the Indian Service for a physician.

Mr. MANN. There is no such law.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my colleague is right in the statement that there is no such law as fixes the salary of these physicians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that I think it is a regulation of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the department could get physicians at a price commensurate with the service they render. As it is now, no physician wants to go out there and work for $60 a month any more than a lawyer would go out and look after the legal affairs of the Indians at $60 a month. Let us have a better service, and let us give these Indians better medical treatment than they have been having in the past. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. I am willing to try it. I do not believe it is possible to make the conditions any worse than they are now, and perhaps if we try it we will find that the conditions will be improved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who is so very extreme in his statements that he destroys the efficacy of them very often, proposes an amendment to the effect that these physicians shall not be under the civil service. Why, all the Government officials except those in the military service are under the civil service, and the term which my friend uses is not known in the law, carrying the meaning with which he inserts it in his amendment. If they were not under the civil service, they would be under the Army service or the Navy service.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes; for information.

Mr. MILLER. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. Well, make it short.

Mr. MILLER. Is not the language "a civil-service status" of common understanding and knowledge and acceptation?

Mr. MANN. It is frequently used by gentlemen not familiar with the law, but it is not used in the statutes. This is a proposition to insert it in the statutes, that these people shall not have a civil-service status, when that is the only status they could have except a military status.

However, I know what the gentleman wants to get at. He wants to provide that they shall not be appointed from the eligible list under the civil-service law. That is a matter now resting in the hands of the President. The department can ask the President any day to take these employees out from the classified service. That is the proper term. Then they can be appointed as they please. The only limitation on the department now is the order of the President putting them in the classified service and the amount of the appropriations. They can pay a man $100,000 a year, so far as the law is concerned. Of course they would not do it.

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota thinks the only kind of physicians they get at this salary is either young men just out of college or men who have made a failure of the practice of medicine, and my friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] suggests that it would be better if the Indians could be turned into the hospitals and there receive treatment. Who is it that takes care of patients in the hospitals? The internes and the nurses—both classes being there to learn, and practically without salaries. Who does the most of the work in the hospital? If these Indians were put in the hospitals, in the ordinary hospitals, they would receive their treatment from the interne, who was receiving no salary, or practically no salary, and from the nurse, who is receiving no salary, but who is learning the business.

Mr. MILLER. How many internes or nurses would the gentleman expect there would be in a hospital costing $15,000 for construction and equipment? The gentleman knows there would be no internes and that most of the work would be done by the physician himself.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how many internes there would be in those hospitals, but in the great hospitals throughout the country, where patients receive much better treatment than they would receive in these Indian hospitals, the patients receive their care and treatment from the internes, and when these internes have had their training in the hospitals they go out into the practice. So far as I am concerned, I would rather trust them than trust an old practicing physician who has forgotten most of what he learned in his youth and has not kept himself up to date.

It does not require a great amount of knowledge to treat tuberculosis. The gentleman says it requires a great physician to treat it. The treatment is well enough known not to require the administration of a physician at all. It is necessary to have some one to make the people afflicted take the treatment prescribed. I do not think it is the duty of Congress to interfere in this matter. If the department wishes to take physicians outside of the classified service, all that is needed is to recommend that to the President with sufficient force and the President under the law has the power to do it.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think the President would take such action?

Mr. MANN. I believe he would if the gentleman's statement were correct.

Mr. MILLER. There is no question about the correctness of the statement.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman makes very extreme statements sometimes.

Mr. MILLER. This is an extreme case.

Mr. MANN. Of course I know the gentleman thinks that is so, but the gentleman makes some statements that are so extreme that I am satisfied they are beyond the verities, and I think some of his other statements are also in error.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman must recognize that there are some things beyond the experience of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman always runs into that, and I do not pretend to know as much about Indian affairs as the gentleman from Minnesota does, yet only a moment ago the gentleman insisted that there was a law regulating the salaries of physicians. I challenge that statement. I should like to see him produce the law.

Mr. MILLER. I will produce the law, or a rule which has the force of law.

Mr. MANN. A rule which can be changed to-morrow is not law. If the department wants to change the rule, they can change it. Give the department the reasons, and they probably will change it.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will yield again, I will say that I have had this up with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs many times, and upon investigation he has always told me that he did not have the authority; that he was compelled by law to restrict the appointment to these classes, as I have indicated. I also had it up with the Civil Service Commission at one time, and they refused to acquiesce in the recommendation.

Mr. MANN. The Civil Service Commission are not the judges. The President is the judge. Let the Indian Department take it to the President. The President will want to do what is right and fair about it, and if such a state of facts exists as my friend from Minnesota thinks, I believe the President will take action. But if my friend from Minnesota is overzealous, perhaps the President will not agree with him. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is open to the objection of being legislation, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have a statement prepared by the Indian Office giving a description of the hospitals that are being erected upon Indian reservations which I wish to read, which is as follows:

The hospitals selected to comply with the provisions of the current appropriation act for the construction of hospitals to cost not more $15,000 each are of simple but substantial frame construction, of the pavilion type, with a two-story central building, flanked by one-story wings.

On the first floor of the central portion are located the dining room and kitchen, the latter being provided with a screened porch and refrigerator room.

On the second floor are located four employees' rooms, a bathroom, and a closet for each employee's room.

In the wings are located sitting, locker, bath, and toilet rooms, and two wards, with a capacity of 30 patients, which capacity may be increased to 38 by utilizing open porches located at the front of the sitting rooms. The front wall of each sitting room is provided with glazed and screened windows in box frames, taking up practically the entire front-wall space.

The wards are of the open pattern and all walls are provided with screened and glazed triple-sliding sash and screened and glazed transoms.

A steam-heating equipment is provided for each hospital, also drainage and lighting systems.

The capacity of the proposed hospital in the Choctaw Nation, Okla., to cost $50,000, is 80 patients, 20 of whom are to be placed in tent houses.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "further," in line 17, on page 4, after the word "Provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 17, after the word "Provided," strike out the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 13, after the figures "350,000," insert the following: "Provided, That where any Indian tribe has to its credit funds in the Treasury of the United States, the amounts so expended herefor shall be reimbursable therefrom."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me this amendment is in the interest of economy. It will make a saving and a reduction of expenditure. It is a retrenchment, because if this money, amounting to $350,000, is expended and these Indian tribes have funds in the Treasury of the United States to their credit, they must reimburse the United States Treasury for the expenditure here made, and there will be that much saved to the Treasury of the Government. It seems to me that the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, including the support and education of deaf and dumb and blind Indian children not to exceed $40,000, $1,440,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free-school facilities provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made: Provided further, That not more than $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I should like to know the object of restricting the appropriation for tuition in public schools, limiting it to $50,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman refers to the provision in lines 12 to 14, on page 5?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It provides that not more than $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools. That is an increase over the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I understand that it is the disposition of the committee to favor increasing the education of Indian children in the public schools, rather than transporting them to distant parts of the country to be educated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the idea, to educate the children on the reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. So this is an increase and not a decrease?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. It is an increase from $20,000 to $50,000—a $30,000 increase.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think that is enough?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is enough for experimental purposes. So far the matter is in the experimental stage, and it has worked well as far as it has gone.

Mr. FERRIS. The Indians usually allot their lands up and down creeks and streams, seeking to get bottom land and timber, which are considered more desirable for the Indians. There are some neighborhoods where the land is practically all allotted, and there is not enough taxable land to pay for conducting public schools at all. Often the white children have to pay tuition in addition to the regular school tax. Then and in that event, where Indian children can not be sent away—and often it is not best to send them away—it would seem to me that the commissioner ought to have a larger sum than that to help carry along the schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is in the experimental stage.

Mr. FERRIS. If the Indian Commissioner and the Committee on Indian Affairs think this all that is necessary, of course I am willing to trust their judgment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I should like to say that the comptroller has held that no part of the money that we are proposing to appropriate can be used to pay for the tuition of any child who is under the law of the State in which he resides permitted to attend the public schools, and that it can only be used for paying the tuition of such Indian children as may belong to some tribe where the parents have not received their allotments or are not citizens of the United States and not taxpayers. I have in my hand an opinion rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury in which he so decides, and I thought perhaps the gentleman from Oklahoma would be interested in knowing about it, and that no part of this appropriation can be used to pay the tuition of Indian children who can be admitted to public schools.

Mr. FERRIS. I was not aware of that decision mentioned by the gentleman from South Dakota; but, if that is true, not a penny of this appropriation can be used in my State. The statute admitting my State to the Union provided that all full citizens could exercise every function of a citizen. This would be of no help to us at all. It would seem to me that this provision ought to be broadened so as to authorize or allow the commissioner to expend some of the fund in meritorious cases. For instance, there is a tribe of Indians in Oklahoma that have allotted money on deposit, and who really have more money than the white settlers. They live in an allotted community where they have allotted lands up and down the stream and do not have any taxable property to maintain any school. The children who do not go to tribal schools away from home do not get any education at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I want to ask the gentleman if children who are allowed to attend the public schools are not allowed tuition out of this appropriation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that it came to my notice that the comptroller made this decision, and I wrote to the Indian Office to know what State there was that had a law prohibiting Indian children from attending the public schools, and in his reply he says:

You also request to be advised if in any State children of Indian citizens are prohibited from attending public schools. Attorney General D. M. Kelly, of Montana, in his letter to the office of February 21, 1914, quotes the law of Montana as follows:

"All school moneys apportioned by county superintendents of common schools shall be apportioned to the several districts in proportion to the number of school census children between six and twenty-one years of age, as shown by the returns of the district clerk for the next preceding school census: Provided, That Indian children, who are not living under the guardianship of white persons, shall not be included in the apportionment list unless the parents thereof are citizens of the United States or have taken land under the allotment and severalty act of Congress and have severed their tribal relations."

After discussing this law he concludes his letter as follows:

"It occurs to me that, in view of the Federal legislation upon the subject (Secs. 2071 et seq. Rev. Stat. of the U. S.), it was never intended to impose upon the State the burden of educating Indians so long as they remained wards of the general Government, hence I conclude that only such Indians as have the status of those mentioned in our school law, supra, may be enrolled as students in our public schools."

As far as the office is aware, Montana is the only State that has questioned the right of children of citizen Indians to attend public schools on the same terms as white children.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And receive a portion of this fund.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The children of an Indian who is a citizen can go to a public school, and they receive tuition from the appropriation carried in this bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is what the comptroller says, that Montana is the only State that has questioned the right of Indians to attend school on the same terms as white children.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question. Is there anywhere in this bill an item appropriating money for the education of Indians in the public schools or common schools of any State?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; there is an item that appropriates money for public schools in the State of Oklahoma of, I think, $275,000. It has been carried in the bill for a number of years.

Mr. HARRISON. That is out of the funds of the Indian tribe?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; that is an appropriation made from the General Treasury, the same as what is appropriated by the item in the bill now being considered.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the only instance?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the only one I recall.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman think that money ought to be appropriated out of the Federal Treasury to assist the common schools of any State?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is a question that I do not care to discuss at this time.

Mr. MANN. We tried to knock it out a number of years ago, but the gentleman from Mississippi voted for it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The tribe of Indians living in my own State are not taxpayers. That is, their lands are not taxed under the laws of the State; they are still held in trust by the Government. The schools on the reservation are maintained and paid for by white people who have bought Indian lands. So the whole burden of the support of the public schools rests on the white people. There is a provision no doubt somewhere in the bill providing for the payment of tuition of Indian children that attend these public schools. The tuition rate is very small and does not begin to pay the pro rata share of the Indian of the cost of his schooling, but some way and somehow the Indian Department is able to pay the tuition of the Indian children who attend the public schools supported entirely by the white people, and it is proper that the bill should carry an appropriation for the education of Indian children in the public schools where the Indian pays no tax.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this item of $1,440,000 for the support of the Indian day and industrial schools presents an interesting proposition. Under the act of March 3, 1887, the Secretary of the Interior is required to make annually a report of the expenditures of this money, and this year he has made such a report, found in House Document 1285, submitted to the House on December 7. I find from that report, for instance, and the report is required to give the manner and for what purposes the general educational fund for the preceding fiscal year has been expended, the number and kind of schoolhouses erected, their cost, as well as the cost of repairs, the names of every teacher employed and compensation allowed, the location of each school, and the average attendance of each school.

I find, for instance, that at the Camp Verde day school, located at Camp Verde, Ariz., the average attendance of pupils was 25; that Mary Noyes is the name of the teacher, who receives a salary of $720 a year, while the total expenses of the school amounted to $2,871.95.

The teacher of these few pupils receives a salary of $721 a year, but where the rest of the $2,871.95 goes I do not know. It looks like a rather large sum for the expenses of the school—for janitor service, fuel, light, heating, and anything else of that sort. At the Canyon Day School, at Fort Apache, there are 38 pupils in attendance. Mr. Schriver is the teacher, at a salary of $780, and yet the total expense of this Fort Apache day school is $4,206.58. At the Havasupai Day School, at Supai, Ariz., there are 32 pupils in average daily attendance, and Miss West, the teacher, receives a salary of $720. Yet while the total expense of that school is $3,655.72, the teacher gets but $720. I might go through the whole list of these, but I will not take the time to do so. I desire, however, to call attention to the one which I think takes the cake. That is the Soboba School, at San Jacinto, Cal. There is an average daily attendance there of 10 pupils, and Miss May Stanley, teacher, receives a salary of $900 a year for teaching that school. The total expense of the school is $8,995.25.

Mr. GARNER. How much per student?

Mr. MANN. A little over $800 per student. Of course it would be far cheaper to pick up these Indians and send them to Harvard or Vassar. I would like to have some distinguished member of the Committee on Indian Affairs who knows all about this explain just what this money is expended for. Of course I suppose there is some explanation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What case is that?

Mr. MANN. The Soboba Day School.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Of course all of the information I have is the information contained in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which is supposed to give accurately the expenses of these schools paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On page 8 the gentleman will find the item. Five thousand five hundred and eighty-seven dollars are paid out for wages and salaries.

Mr. MANN. Yes. I will read the items, if that will satisfy the gentleman. In salaries, wages, and so forth, at this school the amount paid out is $5,587.66. What the "etc." is, I do not know. Does the gentleman? For traveling expenses, $318.60; for heat, light, and power services, $253.73; for communication service, $30.50; for subsistence, supplies, $265.71; for dry goods, wearing apparel, and so forth, $38.97; for forage—forage for pupils!—$276.94; for fuel, illuminants, lubricants, and so forth, $549.07; for educational supplies—they do not require much for educational supplies—$15.68 [laughter]; for equipment, material, and so forth, $1,340.31; and for miscellaneous, $49.96, making a total of $8,995.25. And it is paid out of this appropriation for support of day and industrial schools.

Mr. GARNER. Is that appropriation made in a lump sum?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Who is responsible for the appropriation of this lump sum?

Mr. MANN. I do not know who is responsible, and I do not say that there is no explanation of this; but it certainly is not given in the annual report which the Secretary is required to make and does make to Congress.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is an industrial school.

Mr. MANN. Ten pupils at an industrial school at a total cost of $8,995.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is just being started.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be better to close it up? Since when did it become profitable for us, if the gentleman be correct, and I doubt that, to maintain an industrial school for 10 pupils at an expense of $9,000 a year? I say that probably they can make an explanation, but if it be the fact, as is suggested by the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill, that they are paying $9,000 a year for teaching 10 pupils in an industrial school, then they better shift them somewhere else and provide for better education. Here is a lump-sum appropriation. That is one thing. There are a whole lot of these items in this report. I have read only four of them, although I think possibly I have read the one that is the most striking.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Considering the statement the gentleman has just made with reference to one school, would not the Congress be safe in reducing this appropriation $100,000, and seeing if they can not take care of it a little more economically?

Mr. MANN. I do not undertake to say that. I do not draw my conclusions simply by reading a part of a thing until I get the full information. I do not know whether the committee would have full information in reference to this, but this is all of the information that I get from the report, and I think possibly that even calling attention to it in this way will provide further information in the future, so that we will know more about it; but I am sure that Mr. Secretary Lane would not for a moment think of maintaining an industrial school at an expense of $0,000 a year to take care of 10 pupils.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to correct the statement I made a moment ago, and I would like the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. I called the gentleman's attention to a decision of the comptroller and stated the substance of it, basing what I said upon the statement made in the report of the commissioner for the last fiscal year, on page 6, as follows:

> Until recently the office paid tuition in order to procure the enrollment of Indian children in public schools where their parents were not taxpayers. It became necessary to modify this plan, however, for the Comptroller of the Treasury, in a decision of October 22, 1913, ruled that the Federal Government was not authorized to pay tuition of Indian children legally entitled to attend the State public schools.

When I made the statement that I did and quoted from the commissioner's letter, I had not finished the reading of the letter which had just been handed to me. Since making the statement I have read the letter in full, and I now wish to read from it as follows:

> You also request to be advised if the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury referred to on page 6 of my annual report, which prohibited the payment of tuition of Indian children in public schools where the State law entitled them to attend, would prevent the carrying into effect of the appropriation provided to aid the common schools of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. The decision referred to was that of October 22, 1913, wherein the comptroller said:
> "Contracts covering tuition of Indian pupils in a form like the contract considered in the decision of August 19, 1913, when made with reference to Indian children residing in States whose laws give them the full and free privilege of attending the public schools without reference to whether their parents pay taxes and whether or not the General Government pays something for their schooling, do not, as pointed out in said decision, involve any good and sufficient consideration for the payment by the United States of 'tuition fees' on their account. Under such contracts the school authorities neither give nor agree to give anything in return for the money paid or to be paid them by the Government. Such contracts, covering 'tuition' of Indian children in California or any other State where such children are entitled by law to all the school privileges that other children have, providing, as they do, for the furnishing of nothing that would not be furnished just the same if such contracts were not made, have no legal consideration to support them and are therefore unauthorized."
> In order to obviate the difficulty presented by this decision a special provision was inserted in the paragraph providing for the support of Indian schools for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915 (Public—No. 160, 63d Cong., p. 3), as follows: "That not more than $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in public schools."
> The Comptroller of the Treasury in a later decision of September 19, 1914, said that this appropriation was available for the purpose stated "in the discretion" of the Department of the Interior.
> The office has assumed that contracts for the payment of tuition of Indian children in public schools to be paid from this fund would be legal and not subject to the comptroller's decision quoted above of October 22, 1913, wherein he held such contracts unauthorized because they did not have legal consideration. Your attention, however, is called to the fact that the appropriation in aid of the common schools of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma is not paid to the various school districts under contract, but paid to the school districts directly by the cashier and special disbursing agent for the Five Civilized Tribes, in accordance with rules governing the distribution of this fund approved by the Secretary of the Interior October 3, 1914. No contracts are used in the disbursing of this fund.

It will appear by this statement of the commissioner that the language inserted in the appropriation bill for this fiscal year, providing that a portion of the appropriation may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in public schools has resulted in a decision by the Comptroller of the Treasury on September 19, 1914, changing his decision of August 19, 1913, and holding that it is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to use the money for that purpose. I make this statement to correct what I said before, in order that no one will be misled in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the last clause, line 24, page 4, beginning with the word "including," would not be better English if it were made to read this way: "Including not to exceed $40,000 for the support and education of deaf and dumb and blind Indian children"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will find it in line 1 up here.

Mr. COOPER. As it is now it ought to be stricken out, for it is not good English the way it reads now.

Mr. MANN. They had the word "for" in last year, and it ought to be in now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The language does not read well as it is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 5, line 1, strike out the words and figures "not to exceed $40,000," and on page 4, line 24, after the word "including," insert the words and figures "not to exceed $40,000 for."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including sewer, water, and lighting systems in connection therewith, and for the purchase of lands necessary for school and agency purposes, $400,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allow employees in the Indian Service, who are furnished quarters, necessary heat and light for such quarters without charge, such heat and light to be paid for out of the fund chargeable with the cost of heating and lighting other buildings at the same place: Provided further, That the amount so expended for agency purposes shall not be included in the maximum amounts for compensation of employees prescribed by section 1, act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph. May I ask the chairman of the committee in reference to line 17, page 5, where it says, "and for the purchase of land necessary for school and agency purposes"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman make the point of order on the purchase of land necessary?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will not do that. It is subject to a point of order; I will admit that.

Mr. HARRISON. I was going to ask the gentleman, however, in the hearings what facts were presented to the committee about public schools and agency purposes that necessitated their having more land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state this: Very often these school reservations are made near a town, and it becomes necessary to open up roads from the towns and streets into the land occupied by these Indian reservations, schools, and so forth; and very often when they enlarge the schools they do not have sufficient room for the houses, hospitals, dormitories, and so forth, necessary.

Mr. HARRISON. What statement did the commissioner make in reference to the need for this land?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is left in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to determine as to how much they will purchase, but they said in some instances they have to purchase additional land which is necessary, but it is never more than a few acres, and in most instances not more than half an acre.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman recall any instances that the commissioner stated the procurement of land for this purpose was necessary?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the hearings will show as to that, if the gentleman will look at them.

Mr. HARRISON. I was just asking the gentleman because I was sure the gentleman had the information.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman insists on his point of order it will have to go out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi insist on his point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against lines 17, 18, and 19, which read:

And for the purchase of lands necessary for school and agency purposes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I admit the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including sewer, water, and lighting systems in connection therewith, and for the purchase of lands necessary for school and agency purposes, $400,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allow employees in the Indian Service, who are furnished quarters, necessary heat and light for such quarters without charge, such heat and light to be paid for out of the fund chargeable with the cost of heating and lighting other buildings at the same place: Provided further, That the amount so expended for agency purposes shall not be included in the maximum amounts for compensation of employees prescribed by section 1, act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. At the bottom of the proviso in this paragraph is the language:

Provided further, That the amount so expended for agency purposes shall not be included in the maximum amount for compensation of employees prescribed by section 1, act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. MANN. From the bill, because there is no such thing as the act referred to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Now, what is the question the gentleman raises?

Mr. MANN. I just called attention to the sloppy way of getting up the bill. It refers to the compensation provided for in section 1 of a certain act, but there is no such compensation covering those employees, but there is a reference about some other employees and some other act. That is all there is to it. It is not the fault of the committee; that is the way the estimates are sent down, I suppose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We followed the estimates and the old bill.

Mr. MANN. Without ever looking to see whether they were correct or not. I had more curiosity than the gentleman or his committee have.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That last remark is gratuitous.

Mr. MANN. Of course, they would not have kept it in there if they had.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian and public schools, and for placing school pupils, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give them moral, industrial, and educational training, $72,000: Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this sum may be used for obtaining remunerative employment for Indian youths and, when necessary, for payment of transportation and other expenses to their places of employment. The provisions of this section shall also apply to native pupils of school age under 21 years of age brought from Alaska.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph. I desire to get some information from the chairman of the committee. In line 8, page 6, it reads:

Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this sum may be used for obtaining remunerative employment for Indian youths and, when necessary, for payment of transportation and other expenses to their places of employment.

Has it always been the policy of the committee to appropriate money to pay the transportation of these Indian youths to schools and from schools and to places of employment, and to appropriate money to get them a job?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That has been done for a number of years around industrial schools, in the Phoenix School, Carlisle, and numerous others, where the superintendents of those schools for a number of years have looked out for the employment of these girls and boys in their schools. The girls are hired out, or hire themselves out. The superintendents see that they make good, and see that they are in the hands of proper employers, and that they attend to their ordinary duties as cooks, laborers, and so forth, right along the lines of the industrial school which they have just attended.

The young men are hired out among the farmers. Some of them have been trained as blacksmiths and tailors and shoemakers, and all that, and places are sought for those, and six months' employment at times is given to them. It is a great advantage to the pupils to mix them among the white people throughout the country, and it is a great advantage to the Indian Service.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand from this paragraph that the Government has persons employed to go around and collect these Indian youths and encourage them to get remunerative jobs with white families?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the duty of the superintendents and the teachers.

Mr. HARRISON. How many persons are employed to do this?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You will find that in the hearings. There are several hundred pupils placed that way every year.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the gentleman give me any idea at all as to how many are employed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have been told that about 100 are employed in the Carlisle School and not so many in the school at Phoenix. That is true at Chilocco and at other places.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think the gentleman understood my question. Does the Indian Service have persons employed to go all through the United States and even up to Alaska—because this provision extends to Alaska—and collect young Indians and carry them to the schools and then take them away from the schools and then get them remunerative employment in families?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand the teachers of the schools during the vacation look out for the pupils, for their vacation next year.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, the Government has no persons employed for that particular service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not especially.

Mr. HARRISON. If they have not any persons particularly employed for that special work, then the teachers do that work, and they are provided for in other appropriations in this bill, are they not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As to that, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], who can best answer the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. They have a regular office in the Indian Bureau called the Indian Employment Bureau, with an educated Indian at the head of it, and it is his business to look after the interests of Indian employees in the Indian Service and after the employment of Indian people. I assume that part of the money carried in this item is for the purpose of getting employment for children when they have finished their courses at the industrial schools, and that these schools have persons employed for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. But, from the reading of it, it looks as though the Government collected and transported these children to the Indian schools and public schools, as well as transported them from the Indian schools and public schools.

Mr. CARTER. It says, "For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian and public schools." That is one proposition. And then there is another, "and for placing school pupils, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give them moral, industrial, and educational training." That is another proposition.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. The transportation applies to the Indians when they go to and from school?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Then there is the provision made for the man who looks after getting them employment when they complete their school courses.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, in this bureau that the gentleman speaks of, there are persons employed whose duty it is to go throughout the country and collect the Indian children who are sent to these industrial schools?

Mr. CARTER. Not in the bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, who does that service?

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman ask who sends the children to school?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I think the superintendents on the reservations mostly look after that.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice the last clause in this paragraph states—

That the provisions of this section shall also apply to native pupils of school age under 21 years of age brought from Alaska.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Government, under this appropriation, bring these youths from Alaska down to the various places in the United States and get them employment?

Mr. CARTER. They do.

Mr. MANN. They put them in the side shows. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. How many cases does the gentleman recall where that has been done?

Mr. CARTER. I have seen several Alaskan pupils in the schools.

Mr. HARRISON. That is pretty expensive, is it not?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I should judge it is quite expensive.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman really thinks that this appropriation ought to stay in the bill, does he?

Mr. CARTER. I voted to report it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] if any of this $72,000 for transporting pupils to schools is used for transporting pupils from Nebraska, for example, to the Carlisle Indian School, in Pennsylvania?

Mr. CARTER. If any of them are there, it is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. A great many of them are there. I notice that this bill carries an appropriation of $189 per capita for the Carlisle Indian School pupils and $160 per capita for pupils at the Genoa Indian School in Nebraska, and many of our Nebraska Indian children are now in Carlisle. Does the gentleman believe that practice ought to be continued?

Mr. CARTER. I do not believe so, if your school in Nebraska can accommodate them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The Nebraska school has capacity for 400 children, and the committee has provided for a capacity of 375 children and it has appropriated $160 per capita.

Now, then, it would seem to me that this transportation of pupils from Nebraska to Pennsylvania ought to be stopped, and that the Nebraska Indian children that are to be educated should be compelled to go to the Nebraska institution. Does the gentleman know of any way whereby that can be brought about?

Mr. CARTER. Well, if your schools cost less per capita I think certainly the Nebraska schools should be filled before the charge of transportation across the country is paid to another school several hundred miles away.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The Assistant Commissioner of the Indian Department requested that an appropriation for 400 pupils should be made for the Genoa school. They have an enrollment of 395, but the committee has recommended an appropriation for only 375 and it has appropriated only $160 per capita, whereas the standard originally fixed by law, I believe, was $170 per capita.

Mr. CARTER. We have provided all you asked for per capita.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That may be; but the superintendent asked for 400 pupils, and you appropriated for only 375, and are continuing to send Nebraska children to Pennsylvania to school.

The point that I am making, and the point that should be taken into account in the distribution of the appropriation for these Indian children, should be their location and the economy of placing them in the various schools throughout the country. Certainly it would be much better to educate the Nebraska Indian children in the Nebraska school, and I believe that is the policy of the committee, and I am sure that in this particular case the committee made a mistake. I will call their attention to it later on. But the particular thing that I wanted to call to the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma is whether or not these pupils were transported there, and if so, whether it was against good policy? I believe the gentleman agrees with me that it is not good policy to ship these children to Pennsylvania.

Mr. CARTER. I believe it is the best policy to educate the Indian child at a point near home, even from many standpoints other than that of economics. I note from the report on the Genoa School that the average attendance at that school last year was only 340.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And the enrollment was 395.

Mr. CARTER. And the enrollment 397.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And that the capacity of the school is 400, and the commissioner recommended 400.

Mr. CARTER. I presume the committee cut this down because the average attendance last year was less than we had appropriated for.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. My thought was that the committee had undoubtedly overlooked the fact that these children had been sent to Pennsylvania to be educated, and that when attention was called to it it might be corrected.

Mr. CARTER. No; we had not overlooked that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All moneys appropriated herein for school purposes among the Indians may be expended, without restriction as to per capita expenditure, for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any school.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph. I will reserve it if the gentleman wants to say anything.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAGE of North Carolina). The gentleman from Mississippi reserves the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was a matter that the department was very anxious to get into the bill, but I concede that it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we recur to the paragraph on page 4 with respect "to relieving distress among the Indians," for the purpose of offering an amendment that the Chair has just passed on by sustaining the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] that I think ought to be given more consideration. I feel sure that the decision was given too hastily, and it is so important a ruling that I think probably it ought to be given more consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to recur to page 4, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I shall have to object, for the reason that I desire to get through with the bill, and then recur to such points as any gentleman may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas at this time objects.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman reserve that just a moment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why I ask it is that this presents the same question that will be presented probably several times in the consideration of this bill. For that reason I should like to have the matter settled now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The next time it comes up——

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Chair was wrong in his ruling.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The next time it comes up I am willing to have it considered, if the two are on all fours.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons; and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians, $400,000: Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin: Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, cotton, grains, vegetables, and fruits: Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves a point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the chairman of the committee if part of this appropriation is to be used in the work in conjunction with the appropriation further on to provide 20 automobiles to go around and assist in preserving the forests?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is a separate item, but of course will be used for the same work.

Mr. MANN. It provides for 20 new ones.

Mr. HARRISON. Do they need 20 new automobiles to help preserve the forests?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is for the entire Indian Service, for which they are spending all the millions of dollars appropriated in this bill, and we considered that transportation by automobile in many instances will be cheaper than by any other means.

Mr. HARRISON. I make a point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. On the entire paragraph?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. The point of order is that at the bottom of this paragraph there is new legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In what respect?

Mr. HARRISON. In the proviso—

Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

That is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. To the language just read by the Clerk the gentleman makes a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you make it to the whole paragraph?

Mr. HARRISON. I make it to the whole paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the last provision is new law. If the gentleman will move to strike it out, I shall have no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I make the point of order against the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the whole paragraph, with the exception of the last proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on pages 6 and 7, by inserting the matter in the bill from the beginning of line 19 on page 6 to the word "fruits" in line 16 on page 7.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of my friend from Mississippi to the fact that the last proviso refers to a limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912. There is no limitation on salaries contained in that act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending. The gentleman can address himself to that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will address myself to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, when the last Indian bill was under consideration I assisted in an effort to strike out the pay of a special Indian commissioner on the ground that he had not within the memory of man visited the States of Oregon and Washington, where there are a large number of tribes of Indians. I am not going to object to this item for the pay of teachers and special instructors in regard to forest trees, cotton, grains, vegetables, and fruits, although I do hope some of them will visit Washington and Oregon and give our Indians some instruction. Of course we have no cotton, but I have 19 tribes of Indians in the district I have the honor to represent. They are badly in need of all kinds of instruction as to how to make a living except in the matter of fishing. A great many are sick. One of these special Indian commissioners or inspectors visited the State as a result of a statement made on the floor, and his first recommendation was that they should have a doctor; that he was badly needed. Forty or more of these Indians were dying from tuberculosis. An advertisement was put out for a doctor for the Quenilt Indian Reservation, the pay not to exceed $720 a year. The nearest place that a doctor could live would be 40 miles away, and he would have to pay his own expenses of travel. As a result no one has asked for that position as doctor. The Indians have had to struggle along without medical assistance. I make this suggestion in hope that some of these Indian officials will visit that part of the country.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] seriously insist upon his point of order that he has made as to that part of the paragraph that has gone out?

Mr. HARRISON. I was not aware of the truth of the fact that has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the proviso in language was wrong. I took it from the committee's language that there was a limitation in the act of August 24, 1912, but if it does not change existing law I am willing to withdraw the point of order that was sustained.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that the act of 1897 fixes the amount that may be expended at an Indian agency for salaries and compensation of the employees. Now, unless we do make this appropriation available beyond that limit by putting in the proviso you might as well not make the appropriation. In a moment I will have the act of 1897, which limits the amount that may be expended at any agency. If the gentleman is willing to let the appropriation be made, he ought to consent to the proviso against which he has made the point of order. I do not think the gentleman desires to be captious.

Mr. HARRISON. Not a bit; it struck me it was a change of salary.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It has nothing to do with a change of salary. It simply provides, in the Indian Service, where we are conducting industrial work, for farming, care of timber, matrons, and teaching the Indians to become self-supporting. It is absolutely necessary that we have a larger number of employees than we had when there was nothing to do at an agency except to keep track of the Indians and issue them rations at stated intervals. This has to do with the farmers, looking after the timber, the matrons, and the employees that do the real work of instructing the Indians.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the gentleman from South Dakota has just said, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my point of order made to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to withdraw his point or order.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman from Mississippi has made a point of order and the Chair has sustained it. I suggest that the proper way is to reoffer the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that in offering his amendment he include the entire paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will do that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas modifies his amendment by including the paragraph beginning on line 19, page 6, and ending on line 21, page 7.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the language which it is now proposed to insert reads:

Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

The only thing in the act of August 24, 1912, on the subject is this:

Provided also, That the amounts paid to the matrons, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not be included within the limitation on salary and compensation of employees contained in the act of June 7, 1897.

So that this is not a limitation at all. Now all this bill provides is that the sum carried in this bill shall not be included in the limitation of the act of August 24, 1912. There is no limitation in the act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In line 17 you will see that the word "forester" has been added, and that is the reason why this has been put in.

Mr. MANN. That makes no difference; there is no limitation in the act of 1912. That act provides that that act shall not be covered by the limitation of the act of June 7, 1897.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The act of June 7, 1897, reads as follows:

Hereafter not more than $10,000 shall be paid in any one year for salaries or compensation for employees regularly employed at any one agency for its conduct and management, and the number and kind of employees at each agency shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and none other shall be employed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Texas to change the date mentioned in his amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend my amendment so as to strike out the words "act of August 24, 1912," and insert "June 7, 1897."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 7, by striking out in lines 20 and 21 the words "August 24, 1912," and insert "June 7, 1897."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, on line 10, page 7, is the provision: "Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin." Why is that provision necessary?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because there is a separate act controlling the timber of these Indians.

Mr. HARRISON. It applies solely to that reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 3, on page 6, for the purpose of inserting the words "June 7, 1897," in lieu of the words "August 24, 1912."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to return to line 3, page 6, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 6, line 3, by striking out "August 24, 1912," and inserting in lieu thereof "June 7, 1897."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask why that is offered?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is exactly the same proposition, and it is to correct the language in the bill to conform to the correction we have just made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, storage, and transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $300,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of to exceed three warehouses in the Indian Service.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the previous appropriation bill it is provided that there should not be more than three permanent warehouses, and in this bill the word "permanent" has been stricken out. Is it the intention to move these warehouses from one place to another?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the Indian appropriation bill of last year carried a provision that not more than three permanent warehouses should be maintained by this fund. Since that time we find that none of the warehouses has been dispensed with. There were five at that time, and there were five at the time the Indian Bureau officials were before our committee. They stated to us that two of the warehouses had been carried along as temporary warehouses, and it would perhaps not be necessary to carry them any longer as temporary warehouses; so in the future there should be only three warehouses provided for by this bill, and under this provision not more than three could be maintained, even as temporary.

Mr. FOSTER. But really it is to get rid of two of them?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the office is very desirous of having this language as it was carried in last year's bill, in order to have the privilege of providing for temporary warehouses for a part of the year. We have been trying to get rid of these five warehouses ever since I have been in Congress, and we thought we had done it finally when we put in the provision we did last year, but the hearings disclosed that we still had five warehouses—three permanent and two temporary—and so we struck out the word "temporary"; but the office says there are certain seasons of the year when they ought to have the privilege of maintaining temporary warehouses.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, we thought we had stricken them out once before.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We have been striking them out for the last 15 years, and I think this puts all of them out but three. I am quite willing.

Mr. MANN. If my friend from South Dakota will permit an interruption, I suggest that it is safe to say that they will not go out while my distinguished friend the Senator from Nebraska is in the United States Senate.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Illinois is looking after his city apparently.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I never had to bother about that. That keeps itself on its merits. I have always been in favor of cutting them all out and letting them rest on their merits.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $4,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman know how much has been expended by the Board of Indian Commissioners?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think there has been any report made, at least none was furnished to our committee.

Mr. MANN. We used to appropriate about $4,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. No; $4,000. Last year we increased it to $10,000. Had the committee any information before it on which it reduced that amount?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the estimate that has been furnished by the department, and I presume there has been some report made to them by this Board of Indian Commissioners.

Mr. MANN. Did they make an estimate for only $4,000?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was all of the estimate handed in.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by placing therein an explanation of the services and the work of the Board of Indian Commissioners.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of Indian police, including chiefs of police at not to exceed $50 per month each and privates at not to exceed $30 per month each, to be employed in maintaining order, for purchase of equipments and supplies and for rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $150,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move, on line 21, page 8, to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$125,000"—no, "$100,000."

Mr. CARTER. Why not leave it at $125,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 8, line 21, by striking out "$150,000" and inserting "$100,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that, in view of the fact that $50,000 was put in in the other bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of judges of Indian courts where tribal relations now exist, $8,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] increased the prohibition item to $125,000. He now takes $50,000 off again. I want to ask the gentleman if in the last analysis he has accomplished anything on the prohibition proviso? He takes it from Peter and pays Paul. The items now aggregate just as much as they did before they were stricken out; and I will ask the gentleman if he does not think he is playing hot with one amendment and cold with the other?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I had thought that my friend from Oklahoma would get into this prohibition discussion before it was over and express himself to his constituents as being for it. He did not get the opportunity when the other provision was up, and so he gets in now. I did not agree with the chairman of the committee [Mr. STEPHENS], in his argument some moments ago against my motion to increase the appropriation in the bill for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians, that these policemen had very much to do with it, because in reading the hearings before the committee and the debates in prior Congresses in support of these police officers I find that the Members of the delegation from Oklahoma, in practically every instance, say that these Indian policemen are merely old, trusty fellows who are just out there to give information occasionally about depredations on Indian reservations and to carry messages from officers of the Government to various places, nowhere saying they arrest for traffic in liquors among the Indians; and so, in view of these arguments that have been made by Members from Oklahoma against prior appropriations for police service, I have made this motion to reduce this appropriation from $150,000 to $100,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I know the gentleman does not mean to misquote me. I think the gentleman perhaps quotes some of the things I have said about this matter, but my attitude has been in advocacy of the policemen every year I have been in Congress. I think they have, indeed, served a good purpose—two purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this question, here is what the gentleman from Oklahoma, in speaking of their duties, said about these policemen in April, 1912:

They help keep the peace among the Indians. Another thing which I omitted to state, there are usually old, trusted, tried Indians around every reservation who are known to the white people and to the agents, and the agent usually designates some such Indian, who serves as a go-between in all these matters between the Indians, the agency, and also between the white people and the Indians having business relations.

He says, though:

I do not think the appropriation ought to be stricken out.

That argument of the gentleman was on a motion made to strike out the whole provision, and was made, I think, by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. I may be mistaken about it being Mr. DAVENPORT; but, at any rate, Mr.

DAVENPORT, in arguing the question, went on to say that these police officers were doing more harm than they were doing good, and he said—I read from his remarks:

I think the gentleman from Kansas—

He must have been talking about my friend Mr. CAMPBELL over there—no; I notice from a further reading of the RECORD he was talking about Mr. Jackson, who was then a Member of Congress. He said:

I think the gentleman from Kansas is correct in regard to the organization of the Indian police in a number of these places. So far in the Cherokee Nation and a portion of the Creek Nation it has been nothing more or less than a political organization in the last four years.

Now, that is the testimony of Mr. DAVENPORT, my friend's colleague here, who says that in that part of Oklahoma "it was a political organization," and I think my friend Mr. FERRIS at that time thought that it was a kind of political organization. The gentleman shakes his head, evidently meaning "no," but I recall at that time the Republicans were in power, and it is my recollection, I may be in error about it, that there was a general comment upon this side of the House against that side of the House that these policemen out there were a set of political officeholders, performing no respectable service and merely organizing and working in the interest of the Republican Party.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. My good friend from Mississippi of course knows one thing, and that is that Mr. DAVENPORT and myself did not agree about that matter. I believe the words the gentleman read from me were words in support of the Indian police, and I think that my record will show without any interruption at all that I have asked for them each year. I do not think I am entitled to such howling credit for doing it, but I have never opposed them, as my record will show.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the record, so far as my good friend here is concerned, shows that he was in favor of cutting down the appropriation for these policemen at that time, but not striking it out entirely, as our friend Mr. DAVENPORT was in favor of doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. I think what the gentleman has in mind was the general objection I made to too many employees in Oklahoma and elsewhere in the Indian Service, and I am not relenting on that objection now. I said then there were too many of them, and I think now there are too many, and if that statement relieves anybody in any way they are welcome to it, and I am still of the same opinion.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to hear my friend say that, because I have at least convinced him that there is not much kindredship between this amendment I have offered cutting down useless policemen and the one I offered a while ago to aid in suppressing the liquor traffic among the Indians. Mr. DAVENPORT, in speaking of these policemen, further said:

Great complaint has gone up among the people there because of that one fact. It now has a tendency to bring about discord and dissatisfaction, and it brings about conflict between the local officers and these police that goes on and will continue to go on, and if the bill was in such shape that I could make the motion to amend, I would provide an amendment by which there should be no Indian police appointed by the department in any organized town or municipality within any organized State.

Now, that is pretty good testimony. But here is what my friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] said in discussing at that time this police question. Surely something must have come over the spirit of his dreams since he made this speech. Here is what he then said:

Now, I am very sure that we have too many Indian police in Oklahoma, and there is a good deal of truth in the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] and in the statement of my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. I would favor dispensing with these agents entirely in Oklahoma at the first time if it were not for the reason I have stated, were it not that it might slightly disorganize the Indian Service and leave them without men to do this specific work.

Mr. Chairman, there are, I believe, as shown by the hearings, six hundred and some odd of these Indian police, and there is nothing in the hearings that states that these policemen ever arrested anybody for selling liquor to an Indian. But as my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has said, they were "old, trusty Indians, who carried messages back and forth," and as my friend DAVENPORT said, "a political organization out there creating discord and strife among those people." My friend DAVENPORT went further, and said that the State of Oklahoma could attend to its own local affairs and did not want these policemen there intermeddling in them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman when this colloquy took place that he speaks of?

Mr. HARRISON. This was in April, 1912.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Has there been a change in the administration since that time?

Mr. HARRISON. I think there has been. [Laughter on the Republican side.] So I submit that in view of these facts that I have presented and in order to help Oklahoma to attend to their own local affairs, and in order to help the general situation throughout the country, the force of these Indian police should be reduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order. There is nothing before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Mississippi withdraw his amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I did not. I now withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is nothing pending, Mr. Chairman, and I ask that the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of not to exceed $3 in lieu of subsistence, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, $100,000.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] a few minutes ago claimed to be a great prohibitionist. He wanted to increase the appropriation in order that efficiency might be gained in the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians. A few moments later he strikes out the same amount from another appropriation that is used for the same purpose.

The gentleman says it is not so used. If the gentleman had only read the hearings, he would not have made that statement. I will read what the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs says on page 72 of the hearings. He says:

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a part of the duties of these policemen to prevent the sale of liquors on the various reservations?

Mr. MERITT. They help in that work.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you have another appropriation for that purpose, have you not?

Mr. MERITT. But this only supplements their regular work.

The CHAIRMAN. Why shouldn't these two items be thrown together? Is it any more important that they be protected from the sale of whisky than anything else?

Mr. MERITT. It is one of the most important things in the Indian Service, that they be protected from liquor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 6 Indian Service inspectors, at salaries not to exceed $2,500 per annum and actual traveling expenses, and $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field, $30,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. How much was expended for this purpose last year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will find the item in a moment. The gentleman will find it on page 75. This item was inserted in the appropriation bill last year, and there has been no report made on these special inspectors.

Mr. MANN. The inspectors have not been employed yet, have they?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not all of them, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. Have any of them been employed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can not say as to that.

Mr. MANN. What are they to do; what is the necessity of them?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are special inspectors who have the entire inspection of all the various Indian agencies in every State of the Union under their charge.

Mr. MANN. Was this in the bill as it was passed by the House last year, or was this a Senate item?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it was put in in the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Was it not to create political jobs for political purposes? Does the gentleman know whether these appointments are made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior on their own motion, or whether they are made from an eligible list?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are made, as I understand, from an eligible list, and it seems they have not been able yet to determine among the eligible applicants who should be appointed.

Mr. MANN. Have they got an eligible list?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. So I understand.

Mr. MANN. Is that the understanding of my friend from Oklahoma, too?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will read what we have here. I read:

This is the same provision as that of the current law and is essential to a clean administration of the Indian Service. These inspectors will be selected through the Civil Service Commission after an exhaustive investigation of their character, business ability, and capacity for the detail of looking into the manifold activities of this bureau. These officers are considered the most important connected with the field administration of the millions of dollars worth of property belonging to these dependent peoples, as well as their development into healthy, moral, capable, and law-abiding citizens of our country. The amount requested has been carefully decided as adequately sufficient for an economical administration, and will permit of the employment of a most valuable corps of inspectors. Any less amount will have a serious tendency to depreciate its value in morale and efficiency. The need for this appropriation was thoroughly and exhaustively presented to the Congress at the last session, the reiteration of which appears unnecessary in justification of the continuance of the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Who was testifying there—the commissioner?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the report made by the commissioner, printed in the hearings.

Mr. MANN. That these officers were necessary for "a clean administration" of the Indian Department. Is that what he says?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the language, I believe.

Mr. MANN. And yet, although this appropriation has been in force for over a year, the department prefers not to have a "clean administration" and has not appointed these inspectors?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It takes some time to get the proper men, and it has been only a comparatively short time since this law was enacted.

Mr. MANN. Well, it ought not to take more than six months. The Indian appropriation bill became a law last year—when?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Yes; for information.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the last session, when the Indian appropriation bill was being considered in another body after it had passed the House, it was proposed to insert an amendment providing for the appointment of six Indian inspectors, and making their appointment possible by the Secretary of the Interior without regard to the civil-service requirements. In other words, making them political appointments. It met with considerable opposition on account of the way it was proposed to make the appointments, and the amendment was withdrawn and then put in the bill in the form in which it finally became a law, the President in the meantive having by Executive order excepted the places from the classified service and providing that the appointments should be made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in conjunction with the Civil Service Commission. I believe the commissioner has to consult the Civil Service Commission as to the qualification of applicants, but the appointments are not made from an eligible list as appointments are ordinarily made in the classified service. If any examination is required I am sure it is not competitive.

Mr. MANN. These are just pure political appointments, made by the commissioner, are they not? That is, they will be when they are made. I suppose they will be used in connection with the machine to renominate the President. That seems to be the way in which appointments are being made now.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume one of the principal requisites will be that they shall belong to the party of the administration.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall be quite disappointed if they are not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that would be an advantage to the service?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is not that the reason why they are having so much difficulty in finding suitable men?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not.

Mr. MANN. They want to see where the pressure is the greatest before appointing them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted property, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $25,000 for the employment of additional clerks in the Indian Office in connection with the work of determining the heirs of deceased Indians, and considering their wills, out of the $100,000 appropriated herein: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the Osage Indians, nor to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma: And provided further, That hereafter upon a determination of the heirs to any trust or restricted Indian property or after approval by the Secretary of any will covering such trust or restricted property, there shall be paid by such heirs, or by the beneficiaries under such will, or from the estate of the decedent, or from the proceeds of sale of the allotment, or from any trust funds belonging to the estate of the decedent, the sum of $15, which amount shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States and a report shall be made annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, on or before the first Monday in December, of all moneys collected and deposited, as herein provided: Provided further, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any inherited trust allotment or allotments are capable of partition to the advantage of the heirs, he may cause such lands to be partitioned among them, patents in fee to be issued to the competent heirs for their shares and trust patents to be issued to the incompetent heirs for the lands respectively or jointly set apart to them, the trust period to terminate in accordance with the terms of the original patent.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order, I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this paragraph is new legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The last paragraph was not in the bill of last year. With that exception it is the same bill that we passed last year—the same amounts and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. For 1914 you passed the same amounts?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The same amounts, and in the same language, with the exception that we have the new provision at the end.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that the language is quite different, but the appropriation is the same.

Mr. FOSTER. It is changed somewhat here.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I notice that $25,000 of it is to be used for the purpose of paying clerk hire.

Mr. MANN. Last year that was $20,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have inserted the word "wills." That provision is the only material change.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. To whom is the $75,000 to be paid?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a reimbursable amount.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. To whom is it to be paid, and in what way is it to be paid out?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is for the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted property, and it may be determined either by men whom they send out armed with that authority or through the courts. That is, under rules and regulations prescribed by the department as to who shall make these determinations.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Are these employees now in the regular employment of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. It is not intended to go outside of the department to employ people to make these examinations to determine these titles?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is no authorization of that kind in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is there anything to prevent that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think they could employ special employees under the language here. That is the only authority they have.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Does the department do anything except prescribe the rules by which these titles may be perfected?

Mr. MANN. Oh, they determine the heirship.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In accordance with the act of June 25, 1910.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I want to suggest an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The department determines the heirship now, under this provision.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Who gathers the information?

Mr. MANN. They have special employees to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Do they appoint outside attorneys to look up information and bring it to the department?

Mr. MANN. They could, but usually they have regular men doing that work.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. In order that they may be regular men, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. But it might not always be desirable to have a regular man. For instance, supposing you wanted to settle the heirship of an Indian at some place around Washington or at places in various parts of the country.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order. I suppose the gentleman from Minnesota withdraws his point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Yes; I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. I want to make the point of order for the purpose of seeking some information about an item in line 19, page 9, where there is an increase from $20,000 to $25,000 for the employment of additional clerks in the Indian Office.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and can not give much information in regard to the matter, but I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that a few years ago there was a great contest in reference to the proof of heirship of Indians and the settlement of Indian estates. There was inserted in the Indian bill only two or three years ago a provision that the Secretary of the Interior should determine the heirship and to that extent settle the estate of the Indian, who should pay for it. It has been the best work Congress has done in that respect for many years. They made available last year for this purpose $20,000 for clerks here. Of course no one could tell exactly how much would be required. Now they want $25,000. We would have to take their judgment as to the amount that is required, because this is really a new item and has not been in the bill many years.

Mr. HARRISON. I had an impression that there was some amount carried in a general appropriation bill, or in a deficiency appropriation bill, to provide for clerks of this office in Washington.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation contained a proviso that no part of it could be used for clerks in Washington, and the gentleman recalls that the general law is that where a lump-sum appropriation is made no portion of it can be used for clerical assistance in the city of Washington unless specifically authorized. That is what the deficiency bill which the gentleman refers to did; it specifically authorized the use of a portion of that money in the city of Washington.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 9, line 16: After the word "property" strike out the words "under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the rules of the department of."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the hope that if it is adopted it will prevent what appears to me to be possible under the original text, and that is the employment of attorneys not in the regular employment of the department. I must confess that I am making this statement at this time for the information of the committee and with the hope of getting some information myself. I have great respect and confidence in our Committee on Indian Affairs, and of course each Member of Congress receives some information from his constituents. Much of the time the information is not founded on reliable facts. I am going to read a statement, for the benefit of the committee, contained in a letter which I received from one of my constituents, a very able man, who has written a history of our State and who is at the present time writing a history of the Government's relation to and treatment of the Indians of this country. He says, in part:

I am informed that there is a scheme on foot to rob the Chippewa Indians of some half million dollars, to be divided between certain attorneys, certain influential half breeds, and certain gentlemen resident in and about the Capital City. The scheme implies the legitimatization of the employment of the attorneys by the Indians.

I wish to say for the benefit of the committee that I have examined House bill 12579 of last session, the bill supposed to contain such a scheme, and I find no such legislation or anything that could be construed into such an intention or purpose; but, for fear that there may be some legislation that might give foundation for such an impression, I call attention to the statement in the letter, because it comes from such good authority, for what it is worth. I withhold the name of the writer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is this writer in the Government employ in any way?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. No; he is a private citizen in the State of Minnesota. As I said, he is at work on a history of the relations of the Government to and its treatment of the Indian.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The only change that the gentleman makes in his amendment is to strike out the words "under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior." Now, why should not the Secretary of the Interior prescribe rules by which his inferiors, the men whom he sends out to work, shall be guided? I can not imagine how it should be done in any other way except by the rules and regulations.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That would be implied. If the department has the right to use the money, it would naturally follow that it would be done under such rules and regulations as it might adopt.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If he can do it, why not write it into the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That is what I say. If the department is going to do it, why not make it positive that they have absolute control over it and that they will do it by regularly employed agents and not by outside attorneys? That is the point I am trying to impress. I am just leaving this to the committee. I have no personal pride in the amendment. If the committee feels, after the statement that I have made, that the amendment is not of particular value, then we should vote it down.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman think he would accomplish by his amendment? To say that this shall be done by the department instead of under regulations by the Secretary of the Interior would not make any difference.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Just this: Under the original text it is quite possible that the department can go outside the department and employ whomever it sees fit to do this work.

Mr. MANN. They could do it just as well in one case as in the other.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. No; and they could prescribe rules and regulations under which it should be done. But if the department is to do it itself, then it has to do it by its regular agents and not by some temporary employee.

Mr. MANN. That would not follow at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that his time be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Here is an appropriation to be expended. It is precisely just as long one way as it is the other. To say that it shall be expended by the department or expended by the Secretary of the Interior means the same thing. That is what the appropriation is for—to be expended by the department. That is what we make the appropriation for. If you put it in every other line that it is to be expended by the department, it would not make it any stronger. The appropriation is for the Indian Service, in the Department of the Interior. Ordinarily where we put jurisdiction upon a department instead of saying the department we say the Secretary of that department, so as to centralize the responsibility, but it means the same thing whether you say it is to be done by the Secretary or by the department, because the Secretary does not do it personally. He does it by having somebody employed. You can employ some one outside just as well in one case as in the other. There is absolutely no distinction.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. If he were to do it under rules and regulations, and not by the department itself. The reason that I suggested for eliminating the term "rules and regulations" is that it implies that the department does not have to do it itself, but that it can let anyone do it. It can farm it out if it pleases, so long as it is done under rules and regulations. I want the department to do it itself and be responsible for it.

Mr. MANN. The department spends the money. This is an appropriation. This is not an authorization. This is an appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. For a particular purpose.

Mr. MANN. It does not make any difference. We are appropriating the money. Outside people can not spend the money. The department spends the money. Whether you say a certain thing is to be done under rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior or to be done by him does not make any difference. He makes his rules and regulations in either event. That does not amount to anything, but the money is expended by the department. That is why we appropriate it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. We want the department to do the work. We do not want it to be farmed out.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's language would not prevent that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925: Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. May I ask the gentleman from Texas why on line 23, page 10, this amount of $200,000 is made immediately available?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We provide this because we have adopted the plan of having this industrial matter in the bill, so that after the 1st of July, when the money becomes available, they can go on the market and buy Indian supplies more cheaply that fall than they can by waiting until the money would be available. Sometimes they need money in advance for the purpose of pitching the crops and planting them, and buying agricultural implements, stock, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. It is because the fiscal year and the farm year do not coincide.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is it.

Mr. HARRISON. This $200,000 is to be expended in conjunction with this appropriation that will follow to buy 20 new automobiles to farm with, is it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; that is a separate item entirely.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the two amounts that are appropriated are to be used to aid the Indians, to encourage them in industry and self-support?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not, because every item here in the matter now before the House is reimbursable and comes out of the Indian funds.

Mr. HARRISON. Does this item?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And comes out of the Indian fund; and it is for their maintenance and better support, and so that they can become better self-supporting.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask, for information, does the present law make it reimbursable? This paragraph does not say anything about it being reimbursable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All of these items are reimbursable.

Mr. HARRISON. In some of the paragraphs it says they are reimbursable, and some do not. Why is this distinction made?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because when the appropriation was made for the Indians, if afterwards they have funds out of which that appropriation can be reimbursed to the United States Government, that amount is refunded.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the gentleman, but I do not think the gentleman quite got the point I am trying to get at. I notice, for instance, in the items carried on pages 2 and 3, for the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, and so forth, if you read in that paragraph, you will see that the $250,000 is appropriated, but it says, "it is reimbursable as provided in the act of August 1, 1914"; and many other paragraphs so specify that the amounts appropriated "shall be reimbursable out of the tribal funds." Now, in this paragraph that is under consideration nothing at all is said about the amount being reimbursable. The question I asked the gentleman to answer is whether this item is reimbursable. You say in some paragraphs that the amount shall be reimbursable and in others that it shall not be reimbursable. Why is this distinction made?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This amounts to an allowance made by the Government to the Indians for the purpose of making them self-supporting in the manner set forth in all of these items, encouraging them in the way of being self-supporting, for the purchase of seed, animals, tools, and so forth, all of these intended to make them self-supporting.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand, but I do not think the gentleman understands me.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And provides for a repayment—the original bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the gentleman got the law there? That is what I am trying to get at. The reason why I ask is I want to offer an amendment to the paragraph if it is not reimbursable, but if it is reimbursable, of course I do not care to offer it.

Mr. CARTER. It is reimbursable.

Mr. HARRISON. Under what law?

Mr. CARTER. It is reimbursable in the paragraph. If the gentleman will read the top of page 11, line 2, he will see:

Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be provided by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925.

Mr. HARRISON. That answers my question.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on that point I would like to inquire of some member of the committee in reference to this. I desire to call to the attention of the committee that this fixes 1925 as the time for repayment, and I desire to ask if that might not in some way involve the expiration of the trust period. I have in mind, for instance, a tribe of Indians, we will say, whose trust period expires in 1920.

Mr. MANN. That would not make any difference.

Mr. CARTER. This does not place any restrictions upon the land.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma last year the Indian Service asked that these appropriations be repaid by 1925, and then with authority to reinvest the sums as they were paid in prior to 1925, and at the end of that time reinvest it; but the House disagreed with that proposition, and that went out of the bill. Then it was fixed to make it a 10-year period from the year 1915, which was the fiscal year we were then appropriating for.

Mr. FERRIS. I think I can still call to the mind of the gentleman cases where this would complicate things to fix any date definitely. If a tribe of Indians' trust period had expired and the land became taxable and salable and the restrictions were removed, our chances of getting our money back at a later period would be nil.

Mr. MANN. I think the chances of getting the money back are pretty near nil now.

Mr. FERRIS. That may be.

Mr. MANN. The department has been urging this for years, and has been insisting that it was a self-supporting proposition, but they never have collected much money yet.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think they ever will?

Mr. MANN. I do not say that they will not. Originally I was very much opposed to it, but I think they are doing very good work now. From some sources they collect money, and they are doing very well.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, irrespective of whether they will or will not collect anything in the course of time, I do not think the date should be fixed at a date beyond the expiration of the Indian trust period, because if we get the money at all it will be by reason of fixing some sort of a lien against the land.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], like all the other gentlemen from the country districts, is interested in rural credits. Now, when the Government undertakes to advance money to a man to buy his team and buy cattle and locate him upon a farm and make him self-supporting, it can not expect that he will repay that money in less than 10 years. Ten years is a very short time if they make him pay it back.

Mr. FERRIS. Suppose there is a tribe of Indians whose trust period expires in 1920. Does the gentleman propose to postpone the payment five years beyond that?

Mr. MANN. I think this is a lien upon the land under the regulations of the department.

Mr. FERRIS. Has the gentleman in mind some regulations that worked out, that accomplished that?

Mr. MANN. That is my recollection, that they do make this a lien upon the land, although I would not say positively that that is the case.

Mr. FERRIS. That is probably the only way they will ever get it.

Mr. MANN. That is the only way they would ever get it from any of us.

Mr. FERRIS. That is probably true, too.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think the department has yet devised any means of making it a lien upon the land. I do not believe that any of this money is expended except where there are tribal funds either in existence or to come into existence by which they should be reimbursed.

Mr. FERRIS. I understood that this was to apply to Indians who had no tribal funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. I thought this provision was really for Indians who had no tribal funds at all. Am I right about that? If they have money, there is no use in making the land a lien.

Mr. LENROOT. They may not have them now.

Mr. FERRIS. I understand. I have no objection, but I think there should be a proviso added to this providing that the period fixed shall in no case extend beyond the life of the trust period; but I shall not offer it at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] at what time he proposes to rise? This next paragraph will require a good deal of discussion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I had hoped to reach the page containing Arizona, beginning the list of States. That is at the head of page 12. I think we can reach it in a short time.

Mr. HARRISON. This paragraph proposing to purchase an automobile would perhaps take a good deal of time. Would the gentleman move to rise?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman makes a point of order, I shall have to.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARK of Florida, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. BELL of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business of the House that would be in order on Monday next be deferred, and that the appropriation bill now under consideration, namely, the Indian appropriation bill, shall then be in order.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I move, Mr. Speaker, that the regular business on Monday be deferred, and that the appropriation bill now under consideration—the Indian appropriation bill—be in order.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker, and I make the point of order that the motion is not in order.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 4, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of Commerce submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $25,000 for promotion of export trade (H. SENATE.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy guidance and blessing as we start upon the uncharted paths of a new year. We recognize Thy goodness to us in all the providences that have surrounded us in the year that has gone, and we seek Thy favor that we may follow the light that shines upon the path of the just more and more unto the perfect day. We praise Thee for peace within all our boundaries, and for the high spirit of brotherhood that animates those who are the leaders of the people. We pray that Thy grace may be upon Thy servants in this Senate, that they may have the spirit of Christian statesmen, and that they may be witnesses for God for peace unto the uttermost parts of the earth. Hear us in our prayer; accept the praises of Thy people for Thy goodness; and guide us on in the fulfillment of Thine own divine plan for us as a Nation. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, December 29, 1914.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that the further reading of the Journal may be dispensed with.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to hear it read this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah object?

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah objects, and the Secretary will read the Journal.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, and it was approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented the credentials of WESLEY L. JONES, chosen by the electors of the State of Washington a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1915, which were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KENYON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Fort Dodge, Schleswig, and Dubuque, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pleasant Valley, Kans., and a petition of the members of the ladies' classes of the Methodist Sunday School of Luray, Kans., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have received a number of communications from citizens of the State of North Dakota urging the passage of legislation at the present session of Congress prohibiting the sale of munitions of war to the belligerent nations of Europe. I ask that the communications may be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] has just said, I wish to state that I have also received hundreds of individual letters and many petitions on the same subject, in reference to Senate 6688, the bill introduced by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I do not feel like presenting all the letters and having them printed in the RECORD, but I simply call the attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations and of the Senate to the fact that I have received several hundred letters upon the subject. It seems that the citizens of my State are deeply interested in the bill, and I hope and know that the committee will give it due consideration and take such action as they may deem proper.

Mr. ROOT presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Minnesota Peace Society, of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against an increase in the armament of this country, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the exclusion of anti-Catholic publications from the mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against the exclusion of anti-Catholic publications from the mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LODGE presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 7063) granting an increase of pension to Caro H. Moore, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Jamaica, Vt., remonstrating against the exclusion of anti-Catholic publications from the mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WEEKS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Washington, D. C.; Kansas City, Mo.; Boswell, Ind.; Chicago, Ill.; and Jamestown, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Worcester, Whitman, New Bedford, Lowell, Boston, Dorchester, Hardner, Charlestown, Cambridge, Everett, and Athol, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LEE of Maryland presented a petition of sundry citizens of Browningsville, Md., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of John Crote and 150 other citizens of Rockville, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey presented a petition of the Society of Friends of Woodbury, N. J., commending the President's efforts toward bringing about peace in Europe, and remonstrating against increased armament in this country, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition adopted by the Fruit Growers' Convention, held at Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the inspection of all horticultural products at certain points of entry into any State, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Eureka, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide pensions for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a petition of the Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast, of San Francisco, Cal., praying for an appropriation for the purchase of a wire dragnet for southeastern Alaska and also for the construction of a lighthouse tender, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a petition of Frank Britton Camp, No. 16, United Spanish War Veterans, of Crawfordsville, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to widows and orphans of Spanish War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of Local Division No. 598, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Richmond; of Local Division No. 154, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Evansville; of Local Division No. 606, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Michigan City; of Local Division No. 12, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Fort Wayne; of Local Lodge No. 136, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Fort Wayne; of Local Division No. 520, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Gary; and of the Wabash Railway Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Peru, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the extension of the boiler-inspection laws, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Aerie No. 248, Fraternal Order of Eagles, of Fort Wayne, Ind., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the Rush Creek Friends Bible School, of Kingman; of the Sunday school of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Fort Wayne; of L. M. Kreder, George W. Cate, J. C. Olwin, and 47 other residents of Greentown; of Whitewater Friends Church, of Richmond, all in the State of Indiana, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a petition of 24 citizens of Aberdeen, Wash., and a petition of Lake Union Lodge, No. 116, International Order of Good Templars, of Seattle, Wash., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 6919) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 851) thereon.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 6839) extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Delaware River authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River," approved the 24th day of August, 1912, and I submit a report (No. 849) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the report.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 6776) granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois, and I submit a report (No. 850) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA.

Mr. FLETCHER. By direction of the Committee on Commerce I report back the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea, with the recommendation that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be five in number, and to be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the action suggested by the Committee on Commerce will be taken. The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. SMITH of Michigan.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 7124) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls to the city of Morganton, N. C.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 7125) granting a pension to Robert H. Trollinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADY:

A bill (S. 7126) authorizing the submission to the Court of Claims of the claim of Albert J. Hewlett, of Pocatello, Idaho, for damages sustained by reason of the overflow of his lands in connection with the Government canal being constructed under the supervision of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Interior Department; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 7127) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Ludiker (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7128) granting an increase of pension to Jerome B. Wright (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7138) granting an increase of pension to Fernando Miller (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 7139) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Raphile; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WORKS:

A bill (S. 7140) creating an additional land district in the State of California, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7141) for the relief of C. G. Wilford; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 7142) granting an increase of pension to John Sargent (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 7143) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Gwin (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7144) granting an increase of pension to John P. Simpson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7145) granting a pension to Charles M. Preston (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7146) granting an increase of pension to Albert Baur; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 7147) to amend section 4215 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WORKS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 218) to provide for the detail of an officer of the Army for duty with the Panama-California Exposition, San Diego, Cal.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. STONE. I submit two proposed amendments to Senate bill 6856, known as the shipping bill, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now on the calendar. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table, to be taken up in connection with the consideration of that bill. However, if the Senator from Missouri makes a motion that they go to the Committee on Commerce, the Chair will submit it to the Senate.

Mr. STONE. For the present let them lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the order.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 to pay Tom K. Richie, of Tucson, Ariz., the amount having been inadvertently covered into the Treasury on a forfeited cash recognizance, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LANE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 due the estates of deceased colored soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to be used for the erection of a national home for aged and infirm colored people in the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19906), which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LANE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 20189), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 20189), which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill (H. R. 8846), which were referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

SHIPMENT OF NAVAL STORES ABROAD.

Mr. HARDWICK. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk, and for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 512), as follows:

Resolved, That the President is respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate copies of all communications transmitted to or received from the Government of Great Britain touching the recent order of said Government declaring naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products absolute contraband of war, and the previous order of said Government declaring that the products above enumerated were not contraband of war.

Also copies of any other communications transmitted to or received from any foreign Government in reference to the classification of naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products as contraband of war.

Also copies of any communications transmitted to or received from any foreign Government relating to the detention of ships under American registry carrying cargoes of naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has just been read. Is there objection?

Mr. STONE. I ask that the resolution go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri objects. Under the rule, the resolution will lie over one day and be printed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, which passed the Senate on Saturday last, may be printed showing the amendments of the Senate numbered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

SALE AND SHIPMENT OF COTTON.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, some days since I had inserted in the RECORD certain communications from European cotton buyers and spinners in answer to questions propounded by me relative to the outlook for the cotton trade situation. I have to-day a translation of a letter received from C. A. Gruner & Co., of Bremen, Germany, which I send to the desk. I ask that it be read by the Secretary and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the letter was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

BREMEN, November 20, 1914.

E. D. SMITH, Esq.,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C., United States of America:

We take the liberty to answer your kind letter of September 29 in German, as the regulations now in force do not permit correspondence in English.

In answer to the questions asked, we will reply briefly as follows:

1. The consumption of American cotton in Germany and Austria is entirely dependent on the possibility or impossibility of regulated cotton importation. If the possibility of importing cotton were assured, the consumption would certainly be at least normal, and probably even heavier than usual, as East Indian and Egyptian cotton, the consumption of which is large in Germany and Austria, could be replaced by American cotton.

2. The question as to the size of the stock on hand we are not permitted to answer, for reasons easily understood.

3. Since the middle of September work has been going on in full force almost everywhere in the German spinning industry, with an increasing demand.

4. Should the war last very much longer a reduction in operations could only be avoided if the supply of cotton could be directly or indirectly guaranteed.

5. Funds for the purchase of cotton are plentiful in Germany, the increase in the rate of exchange brought about by the war not figuring in the equation.

6. As traffic in German and English vessels to Germany seems to be precluded, we are dependent upon neutral bottoms for our imports, therefore first of all upon American and Scandinavian ships. Unfortunately the space available from this source is small, and unless the United States make great exertions to place all in anywise available ships into the freight traffic the prospects for a considerable exchange of commodities between our country and yours are none too bright.

7. Our industry still has an adequate number of working hands at its disposal, especially as the spinning and weaving business is capable of greatly extending the amount of its female labor.

8–9. As said before, everything depends upon shipping facilities. The consumption of American cotton in Germany might be splendid if only certainty of importation could be secured. Every bit of cotton that can be landed in Germany would be willingly taken. The United States therefore have a strong incentive to make every effort in studying the question of transportation and in devising ways and means of promoting and assisting a sure exportation service to Europe. The success of such endeavors would necessarily mean a brilliant business for America.

THOMAS JEFFERSON AS ARCHITECT.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have had sent me a copy of the Architectural Quarterly, of Harvard University, which contains an article which presents Thomas Jefferson, to me at least, and I think to the mass of our fellow citizens, in an entirely new light. We know him as a man of letters and as a broad statesman, but this demonstrates the fact that he was an architect of exceeding merit. It seems to me that it would be a valuable document not only in connection with him, but for the well-being and knowledge of the people at large and that it should be printed as a public document. There are sundry illustrations. Whether the illustrations will be printed or not I can not say, but I desire to present it for the consideration of the Senate with the request that it be made a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be received and referred to the Committee on Printing.

TEN EYCK DE WITT VEEDER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If there are none, morning business is closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 694, being Senate bill 3000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the bill by title, for the present consideration of which the Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask to what bill the Senator from New Hampshire refers?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3000) for the relief of Ten Eyck De Witt Veeder, commodore on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, is that a bill which is already on the calendar?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. THORNTON. I object.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask that the bill be read, so that we may know what it contains.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks that the bill be read. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Ten Eyck De Witt Veeder, now a commodore on the retired list of the United States Navy, to the active list of rear admirals of the United States Navy to take rank next after Rear Admiral Charles Brainard Taylor Moore, United States Navy: Provided, That the said Ten Eyck De Witt Veeder shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, by the usual examination prescribed by law for the grade of rear admiral in the United States Navy, his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of said grade: Provided further, That the said Ten Eyck De Witt Veeder shall be carried as additional to the number in the grade to which he may be appointed under this act: And provided further, That the said Ten Eyck De Witt Veeder shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to back pay of any kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to have the report on that bill read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion having been made before 2 o'clock to proceed to the consideration of the bill, it must be disposed of without debate. The Chair is not prepared to rule just at this moment whether the reading of the report at this time would be in the nature of debate, and unless some Senator objects the Chair will direct the Secretary to read the report.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand this is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think, under the rule, this is not a debatable motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been the ruling of the Chair; but when it comes to reading the report accompanying the bill there is an element of doubt about it, and the Chair would always resolve that in favor of its being read.

Mr. GALLINGER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The question is on the adoption of the motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill just read. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall have to question that decision. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for the yeas and nays on his motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], which I transfer to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and to state that he is paired on all votes with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for all votes to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN'S name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. WARREN] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and vote "nay." I desire further to state that the Senator from New Mexico is necessarily absent on account of serious illness in his family.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the negative). The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] having entered the Chamber and voted, I wish to withdraw the announcement of my transfer, and, in consequence of my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Borah	Gallinger	McCumber	Smoot
Brady	Goff	McLean	Sterling
Brandegee	Gronna	Oliver	Sutherland

So Mr. GALLINGER's motion was not agreed to.

CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 392.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion now before the Senate will have to be disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not yield at this time, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. As I understand, the motion to take up the urgent deficiency bill is privileged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has before it the motion made by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is it in order to move as a substitute for that motion a motion to take up another bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be antagonized by a privileged motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. A motion to take up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill is privileged.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is made before 2 o'clock. The Chair will put the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before, as to my pair and its transfer, and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer I made on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and must withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROOT (after having voted in the affirmative). May I inquire if the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. ROOT. Having a pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is unavoidably absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the affirmative.) I inquire if the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 38—as follows:

YEAS—35.

Borah	Cummins	Lane	Perkins
Brady	Dillingham	Lippitt	Poindexter
Brandegee	du Pont	Lodge	Smoot

So Mr. TOWNSEND's motion was rejected.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 6856, Order of Business No. 737.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before that motion is put, I desire to ask the Senator, if the bill referred to by him is taken up and made the unfinished business, whether he will be willing to have it laid aside for the purpose of taking up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. LODGE. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am willing that it shall be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. Debate is out of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But Senators can interrogate one another as to the effect of the motion.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would be willing to lay it aside temporarily in order to take up the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand, then, that if this bill is made the unfinished business, the Senator will lay aside the bill until the appropriation bill has been considered?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator can not do that.

Mr. LODGE. It requires unanimous consent to lay aside a bill temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the years and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before the question is put, I should like to inquire what the bill is to which the Senator from Florida refers?

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States, or of a State thereof, or of the District of Columbia, to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been stated. On that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. ASHURST, and he voted "yea."

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that the bill may be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the former ballot, I vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia makes an announcement, which may stand for the day. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I must withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the city on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea." I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—46.

Ashurst	Johnson	Poindexter	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Kenyon	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Kern	Ransdell	Stone

So Mr. FLETCHER'S motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States, or of a State thereof, or of the District of Columbia, to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Florida, in charge of the bill which has just been taken up by vote, what the Senator's purpose is, so far as pressing the bill for immediate consideration is concerned, if the Senator chooses to answer my question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will state that, so far as I am concerned, we desire to press the bill and to get as early consideration of it and as early disposition of it as possible. I am perfectly willing, however, to lay it aside temporarily in order to dispose of the appropriation bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, I assume, is aware of the fact that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has given notice that he proposes to file a minority report on this bill, and which has not as yet been filed. Does the Senator think it would be the proper thing to take up so important a measure as this before the views of the minority have been placed before the Senate?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say, in that connection, that there was what might be called an understanding, to the effect that the minority would file their views within three days after the majority report had been filed. The majority report was filed more than three days ago, and I assumed that perhaps the minority were ready to present their views.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will yield to me——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. The minority report has been prepared. There has been some delay in printing exhibits and revising the copy of the report. I think it will be ready within an hour, however. As I recall, this is the third day. The majority report was filed on Wednesday, and this is the third legislative day after that—one holiday, New Year's Day, having intervened, and Sunday.

I should say, however, that it was understood in the Committee on Commerce that the time given for filing the minority report should not interfere with the bringing up of the bill. That was the understanding at the time. Of course that does not foreclose any Senator on the floor from asking for time to give it more mature consideration.

Right here, if it is necessary, and if the Senator will yield further to me, I ask leave to file the minority report (Rept. No. 841, pt. 2) during the day. I think it will be ready to send to the desk within an hour.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think under the circumstances I might proceed with the consideration of the bill. We probably will not dispose of it to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it would be most extraordinary for any Senator to force consideration of a great measure such as this when those interested in it as deeply as some of us are have not had an opportunity to read the views of the minority. I suggest to the Senator that probably nothing will be gained by undue haste in this regard.

Mr. President, it has come to our ears on this side of the Chamber that there is to be undue haste in the consideration of this bill, that it is to be pressed in season and out of season, at seasonable hours and unseasonable hours. Those of us who do not think the bill is of sufficient consequence to warrant action of that kind will be compelled to resist it in every proper and parliamentary way.

I feel very sure that the Senator from Florida, who is always gracious and always fair, will see not only the propriety but the necessity of giving us a little time to prepare ourselves for the discussion of a measure that is of far-reaching consequence and that the people of the United States are very deeply interested in, and will be more interested in before this debate closes, I feel very sure.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no desire, of course, to press the matter in such a form as would cause any inconvenience to the other side or prevent the consideration of the views of the minority. I am perfectly willing to say now that I will lay aside the bill to be taken up to-morrow upon the close of the morning business if that would be agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, the Senator will probably have votes enough to take it up. I certainly have no objection to its being laid aside for the consideration of appropriation bills, which I think are of much greater consequence than this bill possibly can be to the people of the country. My view is that we ought to pass the supply bills and go home, and not to force it upon the Congress at this short session, after the experience we have had in the last three years of sitting here continuously, considering bills such as this. The time is too short to properly consider the measure, and it is not in the line of good legislation.

Of course we will all use our own judgment as to the proper mode of procedure; but I repeat, Mr. President, that any undue haste to press this bill upon the Senate will not, in my judgment, facilitate its passage. I think we ought to be dealt with generously about the matter. It is opening a great new question containing propositions that the American people will want to understand fully before the bill is enacted into a law.

For myself, having been extremely busy during the few days we have been in session in considering appropriation bills, I am not prepared at the present time, as I would wish to be, to proceed to the discussion of the bill, and as I shall endeavor to be if generous treatment is accorded to the minority, or to those of us who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have offered to temporarily lay aside the bill in order to take up the emergency deficiency appropriation bill and dispose of it. I have offered to temporarily lay aside the bill, to have it taken up to-morrow upon the conclusion of the morning business. Neither of these suggestions seems to be agreeable to the other side, and I know of no other way of proceeding except to go on in the regular way with the bill. Others may think it is not an important measure, but a great many people do. For my part I do not believe there is any more important matter affecting the interests of all the people of the whole country than what this measure will accomplish. But I do not want to delay it indefinitely. I want to bring the matter before the Senate and have it considered fully and in order and disposed of. I am willing to do anything I can to accommodate Senators on the other side and to meet their views, but I do not want to be in the position of doing nothing and having the time pass without any action whatever.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield the floor.

Mr. JONES. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire something of which he is probably aware as indicating the character of argument and the means the other side intend to use to put this bill through. The majority leader of the Senate was quoted as having said immediately after the President's message with reference to this bill, "We have the votes to put it through."

Mr. GALLINGER. I observed that, and I have had it whispered in an ear that always serves me well that, assuming they have the votes, they are going to resort to tactics which will be opposed as strenuously as possible, so far as a few of us are concerned, at least.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, we have the votes to put it through if ever we can get a chance to vote. Unless Senators on the other side adopt some plan or scheme of inexcusable and unpardonable obstruction we will get to a vote, and we have the votes to pass the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senators on this side should resort to the same tactics that the Senator's colleague resorted to on the immigration bill, would he think that that was very much to be condemned?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am not discussing what occurred on other bills or what individual Senators have done. It is rather an impertinent question for the Senator to propound, and I think an improper one, to ask me to animadvert upon the conduct of any Senator, and particularly on that of my own colleague. I am speaking as to this bill. I am answering the statements made in the form of criticism by the Senator from Washington and the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is oversensitive.

Mr. STONE. No; I am not at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has on more than one occasion, with a great deal of earnestness and with some acerbity, during the past few months charged this side of the Chamber with unduly and improperly obstructing legislation. Now, Mr. President, for one, I propose to be the judge of my own conduct in this matter, and I shall pursue such a course in the debate on this bill as I think the importance of the measure demands at my hands.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield to me to call up House bill 20241, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. I object to laying the bill aside by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will have to be disposed of in some other way.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to say a very few words upon the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is before the Senate. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to make a motion?

Mr. OVERMAN. I give notice that I shall make the motion after 2 o'clock to take up the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, but I want to say a word in regard to this bill just taken up. It is a bill of very vast consequence. It enters upon a wholly new policy—one never adopted by this country before and, so far as I know, never adopted by any civilized maritime power. I know of no measure which requires more thorough debate than this one, and the question is not to be met by a bald statement that "we have got the votes." That, no doubt, is a great advantage. As Mr. Pitt said once, the time has now come to apply the majority, and I suppose that the Mr. Pitts on the other side are taking that view at this time.

But the rules of the Senate are designed to give us fair discussion, and this bill can not be jammed through to-morrow or the next day. Here is a bill of this enormous consequence brought in, on which there have been no hearings at all and on which information is lacking as to the facts, a bill on which even the minority report is not printed.

I think, Mr. President, that we are entitled to an opportunity to discuss this bill fairly and fully, and when that fair and full discussion is completed I assume a vote will be taken and the majority will then be applied.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply wish to suggest that there is no disposition on this side to limit debate or to prevent a fair and full discussion of the bill at all. There is no disposition, as the Senator expressed it, to jam through the bill, even if we had the power to do it. Certainly we have not any power to prevent an ample discussion and consideration of the bill. We simply want to get it before the Senate for that very purpose, so that Senators can proceed, and, whether they are ready or not, we on this side are prepared to discuss it.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is our first duty to deal with the appropriation bills. The only thing which will make an extra session inevitable is the failure of some of the appropriation bills. I think our first duty, therefore, is to dispose of those great supply bills.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is but one before the Senate at present, and that is the emergency deficiency bill, and it is proposed this afternoon to call it up. I think it can be disposed of very shortly.

Mr. LODGE. We will see about that when we get to it. I have no objection to taking up the urgent deficiency bill, but I think there is likely to be a little conversation about some of the items in that bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not familiar with the items in that bill.

Mr. LODGE. I am familiar with only one item, and I shall have something to say about it.

Mr. OVERMAN. To be frank, I want to make a motion after 2 o'clock, because if the pending bill is before the Senate at 2 o'clock it then becomes the unfinished business for every day. If the appropriation bill were taken up now, of course the shipping bill would lose its place. I will be frank to state that when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives I shall move to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. I shall certainly not resist that motion, but, Mr. President, I am referring more to what the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] said as to going on with this bill to-morrow, taking it up immediately after the routine morning business, not allowing us to consider any other bills in the morning hour, not allowing us to do anything with the calendar, but this bill is to be taken up and kept here all day, and I suppose that 11 o'clock sessions will be begun, and night sessions will be attempted.

Mr. President, I think this bill is altogether too important to be treated in that way. I think those who are opposed to it, as well as those who favor it, are entitled to a reasonable opportunity not only to speak but to prepare themselves. This is not a bill which can be dealt with in a few words. I regard the bill as thoroughly vicious legislation, both economically and internationally. I know that it will at once involve the Government in an expenditure of $30,000,000. No human being of any ordinary sense will become a partner with the Government as the predominant partner in an enterprise in which it is avowed beforehand that it is the intention to lose money. Therefore we may be sure that the whole of the $30,000,000 will be involved. To our liberal friends on the other side $30,000,000 may seem a trifle. I think at this time it is an expenditure to be considered.

Then, Mr. President, having got our corporation established with the United States as the owner, not merely the predominant owner, but the owner, we are to put those ships into trade. I am speaking only of the economic side now. We are to put them into the foreign trade.

The United States, with all its vast power and all its great resources, is unable to carry on a merchant marine which will take care of all the freight of the United States, and wherever they place one of these Government-owned ships on a given route you will look in vain for an American vessel to be run there, for nobody will go into competition with a Government line. When you establish these ships on those lines, where they run you may be sure that all hope of building up an American merchant marine in that direction is dissipated once and for all.

Now, those are a few of the economic reasons which seem to me of very great importance.

Then we come to the international side. We are establishing a set of merchant vessels owned by the Government. Let us consider what that would mean in time of peace. It would create a very new condition. All Government ships to-day have reciprocal privileges. Ships of one Government and ships of another have reciprocal privileges in each other's harbors. No clearance is needed. No port dues are exacted. Is it to be supposed that these ships, trading ships, are to be given those privileges by other nations?

The matter of collisions, of ordinary accidents, raises many very important questions. I know of but one case where this matter was at all involved, the case known from the name of the ship as the Parlement Belge. It was a ship of that name carrying the mails, I think, between Ostend, or some Belgian port, and an English port. There was a collision, and the question was raised about Government ownership, and it was finally decided on an appeal to the House of Lords that the ship did not lose her Government character because, in addition to the Government work, she also carried passengers. In that case the vessel was merely in the nature of a ferryboat, but here we have a whole series of ships loaded with merchandise, regular traders.

Now, those are some of the difficulties that arise in time of peace. How much more so in time of war? It is an undoubted neutral right, freely exercised by us during our Civil War, to stop neutral ships and examine them for contraband. It is a recognized right of international law. It is, however, one thing to stop a privately owned ship, and a very different thing to stop a ship that is Government owned.

What is to be the status of the men on board the ship? Are they to be officers of the United States like the officers of the Navy? Are the crew to be enlisted men or are they to be like ordinary captains and crews of merchant ships?

I merely mention a few of the questions that necessarily arise when we take this new, utterly new, step.

Other nations have owned railroads; they have owned telegraphs; they have owned telephones and other means of communication operated wholly within their own boundaries; but no maritime nation within my knowledge, no matter how strong the socialistic desire for Government ownership might be, has ever attempted to apply those doctrines to merchant shipping, because merchant shipping is not within their own control; it is not within their own boundaries; it goes out onto the high seas and has to meet a world of international complications. Have we not enough international complications now about us and likely to arise without encouraging new and perilous questions?

It is proposed, as I understand this bill, and as I certainly know the President said, to run these ships at a loss until they begin to make money, and then to turn them over to private ownership. Why, Mr. President, what becomes of this opposition to subsidy then? There never has been proposed any subsidy so gross as that which I have just quoted, and which was flatly stated by the President in his message.

Mr. President, I have no intention of arguing the bill to-day; I am not prepared to argue it; I am simply indicating some of the general questions of political economy and of international law which are involved in the bill. I think that not only as a matter of courtesy we should be, but as a matter of right we must be, permitted fully to debate this measure, and that every opportunity should be given to discuss a measure of this magnitude as it deserves to be discussed. I have no desire to throw any artificial obstructions in the way of the proper consideration of the bill; but I say very frankly that if any attempt is made to cut off proper discussion of the bill, I for one shall be ready to do what I have never before done in the Senate—use every possible means of parliamentary obstruction in order that we may have opportunity to discuss the bill fairly and fully and as a measure of such great magnitude ought to be discussed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Commerce which reported this bill, I think I should say that during the time when it was being considered by the committee I was engaged in work before other committees and was unable to be present. I did not enjoy the benefit of the hearings, if any hearings were held, and did not participate in the making up of the report.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. BURTON. I will say, in regard to hearings, that none were held. The minority requested that those who were experts in the shipping business, those who were posted on these subjects, might be called before the committee and brief hearings be had, but the majority voted down a motion to have hearings and insisted upon the immediate report of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. However that may be, Mr. President, in justice to myself I simply desire to say, in order that my position may be known, that I did not join in the report, not having been present, and I have not seen fit to present views representing the minority. I voted this morning against taking up the bill to-day for consideration. That in no manner indicates hostility on my part to the bill; but evidently it is a bill of such very great importance that it ought to be fully considered, and especially if hearings were not had in committee.

So far as I am concerned, my attitude is simply this: I have had a feeling that something should be done to promote our carrying trade under the American flag, and possibly this experiment, by in a limited way establishing a line that shall be run on schedule time for a period, might demonstrate that it would end in a successful building up of such carrying trade; yet I have not reached a conclusion in the matter, and, for one, I want to hear a discussion of so important a question upon its merits and value before I shall be able to conclude whether or not I shall support the bill. On that account I do not care to be put in the attitude of having participated in the recommendation of the committee favoring the passage of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course Senators know perfectly well, as I have before suggested, that we would not be able to prevent a full and exhaustive discussion of this measure even if we desired to do so; Senators understand perfectly well that they will have all the time they desire to consider the measure from all standpoints, upon every phase, and to discuss it as long and as fully as they like. There is no disposition to have it take any other course. We can not be charged with unduly pressing an important measure.

The bill has been presented to the Senate and a full report has been made upon it. The matter has been more or less under consideration, I have no doubt, in the minds of Senators anyway, for some time past. There were some hearings on a similar bill which was introduced in the other House. People who desired to be heard were given the opportunity to appear before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries there, which handled the bill. Certain hearings were had, which were sufficient, anyway, I take it, to satisfy that committee, and the bill was favorably reported in the other House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a House bill. Does the Senator from Florida say that there were hearings on the bill before the committee of the other House?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; precisely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are such hearings printed?

Mr. FLETCHER. They are printed and they are available.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were very limited, were they not?

Mr. FLETCHER. The hearings were not very extensive, I should say, but my understanding is that sufficient opportunity was given for all the people who desired to be heard to be heard before that committee, and those hearings have been printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked the question for the reason that I have had letters from various parties in New England asking if hearings could not be secured before the Senate committee and complaining that they had not been given proper opportunity to present their views when the bill was before the House. I simply state that for what it is worth.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will yield to me for a moment, I wish to say that the House minority report, if I recall it correctly, complained that there was no time for sufficient hearings and that the information was lacking—that is one of the objections they made—on which to found the measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not say as to what took place there, except that certain hearings were had, and that they are printed and are available. Whatever they show speaks for itself.

Mr. President, I can not add to what the report of the committee, which has been presented and printed and is on the desks of Senators, expresses regarding the general nature and purpose of this measure. I feel that it is unnecessary to go into a detailed consideration of the provisions of the bill so far as explaining the bill is concerned. It is a very simple measure; there are no complicated or involved proposition about it; it is easily and readily understood. No amount of argument or discussion of the provisions of the bill would give any further light than would be gathered by simply reading the bill. As I have said, the report of the committee, so far as we have been able to make it, fully covers all the features of the proposed legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to ask the Senator, if he expects to discuss it later, but I was going to ask him a question or two in regard to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would be glad if the Senator would postpone his inquiries for the time, because I may answer just what is in the Senator's mind in the course of my remarks.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the Senator going to discuss the provisions of the bill at this time?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is my intention to do so.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; the bill has not been read yet.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to conform to the Senator's desires, of course, but I took it from what he just said that he was not going into an explanation of the bill at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was saying that it was unnecessary to take up the bill section by section and discuss it by way of explaining the bill, but I was proceeding to say that, in so far as it involved a departure from the previous policy of the Government, there would be occasion for giving reasons for the measure, and as to that matter I propose to present, so far as I can, the reasons which seem to call for this legislation at this time. On that phase of the matter I shall offer some observations, perhaps a little extended.

Mr. NORRIS. The questions I desire to ask the Senator would not be connected with any reasons that might exist for a departure from present or past practices. I wanted to ask the Senator a few questions in regard to the meaning of some parts of the bill, but I will not ask them now if he prefers that I should ask the questions later on.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; I have no objection if the Senator desires to ask the questions now. If I can throw any light on the subject, I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if the committee have made any change in the bill wherein it was provided that after the shipping corporation had been organized and had either built or purchased ships, put them in operation, and had operated various lines, it was within the power of the shipping board or of the President to dispose of the ships which have been so purchased to private parties? Has there been any change made in the bill in that respect?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no change in that regard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that it would be more regular to permit the bill to be read at this time and allow it to be presented formally to the Senate under the order heretofore adopted.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to suggest, Mr. President, that that perhaps had better be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course when the bill is read we will all understand it thoroughly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is necessary to read the bill under the order heretofore adopted. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I think that if this bill is to be read now, and therefore deprive the Senate of hearing it read later, we ought to have a quorum here to listen to it, and I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bryan	James	Overman	Shafroth
Burton	Kenyon	Page	Sheppard
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Perkins	Stone
Crawford	Lee, Md.	Pittman	Thornton
du Pont	Lodge	Poindexter	White
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Ransdell
Gallinger	Nelson	Root
Hardwick	Norris	Saulsbury

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Twenty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is not present. The Secretary will call the list of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CAMDEN, Mr. CHILTON, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. JONES, Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. REED, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. STERLING, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. VARDAMAN, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent on account of a slight indisposition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. BORAH, Mr. GOFF, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. KERN, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States, acting through the shipping board hereinafter created, may subscribe to the capital stock of any corporation now or hereafter organized under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof or of the District of Columbia upon the terms and conditions herein mentioned.

SEC. 2. That the object of such corporation shall be the purchase, construction, equipment, maintenance, and operation of merchant vessels in the trade between the Atlantic, Gulf, or Pacific ports of the United States and the ports of Central and South America and elsewhere to meet the requirements of the foreign commerce of the United States. The initial capital stock of such corporation shall not be over $10,000,000, of the par value of $100 per share, but the shipping board, with the approval of the President, may consent to or cause an increase of the capital stock from time to time, as the interests of the corporation may require: Provided, That the United States shall subscribe for 51 per cent of each and every such increase. The United States shall subscribe to 51 per cent of such stock at par, and the remainder thereof shall be offered for public subscription. The United States may further subscribe at par to an amount of such stock equal to that not taken by public subscription. Such corporation may begin business as soon as 51 per cent of such stock has been subscribed and paid for by the United States.

SEC. 3. That the United States, through the shipping board and with the approval of the President, is authorized to purchase or construct vessels suitable, in the judgment of the shipping board, for the purposes of such corporation, with a view to transferring them to such corporation, and for this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the request of the shipping board, may issue and sell or use for such purchases or construction any of the bonds of the United States now available in the Treasury of the United States under the act of August 5, 1909, the act of February 4, 1910, and the act of March 2, 1911, relating to the issue of bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal, to a total amount not to exceed $30,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing or constructing such vessels.

SEC. 4. That the shipping board is authorized to transfer the vessels purchased or constructed as herein provided to such corporation, and such corporation shall issue to the United States in payment thereof its gold bonds bearing interest at not less than 4 per cent per annum, and upon such further terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the shipping board, such bonds to constitute a first and paramount lien upon such vessels thus transferred and upon all the property of such corporation: Provided, That the amount of bonds received by the United States in payment for such vessels shall not be less, at the then par value, than the total amount expended by the United States in the purchase or construction of such vessels, and same may be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion and with the approval of the President, to reimburse the Treasury for expenditures made in the purchase or construction of vessels. Such corporation shall make suitable provision for sinking fund and for the depreciation charges under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by such shipping board.

SEC. 5. That vessels purchased or constructed by such shipping board and conveyed to such corporation as herein provided shall be entitled to registry under the laws of the United States, and shall be deemed vessels of the United States and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining to such vessels, except such vessels shall engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila. Such vessels shall be subject to the navigation laws of the United States except as herein provided.

SEC. 6. That, subject to the direction of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce are hereby constituted a board to be known as the shipping board, with full power to vote the stock of the United States in such corporation and to do all other things necessary to protect the interests of the United States and to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 7. That, with the approval of the Congress, such shipping board may at any time sell the stock of such corporation owned by the United States.

SEC. 8. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to charter, lease, or transfer vessels purchased or constructed under the provisions of this act and such naval auxiliaries now belonging to the Naval Establishment of the United States as are suitable for commercial use and which are not required for use in the Navy in time of peace, and vessels now owned and operated by the Panama Railroad Co., to any corporation now or hereafter organized as in this act provided or to any other corporation or corporations now or hereafter organized, upon such terms and conditions as the shipping board, with the approval of the President of the United States, shall prescribe. The vessels purchased or constructed by the United States through the shipping board, with the approval of the President of the United States, shall be of a type, as far as the commercial requirements of the foreign trade of the United States may permit, suitable for use as naval auxiliaries in the Naval Establishment of the United States.

SEC. 9. That the President of the United States shall at any time have the right, upon giving written notice of his intention to the corporation using the vessels under the provisions of this act, to take possession for use as naval auxiliaries in the United States Navy or for other purposes of any vessels used by such corporation at a reasonable price or rental.

SEC. 10. That a detailed statement of all expenditures under this act and of all receipts hereunder shall be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

SEC. 11. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000.

SEC. 12. That this act shall take effect from its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. Unless there is objection, the committee amendments will be first considered. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not wish at this time to enter upon a discussion of the merits of this bill, but I do wish to say a very few words regarding the discussion of the bill.

I think it is a bill of vast importance. I have known of no measure laid before the Senate in the past half dozen years which seemed to me weighted with such consequence as is this bill.

There are three major lines of consideration, upon each one of which we must regard this bill as of very great consequence to the people of the country. The first and least is that it proposes to embark the Government of the United States upon a very large expense in a business venture of a kind in which the private enterprise of the United States has uniformly met with loss rather than profit, and it proposes to embark the Government in such a venture practically without limit imposed by the Congress of the United States.

I say that is the least of the reasons why this bill must be regarded as of great importance. A second and more important reason is that it proposes to put the Government of the United States into the foreign trade at a time when that trade necessarily involves frequent, almost constant, questions of critical importance, of great delicacy and difficulty, arising upon the law of nations regarding neutral and belligerent rights. It proposes to put the Government of the United States in a position where her good faith will be questioned, where her violation of the law of nations will be asserted, if any situations arise such as have been detailed to us within a few days by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. It proposes to create a condition where it will be no mere question of an individual citizen of the United States undertaking and succeeding or failing in carrying contraband to a belligerent, but where the same state of facts will raise the question of the United States violating its neutrality and taking sides with one belligerent or another.

That is the second reason. The third is that this bill proposes a reversal of the policy which has been followed by this Government from the beginning. It proposes to embark the Government of the United States in a business far more extreme than would be the ownership of railroads, far more extreme as an exercise of governmental authority than would be the ownership of telegraph and telephone lines. It proposes to put the Government of the United States in a position where it will step in and remedy the defects, the shortcomings, the failures of individual enterprise by raising money by taxation from all the people in order to carry on the business that individual enterprise has not carried on; and that, sir, means a complete reversal of the policy of the United States. It means a new departure on a line of Government action more important, more fateful in its results than any act which has ever been passed by this Congress since I, since you, Mr. President [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina in the chair], became a Member of this body. It means a repudiation more signal than has ever yet been made of the principles of the great leader of the party which "has the votes" to put this bill through.

Sir, there has been no discussion here since I have been in this body so imperative in its demands upon the Members of the Senate as the discussion of this bill. There has been no measure going so deep to the basis of our institutions as this bill. It comes here, sir, under circumstances which are repugnant. There was no hearing before the committee of the House on such a measure as we have before us. There was no hearing before the committee of the Senate. The demand for a hearing was refused, and the bill was reported speedily, peremptorily, with but slight opportunity for discussion; and now, sir, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], in advance, with some show of feeling, which I know was evanescent and which, I trust, does not even now continue, has stigmatized all discussion of this bill on the part of the minority as—what were the words?—"improper and unjustifiable."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], with that kindliness and fairness which always characterize him, has told us that there was no disposition to interfere with the debate on this bill, but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] in advance gives notice to the country that the debate on this bill is to be regarded as obstructive, improper, and unjustifiable. I protest against any such spirit dominating this body, whether it be on the part of those who have the votes or not. May the time be far distant when there is so little spirit of independence, so little courage, so little loyalty to the duty of a minority in this body that such a notice in advance is accepted without just resentment.

Mr. President, the discussion of measures in this body does not consist alone in the making of speeches. We discuss measures with but very few Senators here. There are not 20 in the room at this moment. I counted them a few minutes ago, and there were 14. What, then, is the use of discussion? The use is this, that every speech is going to the country, that every hour passed is calling the attention of the country to the measure. The people of the United States begin to consider, begin to read, begin to discuss, and gradually week by week they form their opinions, and their opinions find their way back here. The process of discussion results ultimately in the reaching of conclusions which are conformable to the will and judgment of the people of the United States. That, sir, is why the long, patient, and sometimes tedious discussion of questions in the Senate of the United States is of vast utility, although we would suppose that it was useless from counting the men who are listening to the speeches which are made.

Now, Mr. President, this bill, fraught with such great consequences, must have and shall have the kind of discussion which brings these grave and serious questions before the people of the United States and which enables them to form their judgments upon the subjects which are involved.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], with his well-trained mind and his habit of analyzing and stating propositions in clear and logical order, has pointed out three lines of discussion of this bill. I wish to say to him that we are prepared to pursue those lines, and we believe we shall be able to meet every criticism offered under either the first proposition, that the Government is entering upon a business enterprise without precedent and without justification; the second proposition, that the occasion is such that we run the risk of becoming involved in international complications; and the third proposition, that we propose a reversal of the policy of the Government from the beginning. I think we shall be able to show that none of these objections or criticisms are well founded as to this measure.

Generally speaking, Mr. President, and briefly, upon that phase of the matter the bill provides for the organization of a corporation in the District of Columbia or under the laws of some State of the Union having a capital stock of some $10,000,000, with the power to increase that later if it is determined wise; and that the corporation shall be authorized to enter upon this work and undertaking when 51 per cent of the capital stock is paid up. The bill provides that the Government of the United States, through a shipping board composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Postmaster General, shall subscribe to 51 per cent of the capital stock of this corporation; that the remaining 49 per cent shall be offered to the public, and if not taken by the public the Government is authorized and empowered to subscribe and pay for it.

Furthermore, through the shipping board the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to employ Panama Canal bonds, 3 per cent bonds, running for 50 years, as I recall, and selling now at 99 cents in the open market, practically at par, to the extent of $30,000,000, in the construction, purchase, charter, lease, and so forth, of vessels for this matter of taking care of the commerce of the United States with foreign countries. Then there is authority given for this corporation to issue its bonds, gold bonds, 4 per cent, and sell them to remburse the Treasury for the amount expended out of the sales of the Panama bonds.

That is an outline of the plan whereby a corporation formed in this way with this capital stock is authorized to purchase, acquire, lease, charter, and charter to others, ships for the purpose of carrying our products to foreign markets and bringing the products of other countries to this market.

The corporation is then further empowered to dispose of these ships—to sell them, to lease them, as it may be advised is proper and wise—after they shall have served the primary purpose of opening routes of trade and of accommodating the emergency which is upon the country at this time.

Without going further into the details of the bill, I assure the Senate, in the first place, and the country, that it is not a permanent business undertaking on the part of the Government that is intended here. In the next place, the ships flying the United States flag owned by this corporation, instead of running a greater danger and risk than private vessels would run in the matter of carrying what may be regarded as contraband to foreign countries, the very fact, it seems to me, that they were ships owned by a corporation in which the Government was a majority stockholder; the very fact that the Government would have certain power and control in the management of the cargoes and in the navigation of the vessels, and the very fact that the Government is in a position, therefore, to guarantee that there is no violation of the international law in the business upon which the vessels are to be engaged, ought to solve many of the difficulties which we find confronting us to-day, and ought to relieve the situation of tension and stress which we gather from the press comments, at least, there is some indication of at this time.

Mr. President, it is necessary to get a full understanding of present conditions and realize the emergency that exists now, and, in this connection, for us to review a little some of the historical features and facts leading up to the present and to this measure.

We must realize, of course, that at the present time there is practically no merchant marine in foreign trade under the flag of the United States; that less than 1,400,000 tonnage exists to-day of American merchant vessels engaged in foreign commerce; that we are to-day in the hands of foreign ship-owning interests and absolutely dependent upon competitors in the markets of the world for the carrying of our products to those markets.

Various causes have been given for that situation. Among them as causes asserted for the decadence of American foreign shipping are—

First. The substitution of steam for sails as the motive power of ships and the substitution of iron or steel for wood in their construction. This cause need not have worked to our disadvantage. We were slow to adopt the new methods, but foreign countries did not hesitate or delay. While the steel ship costs 30 to 35 per cent more than the wooden ship, it lasts about twice as long, insurance rates are much lower on it and cargo, and it can be built with advantages for loading and discharging, and has other advantages.

Second. The increased cost of shipbuilding, due to increase in cost of materials and labor. This situation did not necessarily operate against us. The steel and iron we have and had when the change occurred in abundance. Our yards were equipped with excellent machinery and appliances. While wages were higher here, this was largely offset by efficiency and other conditions. There was no way to guard against the imposition which our laws allowed our steel makers to practice, such as charging our shipbuilders $32 per ton for steel which they delivered in Belfast at $24 per ton.

Third. The increase in maintenance and running expenses. This item need not have been large. The total wage cost is only about 8 to 18 per cent of the total operating expenses of a vessel. An infinitesimal increase in rates or foregoing a small amount of profit would have covered it.

Our existing registration laws forbid any foreign-built vessel from engaging in our coastwise trade. The remedies suggested have been—

First. Free ships. The Dingley law and subsequent tariff acts relieved of duty all material and supplies entering into ships built in the United States for foreign trade. It did not apply to domestic ships, because of the insistence of protected interests. This has not seemed to have any material effect on our merchant marine. To repeal our registry laws and allow shipowners to buy or build wherever they could do so at least cost the ships needed for our commerce would not solve the difficulty because, it is claimed, foreign ships have lower wages on shipboard and, in some instances, receive bounties. We have changed our laws so as to admit to American register ships purchased by Americans anywhere for foreign service, but it appears that as yet it has brought no ships under our flag. It is claimed, also, our laws requiring that American citizens shall officer ships under our flag adds to cost of operation and deters American register. We have authorized the suspension by the President of that requirement.

Second. Discriminating duties. This leads to commercial conflict, in the first place, and, in the next place, we have such a provision in our tariff law. The trouble is, it clashes with numerous treaties and, again, is now involved in litigation. We can not rely on that remedy at present.

Third. Bounty for construction and subsidy for operation. This has been the principal remedy proposed and upon it the greatest stress has been laid.

Turning casually to the hearings before the Merchant Marine Commission, volume 3, page 1753, Rear Admiral P. F. Harrington is quoted:

> We must first get the ships, and I think when we get the ships and acquire the ship-owning habit, then the matters of shipbuilders' interest and of shipowners' interest will eventually right themselves, so that they will be able to compete with people abroad.

At page 1754 he said:

> My mind rejects the idea of free ships for the reason I stated. My judgment is adverse to the idea of discriminating duties, and there seems to me to be nothing left but a direct payment to shipowners.

At page 1753 he says:

> It seems to come right down to this conclusion. If the country wants a great merchant marine, it must pay for it, very much as other nations do.

Rather inconsistent with the idea of subsidy or bounty is the statement at page 1750:

> Indeed, the subsidized lines have failed of success in competing with lines which were not subsidized, a conspicuous instance of which was the withdrawal of the Roach Line to Brazil.

Then he gives an interesting account of the American line, subsidized both by the United States and Brazil, which failed. The most perfect and successful cargo carriers—the tramp steamers—were never subsidized by any country. Combinations, rebating, and manipulations will overcome subsidies and bounties. It would seem that none of the means for establishing a mercantile marine which have been suggested can be depended upon to work a success. Equally it follows, since all other methods have been exhausted or found not feasible, there is but one thing to do, and that is to have the Government intervene directly as proposed in S. 6856.

THE SITUATION PRIOR TO AUGUST 1, 1914.

Ships flying our flag carried only about 5 per cent of our commerce. Ships flying foreign flags conveyed freight and passengers to and from practically every port of the world to and from our shores. Great combinations of foreign interests worked against any effort in this country to establish over-sea lines. With unexcelled and improving means of transporting our products and goods to the ports, indeed our "control stops with the shore." While "man marks the earth with ruin" across the ocean we are commercially helpless on the seas. Our competitors in trade have for years carried the products of our fields, forests, mines, and factories abroad. They have exercised full sway, fixing the sailings, dictated the routes, farmed out the ports, fixed the rates of freights and passenger tariffs, determined the kind, extent, and quality and cost of accommodations for passengers. They alone have had the final word as to where and when we might send our goods. Their one object has been, primarily, to earn profit for themselves. They have not been concerned with any notion to develop trade for us or open routes for our benefit or for the advantage of those with whom we were interchanging. They have simply regarded their own interests, and we have gone on taking and enjoying what was parceled out to us that might be of advantage to those transporting our products and goods.

Particularly with regard to the commerce between North and South America, the shipping monopoly flying European flags and working for their countries have exercised absolute control.

The testimony of Mr. Sidney Story and Mr. William Lowry before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, under H. R. 587, gives the experience of the Pan American Mail Line, and Mr. J. J. Slechta shows that of the Lloyd Brazilian was similar. Both were forced out of business by the combination of foreign competitors. Agreements governing the traffic to and from South American Republics were regularly entered into, and no independent line could live. (See pp. 154, 164, 165, 166, 170 et seq. of vol. 4 of the report.)

The testimony of shippers and shipping experts clearly shows that a combination existed on the part of foreign shipping interests, having for its purpose the control of America's over-sea commerce, and, in a way, to wring annual tribute from it and to checkmate any efforts made here to expand our trade.

This testimony further showed that there was not a single ship under our flag in the carrying trade between the United States, Brazil, and Argentina, and that all other lines known as American lines—operating ships under foreign flags—had certain routes allotted to them in the trade with the west coast of South and Central America; that these so-called American lines were members of the conference lines, and all dominated by the Foreign Shipping Trust, with headquarters in Europe; that the tariffs or freight rates from United States ports to foreign ports, notably to those of South America, were dictated from Europe and were made so as to secure the bulk of the flow of commerce from South America to Europe and vice versa.

The dividends declared by these foreign lines furnished sufficient denials of the statements that the American lines could not compete with European lines on a legitimate basis. (See Report on Steamship Agreements and Affiliations, etc., vol. 4, pp. 415 to 419, and chap. 6, p. 151 et seq.)

So that not only was our over-sea transportation almost exclusively under foreign flags, but a combination of shipping interests existed, dominated from Europe, which effectually shut out any independent line from the United States.

The United States produces a surplus of the prime necessities of life, which other nations must have or go unclothed and hungry. This means a position of supreme power; a power greater than military or naval power and more lasting, because peace lasts longer than war. But these necessities do not yield to us or serve others as they should, so long as the means of delivering them are in the hands of others and we have no voice on the seas.

We should have our own messengers to send when and where we will over the free and open highways of commerce. We are like a merchant prepared to sell his goods but unable to deliver an article.

The means for carrying our products and manufactures to the market places throughout the world and bringing back to us the commodities we want in exchange, and the drummers over the sea, like the traveling men on land, should be at our command.

We must confess to a humiliating lack of foresight or inexcusable neglect, when we note that upon a foreign trade totaling over $4,200,000,000, over half of which has been in exports, we have permitted shipping trusts and combinations, all under foreign flags, to levy an annual tribute of between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000.

Unquestionably a merchant marine under the American flag is essential to our full commercial development.

Adequate and efficient transportation on the seas under the American flag, owned and controlled exclusively by Americans, it is our business to produce.

We need ships which will deliver our mails direct, and invoices and bills of lading, and do the things which will build up permanent trade relations; carry our abundant surplus from fields, forests, and factories to markets; unseal the doors of our shipyards; maintain prosperity within our borders. We must see to it that a war between other countries will not have the effect of paralyzing our industries because we have no means of transporting our products.

Little Holland, with an area of 13,171 square miles, not half as large as Florida, has a mercantile fleet of 400 steamers. As a maritime, financial, and colonial power she takes high rank. So far as I have found, there is no subsidy or bounty for the Netherlands ships.

We should have profited by our experience during the Boer War. That war began in October, 1899. It caused Great Britain to withdraw 250 steamships of an aggregate of 1,000,000 tons from commerce to transport and supply service. The effect was to "cripple opportunities afforded by sending freight to and from America and to raise freights." Our farmers were the worst sufferers, as corn exports were cut off, cotton shipments were reduced—decrease in cereal shipments the following year was 1,750,000 bushels—all because we lacked the ships to deliver the goods. Our total exports of breadstuffs shrunk from $317,879,746 in 1898 to $269,955,771 in 1899 and $250,786,080 in 1900.

The British shipowners withdrew their best vessels to accept profitable Government charters and substituted a few old, cheap craft, but they marked up freight rates 30 per cent, so they made as much out of our diminished commerce as before.

Considering both diminished exports and increased freight rates, the direct and indirect loss to our farmers because of foreign monopoly of a large part of our ocean-carrying business was undoubtedly many million dollars.

An article on the "Development of the American Merchant Marine and American Commerce," Document 141, printed at the request of Senator GALLINGER, January 15, 1906, sounds prophetic in this paragraph after mentioning the experience and effect from the Boer War I have referred to:

WHAT OF A GREATER CONFLICT?

The withdrawal of the trans-Atlantic liners flying British and German flags would mean paralysis to the export trade and a crushing loss to our millions of producers of breadstuffs, cotton, and provisions. Millions of men far inland who had never seen the sea would be demanding of Congress an explanation of why there was no American merchant marine and insisting on an answer.

This article further says:

NO SHIPS TO SOUTH AMERICA.

But it is not only in our trans-Atlantic trade that we are at the mercy of Europe. As President Roosevelt says in his message to the present Congress: "It can not but be a source of regret and uneasiness to us that the lines of communication with our sister Republics of South America should be chiefly under foreign control."

And:

HURTING THE FARMERS MOST.

One accompaniment of the working of this foreign shipping "combine" and these "triangular voyages" is that our American exports to Brazil have fallen from $15,135,000 in 1895 to $10,955,000 in 1904. Congress refused a mail subvention of $200,000 a year and cut off four millions of American commerce. This loss falls most heavily, not on the coast States, but on the agricultural States of the West, for our exports to Brazil were very largely breadstuffs and provisions. We sold to Brazil $2,683,000 worth of flour in 1895 and only $1,785,000 in 1904. American consular and other representatives in Brazil all agree that this shrinkage in the flour trade is due primarily to unfavorable freight rates and an irregular shipping service—to a lack of American ships owned and run in American interests. As Consul General Seegar reports, "A Rio commission house made a profit by shipping flour from New York to Europe and thence to Rio, although the increased difference of travel was over 3,000 miles."

NATIONAL AID MEANS LOWER RATES.

From the days when Congress, under the admonition of President Polk, granted the first mail subventions to American steamers on the route to Europe national aid to shipping has always brought not only improved transportation facilities but lower freight rates. Says Lindsay, the historian of the British merchant marine: "Before the Collins (American trans-Atlantic) Line was established the Cunard steamers were receiving £7 10s. sterling per ton freight, which was so much a monopoly rate that in two years after the Collins Line had commenced the rate of freight fell to £4 sterling per ton."

That this is still the result of State aid to shipping is demonstrated anew by some fresh evidence of especial interest to the farmers of the Western States. In 1901 Canada granted a subsidy of $150,000 for a monthly steamship service from Montreal to South Africa. In 1901 Canada sent only $26,815 worth of goods to Cape Town and Natal. In 1903 Canada sent $2,228,000 worth

AN AMERICAN LINE TO SOUTH AFRICA.

No American steamers run from our ports to South Africa. The trade is in the hands of a foreign shipping monopoly which has lately made a heavy advance in rates. Consul General Washington, who reports "a remarkable growth in the Canadian trade with South Africa since the granting of an annual subsidy by the Canadian Government in 1901," also states significantly:

"A trade report received here from New York dated August 1, 1905, quoted the rates for the next direct steamer from that port to Cape Town as not exceeding $6.70 per ton; to East London and Durban, $7.91; and the September sailing from Montreal at $4.26 for Cape Town and Port Elizabeth, and $4.87 to East London and Durban."

In other words, because of the establishment of a direct subsidized Canadian line freight rates on Canadian breadstuffs, lumber, provisions, etc., from Montreal to South Africa are from $2 to $3 a ton below the rate exacted by foreign steamships on similar American products from New York to South Africa.

I may say that for the fiscal year 1913 the exports from the United States to Latin America amounted to $442,419,973 out of a total of exports $2,465,884,149, 17.94 per cent of total to Latin America, or 6 per cent going to South America. Imports from Latin America to United States, $323,775,885 out of a total of our imports of $1,813,008,234, or 17.86 per cent from Latin America, 12 per cent coming from South America, including Mexico and Central America.

WHAT HAS BEEN OUR SITUATION SINCE PRACTICALLY ALL THE OLD WORLD BECAME INVOLVED IN WAR?

Heeding no warnings, closing our eyes to the inevitable in such a contingency, we have drifted along, wrangled some over ways and means, and did nothing. The consequence, which should have been foreseen and guarded against, has been practically a demoralization of our foreign trade. Our abject and sole dependence on foreign ships has placed us in an impotent and deplorable situation. German and Austrian shipping to the amount of some 5,000,000 tonnage has gone suddenly out of commission. A large number of the merchant ships of England, France, and Russia have ceased to engage in peaceful commerce. There is a ship famine on here. The rates of freight have soared to the prohibition point. Cotton is selling in Germany at 19 cents per pound and in our market at 7 cents, and Germany wants 500,000,000 pounds, and we have fifteen times that for sale, and the belligerent nations themselves are willing we should take this cotton to this customer, and we find ourselves without the means of doing it. Phosphate, turpentine, and rosin, and other products which have found their chief markets abroad are weighing down our docks, but we have no craft to take them to the waiting markets. There have been some lines operating under neutral flags, a small tonnage under our flag, but wholly inadequte for our needs, and we have during the past four months paid in freight rates over and above the normal rates, more money than would be required to purchase 60 ships at $500,000 each. That has been the tax and the burden upon our producers. In the last four months we have actually lost more money than would have been sufficient to have carried out every provision under this bill. Still the rates increase.

A gentleman on board the New Amsterdam, which sailed from Rotterdam August 9 for New York, told me he had purchased a cargo of rice or rice meal and loaded it at Hamburg, taking bills of lading and all shipping papers and paying 75 per cent, about $40,000, the remainder to be paid when the goods were delivered in St. Louis.

Just before the vessel was to sail she was notified not to go, and this American citizen came away with a claim in his pocket for some $40,000, which he hopes to get liquidated some of these days. If his property had been in American bottoms, he would have come along with it without interruption. No doubt there are numerous instances of that kind in the ports of other countries as well.

No country, whether at war or not, has jurisdiction over the high seas. No country, belligerent or otherwise, has any right to stop our ships on the open seas engaged in customary commerce and say you shall not proceed. This is not denying, however, the right of belligerents to haul to and even board merchantmen to ascertain whether they carry contraband or not and from whence they come and whither bound, but this should be done in an orderly, decent way, without any unnecessary delay or hardship.

The Creator alone rules the seas, and "to all His creatures they are as free as the air they breathe and must be kept so while man remains on earth." No nation can exercise sovereignty over the oceans and seas, which are the inheritance of all the people of the world. They are the highways of commerce for all nations, all races, and all people.

Exporters under international law have the absolute right to ship their goods to any neutral country, regardless of whether they are contraband or not.

If such goods are declared not to be contraband, they can be shipped to Germany, England, France, Russia, or any warring nation. If contraband goods are shipped from the United States to another neutral country, with a view to further shipment to a belligerent nation, the entire shipment may be regarded as a continuous one and the goods will be subject to seizure. It is otherwise if the goods are really intended for a neutral country.

It is clear that goods of all kinds, steel, meat, and everything, contraband or noncontraband, may be shipped without interference from this country to any neutral country.

Goods not declared to be contraband may be shipped to any warring nation as well as to the neutral countries.

If these shipments are made in ships carrying the flag of the United States, that fact ought, and will, no doubt, be accepted as a guaranty of faithful observance of these principles in making and throughout the shipment. Cargoes of dyestuffs and chemicals are allowed to come from Germany by way of Rotterdam, and cotton can be taken in return the same way, provided ships under the American flag perform the service. The trade of the nations at war with neutral countries has been seriously impaired. Our trade with those neutral countries ought to greatly increase. The contending nations, with no purpose of that kind, we grant, hit us a severe blow when they swept the seas of their own ships, because they were the carriers on which we hitherto relied. South America, which imports over $900,000,000 in value annually and pays for that with her products, finds many of her markets closed, and, like ourselves, is without the ships to transport her own products or bring to her people the goods they need.

PRIVATE INTERESTS WILL NOT OR CAN NOT SUPPLY THE WANT.

Of the 600,000 tons eligible, only 350,000 tons have come under the American register in response to our call under the act permitting American-owned vessels, wherever built, to take United States register for foreign service. Transportation facilities must be provided, and this whether there is immediate profit or loss on the procuring and employment of those facilities. We must have the means of moving our commerce freely and open new routes for ourselves and those to whom the old channels are closed, and we may feel assured the new channels will remain permanently and become mutually profitable to those using them.

We need the ships—

First, to serve American commerce for the benefit of the whole American people, in order that American farmers, manufacturers, and merchants may send their products and goods over the seas without interference by the demon of war.

Second, to prevent the exorbitant rates, which are approaching the prohibition point in many instances.

Third, to open up new routes, cultivate new markets, and establish our flag over the seas and carry it into every civilized port.

Never again should the United States be found dependent, in a great crisis or otherwise, upon any country or countries for the means of transporting their goods.

Peace or war, it is economic folly to continue permitting—yes, inviting—other countries to dictate the ocean freight rates, the insurance rates, and similar charges, which foreigners have hitherto exacted from our vast foreign commerce. That means putting it in the power of competitors to determine and absorb all profits or advantage from our foreign trade. If there are never to be any more wars by any country anywhere, we still must have a great merchant marine to save ourselves hundreds of millions of ocean freight charges.

We can never hope to be the great commercial Nation we can be if we occupy our present position, where wars among other powers deprive us of their merchant marine, which are the only bottoms we have had to do our carrying for us. Our neutrality is of no avail when other powers at war can not let us have their ships to freight our cargoes across the seas. Our vast foreign commerce in these circumstances is entirely at the mercy of the other powers.

Reviewing the matter somewhat, let me summarize the situation.

When war was declared in Europe England had about 5,000 vessels in the foreign trade, Germany had about 2,000, and the United States had only 6 vessels engaged in trans-Atlantic traffic. These 6 American vessels had a total gross tonnage of 70,362. Two vessels of the German merchant marine—the Vaterland and the Imperator—exceeded the entire American trans-Atlantic merchant marine by about 25,000 tons. Only one American line operated to South America, to wit, the United States & Brazil Steamship Co., from New York to Brazil. Recognizing the exigencies of the situation, Congress passed an amendment to the navigation laws whereby foreign-built vessels, when owned by American citizens or corporations, could register under the American flag for foreign trade. It was thought that this would bring relief, but it did not.

The President signed the bill on August 18, 1914. On November 14, about 90 days later, the Department of Commerce reports that 101 vessels have registered under the American flag. Their total gross tonnage was 350,000. About 20 of these are sailing vessels, 7 are less than 1,000 tons gross, 10 less than 2,000 tons, 11 less than 3,000, 9 less than 4,000, 18 less than 5,000, 13 less than 6,000, 17 less than 8,000. There are none over 8,000 tons, and few would be classed in size as first-class cargo boats.

It is not intended in any way to disparage the importance of the entry of these vessels to American registration, yet the value of the increase to American commerce should not be overestimated. While they are thrice welcome, they have not brought the necessary relief. The majority of these vessels are merely continuing the work they have heretofore done in handling freight from American ports. Of the 85 vessels admitted, 23 belong to the United Fruit Co.'s fleet, which continue to ply between the United States and Latin-American ports in the fruit trade; 11 are tankers of the Standard Oil Co. carrying that company's products; 10 belong to United States Steel, handling that company's business, or 44 out of the 85 ships, representing over 50 per cent of the total newly registered tonnage, have added nothing to the transportation facilities for American commerce. The value of the exchange from foreign to American flags by these companies should be fully appreciated and their actions commended, yet the conditions surrounding this transfer should be fully understood.

Of the 85 newly registered ships, less than half are engaged in the trans-Atlantic trade. Including the 6 vessels already under American register, the aggregate gross tonnage of all American vessels engaged in the trans-Atlantic trade is less than 200,000 gross tons. It will not represent one-third of the tonnage of many individual corporations of other nations. Of the German merchant marine, the Hamburg-American has 457 vessels, aggregating 1,361,819 gross tons, the Hamburg-South American, 59 vessels of 268,000 gross tons, and the North-German Lloyd, 168 vessels of 811,000 gross tons. Of the English fleet the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. has over a million gross tons. The British Indian Steam Navigation Co., 142 vessels of 660,000 tons; the Peninsula Oriental Steam Navigation Co., 70 vessels of 546,000 tons; Furniss, Withy & Co., 125 vessels of 440,000 gross tons. Besides there are many other smaller English companies, carrying the total gross tonnage of England's merchant marine into the millions. One French company has a gross tonnage of 390,000 tons—more than all the American trans-Atlantic merchant marine—and one Japanese corporation owns a fleet of 85 vessels of 368,000 gross tons. Any of these individual corporations will exceed in tonnage and equipment the entire American merchant marine engaged in the trans-Atlantic trade, including vessels recently registered.

The United States has annually paid nearly $300,000,000 to foreigners to carry our goods. This is a goodly sum in these days of foreign exchange balances, yet it means more than this when our money can not buy the means for transportation of our goods.

German and Austrian shipping have been driven from the sea; the English and French fleets have been considerably reduced by being pressed into Government service or by destruction. We are dependent upon the English and French vessels, the ships of neutral countries, that come to our shore, and the few American bottoms that are capable of ocean voyages. With the foreign vessels attending first to the needs of their own people and their commerce with other parts of the world, we must content ourselves with what we can get.

A shortage of ships is the consequence. Chartering prices have in some cases increased 400 per cent in 60 days, and to obtain ships flying the American flag is almost impossible at any price.

We therefore face the proposition of doing without a merchant marine or following our previous methods of private development, which has resulted in failure, or obtaining the desired result immediately by Government purchase and ownership. This will mean at least a foundation for an American merchant marine. It does not mean that private capital can not also invest. It has been suggested that private corporations may charter these vessels from the Government at an adequate rate, which would pay sufficient interest and depreciation charges, so as to protect the Government and enable it to yearly add to the fleet through this income.

The idea is not a new one. It is not paternalism. It is a commercial necessity, and will mean much to the future of America's foreign commerce. The value of this plan to the Nation in time of war is incalculable. The Government would have the right to use this merchant fleet as auxiliaries and transports, of which our Navy is much in need. England during the present war has commandeered over twelve hundred merchant vessels out of her fleet of five thousand, and one can readily realize our needs in the event of war with a first-class power, when our entire merchant marine consists of less than a hundred ships.

Independent of any question of the shortage of ships at present; without regard to whether ocean freights are exorbitant or not; even ignoring conditions brought on by or resulting from the war now waging in Europe, the fact is, the consensus of opinion is, and the quite universal conviction is, the United States needs greatly and, if their interests are considered at all, must have a merchant marine owned, controlled, and operated by this country. This need of ocean carriers under our flag has found expression in the platform pledges of all political parties since 1844. It has been promised the people continuously for over 50 years. The only difference among us has been as to how that should be accomplished. Tonnage taxes, discriminating duties, "free ships," subsidy of mail lines, all have been advocated and all tried.

We find ourselves in greater need and less equipped to-day, comparatively speaking, than at any period in our history. Indeed, at one period we surpassed all other countries in ocean carriers. Private enterprise will not supply the need. Foreign ships handle our foreign commerce. We are solely dependent on them, and without them our rich surplus of agricultural products, manufactures, and goods moving in trade must stop at our wharves. That this is a profitable business, the transporting of our freight and passengers to foreign ports, we have but to refer to the profits, as shown by declared dividends, those lines engaged in it have made. Enough is said when it appears that profit has been sufficient to attract $100,000,000 of American capital invested in those foreign lines, mainly in the International Mercantile Marine Co. When the Merchant Marine Commission in 1904 inquired whether they would bring their ships under the American flag if a "free-ship" law was favored, they replied they would not. The reason given was that under a foreign flag they had an advantage of cheap labor and, in some cases, of subsidies. We will never decrease wages in this country. The standards of our workmen as to wages and treatment in the shipyards, on the ships, or on the docks we will never consent to lower. Neither will we adopt a policy of subsidizing the ships, although that of itself would be unavailing. Consequently, there is no other alternative but for the Government to intervene in such way as proposed in this bill.

Quite apart, even, from considerations of national defense, we owe it to the people of this country, out of reasonable regard for their welfare and for the prosperity of the Nation, to establish our own means of reaching the market places of the world. Otherwise, foreign ships will dominate our commerce, take such toll as they will, form trusts and combinations to suit themselves, give every advantage to our competitors, keep our goods out of markets to which they could profitably go, by raising freight rates, discriminate against us and in favor of our foreign competitors, destroy our trade by wretched service, delays, charges, hindrances, sorry vessels, irregular sailings, incurring losses for shippers, economizing at our expense, having no regard for the interests of our exporters, prompted by the single purpose of making all they can with as little benefit as possible to us, operating in the interest of manufacturers and merchants and producers of Europe, and making it impossible for us to develop and extend our commerce and business relations in quarters most desirable.

Our self-interest, as well as our self-respect, demands that such a situation shall cease. The short-sighted course, neglect, and procrastination of the past must not be perpetuated. American ships are practically unknown in foreign lands. If our products are to continue to leave our shores any great length of time they will have to go with our flag. We have too much at stake in trusting our vast export business to foreign competitors. Every day millions of dollars' worth of our property go into merchantmen which are liable to be sunk by their foes.

Let me quote what Mr. GALLINGER very eloquently said in the Senate January 8, 1906:

FOR BROAD NATIONAL INTERESTS.

The plea of the Merchant Marine Commission, indorsed by the Committee on Commerce of this body, is not primarily for the shipowners or shipbuilders, or even for the seamen of this country, though all of these classes deserve at least as much consideration as is granted by our national laws to any other industrious and patriotic body of American citizens. The need of a large, active, and prosperous merchant fleet is primarily to increase our commerce, next to promote the national defense, and last of all to encourage shipbuilding and navigation. To deny adequate consideration to the merchant marine is to cheat the western or southern farmer of one of the surest hopes of an increased market for the products of his industry. It is to cheat the merchant and manufacturer of an indispensable ally in their fight for trade with their powerful European competitors.

Britain, France, and Germany, all make generous provision by national subvention for conveying not only their mails but their merchandise under their national flags to the distant neutral markets in which they and we are contending for the commercial mastery. Even the smaller powers—Spain, Italy, Austria, Portugal, and last, but not least, Japan—do the same thing. The United States alone leaves its merchants, manufacturers, and farmers at the edge of the ocean to get their goods over seas as best they may—by some accident of trade or the grace of their foreign rivals. If we lag in the world's markets, if we fall behind even in the Philippines, our own possessions, if we see Germany striding ahead of us in the Orient, and all Europe grasping South America by commercial bonds stronger than the Monroe doctrine, the fault is our own, and in our own hands lies the remedy.

I refresh the Senator's recollection by calling his attention to those splendid remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am delighted to have the Senator from Florida quote that part of a speech I made a good many years ago. I have repeated it a good many times since then, and I presume I may repeat it in the future. I have held to that view—that it was a national disgrace that we had not an adequate merchant marine. I have sounded the alarm, as the Senator has quoted to-day from the report of the Merchant Marine Commission, which I had the honor to write. I called attention to the fact that the time might arrive when we would not have any transportation for the products of our farms and our factories—the very condition that exists to-day.

While I differ very materially from the Senator in the view he takes of this question, I am glad to welcome him to the ranks of those of us who have labored in season and out of season to get some legislation that would benefit the American merchant marine, which has been very strenuously opposed by the Senator from Florida and his party.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the Senator's statements, among which, as I recollect, was the statement that the American people would not establish an American merchant marine through subsidies. If I was correct in my understanding of what the Senator said, I should like to ask him upon what he bases that statement. Is it based upon the action of Congress in the past or is that simply the Senator's opinion as to what the American people really want?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to say, first, to the Senator from New Hampshire that I trust the day is now dawning when he can realize what he has hoped for lo these many years.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a vain hope under this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Utah, I will say that I base that statement upon our experience in the past and upon whatever pronouncement the people of this country have been able to make upon the subject, and at least in view of the fact that they have been unwilling for all these years to adopt any such policy as the granting of a subsidy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for the last half hour I have been pinching myself to find out whether or not I was really asleep and dreaming. As I have listened to the Senator making his statements to-day, I have been wondering where I had heard them before. It seemed to me that I was back again in the year 1911 and that the Senator from New Hampshire had crossed to the other side of the Chamber and was speaking in the voice of the Senator from Florida.

I fully agree with all that the Senator has said of the necessity of an American merchant marine. I believe in a merchant marine, but I do not believe it will ever be established successfully as provided in this bill. If one is established, I say now that it will cost the American people three or four or five times as much as to pay a direct subsidy to the ships that would be owned by private parties.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I am not going to discuss the question of subsidies to-day; but I have been puzzled all through the years that have intervened since this question was up to be able to satisfy myself as to what a subsidy really is.

Under the statute that will be found now on the books, the ocean mail act of 1891, we are paying to American vessels something over a million dollars a year for the transportation of the mails. I have endeavored to get that amount slightly increased; and had it been slightly increased we would have had vessels in the over-seas trade to-day sufficient to take care of our commerce.

Mr. McAdoo, in a hearing before the House committee to which I shall call attention later on—because it does not amount to anything except that Mr. McAdoo occupied the time—admits that under this bill there will be a large loss to the people of the United States. He frankly says so. He is not sure, he says, that all the lines will be unremunerative, but he knows that most of them will be unremunerative. Now, we are going to tax the American people for the difference. It is a subsidy, just as much as it would be if we took the money out of the Treasury and established ocean mail lines by aiding private parties in conducting them. I can not for the life of me see the difference between them.

Mr. FLETCHER. In one case, Mr. President, you are simply taxing the American people for the benefit of a few people engaged in a particular business or enterprise. In the other case you are taxing the American people for all the people and all the business of the country—in other words, for themselves.

The question of subsidies is quite a large one and has been extensively discussed in the past. I might mention in that connection, however, that we are now paying $735,000 a year to one trans-Atlantic line for carrying our mails. We have paid subsidies to a Brazil line. Our experience in that connection has not been encouraging as far as building up a mercantile marine is concerned. We have generously contributed in that direction in the past. As the Senator has said, the act of 1891 provides for this enormous outlay for carrying the mails, far in excess of the actual cost, and it gives the preference to the American vessels over foreign vessels as to all second-class matter and third-class matter. Notwithstanding all we have paid out in that connection, however, we have not approached a solution of the problem of providing ships for doing our foreign trade, and I can see no hope that we can ever attain the object in that way. My claim is that for 50 years we have been unable to enlist sufficient interest on the part of private individuals so that they might build up a merchant marine in the foreign trade, although we have given them all these advantages, and even subsidies, in the past; we have discriminated in favor of them in our laws, particularly with reference to the carrying of mail; and yet we are no further advanced in that direction than we were 50 years ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida further yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish only to put in the RECORD at this point the fact that notwithstanding the subventions, as I call them, we are giving under the ocean mail act of 1891, the Government has an annual profit of over $2,000,000 in the transportation of our mails; and heretofore I have argued that that profit might well be used to further strengthen our American lines and to give us an over-seas commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. In this connection it is fair also to say that out of the nearly $3,000,000 we are now paying for carrying foreign mails more than one-half of it goes to foreign vessels.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; that is very true.

Mr. FLETCHER. The American vessels are not carrying half of the mails, in spite of the inducements we have offered.

Tonnage of the sailing and steam vessels of the merchant marine of the United States employed in foreign trade in 1887 was, gross tons, 989,412; in 1913, gross tons, 1,019,165, an increase of only 29,753 tons in 26 years, while our foreign commerce has increased by the hundred millions.

TRANSPORTS AND AUXILIARIES.

There is another phase of this question which brings to notice a very important factor to be seriously considered.

Independent of the commercial aspect, we must be impressed with the wisdom of a step like this now proposed for the purpose of providing, reasonably and economically, necessary means of national defense.

The General Board, Navy Department, by Admiral George Dewey, president of the General Board, made a report to the Secretary of the Navy, November 23, 1905, on the subject of "Mail steamships as naval auxiliaries." The General Staff, by Smith S. Leach, lieutenant colonel, General Staff, special committee, made a report to the Secretary of War, William H. Taft, December 22, 1905, on the subject of "The Army's need of merchant steamships as transports in war." These reports appear in Senate Document No. 225, Sixtieth Congress, first session.

So far as I am advised the desirability, if not the public necessity, of providing for the naval auxiliaries and the Army transports pointed out in these reports exists to-day in even fuller measure than when the reports were made.

We may feel like making that provision in a different way from that suggested then, if any specific method may be regarded as favored then, but surely there is no less demand for its being done.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

About one-half the cost of our ocean mail service, amounting to $3,565,328.89 annually, we pay to foreign ships. To some important countries no American ship ever goes. We are dependent entirely upon foreign ships for our mail, freight, and passenger communications with Brazil and Argentina, two great countries, whose friendly relations we enjoy and with whom we could just as well as not have valuable and extensive commercial relations many times greater than we now have. The exception is the one American line from New York to Brazil.

The same is true with other Republics of South America.

Likewise, from our Atlantic seaboard to the Orient we have no ship carrying mails or freight while foreign ship combines control the traffic entirely.

The fast-mail carriers constitute powerful agencies for trade and valuable factors, especially for the country whose flag they fly.

It is highly important that we extend and improve our ocean mail service, which we can only do by increasing facilities. Notwithstanding we pay $4 per mile to the European line, under American register, and the preference rates under the law whereby steamers of United States register not under contract receive 80 cents per pound for letters and post cards and 8 cents per pound for other articles, while steamers of foreign register and all sailing vessels receive about 35 cents per pound for letters and post cards and about 4½ cents per pound for other articles, "comparatively few American steamers are available for the dispatch of the mails, and the bulk of the service is performed by foreign steamers."

It is undisputed that American ships in foreign trade are wholly insufficient and inadequate. It ought to be conceded that it is most desirable and important that we increase the number of American merchantmen and train our citizens as officers and seamen to officer and man such ships. We are not willing to attempt this by giving public moneys for the support and maintenance of any private enterprise, even if that would be helpful in accomplishing the restoration of our prestige upon the seas. The grant of a subsidy to some special interest would be a discriminatory invasion of the Treasury the country would strongly disapprove, no matter if it resulted in more American ships, and properly so, on principle. It is admitted that it would be a great consummation to open up mail routes and give a better mail service to certain foreign countries. No one questions that reasonable foresight would dictate more ample provision for Army transports and Navy auxiliaries.

If these things be true, then it is simply a question of how to attain these desirable and, I venture to say, pressing ends.

It is fundamentally wrong and unjust to use the money of all the people in order that a few engaged in a particular business may get more profit.

The remedy, therefore, does not lie in granting subsidies, "subvention," nor "mail pay," nor "free ships," nor yet in "discriminating duties."

We now have laws providing for "free ships" and "discriminating duties," but they have brought but little addition to our foreign shipping facilities and clearly will not suffice to solve the problem, as we have seen.

The occasion has arisen when we are obliged to resort to other means. Circumstances not of our making at all have brought us face to face with the necessity of providing those means.

No country can prosper by living entirely to and within itself. In these days when cables steal out from our shores to the ports of all civilized countries; when communication can be flashed through the air like lightning a distance of 8,000 miles; when even not an unusual financial disturbance in one part of the world will have its effects here; when an earthquake or other disaster across the ocean is known around the world in a few hours; when, for instance, Dewey's achievement in Manila on Sunday morning was known in Washington the Saturday night before; when our surplus of farm produce and of mine and factory is in demand by other peoples, our neighbors, and it is in our power to take them from places where they are comparatively worthless to places where they have much value, we should exercise that power to our present advantage and for our future increasing benefit.

In doing that we bring to our people the things they want, to the advantage of those with whom we make exchange and to our own service; we broaden and widen our friendship by better acquaintance and clearer understandings; at the same time we help to shed the light of civilization and promote mightily the good of humanity.

We have the right and the power to purchase, build, lease, charter, and acquire the ships required to accomplish those ends. We may operate the ships or charter them to others, as may be determined to be best, under such conditions as will protect our people against excessive charges and prevent combines.

We owe it to ourselves to see that our own agents go to all countries wanting our goods, who will serve our interests rather than the interests of our competitors into whose hands we have hitherto intrusted our exports. The time has arrived for positive, definite, energetic action by the Government itself on behalf of all the people. This action should be prompt and effectual. The situation brooks of no delay. From all portions of the country and from all classes of our people the call is for immediate action by the Government. From every industry and every enterprise the call comes. From every individual who desires the prosperity of the country and the welfare of its citizens, the call is made. I believe there is patriotism enough, wisdom sufficient, and statesmanship ample to answer that call.

Mr. President, I desire, without reading, to attach to and make a part of my remarks a few letters and clippings which I have received.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, permission will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Chamber of Commerce, successor to Pensacola Commercial Association.]

PENSACOLA, FLA., December 19, 1914.

Senator D. U. FLETCHER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Last night I talked with the president of the Pensacola Tar & Turpentine Co., a corporation which produces turpentine, tar, pitch, and various by-products. "We have several thousand barrels of tar on our yards," he said. "We can sell every barrel at a good price in England and on the Continent. The ship brokers will offer us no space, and promise us none definitely. The last turpentine we shipped cost $4 a barrel to deliver in England. This is 8 cents a gallon, four times the normal rate. For the last tar shipped to England we paid $1.50 a barrel freight, deck load, and took our own risk, as the insurance asked was about 15 per cent. We know by heart now the cable-code words that mean 'Can not quote,' 'Unable to get ships.'"

The freight situation has almost killed the export lumber and timber business to England and Europe, the principal markets. The merchants have inquiries and could get business if they could get bottoms to carry it. If they are lucky enough to get a ship, they must pay double or triple freight and 1½ to 2 per cent extra war-risk insurance. They must prepay the freight also.

Ships can be had for cotton and grain, but at three and four times the normal rate. A ship broker told me yesterday he was asked $3.25 a hundredweight freight to Germany. Rates are, by far, the highest known in the experience of ship brokers here.

The remedy for this situation is more neutral ships. Two conditions are the cause of our present European ocean-freight ills:

Decrease in number of vessels available—estimated at 30 to 40 per cent.

Uncertainty as to maintenance of the present supply, which may be reduced by destruction of vessels or their withdrawal from the uses of commerce for war purposes.

More ships would help remedy the first condition; neutral ships the second.

Very truly, yours, C. E. DOBSON, President.

NORTH AND SOUTH AMERICAN TRADING CO.,
Louisville, Ky., December 16, 1914.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My not replying before this day to your esteemed letter of the 27th of November is due to my absence from Louisville.

I wish to thank you for the pamphlets which you have also sent me.

If you refer to the printed testimony given before the Merchant Marine Committee in the investigation of the foreign ship trust, you will find much information.

I appeared before said committee on January 7, 1913. Mr. Lowry, of the Pan American Mail—the New Orleans line—also testified at some length, giving much valuable information along practical and technical lines.

The sworn testimony of shippers and shipping experts before the Alexander committee indisputably proves that a conspiracy existed on the part of foreign shipping combinations to control America's over-sea commerce, so as to wring annual tribute from it and to checkmate the too ambitious efforts of the United States in expanding her foreign commerce.

The hearings before the committee show that there existed not a single American ship under the Stars and Stripes in the carrying trade between the United States, Brazil, and Argentina, and that all other lines known as American lines—operating ships under foreign flags—had certain routes allotted to them in the trade with the west coast of South and Central America.

These so-called American lines were members of the so-called conference lines, and all dominated by the foreign shipping trust, whose headquarters were London and Germany.

The investigation showed that the tariffs or freight rates from United States ports to foreign marts, notably to those of South America, were dictated from Europe, and were made so as to conserve the bulk of the flow of commerce from South America to Europe and vice versa.

The dividends declared by these foreign lines are sufficient denials of the statements that the American lines can't compete with European lines on a legitimate basis.

All that American lines need is protection against rebating and combinations or monopolies aimed at driving independent American lines off the seas.

To expand our commerce legitimately and to maintain and protect it, we need American lines under the American flag, operated by Americans, and protected by America.

I am inclosing copies of letters which treat of this subject, which I think point out the disadvantages under which our Nation labors and suggest the things we must do to emancipate ourselves from English and European economic domination.

I note that foreign sinister influences are still at work trying to obstruct and defeat the measures now before Congress that would aid in the upbuilding of our merchant shipping. The fact that America might again resume her former place among the nations as a maritime power and carry her own trade is of greater concern to the nations of Europe—England, especially—than the present European struggle.

Europe's war might be over in a year or two and these European nations will then turn loose their shipping to resume the ocean trade routes and reconquer the markets that they temporarily lost, but an American merchant marine would be an obstacle to their ambitions.

Hoping to have the honor of again hearing from you, I beg to remain,

Very respectfully,

SIDNEY STORY.

[From the New York Press, December 19, 1914.]

OUR SHIPPING FOLLY.

On how slender a thread hangs to-day the foreign commerce of this country, though we are at peace with all the world, though we are abundantly supplied with surplus products that all the peoples of the earth, those at peace and those at war, need and ask for, may be appreciated by anybody who reflects upon the possibilities suggested by the raid of the flying squadron of German cruisers against the Yorkshire coast.

Not that anything like that could imperil the safety of, or even do more than negligible damage to, Great Britain. Not that such a thing could hasten or retard the end of the war in favor of one side or the other.

It is not that the German cruisers came flying out against the Yorkshire coast, but that they came out with all the seas before them.

We are doing a vast export business. For the most part our many cargoes of products are going out in English bottoms. Almost between the rising and the setting of the sun of every day we are selling abroad by the tens of millions, and we are making profits by the millions. And almost all of this depends upon the British merchantmen that are free to carry our cargoes over all the waters of the earth so long as German battleships, cruisers, and commerce destroyers are not ranging those waters in fleets, as the solitary Emden ranged in the East to the terror of merchant shipping, and as the Karlsruhe has similarly ranged in the South Atlantic waters of the West.

A score of Emdens scattered over the seas might all be doomed to be run down sooner or later, but in the meanwhile they might very well sweep the oceans clear of the British merchant marine, as England's war fleet have swept the oceans clear of Germany's merchant marine.

And that would be the end of our foreign commerce. We should have the wheat, the corn, the cotton, the thousand and one supplies now going out every day in heavily freighted ships; the peoples of the world, neutrals and belligerents, would be begging for our neutral products, but we could not ship them, for, though a neutral nation, we should lack neutral ships.

Neutral commerce is helpless to transport itself in anything but neutral ships if sea powers at war against each other can both maintain fleets on the high seas.

We ought to have our own neutral ships, just as we have our own neutral articles of commerce, and then all the fleets of commerce of all the belligerents might vanish off the seas, and we could trade with no hindrance. Not only could we sail our commerce into the ports of neutrals, but when there was no contraband goods in the cargoes we could sail them past the forts and under the guns into all the ports of all the powers at war.

And we, aiming to be the greatest trading Nation on earth, to all intents and purposes, haven't a ship. This is an economic folly, a national shame.

FARMERS LOSE THROUGH DISCRIMINATION BY BIG STEAMSHIP INTERESTS—FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ENCOURAGE MERCHANT MARINE FACTOR AGAINST EXPORTERS, SAYS W. N. WHITE.

American farmers and exporters are losing millions of dollars as a direct result of discrimination against this country by steamship interests. That, in substance, is the assertion made to Congress and other branches and departments of the Government by W. N. White, of W. N. White & Co., of this city. Discrimination is made possible by the failure of the United States Government to encourage the American merchant marine.

"This year's crop of apples should realize for the growers about $250,000,000," White estimates. "It will not pay them $50,000,000, and unless something is done soon 650,000 acres of orchards in the far West will be put out of business.

"Thousands of growers who set out from 10 to 20 acre orchards of apples, believing that would enable them and their families to have a competency for life, will be ruined, and not only lose their savings but their homes as well.

"Similar losses will be suffered by growers of other fruits."

Discrimination, White says, takes the form of high ocean freight rates. Comparisons of rates were submitted to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives.

EXTORTIONATE RATES.

The chairman of that committee, JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER, refers to the ocean freight rates now being charged to ports in Europe as "extortionate."

"If you wish to ship oranges to Europe," White explains, "the ocean freight rate is 50 cents a box. The same sized box of oranges can be shipped from Jaffa, by way of Alexandria, Egypt, to Liverpool for 42 cents. That voyage ordinarily requires 23 days. The rate from Spain to Liverpool is only 18 cents a box.

"The rate for apples to Norway and Sweden—a trip of about 12 days—is $1.50 and $2 a barrel. To South America—a trip of 23 days—the rate is $4.25 a barrel.

"It costs $1.10 a box to send apples from New York to South America, the time required being from 21 to 25 days. On the other hand, freight charges on box apples from Tasmania to England—time in transit, 42 days—is 66 cents, and the same rate is charged from Australia to England—time, 35 days.

"The reason those rates are so much cheaper than ours is they have plenty of ships.

"The Furness Line, from Montreal to South Africa—35 days' run—charges 72 cents a box and $2.38 a barrel. Those vessels are subsidized by the Canadian Government. There are no steamships direct from the United States to South Africa. The American must ship first to England and then transship to South Africa, which costs more than double the freight charged from Montreal."

From these and other illustrations White concludes that this country can not hope to extend its commerce properly without the aid of a large American merchant marine.

SURPLUS FOR EUROPE.

"Plenty of people in America say we will send our surplus to Europe. 'They must have it.' They might take the surplus if the rate of freight were the same as charged from other ports, and the freight would be the same were it not for the steamship combination.

"The steamship agents here say the freight rates are fixed in Europe, but that is a subterfuge. It is a well-known fact that the agents for various companies meet in the Produce Exchange in New York between the hours of 1 and 3 p. m. and there compare their offerings and bookings made for steamers a week in advance. If their ships are well laden, no reductions in freight rates are made, and if they have demands for more space than they can supply they increase the rates."

Millions of dollars of products are being wasted to-day because of inability of farmers to reach foreign markets. In Florida, for instance, many owners of orchards are permitting the fruits to rot on the trees because they can see no profit in trying to sell them.

White says there are 8,000,000 boxes of oranges in Florida and almost 18,000,000 boxes in California. When the season commenced recently Florida oranges were selling at an average of $1.50 a box gross. From that must be deducted 56 cents freight, 15 cents for the box, 13 cents for paper and packing, and about 13 cents more for cost of picking and hauling to the warehouse.

"After Christmas plenty of oranges will be sold for freight and expenses alone."

With adequate shipping facilities and consequent lower ocean freight rates the surplus fruit could be shipped profitably to European, South African, and South American markets.

CHANCE FOR ONIONS.

"This year there is a large crop of onions in the United States," says White, "and with reasonable freight rates quite a quantity could be exported to England and Scotland. The first shipments that were sent paid 30 shillings a ton freight. Now the rate is 40 shillings.

"Every year quantities of onions are shipped here from Egypt on through bills of lading, and the freight charge on these shipments is only 30 shillings a ton. The time of passage from Egypt to Liverpool is 16 days, and from Liverpool to New York 10 days, which includes the time consumed in unloading and reloading on the Liverpool piers.

"The rate from Liverpool to New York is 20 shillings, but to ship the same goods from New York to Liverpool the charge is 40 shillings. The consequence of this unjust rate is that onions must be sacrificed.

"I can not think that the Ship Trust owns America. To fail to encourage an American merchant marine is to encourage the Ship Trust. If the Canadian Government can afford subsidies at the rate of more than $2,000,000 in a year in order to protect its farmers, surely the United States should increase its shipping facilities by subsidies or in some other way. Otherwise, thousands of acres of land will cease to be cultivated."

[From the Washington Times, December 26, 1914.]

HIGH SHIPPING RATES.

The first cargo of cotton to leave an American port direct for Germany since the war opened put out from Galveston yesterday, consisting of 6,500 bales, going to Bremen. Under the agreement reached a few weeks ago it will go without opposition or blockade right into its port through the British fleet, for cotton is not contraband when carried in neutral bottoms.

Entirely aside from the importance of resuming the export of cotton to Germany interest attaches to this shipment because of the freight rate on it. The owners of the cotton will pay, despite that it is not a war risk, $3 per 100 pounds, whereas a year ago the charge would have been just about 10 per cent of that rate.

The reason is said to be the scarcity of shipping to handle the business of the world. The German merchant marine has been driven off the seas, and it was highly important as a transportation factor. Many ships have been captured and destroyed. Probably a very much larger number yet have been commandeered for service as transports, auxiliaries of all kinds, colliers, and the like.

Yet all this can hardly justify such a huge advance in ocean freights as is being demanded. Back of all the war-time conditions there is the fact that absolutely no stability governs ocean carriage charges. Rates run all the way from zero—the carriage of heavy cargo free in order to get its use as ballast—to figures which even in normal times are often excessive. The whole subject has been the theme of numerous complaints and is now under investigation by the Treasury Department. David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, made a detailed and most impressive statement of these conditions to a congressional committee a few months ago. The Senate has called for information from the administrative departments of the Government, and it appears there is hope for some effective measures to better conditions.

The measures are needed. Whether or no, the Government will find itself landed right in the business of building or buying ships, and perhaps operating them on Government account for commercial purposes, unless some measure of order can be brought out of the chaos of water-transportation conditions.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, December 22, 1914.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 21st instant, you are informed as follows:

The reason why more is paid to foreign steamers than to American steamers for the conveyance of the mails is that comparatively few American steamers are available for the dispatch of the mails, and that the bulk of the service is performed by foreign steamers. For instance, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, 979,002 pounds of letters and post cards and 7,827,593 pounds of other articles were dispatched by American steamers, and 2,554,066 pounds of letters and post cards and 14,014,849 pounds of other articles were dispatched by foreign steamers.

The only steamship lines under formal contract with the department for the conveyance of mails to foreign countries are those operating under the act of March 3, 1891. These lines are paid on the basis of the distance traveled on the outward trips, and are as follows: Red D Line, from New York to Venezuela via Porto Rico and Curacao, once every two weeks in vessels of the third class, compensation $1 a mile. Red D Line, from New York to Venezuela via Porto Rico and Curacao, once every two weeks in vessels of the fourth class, compensation 66⅔ cents a mile. New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co., from New York to Vera Cruz, Mexico, via Havana and Progreso, once a week in vessels of the third class, compensation $1 a mile. The International Mercantile Marine Co., from New York to Southampton via Plymouth and Cherbourg, once a week in vessels of the first class, compensation $4 a mile. Oceanic Steamship Co., from San Francisco to Sydney, Australia, via Honolulu and Pago Pago, once every four weeks in vessels of the second class, compensation $2 a mile.

Steamers other than those operating under the act of 1891 are compensated on the basis of the actual weights of the mails conveyed, the rates at present allowed being 80 cents a pound for letters and post cards and 8 cents a pound for other articles to steamers of American register, and 4 francs a kilogram (about 35 cents a pound) for letters and post cards and 50 centimes a kilogram (about 4½ cents a pound) for other articles to steamers of foreign register.

The tables on pages 103 to 106, inclusive, of the report of this office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, show in detail the name of each line used for the conveyance of the mails for that year, the weight of the mails conveyed by each line, and the amount of the compensation paid to each line. Said tables indicate also whether the steamers of each line are of American or foreign register.

Yours, very truly,

JOSEPH STEWART,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, December 18, 1914.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your request by telephone to be furnished with the amounts paid to American steamers and foreign steamers, respectively, for the conveyance of United States mails to foreign countries for each fiscal year from 1909 to 1914, inclusive, I have the honor to furnish below a statement in confirmation of the data furnished to you by the superintendent of foreign mails early this afternoon by telephone.

Amount paid.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 29, 1914.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your letter of the 26th instant, quoting a statement in Senate Document 425, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and your inquiries based on that document, I call your attention to the following facts:

1. From 1893 until September, 1913, no American steamships were running regularly between ports of the United States and Brazil, but about September, 1913, the United States & Brazil Steamship Line was organized, making use of ships of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., with sailings of about once a month or once in three weeks from New York to Rio de Janeiro and other Brazilian ports. I inclose an advertisement of the line from the New York Journal of Commerce of December 28. Since the passage of the ship registry act of August 18, 1914, a number of steamers have taken out American registers for South American trade, principally ships owned by the United States Steel Products Co.

2. From 1893 up to date, so far as I am aware, there has been no regular American steamship service to Argentina.

3. The American people have been dependent on foreign steamships for their mail, freight, and passenger communications with Brazil and Argentina. This condition continued from 1893 to date, except as indicated above.

4. The following steamers ply regularly between our Pacific seaboard and the Orient:

	Gross tons.
Minnesota	20,718
Manchuria	13,639
Mongolia	13,639
Siberia	11,284
Korea	11,276
China	5,060

(NOTE.—Army transports, of course, do a considerable Government business between Pacific coast ports and Honolulu and the Philippines.)

5. I know of no American steamships plying regularly between our Atlantic seaboard and the Orient.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

THE SHIPPING SITUATION.

The shipping interests of the United States—the builders and operators of steamships—are paralyzed on account of the uncertainty that hangs over their business. They do not know whether or not the Government is to enter the field as their competitor. They do not know whether or not foreign-built ships will be permitted to enter the coastwise trade. They do not know whether or not the Government will protect them against unjustified aggression by belligerents.

Ocean freight rates have jumped skyward since the beginning of the war. German and Austrian vessels have been laid up; British vessels have been largely commandeered by the Government; Italian vessels are engaged in Government service; French vessels are almost wholly employed by the French Government. Hence the world's neutral commerce, and much of the commerce with belligerents, is carried on with a shortage of ships just at a moment when the demand for supplies is most urgent. Vessels are earning five times as much as before the war, and even when the war is ended the prospect is good for an enormous ocean commerce on account of the destruction and consumption of foodstuffs and supplies of all kinds.

Is it to be supposed that Americans are not wide awake to this opportunity? The shipping men and shipbuilders are not asleep. They would build ships and put them into this immensely profitable business if they knew they were safe. But they dare not order vessels to be contructed in American shipyards if cheaper foreign ships are to be admitted into the coastwise trade. They dare not build ships for the foreign trade while they are threatened with the competition of the Government itself. The best they can do is to meet the huge demands of Europe by chartering foreign vessels and sending them out with American cargoes. They are doing a big business and making a lot of money, but the traffic is not bringing about the construction of a single vessel in American yards.

One of the most urgent questions before Congress is the Government shipping bill. It needs quick and thorough discussion. If it is a good plan it should be put through without delay. If it is unwise it should be promptly rejected in order that individual American enterprise may go ahead and build ships.

USING GERMANY'S EXCUSE.

As a rule the London papers whose opinions of the Wilson note have been quoted by the Associated Press do not claim that Great Britain has been acting within her rights in interfering with American shipping on the high seas, but justify it on the ground of necessity. On precisely the same ground Germany justified her invasion of Belgium. She promised to go through Belgium with as little damage as possible and pay the proper indemnity, just as Great Britain promises to hold American vessels as short a time as possible and pay the proper indemnity. But Belgium as a neutral refused to listen to the German plea of necessity. She would have ceased to be neutral if she had listened, and we should refuse to listen to the British plea of necessity. If we surrender our rights in order that Great Britain and her allies may be able to whip Germany and Austria, our neutrality is a sham. If we are neutral, we are not concerned with Great Britain's necessities. Individuals in this country sympathize with the allies and others with the two Teutonic nations, but the United States as a Nation does not give a continental which side whips. That is what neutrality means. But the United States as a Nation falls contemptibly short of its duty if it does not protect its citizens in their rights, and the fact that it has not done so has already cost the South alone hundreds of millions of dollars, not in the cargoes seized, but because the fear of seizure has paralyzed our commerce.

This damage will never be paid. Great Britain may pay damages amounting to a million or two dollars for the detention of ships, and in some cases to the confiscation of cargoes, but the hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of products that Europe would take from us at a good price if we would deliver them and that have been withheld through fear of capture by the British—this inflicts enormous damage for which payment will not be made.

If Americans are scared away from shipping cotton to Germany throughout the war, this of itself would reduce or rather has reduced the price at least $10 per bale—a loss to American growers of $160,000,000, and a gain to British spinners of $50,000,000 on the 5,000,000 bales they buy. It is announced that cotton is not contraband, but it is also known that ships containing noncontraband cargoes have been seized, detained, and searched for contraband. This is a thing that our Government should not tolerate, and not one other American ship would be seized if it were known that our Government would not tolerate it.

GREAT BRITAIN HAS LOST SHIPS WORTH $11,400,000—54 VESSELS WITH CARGOES VALUED AT $18,800,000 CAPTURED OR DESTROYED BY THE ENEMY.

LONDON, December 18.

During the first four months of the war 54 British foreign-going ships, valued at $11,400,000, with cargoes worth $18,800,000, were captured or destroyed by the enemy. These are the official figures of the Liverpool and London War Risks Insurance Association.

According to these figures the losses for four months were 1.23 per cent of the total number of vessels, 1.49 per cent of their total value, and 0.94 per cent of the total value of cargoes carried.

This would indicate that vessels could have been insured at a rate of 0.37 per cent monthly, and their cargoes at a rate of 0.94. The rates fixed by the Government at the beginning of the war were 0.72 for vessels and 1.24 for cargoes. This shows a snug margin of profit for underwriters.

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN, December 18.

Total losses to Scandinavian shipping through mine disasters were as follows up to mid-December:

Sweden, 8 ships and 60 lives; Denmark, 6 vessels and 6 lives; Norway, 5 vessels and 6 lives. To this total must also be added Holland, with 3 vessels and 15 lives. The total financial loss for the 22 ships and their cargoes will reach nearly $10,000,000.

328 SANFORD AVENUE,
Flushing, N. Y., December 31, 1914.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My father, brother, and myself having been large owners in, and practical and successful managers of, United States sailing seagoing ships half a century ago, I am naturally much interested in the condition, suddenly discovered by our Congressmen, that we have very few strictly United States seagoing vessels.

For 10 years past I have written letters to our several Presidents explaining how, in the nature of things, there can be no revival of what our "rocking-chair sailors" please to call the "merchant marine."

From early times until, say, 1865, United States seagoing vessels were built in the United States of wood and propelled by canvas. When iron steam-propelled vessels gradually came into use, wooden sailing vessels went out, and will never be revived. In early days our seagoing vessels were of small tonnage; the crews were mostly United States citizens; and the captain was usually a part owner of the vessel under his command.

This has all been superseded by gigantic steam vessels owned by powerful foreign corporations, utterly inefficient seamen, as in the Titanic case, and the captains, largely of foreign birth, having no personal ownership in the vessel, merely hired to run the vessel as quickly as possible from one port to another, just as with the engine driver on a railroad train.

Millions of foreign capital is invested in our trans-Atlantic steam lines, and the excessive cost of a first-class steel ocean steamer built in this country offers no attraction to domestic capital.

Young men, members of well-to-do families, often "went to sea," something now unheard of except in naval circles. Appreciating from sad experience the foregoing conditions, I have proposed to Washington officials a practical method for securing at once a number of seagoing steam vessels to serve two purposes, viz, as colliers, absolutely necessary if our present or enlarged Navy is to be of any value; secondly, these vessels, say, of 10,000 tons each with a speed of 15 knots, to be plainly fitted for passengers and freight, and to be chartered to established, responsible United States firms engaged in shipping. Charters to provide for the return of the vessels when needed for Government service. Charterers to keep vessels and machinery in order at their own expense, and to maintain on each vessel, free of expense to the United States, a United States naval and engineer officer with full access at all times to all parts of vessels.

The charter money should more than pay interest on amount invested in vessels, and if eventually sold to charterers or other United States citizens, proceeds could be used in building other similar vessels. By this means lines could be established through the Panama Canal to South American ports by capable shipping merchants, who would not have enough available capital to build such vessels, and eventually, if profitable, private capital would be invested. Heretofore large amounts of the public money has been used in aid of railroads, irrigation, and sundry agricultural requirements, but none, as I can remember, for increase of United States shipping, although the United States has an immense extent of available seacoast with safe harbors. In my time the Swedes, French, Italians, and Germans have gradually but thoroughly supplanted us in ocean transportation.

If the foregoing suggestion does not meet approval, then the only hope for recovering our seagoing ascendancy is to abrogate all sumptuary maritime laws and allow our citizens to purchase vessels wherever built, with all the advantages given to vessels built in United States. Citizens of all other maritime nations have this privilege.

Silver-tongued orators armed with statistics may claim that we can build and operate first-class vessels in this country as cheaply as any other nation, but I and hundreds of other men educated as shipping merchants, but obliged to sell out and find other occupations, are living (or dead) refutations of this claim.

Trusting that your efforts to restore our ocean trade may be successful, and wishing you success in the new year, I remain,
Yours, truly,
ALFRED NELSON.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Florida if he will not consent to have the bill laid aside temporarily in order to take up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill? I ask unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am willing to have that done, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 20241, known as the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the request of the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have requested unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum. There are Senators absent who are interested in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. Let the Secretary call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. STERLING, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. WORKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. OLIVER. My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is absent from the Senate to-day on account of illness.

Mr. THOMAS, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. MYERS, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. BRADY, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. STONE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand unanimous consent has been given to take up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent has been given to lay aside the shipping bill. Unanimous consent has not been given to take up the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up House bill 20241, known as the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I object, Mr. President. Let the bill be taken up on motion.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to take up House bill 20241.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 20241) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the committee amendments will be considered first. The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Collecting internal revenue," on page 2, line 22, after the date "1915," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$180,000," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, including the same objects specified under this head in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 3, after line 13, to insert:

Improving Fourteenth Street: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to increase the width of roadway of Fourteenth Street NW., between F Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, to 70 feet, and to replace the present granite block pavement on said roadway with asphalt or asphalt block, chargeable to the appropriation for "Repairs to streets, avenues, and alleys," for the fiscal year 1915.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $554,371.24.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that paragraph may go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the request of the Senator from Utah will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Agriculture," subhead "Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 5, line 22, after the word "means," to strike out "in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and," so as to make the clause read:

For the emergency caused by the infectious nature and continued spread of the destructive disease of citrous trees known as citrus canker, by conducting such investigations of the nature and means of communication of the disease, and by applying such methods of eradication or control of the disease as may in his judgment be necessary, $35,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay such expense and employ such persons and means to cooperate with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations of growers, or individuals as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my attention was just called to this amendment. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina I do not believe the amendment is in the shape intended by the committee. I call his attention to the fact that if the amendment is adopted as proposed now, it will be impossible to employ persons or means either in the city of Washington or elsewhere. The amendment ought to read:

To pay such expense and employ such persons and means elsewhere than at the city of Washington.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what the law is. I understand the words "in the city of Washington" were put in in order that they might establish a bureau in the city of Washington. So if we do not include those words they are bound to use the fund outside the city of Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not quite catch my meaning. I am in full sympathy with the Senator in striking out the words "in the city of Washington," because I do not believe persons affected by this appropriation ought to be employed in this city, but we go further in the amendment and strike out the words "and elsewhere," so that if all the words proposed are stricken out persons can not be employed in the city of Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Utah allow me a moment? If you strike out the words as proposed by the committee the Secretary of Agriculture will be able to employ these persons and spend the money anywhere he pleases. It becomes perfectly general then.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me it leaves it perfectly general. When the words "in the city of Washington and elsewhere" are stricken out it does not necessarily exclude the employment elsewhere, but it strikes out the word "elsewhere" in the connection where the words "the city of Washington" are used.

Mr. SMOOT. As I understood the committee, it wanted to limit the expenditure of the appropriation to places other than the city of Washington.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was the voice of the committee. I have no doubt about that; and this language does that very thing. It gives the discretion to the Secretary of Agriculture to employ such persons and means elsewhere and to cooperate with the authorities of the States concerned.

Mr. LODGE. That would not prevent him from using them in the city of Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. The whole appropriation could be used in the city of Washington.

Mr. LODGE. It would leave his power perfectly unlimited.

Mr. OVERMAN. The act of 1882 required the city of Washington to be specified for employment here.

Mr. LODGE. If I may make a suggestion, if you want to make it safe to obtain your purpose, you should say "and employ such persons and means except in the city of Washington."

Mr. SMOOT. Let me call attention to another portion of the bill. For instance, the very first item, "for the Civil Service Commission," reads:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, $6,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The language is there. I do not know that it does any harm.

Mr. SMOOT. As I am opposed to the provision anyway, I am perfectly satisfied to let it go; but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House called my attention to it. I do not care whether the amendment is made or not.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is a matter the conference can adjust; but here is the law of 1882, which provides that—

No civil officer, clerk, draftsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employee shall hereafter be employed at the seat of government in any executive department or subordinate bureau or office thereof, or be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses, or for any specific or general purpose, unless—such employment is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law granting the appropriation.

This is the general law—

So unless Congress specifically provides for using it in Washington it can not be used in Washington under the general law.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say as to that. My attention had not been called to it before, but I think that with these words stricken out they can spend this appropriation anywhere they wish, including the city of Washington.

Mr. OVERMAN. Except in Washington City under the general law.

Mr. SMOOT. Again, I want to say that this is an urgent deficiency bill. We are appropriating here $35,000 that is not a deficiency at all. The Government of the United States is not obligated for the payment of one cent of it. The appropriation belongs in an Agricultural appropriation bill, if it goes into any bill at all. The reason given by the Senators from Forida, in the first place, is that the money must be appropriated immediately, if the Government is going to appropriate any at all, so that the work can be begun at once. I have no doubt the citrus canker is a very dangerous disease to citrus trees. I have no doubt about that, nor would I object to the appropriation if it came in the regular way; but I do not believe that we ought to make on an urgent deficiency appropriation bill an appropriation which is not a deficiency in any sense of the word. The Government is not obligated, as I said, for one cent of the amount. This is simply giving $35,000 to assist the people of Florida to eradicate, if possible, the disease known as the citrus canker.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is scarcely fair to say that this appropriation is confined to taking care of the situation in Florida. The citrous canker was brought from Japan, it is supposed, into Mexico, and from Mexico into Texas, and from Texas it has gone along the Gulf. The States particularly suffering now are Louisiana, Mississippi, a portion of Alabama, and Florida, States where citrus fruits are grown, and those States are now confronted with the worst menace that has ever befallen the industry. Very largely Florida is interested. The trees which seem to be worst stricken by it are the grapefruit trees, and over $200,000,000 have been invested by the people of Florida in grapefruit alone.

It is a disease which is very infectious, and the department says the only treatment for it is absolute eradication. They have not been able to find whether it is a fungous growth or whether it is of germ origin or what it is. The only thing they know is that it is destructive of the tree and the fruit, and the method of disposing of it at present is to set fire to the tree and burn it up. The growers of Florida raised a large fund, and they are cooperating with the Government. The Government is investigating the question as to how to treat the disease, its origin, its nature, and its effects.

This appropriation is in direct line with the activities of the Government under the Bureau of Plant Industry. It is an emergency in that the time for eradicating the disease must be in the months of January, February, and March. Three months of the year covers the time when this action must be taken if we are going to eradicate the disease.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was called out of the Chamber, and I did not hear the statement made about this item. Does this disease affect peach trees?

Mr. FLETCHER. It does not. It affects only citrus fruit trees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course it is not in any proper sense an urgent deficiency, but apparently it is a pretty serious matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. It certainly is urgent. If it is not a deficiency, it is urgent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have only one added observation to make about it, and that is I fear it is a subsidy.

Mr. FLETCHER. This item of $35,000 is a very small item and the department ought to have it in hand. A part of it, I take, has already been expended. I think it comes more or less within the technical requirements of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from New Hampshire. Indeed, I know that the department sent agents down there, and they have been for some weeks investigating the disease and doing what they could to ascertain its location and the best methods of treating it.

I have not any doubt that a portion of the money has already been spent, and in view of that phase of it it is a deficiency. It certainly is urgent. The disease is not confined entirely to Florida. The department says:

Though the disease has been under investigation in the States of Florida, Alabama, and Louisiana during the past year, no means of prevention or control through the use of fungicides or other spray applications has yet been developed, the treatments found effective for most fungous diseases of plants having failed to control citrus canker.

The only method of control which appeared to be effective is the complete eradication of the disease from those regions most likely to suffer severely by its continuous presence through the destruction by burning of all infected nursery stock and of all infected trees in citrous groves.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. How long has this insect or microbe or whatever it is been known? When was it first discovered in Florida, and to what extent has it been eradicated?

Mr. FLETCHER. They have found that it was probably brought into the State through some nursery stock imported about a year ago.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It has been brought there very recently?

Mr. FLETCHER. Very recently. They have traced it to certain nursery stock, and wherever that stock was sold throughout the States this disease has developed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has it spread over the State very largely, or is it sporadic?

Mr. FLETCHER. To a very great extent. It covers the entire citrous belt of the State. I can not say that all portions of the citrous-growing sections are affected.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it very disastrous?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is absolutely disastrous and very infectious. Anything that goes through it—a cow passing through a grove has been found to carry the disease. Even an ice wagon passing from one grove to another has carried it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Have they discovered the germ?

Mr. FLETCHER. They have not yet found it. That is one thing the department are studying in connection with the State authorities, but they have not yet found what its origin is or the nature of the disease.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Nor what it is?

Mr. FLETCHER. No. The only thing that they know is that they must absolutely burn every tree or plant or shrub on which they find the disease.

The department says:

The citrus growers of Florida, working in cooperation with the State experiment station and nursery inspection service, have organized a campaign of eradication, which has been vigorously prosecuted during the past four months with a fair prospect of success if it can be adequately prosecuted throughout all the infected areas within that State during the winter months, when the trees are dormant and the spread of the disease is much less rapid than during the active growing season, which begins about midwinter and continues through spring and summer.

I will ask to have this report go in the RECORD. I will not read it all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission will be granted, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Memorandum for item to be included in the urgent deficiency bill for the Bureau of Plant Industry.]

PROPOSED WORDING.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the infectious nature and the continued spread of the destructive disease of citrus trees known as citrus canker, by conducting such investigations of the nature and means of communication of the disease and by applying such methods of eradication or control of the disease as may, in his judgment, be necessary, $35,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to pay such expenses and employ such persons and means, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and to cooperate with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations of growers or individuals, as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purpose.

EXPLANATION.

Within the past few weeks the attention of this department has been called to the destructive epidemic of citrus canker, a recently introduced disease, in the grapefruit districts of Florida and the Gulf States. Circumstantial evidence indicates that the disease was introduced into Texas from Japan about 1911, but because of its close resemblance to citrus scab, which had for some time been known in that State, it was not at the time recognized as a distinct disease, nor was its destructive nature discovered until a few months ago.

The experience of the past year has demonstrated that it is highly infectious to practically all kinds of citrus trees, affecting roots, trunks, old limbs, small twigs, leaves, and fruit. Although the diseased trees may continue to live in a very unthrifty and feeble condition, the effect of the disease is to promptly destroy the marketability of the fruit and therefore the earning capacity of the tree. It has been found to be especially destructive upon grapefruit, limes, and lemons, and to be spread from tree to tree through contact with cultivators, vehicles, the harness used on horses in the groves, and by the pruning tools, clothing, and hands of the workmen performing the ordinary cultural and harvesting operations.

Though the disease has been under investigation in the States of Florida, Alabama, and Louisiana during the past year no means of prevention or control through the use of fungicides or other spray applications has yet been developed, the treatments found effective for most fungous diseases of plants having failed to control citrus canker.

The only method of control which appears to be effective is the complete eradication of the disease from those regions most likely to suffer severely by its continued presence, through the destruction by burning of all infected nursery stock and of all infected trees in citrus groves.

From the commercial and financial standpoints the greatest danger is to the grapefruit industry of Florida. The best information available through commercial sources indicates that the annual shipments of grapefruit from that State now exceed 3,000,000 boxes. The grapefruit plantings in Florida are valued at approximately $75,000,000. The entire citrus industry of the State, involving investments amounting to approximately $200,000,000, will be jeopardized unless the disease is brought promptly under control. The citrus industries of the other Gulf States are also endangered, although less so than those of Florida, because of the smaller percentage of grapefruit trees in those States and the relatively larger proportion of Satsuma oranges in these plantings, this variety being much less seriously damaged by the canker than most of the citrus fruits.

The citrus growers of Florida, working in cooperation with the State Experiment Station and Nursery Inspection Service, have organized a campaign of eradication which has been vigorously prosecuted during the past four months with a fair prospect of success if it can be adequately prosecuted throughout all the infected areas within that State during the winter months when the trees are dormant and the spread of the disease is much less rapid than during the active growing season, which begins about midwinter and continues through spring and summer. Unfortunately the State authorities are without funds to meet the expenses of systematic inspection of the groves and the destruction of diseased trees by burning. The State legislature does not meet until April, and such action as it may take in the matter will not be in time to meet the emergency. The situation is particularly urgent in that it has recently been discovered that several hundred shipments of young trees from a nursery now known to have been infected were made to planters at various points in the State before the destructive character of the disease was discovered. The successful prosecution of the eradication campaign necessitates the immediate following up and location of all of the stock contained in these shipments and the inspection of the adjacent groves before the next general infection period occurs.

In the absence of appropriations available to meet the expenses of the systematic inspection and eradication work, the citrus growers have during the past few weeks raised approximately $30,000 by subscription for this purpose. This amount is inadequate for the accomplishment of the work within the period in which it must be done, and in view of the menace to the important interests at stake in Florida and other Gulf States, it creates an exigency which this department should be authorized to meet.

It is therefore recommended that Congress be requested to include in the urgent deficiency bill an item appropriating $35,000 to enable the department to cooperate with the State authorities and fruit-growers associations in Florida and other Gulf States, with a view to accomplishing the eradication of the disease from the regions in which it has proved destructive, during the next few months. It is estimated that this amount will be required for the employment of competent men in cooperation with the State authorities and growers' organizations, and the meeting of the necessary field expenses. No reimbursement of the value of trees destroyed in the eradication work is contemplated. To effectively accomplish this purpose the funds should be available by January 1, since to defer the work until later in the season would render impossible the eradication of the disease from the present comparatively restricted centers of infection and permit of its spread to an extent that would probably place it beyond control.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the report it is shown that the time for taking care of the disease is between the 1st of January and the 1st of April, and unless the work is performed then enormous damage will be done.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the Senator how does it affect the trees. Does it kill the tree or cause the fruit to drop?

Mr. FLETCHER. It gradually saps the vitality of the tree and also affects injuriously the fruit.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe the Senator was not quite correct in saying that it does not affect the orange crop.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not understand the Senator. I thought he asked about peaches.

Mr. GALLINGER. I meant to ask about oranges, if I said peaches.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator said peaches. It does affect all the citrus varieties. I do not think it affects peaches or apples.

Mr. GALLINGER. The testimony shows that the value of the grapefruit industry of Florida is approximately $75,000,000. That is a very great industry; and, really, from reading the testimony it does seem that this is a very serious matter and that the Government might well come to the aid of the people of the States where the industry is affected and render some help. It seems the people of Florida themselves have raised $30,000,000 for this purpose. I hope the provision in the bill will remain.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to say that as a member of the committee I had first the impression that it would be best for this appropriation to be made in the agricultural appropriation bill, but knowing that that bill has not yet passed the House of Representatives, and that likely it will not be submitted to the Senate for some time, and this being a matter of so urgent a nature, I felt that it ought to be included in this bill.

It is a meritorious appropriation. It is necessary that it should be available soon, because it takes time to send men to Florida to visit the various groves and pick out the trees that it is necessary to burn. Consequently, we are even now late in providing an appropriation of this nature.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to say a few words. I do not care to argue the proposition. It will be noticed that in the paragraph preceding this item an appropriation is made for the purchase and destruction of animals having the foot-and-mouth disease. In the same way as animals now living are hereafter to be killed and paid for, it might be said that that is not a deficiency.

This disease shows itself in Florida about July or August. The appropriation will not be used to pay for any property destroyed. Property of very great value has already been destroyed. They do not dare to cut the tree down and then burn it up, but they spread oil upon it and burn it where it stands.

I do not believe this matter would have been brought to the attention of Congress if it had not been for the fact that the Legislature of Florida does not meet until April, and, as stated by my colleague, if the Government is to render any assistance at all it must be done between now and that time.

Furthermore, I can see that a certain part of the responsibility for the spread of this disease can be charged directly to the Government. It was by no act of the citrus growers of Florida that this pest, whatever it is, came there. It was brought from Japan into Mexico and from Mexico into Texas, and then by the sale of nursery stock it got into the State of Florida. In that way the Government is more to blame than the State for allowing it to get there.

The Senator from Louisiana stated to me since this amendment has been under discussion that some nursery stock—a thousand trees or a thousand dollars' worth—had been shipped from Florida to Louisiana and burned there, and the nurseryman who gave the order, who was doing a very large business, has practically been made a bankrupt because practically all his nursery has been burned in order to get rid of this disease.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator know whether this citrus canker exists in Texas now?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, yes; it exists in Texas. It was from Texas that within a very recent time it came to Florida. Of course, it had to come before July last, because it was spread over the groves in July.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], I desire to say that of the $2,500,000 appropriated to the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Animal Industry, for the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, $2,000,000 is a deficiency that has already been spent, and the additional $500,000 is for the purpose of continuing the investigation and for the purchase and destruction of animals affected by the disease. That is quite different from the appropriation of $35,000 for citrus fruit trees. The expenditure of the money and also the appropriation is under the act of February 27, 1906, and as provided in that act the loss of human life was involved. I would not want the Senator's statement to go uncorrected, because I think there is a difference between the appropriation of $2,500,000 for the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease and the appropriation of $35,000 for the destruction of the citrus canker.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator if the half million dollars that has not been spent is not a deficiency at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. It is true it is not a deficiency, but I will say to the Senator that the Senate has already passed a bill appropriating not $500,000 but $1,000,000 for this same purpose.

Mr. BRYAN. That has been used to pay for the stock that has been destroyed.

Mr. SMOOT. And for the investigation.

Mr. BRYAN. This small appropriation to which the Senator objects can only be used for the purpose of scientific investigation and advice by the experts of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation does not only apply to the destruction of animals that may have the foot-and-mouth disease, but it is also for the purpose of carrying on the work of investigation as to whether they have the foot-and-mouth disease and where located.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand. There is this distinction, however, a part of the money will be used for the payment of property, and under this provision no money will be used except for the purpose of investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the payment for property comes under the present law. The Government is required to pay for the destruction of animals that may be suffering from foot-and-mouth disease. In the case of every animal that is destroyed the law compels the Government to pay for it.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in regard to this item. My State is very much interested in the citrus industry. It is growing very rapidly in the State. I received a letter just a few days ago from a prominent citrus grower saying, if I recollect it correctly, that a thousand dollar shipment of citrus trees from Florida into the city of Hammond, State of Louisiana, had been seized by the agriculture authorities of the State and burned because the citrus canker was found among the trees. He asked me to watch this matter as closely as possible, and thought it was very important to this young and growing industry of the State that the disease should be eradicated.

I sincerely hope the appropriation will be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, and read the next paragraph, as follows:

FOREST SERVICE.

For "General expenses, Forest Service," including the same objects specified under this head in the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $349,243.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, while I shall make no effort to amend this paragraph, the committee having disagreed with me, I want to give the Senate some facts in regard to this appropriation, and not only as to this department of the Government but also as to others.

The fiscal year 1914 began July 1, 1914, and will end June 30 of this year. An estimate came for an appropriation for the Forest Service. We gave them $3,000,000. In addition to that we gave them $250,000 for fighting fires. They have spent in six months $671,000 for fighting fires. I am told by Senators from Western States that they have had no unusual fires out there. The department says they have; but here is a department estimating $250,000, the Senate gives them everything they ask for, and in less than six months they have spent $671,000. At 25 cents an hour, $2 a day, it would take 25,000 men to fight fires for a month. I want to say that the departments come here with their estimates. They will make estimates some time for a large sum and we cut them down. Then they get around it by going and spending the money anyway and coming in here and asking us for a deficiency. This department had $3,000,000. They had $250,000 given them to spend for a year. They spent it in six months, then drew on the $3,000,000 for $72,000, and then for $300,000 more, and then they come here within six months and ask us to make an appropriation of $671,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. What would be the sum total of expenditures of this fiscal year for that department according to their estimates and expenses?

Mr. OVERMAN. If they go on in this way, there is no telling. They will again come back with a deficiency. For six months they have spent $671,000 for fighting fires, when I am told by Senators from Western States that there have been actually no unusual fires out there this year. I am unable to guess; I do not know how much they will spend during the next six months. They already have had $3,000,000 of appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] I will state that we appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, $3,243,096. Included in that amount was $150,000 for fighting and preventing fires. Then, under miscellaneous items, in that bill there was added another $100,000 for the purpose of fighting and preventing forest fires. That would make the appropriations for that one bureau a little over $3,300,000. I do not know whether we shall have in the regular deficiency bill an additional amount asked for; but if what has been appropriated and what is carried in this bill is expended, it will amount to over three and a half million dollars for the Forestry Bureau.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. That seems a large sum of money. Was there any hearing showing whether or not it had been properly expended or whether there had been any waste of the money, or anything of that kind?

Mr. OVERMAN. The only thing set out in the hearings, Mr. President, is that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would ask if there is a proposition pending to strike out a part of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. No. I am merely calling attention to the matter. The money has been spent, and we ought to know how it has been spent. Something ought to be done with reference to it. I want to say to the Senator that I was in favor of striking out the provision and take the amount out of the balance of the $3,000,000 appropriation which they have.

The Senator from Idaho asked me a question as to the hearings. The officers of the bureau stated that they have had some fires in Oregon, a few in Montana, and some in Washington. I am told by the Senators from those States that they have had no unusual fires out there. They say the money is spent chiefly in the employment of men, to whom 25 cents an hour is paid. That was expended entirely in fighting forest fires. Twenty-five cents an hour would be $2 a day. The Senator can calculate how many men they have had employed—over 25,000 men.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that this debate is out of order unless there is some proposition pending. The reading of the bill can not be stopped to make speeches, unless there is something before the Senate to which the debate can be directed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I realize that the Chair is quite correct, and I therefore move, in line 5, on page 6, to strike out the appropriation "$349,243."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion will leave merely the text without the appropriation.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is the way I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to be heard on that for just a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the acting chairman of the committee suggests that there were no unusual fires in the national forests last year.

Mr. OVERMAN. There were no unusual fires there.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He suggests that there were no unusual fires there, as he has been informed by Senators from that section. Since the bill was reported, Mr. President, I have taken it upon myself to ascertain what the number of fires was and in what particular States they occurred for which this money was expended. I may say—and this is authenticated by the records—that the fires during the past year, 1914, were more disastrous than any we have ever had, except those in 1910, in areas covered and in the number of fires which occurred. Those fires were distributed as follows:

In the first district, embracing Montana, northern Idaho, and North Dakota, there were 1,975 of such fires; in district No. 2, including Colorado, eastern Wyoming, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota, and Michigan, there were 279; in district No. 3, embracing Arizona and New Mexico, there were 509; in district No. 4, embracing Utah, Nevada, southern Idaho, and western Wyoming, there were 327; in district No. 5, California, there were 1,468; in district No. 6, embracing Oregon and Washington, there were 1,239; in district No. 7, embracing Arkansas, Florida, and the White Mountains—the Appalachian region—there were 315, such fires amounting in all to 6,112.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Does the report give any idea of the extent of the fires—how aggravated they were or how large?

Mr. OVERMAN. I can answer that question.

Mr. BORAH. I have seen some fires that it would not cost over 25 cents to put out.

Mr. OVERMAN. The question is answered in the report. Of the entire six thousand and odd fires which swept the forests, 81 per cent were handled without difficulty and with very small loss; 81 per cent of them did not cover over 10 acres.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I want to say that that very statement justifies all the expenditures that have been made for the protection of our national forests. In 1910 there was a much larger area burned over, and the fires were more destructive, because the department did not then have the appliances necessary to fight such fires. I call attention to the fact as showing the increased efficiency of the service, which has been brought about by the expenditure of these moneys. I call attention to the further fact, Mr. President, that the expenditures for the Forestry Department have been gradually going down, notwithstanding the statement of some of my colleagues.

Now, as showing the increased efficiency of the organization over that of former years may be stated the results: In the Colville forest in 1910, with 62 fires, 155,200 acres were burned, with a cost for fire fighting of $18,000; in 1914, with 103 fires, and a drier season, the total area burned was 7,653 acres, with a cost for fire fighting of $15,900. Still again, in the Tahoe forest in 1910 there were 84 fires, and such a serious situation developed that the United States troops were called upon for aid. This year—and I call especial attention to this—there were 223 fires handled by the organization without help, and the loss was less.

In the Trinity Forest, where there were 51 fires in 1910, which burned over 23,192 acres, in 1914 53 fires burned over only 459 acres. In California, where there were quite a number of fires this year as compared with 1910, the average acreage per fire in 1910 was 653, while in 1914 it was but 37 acres; while the average for fires in the timber, excluding brush fires, was this year only 15 acres. In other words, the areas of the fires are each year diminishing because of the increased efficiency of the service. This increased efficiency has been brought about by the appropriation of money necessary to properly combat the fires.

I call attention to another thing, Mr. President. My distinguished colleague on the committee, who has this bill in charge, always, properly too, fights these so-called deficiency appropriations; but I call attention to the fact that in 1911 there was a million dollars included in the appropriation bill for the purpose of fighting forest fires, and yet none of it was expended. The next year they concluded in the next appropriation bill that inasmuch as no part of that had been expended they would make the appropriation very much less, and they appropriated but $200,000. The next year they reduced it to $100,000, and this year the Agricultural appropriation bill, which is pending before the House of Representatives, has eliminated this protection in the national forests from the bill altogether. So, under the law as it now stands the department has authority to increase these deficiencies, and if they are going to protect the property that belongs to the people of this whole country they must create these deficiencies against which Senators are now protesting here so loudly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that the RECORD may be straight, I wish to say that the million dollars, of which the Senator from Oregon speaks, for 1911, was a deficiency which was caused by fires in 1910. Does the Senator not remember that we had during the year 1910 extensive fires, which were attended by great loss of life in Idaho and also in a number of other Western States?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask the Senator from Utah to look at the records for 1910, wherein he will find that there was a million dollars included in the Agricultural appropriation bill, but it was not used at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite positive that the deficiency appropriation bill in 1911 carried an appropriation of a million dollars for the purpose of paying for the fighting of fires of 1910, in which year the country had the most disastrous fires which had occurred for very many years. I call attention to the statement of Mr. Graves, Chief Forester. He says:

Mr. GRAVES. The situation was that we had in the northwestern States and on the Pacific slope an unusual drought. We had a very long dry season, equal in severity, so far as forest-fire hazard was concerned, to that of 1910.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that the bad year?

Mr. GRAVES. Yes, sir; that was the bad year, when we had to come to Congress for a deficiency of about $1,000,000. In some parts of the Northwest, particularly in Oregon and Washington, the drought was a long one, there being in Washington and Oregon 74 days without rain.

Therefore, I think the statement which the Senator made should at least be qualified, because in the year 1910, not only did they spend all of the money which was appropriated, but they came to the Congress of the United States and asked for a deficiency of a million dollars.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, my memory is not in accord with the Senator's upon that point, though he may be correct. My understanding of it is different, but it is a matter of easy verification by an examination of the appropriation bills. What I am getting at, however, is the fact that the appropriations for the purpose of protecting the national domain have been growing less each year, because the moneys which have been expended in times past have gone to increase the efficiency of the fire-fighting force.

Within the last four years great strides have been made in equipping the forests and in the organization of the force, as will be seen from the following figures: In the first place, during this time there have been added 1,368 miles of road, 9,617 miles of trail, 12,000 miles of telephone, 300 new fully equipped lookout stations, 695 headquarters buildings, and many other improvements. The forests have had a great increase of equipment in the way of tools and tool caches, portable telephones, tents, and so forth, as well as in transportation facilities.

Mr. President, all of these things for which these moneys have been expended in times past make it easier and cheaper for the Government to control the situation in the future. If the policy advocated by some Senators is carried out and we are absolutely to abandon the forests to destruction by the elements, then we might as well stop at one time as at another; but I, for one, Mr. President, will never consent to the elimination of items from the appropriation bills which go to protect this property which belongs to the people of the whole country.

I do not belong to the school of those who feel that the public domain should be opened up to the indiscriminate taking of everybody who comes along. I have just as good cause to complain as anybody, if there is cause to complain, because at least one-fifth of the area of my State, and probably more, is embraced within national forests; but, Mr. President, if I had it within my power to-morrow to release those lands for the purpose of settlement or acquisition by the public, I would not take such action, for the simple reason that until the homestead law and other statutes under which the public domain may be acquired shall have been amended the lands will be taken up in the future just as they have been taken up in the past.

Now, in my own State hundreds of thousands of acres of land belong to the Weyerhaeusers which ought to belong to the people and ought to be included within the reserves. Not only that, but the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. owns immense tracts of land that ought to belong to the people. Not only does the Northern Pacific own much land formerly a part of the public domain, but the Southern Pacific also owns great tracts of it.

Some of these lands have been acquired by great corporations in questionable ways. Some of them have been acquired through the efforts of dummy entrymen. School-teachers, schoolboys, and girls in department stores have been hired to go into the West—it is true of my State, and I think I can safely say the same statement is true of other States—and have entered lands, and as soon as title was acquired by going before the proper authorities and swearing falsely the lands have been turned over to great timber syndicates and railroad companies. That is what would happen if these lands were now open to entry.

I know my distinguished friend from Idaho differs very essentially from me as to this proposition. I go with him this far: I say that all the land in the Northwest within forest reserves which is more valuable for agricultural purposes than for timber or mineral purposes ought to be opened up to the public; but in my State, at least—and I think it is pretty generally true of the Senator's State—there is very little land included within the forest reserves that is more valuable for agricultural than for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has not yet made any statement of fact with which I disagree. If the Senator will assist me in eliminating from the forest reserves those lands which are agricultural, I will raise no complaint whatever about retaining in the reserves the forest lands. I am only complaining of the withholding of agricultural lands while hundreds of good people are waiting to make them into farms.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the Senator and I have pretty generally worked together along that line. The only difference I have had with the Senator usually is that the Senator has always shown an indisposition, as it has seemed to me, to expend the necessary sums of money for the protection of the great forests that exist in his State and in mine.

Mr. President, the forests ought to be preserved, and the record here, the hearings before the House on this very bill, will show that the properties of the Government were protected with a less expenditure this year than they ever were before, and that the small amount which is now sought to be appropriated for the protection of the forests is a mere bagatelle in comparison with the value of that which was in danger of being destroyed, but which was not destroyed simply because the Forestry Bureau acted with efficiency and with zeal in the protection of the property of the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator is through—I do not want to interrupt if he is not——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not believe I could say anything more to enlighten the Senate. I have no disposition to speak on the subject at any length, but I do want to protest against the parsimony that is displayed by some Senators, who, for the purpose of saving an appropriation of $350,000 in round numbers, would incur the risk of losing millions of dollars in property which belongs to the people of this whole country.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that we can not possibly save it, because it has already been spent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And property has been saved, too.

Mr. SMOOT. I say we can not save the appropriation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I disagree very little with the Senator from Oregon, except as to possibly some of his conclusions and some of his generalizations. A few years ago I was driving across a portion of my State in company with a gentleman from Ohio, and when we were in the midst of a vast area of country I said to him, "You are now in a forest reserve." Apparently he challenged my veracity, and said, "It can not be possible that this is a forest reserve. Where is the forest?" There was not a tree in sight; over the vast plains the god of nature had never been able to grow a tree in all the years of the past. Some of it was as good agricultural land as any other part of the State of Idaho.

Mr. President, I have never voted against what I believed to be a sufficient amount of money to really protect our forest reserves. No one can be more concerned in the protection of the forests than those who live near the forests, because the destruction of the forests by fire is calculated to injure or destroy all that we have on the outside of the forests, and therefore I am thoroughly in favor of any appropriation, and am willing to make it liberal, for the protection of the forests. But, Mr. President, we discuss here the protection of forests which do not exist; that is to say, we are guarding and surveillancing and superintending thousands and thousands of acres upon which there are no forests. These lands ought not to be there, to be watched over and policed at the people's expense; they ought to be producing wheat and hay and fruit and the other things which people stand in so much need of.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will not the Senator admit that within the past two or three years, as rapidly as the department has been able to do so, they have released from the reserves land that did not actually grow timber?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; they have been releasing some lands; they have released them very slowly, but if they will keep that up I will not complain about their being a little slow. However, Mr. President, when we began to demand the release of such lands the Senator will recall that we were met with the statement that there were no agricultural lands to be released, and it has only been by persistent presentation of the question time and time again that we have been able to secure action in releasing agricultural lands.

Mr. President, there are counties in my State which are practically covered by forest reserves; and it becomes a question of whether or not they can exist unless the land can properly be settled by homesteaders and people can be induced to live there who are willing to acquire title and to pay taxes to help sustain the Government, and therefore we are persistently asking that the agricultural lands be excluded from the forest reserves. When you shall have done so you will limit and reduce very largely indeed the amount of expenditures which are now being made. For that we contend, and for nothing more.

Let me call the Senator's attention to another fact. The Senator stated that these lands belong to the people, that these forests belong to the people. I agree with that proposition thoroughly; but I find, as I said upon the floor of the Senate a day or two ago, that within the last five years 500,000 of those same people, who were as good citizens as we had in this country, have gone into a foreign country and taken the oath of allegiance to a foreign Government in order to get lands upon which to build homes, while we have thousands and millions of acres tied up in forest reserves. I do not think I am opposing the interests of the people when I insist upon the right of dedicating our agricultural lands to those who desire to plant homes upon them. The best service I can give the people is to help the people get homes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator a question at this point?

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. The trouble is, Mr. President, that the word "people" is used in such an intangible, abstract way that it does not do anyone any good to get a result for the benefit of the people, because there is nobody to be helped. I want to come down to the concrete, individual application of the law to the man who wants a home.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator is it not true that the inducement which has caused a great many American citizens to go into Saskatchewan, Alberta, and other sections of Canada has been the fact that they find there virgin territory and a condition precisely similar to that which pertained in our section of the country 40 years ago, when people from the eastern section of the United States went out West and settled upon land. They would go there in spite of the law. They have left our borders simply because there is virgin land to be taken in British Columbia while there is probably none to be taken in our country, even if the forest reserves were opened up to settlement.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes, Mr. President; they went there because there were virgin lands in Canada and because the virgin land in our territory had been covered into forest reserves. I agree with the Senator thoroughly that that is the reason why they went to Canada, and for the other reason that when they found a piece of land in Canada they could secure title to it sometime within the lifetime of a single individual. Canada, as the Senator knows, has a law which permits a homesteader to acquire title in three years, while until within the last two years our law required him to live upon the land for five years. That provision of the Canadian law, of course, induced considerable emigration to Canada, together with the fact that the land there was undoubtedly available. While there was also land in our country, it was not available.

Mr. President, I moved to strike out this item because I wanted more information regarding it. I presume that there is some portion of the proposed appropriation, perhaps all of it, for aught I know, that is justly in the bill. I have no desire to deny that which is needed, but I observe the same extravagance here as marks the whole of our Government expenditures. While we are remembering that these are the "people's" forests, that this is also the "people's" money we are spending.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I presume the Senator from Idaho made the motion in order to discuss this question.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before the Senator withdraws the motion to strike out, I desire to say a few words in answer to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who said that I was in the habit of fighting deficiency appropriations. That is true, Mr. President. In 1906 the piling up of deficiencies by the departments grew into a scandal. Congress would make appropriations based upon the estimates of the departments, but, notwithstanding the appropriations thus made, they took the liberty—and this is true of all the departments; it is not confined to one—of spending all the money they wanted to spend here and there and everywhere, and then coming in with a deficiency.

The practice became such a scandal and an outrage that Congress itself passed a law designed to correct the evil. That law is now on the statute books, although I think it is not observed. I will read it into the RECORD right here in the hope that some of the departments will take notice of it and realize what the law is; perhaps they have forgotten about it. I think I am doing my duty when I examine all deficiency items to see whether or not they were properly incurred. Like the Senator from Idaho in this instance I have not enough evidence to justify me in moving to strike out the item; I can not tell much about it; but I know that they have spent in six months $600,000, when their estimate—and we gave them every cent they estimated for—was $250,000. Here is the provision which Congress enacted in 1906:

SEC. 3679. No executive department or other Government establishment of the United States shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law. Nor shall any department or any officer of the Government accept voluntary service for the Government or employ personal service in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property.

It is upon that idea, I suppose, that they have spent this $600,000.

All appropriations made for contingent expenses or other general purposes, except appropriations made in fulfillment of contract obligations expressly authorized by law, or for objects required or authorized by law without reference to the amounts annually appropriated therefor, shall, on or before the beginning of each fiscal year, be so apportioned by monthly or other allotments as to prevent expenditures in one portion of the year which may necessitate deficiency or additional appropriations to complete the service of the fiscal year for which said appropriations are made; and all such apportionments shall be adhered to and shall not be waived or modified except upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance which could not be anticipated at the time of making such apportionment, but this provision shall not apply to the contingent appropriations of the Senate or House of Representatives; and in case said apportionments are waived or modified as herein provided, the same shall be waived or modified in writing by the head of such executive department or other Government establishment having control of the expenditure, and the reasons therefor shall be fully set forth in each particular case and communicated to Congress in connection with estimates for any additional appropriations required on account thereof. Any person violating any provision of this section shall be summarily removed from office and may also be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than one month.

Here is the statute; here is the law; and I want to give notice to the departments that I intend to examine critically all these deficiency items, because the law says that such expenditures shall not be incurred, and that the departments shall not spend more money than is appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho withdraw the amendment proposed by him?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President, the law referred to by the Senator from North Carolina is really a very subtle piece of humor, so far as that is concerned.

I wish to say just one word more before I withdraw the amendment. The Senator from Oregon spoke about settlers acquiring homes, making homesteads, and so forth, upon these lands. I want to say, for fear I may be considered as misrepresenting the situation, that there is a provision in the law by which a man can go in a forest reserve and secure a homestead within a forest reserve; but in the application of that law the conditions are so onerous that settlers have practically ceased to avail themselves of it, and for this reason: A man goes into a forest reserve and makes application to file upon a piece of land. The application is considered, and may be granted or may not be; or the forestry officials may permit him to experiment for a time to see whether or not he can make a success of farming on that particular piece of ground, say, in one or two years; and if so, at the end of that time they will grant him a title. So in the application of the law it is practically a dead letter, for the reason that no man, unless he has a large bank account, can afford to go upon these lands and experiment at the discretion of some one in the department as to whether or not he can make a home.

What we ought to have is a law defining what the man shall do; and after he shall have complied with the terms of the law the power ought not to reside in any man to deny him his title or to his homestead; but when it is left to the discretion of the department, and the man is a man of limited means, he can not cope with the situation, and the result is that they have practically ceased to acquire homesteads under this law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should not say anything concerning this matter except for the statements which have been made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I differ from him so thoroughly with respect to those matters that I want to state the facts with reference to the expenditures for the Forest Service.

The Forestry Service had an appropriation for 1912 of $5,217,000. The receipts were $2,109,000. I leave out the odd dollars and odd cents. The loss to the Government was $3,108,000. Now, when you consider that of the amount which the Government received 35 per cent was paid over to the State it leaves a deficit, so far as the United States Treasury is concerned, of $3,800,000. In other words, the Government is getting and putting into its own Treasury from grazing rentals and sales of timber only $1 out of every $3 that it expends. The appropriation for 1913 was $5,092,111, and the expenditures were $2,391,920, which leaves a deficit, so far as the United States is concerned, in actual expenditures above receipts of $2,700,000. Considering the fact that out of these receipts the Government pays 35 per cent to the State—25 per cent for school purposes and 10 per cent for road purposes—the result is that it left a deficit, so far as the United States was concerned, of $3,490,000. The appropriation we made last fall was even greater than these appropriations.

When it comes to the appropriation made here it shows that even the figures I have quoted do not show the total loss to the Government, because we are now adding $349,000 to the loss of the United States. I am one of those who believe that when we have a law we ought to comply with it and try to carry out its provisions. I am not here to move to strike out this appropriation, nor am I here to cripple the service, because it was a necessary expenditure under existing law; but I want to call the attention of the Senate—and this seems to be a good opportunity—to the fact that we are making appropriations for the Forestry Service year after year and expending practically $3 to $1 of net receipts to the Government.

Mr. President, that was the same experience this Government had with the leasing system of the early part of the last century as applied to the lead mines in Territories. That was just exactly the result, namely, an expenditure upon the part of the Government of $4 for every dollar it collected in royalty. These broad forest reserves have been spread over our States in a manner that makes it almost impossible for counties to maintain their schools and their county governments, because the reserved lands are not liable to taxation, notwithstanding State, county, and school governments must be maintained over them. In my State they have already withdrawn coal lands which the Government of the United States estimates to be worth $500,000,000. Is it possible that the Commonwealth of Colorado can afford to let lands of the value of $500,000,000 remain without taxation for the support of State, county, and school governments? Is that right?

The trouble with all these leasing propositions—and the forest-reserve system is a leasing proposition—is that they are attacking the very sovereignty of the State, because if there is one principle that is recognized above another it is that a State has the right to impose taxes upon every foot of territory within its borders. Whenever you deny that right, you deny to the State the right of existence, and you deny the means of support to the State government itself. No one approves fraudulent land entries, and the Government has the means of preventing the same.

I want to say, with respect to the forest reserves in my State, that 40 per cent of them are upon lands that are above timber line, where nothing but bushes exists. Not only that, but in my State 30 per cent of the same is what is called scrub timber. Consequently there is only 30 per cent left that is merchantable timber. The result is that these reserves ought to be cut down to the 30 per cent of good timber. That is what ought to be done. The present Secretary of Agriculture has cut them down to some extent. I think the forest reserves in my State have been reduced from 16,000,000 acres to 14,500,000 acres, but two-thirds of that area ought not to receive the attention of the Government. These large reserves embarrass and prevent the development of the country, discourage miners from going in there, because there is always a supervision which the miner objects to, and because of the rules and regulations made by the department with respect to having somebody pass upon whether the mine is a pay mine or is likely to become a paying mine, and making the title to the mine dependent upon such inspection after the miner has performed his $500 worth of work.

This appropriation is to repay a past expenditure. I believe that when a necessity arises in order to prevent fire the expenditure ought to be reimbursed. We ought sometimes to go to the fundamentals, and restrict these forest reserves to something that is within the bounds of reason, so that we will not have gigantic forest reserves equal to the area of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island combined in my own State.

Mr. President, while I believe in this appropriation, and voted for it in the Committee on Appropriations, in view of the statement which was made by the Senator from Oregon, I wish to voice my protest against the manner in which this system has been carried on. When we consider reforestation it is absolutely absurd, so far as my State is concerned. This very Agricultural Department has reported that a pine tree grown at an altitude of 7,500 feet in my State takes 200 years to develop to a thickness of 19.6 inches.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator a question—possibly I understand the matter without having the Senator enlighten me—as to the method adopted in establishing these forest reserves. Is it an arbitrary method on the part of the officials of the Government to select a section of country which they say shall become a forest reserve?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that their opinion prevails?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They generally send out a commission, and they take in broad areas. In my State 16,000,000 acres was taken in. It has been reduced to 14,500,000 acres, but that is equal to two or three small States. The fact that it takes in all character of lands, including 65 per cent of the mineral belt of my State, has impaired our mineral development to such an extent that in 1900 we had in the State of Colorado 41,000 metalliferous miners, and the last census—1910—showed that we had but 19,000. The miners will not prospect under those conditions, and thereby a development of the country is retarded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will further ask the Senator as to the feeling that exists in the State of Colorado on this question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, it exists to a very strong extent. The Democratic platforms and the Republican platforms for years have both, in most vigorous terms, assaulted the entire policy. We are willing to have forest reserves, but we want genuine forest reserves. This thing of talking about reforestation is absurd in my State. It may be that in some portions of the United States it might be proper, but where it takes 200 years to grow a tree it is absurd to talk about reforestation. As the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] says, we want forests with trees in them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is entirely right on that point. I am a great friend of forestry and of the Forest Service in a general way, but I ask the Senator the question because I have absorbed the belief, from hearing these debates so eloquently presented by Senators from the great States of the West, that there ought to be some remedy for the existing conditions. Can the Senator suggest any?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I suggest that these forest reserves be cut down to what is forest land; and if that is done, 70 per cent would be eliminated in my State.

Mr. GALLINGER. What would be the modus operandi to accomplish that result?

Mr. SHAFROTH. To limit the reserve. You could do it either by a bill or direct that it be cut down, or it could be done by Executive order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely; but if it was not done by Executive order, then I assume it would require legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; it would require legislation if it were not done by Executive order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are strenuous efforts being made, or is consideration being given to the propriety of legislation touching this matter?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, Mr. President, instead of that we have under consideration in committees of this Congress the fastening upon us of a leasing system not only of all of the coal lands, but also of the phosphate lands, the asphaltum lands, and the water-power sites, requiring the payment of royalties to the Government of the United States, to be divided between the Government and the States after they have been turned into the reclamation fund and have been repaid by the people of the West.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have heard objections strenuously urged against the existing condition of things by Senators from Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, I think California, and possibly other States. It seems to me that if the Senators from those States would unite in an effort to remedy what seems to be an evil, they would find support enough from the rest of us to accomplish the result.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for one moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that an effort was made a few years ago to limit what we thought was the undue exercise of departmental discretion, and both Houses of Congress passed a law providing that in certain States no further reservations should be made except by affirmative action of Congress. That law passed both Houses of Congress and was before the department for its consideration; but before that law was signed by the President, in defiance of the expressed will of Congress, more than 11,000,000 additional acres were put into these reserves.

The Senator asks how these reserves are created, whether by arbitrary power or not. The answer was made that commissions are sometimes sent out. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the very inception of this movement was when the Congress of the United States appropriated $25,000 to send out a commission to look over this western country and recommend to the President what lands should be included within the reserves. That commission expended the $25,000. They made a report to the President. Upon that report and other information the President acted; and yet it developed, upon hearing, that that commission, spending $25,000, did not go near the land, nor had they any personal observation or knowledge of the land which they recommended should go into the reserve.

Mr. GALLINGER. In that connection I will say that I have frequently been told and I have frequently read that these forest reserves are usually selected by certain gentlemen looking through a car window, and that they do not exercise the care that ought to be exercised in a matter of such great importance.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the western Senators have at various times introduced bills, and there are a number of bills now pending, dealing with this subject. The difference between the bills that are introduced by most of the western Senators is one which appeals to the question of entry and location by which title can be obtained and by which the State can have the right of taxation upon the property; whereas the bills that have been introduced by others relate to the leasing or royalty system by which title never leaves the Government, which means perpetual ownership in the Federal Government and which means consequently the exemption of these lands from State, county, and school taxation forever. When you consider that in the West 30 years' payment of taxes upon any property with reasonable interest upon each yearly payment amounts to the value of the land, you can readily see that the people of this western country are taxed every year the value of this land to maintain government over these forest reserves and other resources of the public domain that are proposed to be the subject of royalty.

Mr. President, I do not want to discuss the matter. I believe that this appropriation ought to be allowed, because it is a necessary expenditure that has been made; fundamentally there ought to be a change in the entire forestry system.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a word before I withdraw the amendment.

I do not desire that my position in regard to these forest reserves shall be misunderstood, and I repeat what I have said before, in a more explicit way, that I have no objection to forest reserves as such. I am thoroughly in favor of forest reserves when they are created upon forest lands; and if we could have eliminated from the forest reserves those lands which are purely agricultural lands and fit for making homes and farms, practically all the opposition to the forest reserves would disappear from the West.

I made this suggestion with reference to striking out this item for the same reason that I have called it to the attention of the Senate before. I want to keep before the Senate what I believe to be true from personal observation and personal examination—that there are not only thousands but hundreds of thousands of acres within these forest reserves upon which timber has never grown, which are more valuable for agriculture than for timber, which are fitted for the purpose of making homes, and those are the lands we are asking to have opened to entry.

Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho is withdrawn.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the Senator withdraws his amendment I simply wish to say a word by way of explanation.

I voted for this provision in the committee. I did so because of the fact that the money has been spent. I also want to say that of all the money that is spent in the Forest Service, that which is spent for protection against fire is the money that is best spent. I do not, however, approve of having a deficiency appropriation for even this purpose every year; and I think myself that in the future either there ought to be a larger appropriation made for this purpose, or there should not be so much money spent as there has been. I want to express the opinion that the agricultural bill should carry a larger appropriation for this purpose, and that we should not have a deficiency every year.

My own State is not so largely withdrawn for forest purposes as some of the other Western States, although there are counties in my State where 93 per cent of the land is now withdrawn from entry, and out of the other 7 per cent all the taxes must be obtained for the maintenance of government. It is an impossibility for that part of our country to receive sufficient taxes to carry on the government as it ought to be carried on.

I believe in the Forest Service; that is, I believe that the real forest lands ought to be withdrawn from entry. I believe that the Forest Service ought to control those lands, but I do not believe that agricultural lands ought to be withdrawn as forest lands. I now predict that if there is not a change in the policy, if the agricultural lands are not eliminated from the withdrawals, action will be taken by Congress, for the situation is intolerable. There is no one in my State, however, who is not perfectly willing that all of the forest lands should be withdrawn as such. They approve of it. It has been a blessing to the people, from the fact that we have so very little timber in our State; but it has gone a long, long way beyond the actual forest lands. As I stated before, I believe the time will come when the agricultural lands will be open for entry, and will not be allowed to remain in forest reserves.

I approve this appropriation; I voted for it in committee, and I shall vote for it in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, unfortunately I was absent from the Senate on other matters during the early discussion of this item; but I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I understand that where the bill speaks of "general expenses, Forest Service," it is intended to cover expenditures for fire.

Mr. OVERMAN. Fire fighting. It is in addition to the $250,000 appropriated for this purpose for the year beginning July 1, 1914.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Can the chairman inform us as to the items making up this expenditure?

Mr. OVERMAN. No item except one—so many employees at 25 cents an hour.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. How many?

Mr. OVERMAN. It would take 25,000 men, working a month apiece, to make up this amount.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Has the Senator any notion that that condition of affairs existed? Was there anything before the committee, in the estimate or otherwise, to show what items entered into that expenditure?

Here is my reason for asking the question: I suppose we provide, in the general Agricultural bill, for a staff in the Forestry Service which will be used in fighting fires. I am curious to know how they could incur an extra expense to the amount of $400,000 for performing the service for which their department is already organized. The Senator says they pay 25 cents an hour.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the way it was spent. The Senator will find from the hearings that that is the only estimate that was given. The men were employed at 25 cents an hour. That is the way the money was expended.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Has the Senator gone into the matter to ascertain how many men it would take and for how long in fighting fire?

Mr. OVERMAN. It would be $2 a day for one man. It would take 300,000 men a day, or 30,000 men 10 days. The Senator can make the calculation as well as I can.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wanted to know whether this was just a lump sum, or whether it was appropriated as we have been accustomed to appropriate for the Forestry Service, without detailed specifications as to what it was for; that is all.

Mr. OVERMAN. All we know is that we appropriated $250,000 upon their estimate, and six months thereafter they come in here with a request for $371,000 more, saying that they have used this money, have spent it in employing men to fight fires, and it was not much of a fire year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho having been withdrawn, the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

BUREAU OF LIGHTHOUSES.

Lighthouse tender, general service: For constructing and equipping a lighthouse tender for general service, authorized by the act approved March 4, 1913, $250,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, before going further I want to say just a word with reference to this item under the Lighthouse Service.

There is an item there of $250,000 for a lighthouse tender for the Pacific coast. That is a matter in which our people have been very much interested heretofore, and the Secretary himself has urged that we need a larger boat. The Senate at the last session passed a bill increasing the limit of cost of that boat from $250,000 to $325,000, and such a bill was favorably reported by the committee in the House.

I offered an amendment, intended to be proposed to this bill, to increase the amount to $325,000. I did that largely because of the action of the Senate at the previous session, and also because the Secretary of Commerce had urged this increase very strongly in his report, and had pointed out very strong reasons why it should be made.

It has developed, however, possibly even since he made his report, that conditions on the Pacific coast are such that it is very likely that a larger vessel than was contemplated originally for $250,000 can be secured now for $250,000; and the Secretary has assured me that it is his judgment that with this $250,000 he can probably get a vessel that will take care of the situation as he contemplated caring for it in his recommendation for the increase in the limit of cost. Therefore I have not pressed, and will not press, the amendment I introduced for the purpose of offering it to this provision, but I desire to make this statement in the RECORD, so that the facts may be known.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Missouri if it will suit his convenience to have the Senate go into executive session now?

Mr. STONE. There is an item in the bill, Mr. President, which has been passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. One only.

Mr. STONE. I am informed that it will likely take some time in debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not hear the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I said that there is an item in the pending bill that has been passed over, and I am told that some Senators desire to debate that item, or some matters connected with it, possibly at some length. In view of that fact, if it is agreeable to the Senator from North Carolina——

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the bill may be laid aside for the purpose of going into executive session. It becomes then, as I understand, the unfinished business to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. There is no need of laying the bill aside. We can simply go into executive session.

Mr. OVERMAN. It comes up automatically. I thought probably I might move to take it up during the morning hour. It will come up automatically after 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, certainly it will. This bill is now the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be well enough to notify the Senate now that unanimous consent was given to laying aside temporarily the so-called shipping bill, which was the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. But this bill, Mr. President, was not taken up by unanimous consent. It was taken up on motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that. It did not affect the other bill, however.

Mr. LODGE. That displaces the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. However, that is a matter to be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. STONE. We will dispose of that matter when we get to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What motion does the Senator make now?

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 55 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 5, 1915, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, source of light and life and love, our God, our Father, pardon, we beseech Thee, our infirmities; take away our sinful desires and help us to make our lives sublime by the excellence of our thought and the rectitude of our behavior, that Thy kingdom may come in all its fullness and Thy will be done in our lives, that we may hallow the name of our Father in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 2, 1915, was read and approved.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN OREGON LANDS.

The first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 49) to provide for the exchange with the State of Oregon of certain school lands and indemnity rights within the national forests of that State for an equal area of national-forest land.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. To object to passing it without prejudice?

Mr. BORLAND. To object to the request; yes.

There is no rule we can make that is not subject to the most gross abuse, and this rule, putting bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, is as grossly abused as any rules of this House. Here is the whole first page of this calendar devoted to the titles of bills that have been passed over repeatedly without prejudice. The result is that a bill at the end of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent will have no chance of consideration at this session. Now, we are intending to-day to take up, in the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, time that, considering the limited time that we have, ought to be devoted to appropriation bills, and gentlemen are going to get up here and argue over these propositions on this first page as to whether the bills shall or shall not be passed without prejudice. Now, why do gentlemen put their bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and then repeatedly ask that they be passed without prejudice, when they know it is to the prejudice of every other Member in the House even to make such a request?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill under consideration was the subject of discussion two weeks ago, but was passed over in order that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] and myself might get together on an amendment. I have just returned to the city this morning and we have not been able to come to any agreement on the amendment, so the gentleman, so as not to take up any time in the consideration of it, immediately asked to have it passed over without prejudice. If these other bills are passed over as promptly as the gentleman from Oregon attempted to get this one passed over this morning, it will not interfere with the consideration of bills at the bottom of the calendar.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no disposition to prejudice the gentleman from Oregon; but if he asks that the bill be passed without prejudice it ought to be accompanied by a request that it go to the heel of the docket, and give everybody else a fair chance at this calendar. I have not a single bill on this calendar, so I feel perfectly free to speak about it. The gentleman has no right to hold the head of the calendar day after day with a bill that he is going to ask to have passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] asks that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Is the gentleman from Indiana going to object?

Mr. COX. No; I am not going to object.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] objected to passing the bill without prejudice. Did anyone object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARNER. No one objected to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may we have it reported first?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it. The Chair will make the same request of the House that he made a year ago, and that is that when the title of a bill is read, if any gentleman has made up his mind resolutely to object to it, let him object then.

Mr. GARNER. What are you going to do? Are you going to object?

Mr. STAFFORD. We are going to consider it now.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SINNOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over and go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over and go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to that request.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not believe that is a good practice to begin.

Mr. BORLAND. Then let it go off. Unanimous consent is a special privilege, anyway.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly. I am not complaining if the gentleman objects. The same thing will apply to a number of other bills.

Mr. BORLAND. I am willing that the bill be considered now. If it can not be considered now, it has no place on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. The rule ought to be that if a bill is passed over it shall go to the bottom of the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says he is not ready to consider it to-day, but will be in two weeks.

Mr. BORLAND. Then it ought not to be on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the request that it be passed without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of certain Members on this side, I will object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

On December 22, 1914:

S. J. Res. 213. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1914, on the 22d day of said month.

On December 23, 1914:

S. 94. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

INVESTIGATION OF ACCOUNTS UNDER RECLAMATION ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 124) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and settle certain accounts under the reclamation acts, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no disposition to object to the bill of my friend from California; but what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and I shall have to object. We ought to treat both sides of this House exactly alike.

Mr. RAKER. I did not catch exactly what the gentleman said about sauce for the gander, but when this bill was called up a while ago the gentleman from Illinois objected, and I was having certain matters investigated, and I will have it ready at the next meeting.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me call attention to the fact that this bill has been up several times and a little debate had upon it each time, and at each time the gentleman said he was going to straighten out the difficulty, and had it passed without prejudice. And I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects to the request that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is too important a bill to be considered to-day, and I therefore feel obliged to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GRAND JUNCTION, COLO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16056) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Grand Junction, Colo.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Grand Junction, Colo., be, and the same hereby is, increased from the sum of $100,000 to the sum of $250,000, said increase to be employed in the enlargement and betterment of the building.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 5, page 1, strike out the figures "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$175,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear something about the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have asked to have this bill passed over once or twice before, because there are a number of other bills of the same kind on the calendar increasing the authorization of certain buildings. The city of Grand Junction got an appropriation for a public building several years ago, but never has been able to build the building or obtain a bid that was satisfactory to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, because of the insufficiency of the appropriation. This is to increase the appropriation to the extent of $75,000. The building can not be built until Congress makes this additional appropriation. There are five or six Government departments or offices in that town besides the post office—the Reclamation Service, with a large force of officials, the Forest Service, Weather Bureau, Civil Service Commission, Department of Justice, and the drainage department, and a large number of those Government officials are now housed in various places over the city. The Government is paying nearly $3,000 a year in rent, and the officials of the Government are desirous of having this building built at once. The site was purchased some 8 or 10 years ago, and the city has been waiting all this time for this building. As a matter of fact, this is being urged by the Treasury Department, and we feel if there is any building in the country that ought to be provided for at this session of Congress, making appropriations of this kind so as to prevent further delay and inconvenience to the Federal employees, this is one of them. If none of these bills are going to be allowed to pass, of course I expect to take my medicine and wait, the same as the rest; but if the policy is to pass any of them, I want to insist on this one being considered by the House. We want to be treated the same as others, especially as this is one of the most meritorious of these bills before the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know of no program to kill bills, and I do not propose to be a party to any such thing, but here is a bill increasing by a large sum the limit of cost of a public building. My experience is that nearly every public-building allowance ought to be cut down instead of increasing it, and that has been accentuated every time I have made examination into a specific case. I have not had a chance to examine the bill or report in this case. How many people are there in this town?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Something like 8,000 people in the city proper, but there are 15,000 people immediately adjacent and who are patrons of these offices. That is according to the report of the department. The post-office receipts of the post office for the year 1913 were nearly $35,000. This is a wealthy country, the center of a large fruit-growing country in western Colorado. It is at the junction and division point of three railroads, and is the metropolis of western Colorado, the largest and most important city in the western half of the State.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the United States own the land?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; and has for some 8 or 10 years.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is to be the size of the building?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We will have 8,000 feet of floor space. That is what the department reports that the Government needs right now.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is the character of the building to be?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This increase only provides for a brick building. The inhabitants of that city feel that they are entitled to a marble building, because it is near the marble quarry that is furnishing the marble for the Lincoln Memorial in this city and upon which we are to spend $2,000,000. This marble comes from right near this place, and if we could have a suitable appropriation made for it we would like to have the Government use our marble; but this additional $75,000 only authorizes a brick building, with a floor space that will provide for the Government necessities now and will not make any provision for growth. It is merely to take care of the Government officials there now without any place of abode.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. What was the original appropriation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HAMLIN. And you want $75,000 additional?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; the Treasury Department insists that it ought to have $100,000 additional, but the Public Building Committee have only authorized an increase of $75,000, so we are asking that sum. I may say that the Senate has passed a similar bill making a $100,000 increase. The Senate bill is on this calendar, and if consent is given to take this bill up, I will ask to have the Senate bill substituted for the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, when they originally provided for this building they only provided for a post office?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is all.

Mr. MANN. And since then they find they need room for many other governmental services?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; because the reclamation project is now there with a large force of Government officials, and they have the forest reserve service of a large part of western Colorado, and they have the drainage service of the Reclamation Service, and a number of other Federal functions are established there.

Mr. MANN. The Weather Bureau.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And that is the reason for the increase?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir. That is the reason the increase is necessary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And the Federal court is there.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; but I have a bill pending to create a term of the Federal court at this city, but this bill does not provide for a Federal court. Whenever they get that court there they will have to have an enlargement of the building.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is the good of passing this bill if immediately after getting the authorization you are to come in for an increase?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There is no immediate prospect for the passage of that bill. We may not pass it for a number of years yet. We do not want to wait until we get that bill passed, which probably will not be until we get another Federal judge, and I do not know when that will be. We do not wish to wait for that. We have been waiting for nearly 10 years now, and we feel we are certainly entitled to the passage of this bill, and I do hope Congress will allow it to pass at this session, because we have been so long patiently waiting for this building and the department has so earnestly recommended its construction.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there is absolutely nothing in this report which I can gather from a hasty reading showing why you need 8,000 square feet of floor space. The statement is made that that amount of space is needed——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is made by the Supervising Architect, is it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand so, but that is just the trouble. The statement of the Supervising Architect in the Treasury Department may be upon a basis which would not be agreed to by any business man in expending his own money. Now here you are asking for an increase of nearly 100 per cent in the cost of the building in a report which says you need 8,000 square feet, but why you need it is a question for the House to consider, and the report does not give any information. It simply says——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What higher authority can you get for this than the Government's Supervising Architect?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will tell the gentleman what higher authority you can get, and that is the facts upon which the Supervising Architect bases his conclusion——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have got those facts in the hearings.

Mr. SHERLEY. And then determine whether his conclusion is wise or not, but when you simply give the conclusion without the facts, then we are thrown back upon the Supervising Architect's Office, and I for one am not willing to trust its judgment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Supervising Architect came before the committee and his statement is in the hearings.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be all true, but they do not appear here in the report.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We do not put all the hearings in the report.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the report should contain an adequate summary. The gentleman is asking a special procedure, to get the bill up here, and the moment it is gotten up it passes; we all know that.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I again desire to reserve the right to object in order to get some information, if the gentleman from Connecticut will permit it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, I did not believe it necessary for me to put our hearings before the committee in the report. I gave the substance of what these various governmental functions are and what each one of them is doing, and anybody who will look into the matter will see that the governmental functions that are at that city will require a large amount of space. They are largely in the agricultural development line, and I feel that in the report of the committee and with the hearings and with the synopsis I have given here and the long delay this city has been put to—we have advertised three times and we have not and never can get a building unless there is an additional appropriation, and when the department urges Congress to give $100,000, I feel that we are certainly safe in authorizing an additional $75,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois permit the bill to go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is ordered stricken from the calendar.

VALIDATING LOCATION OF PHOSPHATE-ROCK DEPOSITS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6106) validating locations of deposits of phosphate rock heretofore made in good faith under the placer-mining laws of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been included as an amendment to a bill already passed, and as it is pending in the Senate I ask unanimous consent to pass the bill over without prejudice.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if that is the case, why is it necessary to pass it over?

Mr. FRENCH. Because we do not know what its fate will be in the Senate.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects, and the bill is ordered stricken from the calendar.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I objected to this being passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to its being passed without prejudice. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where public lands containing deposits of phosphate rock have heretofore been located in good faith under the placer-mining laws of the United States, such locations shall be valid and may be perfected under the provisions of said placer-mining laws, and such locations shall give title and possession to such deposits. This act shall apply to such locations heretofore patented: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any locations made subsequent to the withdrawal of such lands from location, nor shall it apply to lands included in an adverse or conflicting lode location unless such adverse or conflicting location is abandoned.

With the following committee amendments:

First. Page 1, line 5, after the words "United States," insert "and upon which assessment work has been annually performed."

Second. Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "such locations" and insert "patents whether heretofore or hereafter issued thereon."

Third. Page 1, line 8, after the word "title," insert the word "to."

Fourth. Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "to" and insert the word "of" in lieu thereof.

Fifth. Page 1, lines 8 and 9, amend by striking out the period and the words "This act shall apply to such locations heretofore patented."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bills as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NAVEL-ORANGE INDUSTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House Joint Resolution 302, authorizing and directing the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to participate in the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the Washington navel-orange industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects, and the resolution is stricken from the calendar.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT WALTHAM, MASS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13489) increasing the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the construction thereon of a post office at Waltham, Mass.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear something about it. [After a pause.] If there is no explanation, I feel that I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

KING THEOLOGICAL HALL, HOWARD UNIVERSITY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5168) for the relief of the King Theological Hall, and authorizing the conveyance of real estate to the Howard University and other grantees.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

POST OFFICE AT SEYMOUR, IND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18172) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Seymour, Ind.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

That the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Seymour, Ind., be, and the same is hereby, increased $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to meet the additional cost of construction of said building by the substitution of stone instead of brick with stone trimmings, as specified in the existing specification.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, Mr. DIXON is the author of this bill, and it is for a post-office building site in his district. He is unable to be here to-day. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice until he is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to pass the bill without prejudice? Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object to its being passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects to its being passed without prejudice. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, my sole purpose is to find out something about the size of the post office and the necessity of the change from brick to stone, increasing the cost generally. It is pretty generally understood that we are to have no public-buildings bill at this session, and I have had some experience with matters of this kind—not that I know anything about this proposition or that I have any particular objection to it. I merely want a reasonable explanation of the bill, what amount was originally appropriated, and the necessity for an increase in the cost of $15,000.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to give the gentleman that information.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Indiana will yield, I do not think it is very difficult to understand the bill.

Mr. CULLOP. I suppose the report shows that.

Mr. MANN. There is no controversy about the need for the building. That has been provided for. Indiana is a great producer of building stone, and under the original appropriation it was proposed to build a brick building right in the midst of a stone-producing territory.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; it is within 20 miles only of the great stone-producing belt.

Mr. MANN. Which is an anomaly. I think where they produce stone they ought to have a stone building.

Mr. FINLEY. I was not aware of that fact. I have no objection to the bill, but merely wish some explanation.

Mr. CULLOP. That is the fact about it. It is within 20 miles.

Mr. SHERLEY. If it is so close to Bedford, why could not they get the stone shipped?

Mr. MANN. I do not know why; but it seems to me they can not. I believe in lots of places we ought to put up brick buildings, but I would not do it in the Bedford-stone district, because it would make everybody there sore.

Mr. CULLOP. The department always puts out three bids, and one of them is for brick and one is for stone; and the stone is a little more costly, of course, than the brick. But this is right in the heart of the stone belt, and the building ought to be constructed out of the neolithic limestone which is a product of that district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CULLOP, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ASSAY OFFICE, NEW YORK CITY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3342) for the enlargement, etc., of the Wall Street front of the assay office in the city of New York.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made under the authority contained in the acts of Congress approved March 4, 1911, and August 26, 1912, for the enlargement, etc., of the Wall Street front of the assay office in New York City, and for vaults therefor, and architectural, engineering, and other technical services in connection therewith, are hereby reappropriated and made available for the erection of a new fireproof building on said Wall Street front, in continuation, or extension, of the present assay office building fronting on Pine Street, together with suitable vaults for use of said assay office and the adjoining Subtreasury, and, if necessary, an entrance from or connection with said Subtreasury for access therefrom, at a total limit of cost of not exceeding in the aggregate the present limits of cost for building, vaults, connection with the Subtreasury, and the architectural, engineering, or other technical services in connection therewith, of $607,408.

SEC. 2. That the authority heretofore given to the Secretary of the Treasury to employ, in his discretion, such architectural, engineering, or other technical services as he may deem necessary in connection with the enlargement, remodeling, or extension of the portion of the assay office in New York City fronting on Wall Street, and to pay for such services from the unexpended balance of the appropriation from which the rear portion of said assay office was constructed, is hereby continued with respect to said new building, payment therefor within the limit heretofore fixed to be made from the amounts herein reappropriated.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, further authorized to employ in connection with the Supervising Architect's Office, and without regard to the civil-service laws, rules, or regulations for service, either within or without the District of Columbia, such other specially skilled technical, engineering, consulting, and superintending services as he may deem necessary all such specially skilled technical, engineering, consulting, and superintending services to be exclusively employed in connection with the plans and specifications for said vaults and the foundations of said building and vaults. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay for such services mentioned in this paragraph such compensation and such actual necessary traveling and subsistence expenses in connection with such work as he may deem reasonable, from the amounts herein reappropriated; all such additional services and traveling expenses hereinbefore authorized to be in addition to and independent of the authorizations and appropriations for personal services and traveling expenses in said office otherwise made.

And in razing said Wall Street front the Secretary of the Treasury may dispose, by gift or otherwise, of the façade of said present building with a view to the preservation of said façade: Provided, That the United States shall not be put to any expense beyond that for said razing.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 10, strike out the words "reappropriated and" and insert the words "authorized to be."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORLAND. What has become of Calendar No. 318?

The SPEAKER. The bill was passed on December 21.

Mr. BORLAND. Passed when?

The SPEAKER. Passed the House on December 21.

Mr. BORLAND. It is still on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. It ought not to have been on the calendar. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill S. 3342?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] who is sponsor for this bill——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sponsor for the bill. It was introduced by my colleague, Mr. CANTOR. The item was sent to the Committee on Appropriations in some estimates a year ago, and as it was a legislative matter the item was transferred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MOORE. I see that the limit of appropriations here would be a little in excess of $600,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. What the bill does is this: Three hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars was appropriated to build vaults in the assay office; $270,000 was appropriated to remodel the existing assay office, a two-story building. The front is one of the few historic fronts and fine pieces of architecture in the city of New York. The Treasury Department ascertains that as it is impossible to do the remodeling and to preserve the front legislation is desired to permit the expenditure of the money to erect a new building instead of remodeling the present one.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman quite correct? Was not $322,000 appropriated for the purpose of building vaults under this building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And they found they could not do that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they did not find they could not do that.

Mr. MANN. That is what they reported. I do not know what they found.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a mistake.

Mr. MANN. And they could reconstruct the building with vaults at no greater expense than it would cost to build the vaults by themselves?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a mistake. Three hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars were appropriated for the vaults. Two hundred and seventy thousand dollars were appropriated to make certain changes in the Subtreasury. That plan was abandoned and that money was made available to remodel the assay office. The Treasury Department states now that it can make a better job by constructing a new building instead of remodeling the old one. The Secretary desires authority to take down the front in such a way that it can be preserved and donated to some historical society; the additional legislation is to employ the technical services required in connection with the support of a very large building which adjoins the present site.

Mr. MOORE. There is an increase in the work of the assay office in New York due to recent legislation, is there not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. An increase in the work?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think so.

Mr. MOORE. Certain other branches of the work have been consolidated?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The work of the New York Assay Office is almost wholly confined to the importations of gold from foreign countries. That is the principal work done there. When gold is brought here in bars or in bullion, or in whatever form, it is assayed there, because it has to be paid into the Treasury. That is the chief assay work in New York. Work is not taken from other cities to New York. It is the work that has always been there, and it is due to the very large importation of gold to New York.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for employing outside architects on this work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The outside architects who are to be employed are not for the work on the building, but in the city of New York in erecting very large buildings a special class of engineers has been developed for the subaqueous work.

Most of the foundations of these buildings in New York are below the sea level, and the engineering work requires the service of engineers who are sufficiently skilled in shoring up and supporting buildings of 8, 10, or more stories, similar to the office building which adjoins the site, to undertake the work.

Mr. MOORE. This provision is not necessarily due to the fact that the Supervising Architect's office in Washington is overcrowded with work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. It is due to the fact that there is no one connected with the Government service who is sufficiently familiar with that class of work to undertake it.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of the Treasury stated that arrangements had been made with the engineer who had built the Hudson Terminal Building, one of the very largest buildings in the city, to do the work for 2½ per cent of the cost of the work, the regular fee being 5 per cent.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I have been through the building, and my attention was particularly called to the fact that these engineers were necessary, in view of the fact that the Government had no men who were familiar with that kind of work. I have had experience in that particular line of work, and I know that there are certain kinds of engineers in our city who make that work a specialty. The building adjoining is 20 stories high, and it is important to the owners and to the Government that we should adopt this policy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The site is valued at about a million dollars.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is no connection between this bill and the one that was passed at the instance of Mr. CANTOR at the last session?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is Mr. CANTOR's bill. He did not get it through. It was objected to, as I understand.

Mr. FINLEY. I was here, and that is not my recollection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He had the bill up, but objection was made to it. But this is a Senate bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, at the last session the gentleman from New York [Mr. CANTOR] had a bill passed, though I am not sure whether it was for this particular purpose or to improve the subtreasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the same bill.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, the House passed a bill like this—a House bill. This is a Senate bill, but it is the same thing. House bill No. 13296 was passed.

Mr. FINLEY. I was satisfied that the same bill was passed here on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. That was the House bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FINLEY. I hardly see how the bill got back here.

Mr. MANN. This is a Senate bill, covering the same thing as the House bill that was passed. One body or the other has to pass the bill first.

Mr. FINLEY. One other question, Mr. Speaker. What is the urgency for the passage of this bill at this time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have the money; they have authority to rebuild the existing building.

Mr. FINLEY. And the appropriation has not lapsed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has not lapsed, and it would be much better for the Government to tear the building down and put up a new building, and at the same time, give an opportunity to preserve the front, which is one of the finest pieces of architecture in the city of New York.

Mr. FINLEY. It is simply to change the plans and specifications?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. It is simply to put up a new building in place of remodeling the old building.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment ought not to be agreed to. It is evidently a mistake. The money was appropriated and the bill as passed by the Senate provided that it should be reappropriated and made available. The amendment struck out "reappropriated" and provided that it should be authorized to be made available. That would not amount to anything. And then, on page 3, line 13, they refer to the money as being "herein reappropriated," so that the amendment that was proposed was an accidental error, apparently.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment was due to the fact that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds did not wish to appear as directly appropriating money.

Mr. MANN. But the only thing to do is to reappropriate the money and make it available. The amendment should be disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER AT LEWISTON, N. Y.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16640) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River, in the town of Lewiston, in the county of Niagara, and State of New York.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the present consideration of this bill, I would like if it could be passed over without prejudice for the reason that my colleague, Mr. GITTINGS, is unable to be present to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. What is the request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The request was that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is present, and he has been adopting a very consistent course in objecting this morning to passing over bills without prejudice. I do not know whether he intends now to change his policy or not.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman want to object?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I do not; but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman has adopted a very inconsistent position.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the gentleman is not mistaken. The gentleman objected to passing over a public-building bill awhile ago when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] was absent.

Mr. BORLAND. I object to the request to pass the bill over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next one.

RAILWAY LOCOMOTIVES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17894) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911, shall apply to and include the entire locomotive and tender and all parts and appurtenances thereof.

SEC. 2. That the chief inspector and the two assistant chief inspectors, together with all the district inspectors, appointed under the act of February 17, 1911, shall inspect and shall have the same powers and duties with respect to all the parts and appurtenances of the locomotive and tender that they now have with respect to the boiler of a locomotive and the appurtenances thereof, and the said act of February 17, 1911, shall apply to and include the entire locomotive and tender and all their parts with the same force and effect as it now applies to locomotive boilers and their appurtenances. That upon the passage of this act all inspectors and applicants for the position of inspector shall be examined touching their qualifications and fitness with respect to the additional duties imposed by this act.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be held to alter, amend, change, repeal, or modify any other act of Congress than the said act of February 17, 1911, to which reference is herein specifically made, or any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission promulgated under the safety-appliance act of March 2, 1893, and supplemental acts, except that for a violation of the act of February 17, 1911, as hereby amended, or of any rule or regulation made under its provisions, or of any lawful order of any inspector acting thereunder, the offender shall be subject to prosecution by the United States for a penalty under said act, as hereby amended, only: Provided, That the passage of this act shall not affect any suit pending or offense committed prior to the passage hereof.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect six months after its passage, except as otherwise herein provided.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, this may entail an expense upon the Government by the appointment of additional employees in all probability, and it may be necessary to consider it in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It proposes examinations and appoints men to perform certain duties, who doubtless will have to be paid a salary.

Mr. MANN. I do not think this is a Union Calendar bill. While it provides for an inspection of locomotives, broader than is now provided for by law, it does not increase the number of inspectors or their salaries, but authorizes the same inspectors to make the inspection.

Mr. GOEKE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MANN. In a moment. When we pass a law making an act a criminal act, we know that if anybody is accused of the crime it will involve an expense to the Government, but that does not make it a Union Calendar bill, because it does not increase the number of officials of the Government drawing pay, although it may increase the number of jurors. Now, this bill simply broadens the power of the inspectors who are already provided for by law. I do not think that makes it a Union Calendar bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. It provides for an examination.

Mr. BARTLETT. I merely call it to the attention of the Speaker to let the Speaker decide.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to remind the gentleman from Illinois, in corroboration of what he says, that it appears that the machinery already exists. There is no extension of the machinery.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman arguing the point of order?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide, without argument, that the bill is on the right calendar. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOEKE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OLD POST OFFICE, JERSEY CITY, N. J.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9584) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to sell the present old post office and the site thereof in the city of Jersey City, N. J.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the completion of the new Federal building at Jersey City, N. J., and its occupancy by the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell the present old post office and site thereof in said city, after proper advertisement, at public or private sale, on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States to execute a quit-claim deed to the purchaser thereof, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "sell the present old post office and site thereof in said city, after proper advertisement, at public or private sale, on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States" and insert "offer at public sale, after proper advertisement, the present old post office and site in said city, and sell the same to the highest and best bidder."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to understand the necessity for this proposed change of verbiage.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, it was at the request of the board of education of Jersey City that this bill was introduced. Jersey City now has a new post office.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that.

Mr. HAMILL. They want to procure the old post-office site for a public school. They wanted to make a private arrangement with the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the property at private sale. The bill was presented to the committee, and for a time it looked as if they were perfectly willing to have the building sold by an arrangement between the board of education and the Secretary of the Treasury; but somebody thought that it would look better if the building were sold at public sale, and so this amendment was suggested, that the Secretary of the Treasury sell it at public sale.

Mr. FINLEY. Under the bill as it was originally drawn the Secretary of the Treasury could sell on such terms as he wished.

Mr. HAMILL. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. That would apply to the sale, the amount to be paid, the deferred payments, and so on. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. Under this amendment the Secretary of the Treasury would be limited to the consideration of cash bids. That is true, is it not?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes; I think so.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman think that would probably be for the best interests of the Government?

Mr. HAMILL. I will say that if the gentleman wishes to offer any amendment with regard to the sale, I am perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. FINLEY. My view is that the words "on such terms as he may prescribe and for the best interests of the Government" should be inserted in the amendment. I have no objection to the bill, and I am only suggesting that it may be found to be for the best interests of the Government to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. In other words, under the original bill you could sell on time, for part cash, while the amendment would confine the Secretary of the Treasury to a cash sale. I have no objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, there is no information contained in the report on this bill. Does the gentleman from New Jersey think this is a very good time to sell real estate?

Mr. HAMILL. Let me explain the whole situation with regard to the bill. Jersey City some time ago——

Mr. MANN. That information ought to have been contained in the report.

Mr. HAMILL. The committee thought otherwise, and so far as this particular piece of property is concerned it is as good a time as there ever will be to sell it.

Mr. MANN. Is this property liable to become any more valuable?

Mr. HAMILL. No; it is not. It is likely to become less valuable——

Mr. MANN. Then it would be a crime to impose upon some poor ignorant sucker now.

Mr. HAMILL. The board of education of Jersey City intend to purchase it for a public school. It is in a neighborhood that is going down so far as the purchase of property is concerned, but it is a place where a school is badly needed, and the property is located exceptionally for school purposes. There is a small park on one side of the building and a street on the other, giving a good light, and that is the reason for the introduction of this bill.

Mr. MANN. You seem to have a customer already; how much have they offered for the property?

Mr. HAMILL. They have made no offer yet.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better wait until they make an offer.

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman from Illinois consent that it be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned.

Mr. HAMILL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and retained on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COINAGE OF COINS FOR THE PANAMA EXPOSITION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 6039, an act for the coinage of certain gold and silver coins in commemoration of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined at the United States mint at San Francisco not exceeding 2,000 gold coins of the denomination of $50 each, 10,000 gold coins of the denomination of $2.50 each, 25,000 gold coins of the denomination of $1 each, and not exceeding 200,000 silver coins of the denomination of 50 cents each, all of legal weight and fineness; said coins to be struck in commemoration of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The words, devices, and designs upon said coins shall be determined and prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and all provisions of law relative to the coinage and legal-tender value of all other gold and silver coins shall be applicable to the coins issued under and in accordance with the provisions of this act; and one-half of the issue of $50 gold coins herein authorized shall be similar in shape to the octagonal $50 gold pieces issued in California in 1851; and the entire issue of said $50, $2.50, and $1 coins herein authorized shall be sold and delivered by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. at par, under rules and regulations and in amounts to be prescribed by him, the delivery of said coins to begin not later than December 1, 1914. Said 50-cent coins herein authorized shall be issued only upon the request of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., and shall be delivered to it by the Secretary of the Treasury, at par, during the period when said Panama-Pacific International Exposition shall be officially open.

SEC. 2. That medals and diplomas, with appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of said Panama-Pacific International Exposition and of the awards to be made to the exhibitors thereat, shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury at the United States mint at Philadelphia and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, said medals and diplomas to be delivered to said Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. subject to the provisions of section 52 of the coinage act of 1873 and upon payment of the cost of the material composing said medals or diplomas.

SEC. 3. That the 50-cent silver coins herein authorized may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be coined or finished and issued from the machinery to be installed as a part of the exhibit of the United States mint at said exposition, and for the purpose of maintaining the exhibit as an educative working exhibit at all times the coins so minted may be remelted and reminted. All of said 50-cent silver coins herein authorized not issued to and at the request of said Panama-Pacific International Exposition, whether the same are coined as a part of said working exhibit or coined at the mint in San Francisco, shall be remelted upon the official closing of said exposition. All provisions hereof in regard to the coinage, finishing, or issue of said 50-cent silver coins from machinery installed as a part of the said exhibit shall be coined, finished, and issued under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be prepared a suitable souvenir medal (of such metal or composition of metals as he may prescribe), to be struck off by the machinery in said mint exhibit, and all of said medals shall be delivered to said Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. upon payment of the cost of the material composing the same, and all other souvenirs which may be coined, stamped, printed, or otherwise issued from any portion of the United States Government exhibit shall be delivered to said exposition company upon payment of the cost of the material composing said souvenirs, and said souvenir medals and other souvenirs shall be delivered to said Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. subject to such regulations as to disposition thereof as the Government exhibit board may prescribe. All provisions, whether penal or otherwise, of the laws prohibiting the counterfeiting or imitating of coins or securities of the United States shall apply to the medals, diplomas, and souvenirs provided for under sections 2 and 3 of this act.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to obtain suitable designs for the coins and medals herein authorized, and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of said designs.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof "three."

Page 2, after line 17, insert the words "the coinage shall be executed as soon as may be and."

Page 2, lines 18 and 19, strike out the words "December 1, 1914," and insert in lieu thereof "the day of the opening of the exposition."

Page 5, line 2, insert the words "Provided, That the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. shall reimburse the Treasury Department for the amount thus expended."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The question is on the amendments.

The amendments were considered and agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in line 1, page 2, the dollar sign before the figures "50."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the dollar sign before the figures "50."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OIL OR GAS LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15661) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to lease to the occupants thereof certain unpatented lands on which oil or gas has been discovered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States, within six months from the date of this act, by any locator or his successors in interest of his or their claim to any unpatented oil or gas lands included in an order of withdrawal, upon which oil or gas had been discovered, was being produced, or upon which drilling operations were in actual progress January 1, 1914, and the claim to which land was initiated prior to July 3, 1910, the Secretary of the Interior shall lease to such locator or his successors in interest the said lands so relinquished, not exceeding, however, the maximum area of 2,560 acres to any one person, association, or corporation, said leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of a royalty of not exceeding one-eighth of the oil or gas extracted or produced from the leased premises or the proceeds thereof, each lease to be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for succeeding periods of 10 years, upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts, and make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect, and all leases or assignments of leases shall be subject to such rules and regulations, and the failure of any lessee or of his successor or successors to comply with the terms and conditions of the lease shall work a forfeiture of the same, to be declared by a court of competent jurisdiction.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out, after the word "Interior," line 11, page 1, the word "shall," and insert in lieu thereof the words "may in his discretion."

Strike out, after the word "of," line 1, page 2, the words "two thousand five hundred and sixty" and insert in lieu thereof "six hundred and forty." After the word "lease," on line 12, page 1, insert "on such reasonable terms and conditions as he may prescribe."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when the general leasing bill was passed it contained the provisions of this bill and a bill that was introduced by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]. The general leasing bill has gone to the Senate, but the calendar is quite congested over there, and there is some objection to it, and we do not know when it will pass. The House very generously let the gentleman from Idaho through with his bill, and I wondered if the gentleman from Illinois would not grant this bill the same courtesy, because they stand on the same status. Both have been passed by the Senate, both passed the House as a part of the leasing bill, and both appear on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. All that the gentleman says is true, but he has not stated all of the truth.

Mr. FERRIS. Then the gentleman can supplement any part that I have omitted.

Mr. MANN. The bill that we passed, now pending in the Senate, is the only bill that we have on that subject, and if that does not pass we have no law at all. In reference to the oil and gas lands, we have passed a law that is now on the statute books giving the Secretary of the Interior authority to make arrangements and dispose of oil and gas on the lands, putting it in quite a different situation from the other.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course; but I thought that the gentleman might let this go through the same as he did the other.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is true that we passed a temporary bill having to do with cases where oil had been developed or where it was difficult to dispose of the product, but that bill does not cover all of the cases which require legislative action. This bill covers some cases that are not in any way affected by the former legislation. In view of the fact that the general legislation pending in the Senate may not pass I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object to this going over if he is disposed to object to its consideration.

Mr. MANN. I have read in the Attorney General's report that there is a probability of various questions in reference to oil and gas lands being settled at an early day by the Supreme Court. I think it would be wiser under the circumstances, having passed a temporary bill, where the rights of all parties can be preserved—I think it would be wiser to await the permanent legislation until we know what the rights of the respective parties are under the decision of the courts.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want the gentleman from Illinois to labor under a misapprehension. The legislation already had does not cover all of the cases by any manner of means, nor can it cover all the cases. These are cases that need relief quite as much as cases affected by the other legislation. Of course, the gentleman can object if he sees fit, but I do not want him to object on the theory that we have already legislation on this subject covering all the cases which would be affected by the legislation.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact there were two bills, one for permanent legislation and one for a temporary relief. I objected to both of them, but finally upon the suggestion of various parties interested that they would not press this bill, I withdrew my objection to the other bill. Now, as soon as that is a law gentlemen say that furnishes no relief. That may be true, but that was not said at the time.

Mr MONDELL. The gentleman does not suggest that I was one of those.

Mr. MANN. No; but the gentleman was here all the time we were discussing it.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not help what others may have said or done.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wyoming is very quick to give information, and, as a rule, is very valuable in giving information.

Mr. MONDELL. The former legislation, as far as my constituents are concerned, is of very little value. This legislation, on the contrary, is quite important to them.

Mr. MANN. If there is any man in this House who looks out for his own constituents on every possible occasion, it is the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I thank the gentleman very kindly for that compliment. Now, if the gentleman will follow it up by giving me the opportunity at some future time of doing something for my constituents, by agreeing that this may remain on the calendar, I will appreciate his compliment very much more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. The gentleman from Wyoming did not make any request to pass the bill over without prejudice. I would not have objected to that.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I think I did.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman did not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But objection has been made.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman from Illinois made the objection, I understand, with the idea that no request had been made to have it go over. The gentleman can withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That rests with the gentleman from Illinois, and not the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, the Chair is in error about that. It is the constant practice where objection is made to a bill to ask unanimous consent that it remain on the calendar and be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the gentleman from Oklahome [Mr. FERRIS] submitted that request. I do also in an informal way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill under the rule can go back on the calendar if it is not objected to twice.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Oklahoma did make the request that the bill remain on the calendar without prejudice, I understood. I did not think it was necessary for me to again make that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the present occupant of the chair misunderstood. He came to the chair when the bill was being considered. Did the gentleman from Oklahoma make that request?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wyoming is in error about my making such a request; but I would like to prefer that request at this time, and I now ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted, out of order, to make that request.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the request is in order.

Mr. FERRIS. I wanted to obviate any question in regard to the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think a bill was passed with a sort of general understanding that because it was within the provisions of the general leasing bill it would be taken up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and on account of my absence I did not have an opportunity to object to it, or I would have done so.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman realizes that another bill in the same position as this was passed?

Mr. FOSTER. I feel that this bill ought to go off the calendar, and I therefore object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

CLAIMS UNDER INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MANN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, there is no need of reading this bill through. I suggest that the gentleman from Texas make his request to substitute the Senate bill for this.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for this bill the bill S. 2824—to strike out all after the enacting clause of this bill and substitute that bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants to ask unanimous consent that there be presented to the House Senate bill 2824, reported to the House, with the same right to object to its consideration.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill S. 2824 may be substituted for this bill, subject to the right to object to its consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois would still have the right to object to its consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. I know; but I may save time if I can get some information.

Mr. MANN. It will save time to have the Senate bill read now.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman can still object to its consideration after it is read.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that I shall. Is there any difference between the two bills?

Mr. MANN. There is a wide difference between the two bills. The Senate bill is quite unobjectionable, I think, while about 40 of us would object to the consideration of the House bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas to substitute the Senate bill 2824? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report Senate bill 2824.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of paragraph 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"First. That in all claims for property of citizens or inhabitants of the United States, except the claims of Indians heretofore or now in tribal relations, taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for, and in all adjudications under said act as now amended, the alienage of the claimant shall not be a defense to said claimant: Provided, That the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully within the Indian country: Provided further, That all cases heretofore filed under said act of March 3, 1891, and which have been dismissed by the court for want of proof of the citizenship of the claimant or alienage shall be reinstated and readjudicated in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the presentation of any other claims than those upon which suit has heretofore been brought in the Court of Claims: Provided further, That all acts and parts of acts in so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, before the Clerk reports the House amendment to the Senate bill I desire to state that in reporting the Senate bill to the House the House committee struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted the House bill, which is upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It is the intention of the friends of the measure—and that is the desire of the Committee on Indian Affairs—to consider the Senate bill as it passed the Senate, and to vote down the amendment recommended by the committee, that amendment being the House bill, which the Clerk was proceeding to read. I ask that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. The amendment does not have to be read now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The original Senate bill has been read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I would like to make a short statement in respect to the subject. We have had before the House at different times various propositions to reinstate a lot of claims growing out of Indian depredations and the House has refused to pass the bill. There has been quite a conflict about it. There were a great many reasons for dismissing the claims. In some of the cases the claimants developed that they were not American citizens. There was one case of a Delegate to this House, if I recall correctly, from New Mexico.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He was from Arizona, and his name was Campbell.

Mr. MANN. He was one of the claimants. He supposed that he was a citizen, but when the claim was tried it developed that he had never taken out citizenship papers. There were a great many cases growing out of citizenship owing to the admission of Texas where people supposed they were citizens, but under the law they were not citizens. This sort of a compromise has been reached, that the only claims that can be reinstated, as stated in the bill, are claims where the alienage of the claimants shall not be a defense to said claim. That is the only thing that is carried by the Senate bill—why the reinstatement of the claim is authorized. There are not very many of those cases, but all of them, I think, so far as I have ever investigated—and I have gone over this matter a great many times—had particular merit in them.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The report of the Department of Justice, through the Assistant Attorney General having charge of this matter, goes on to point out that in some of these cases the evidence has been developed showing the property was taken, making out a complete case.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARNER. Except for the fact that the party was not at that time, for some cause or other, under the decision of the Court of Claims, a citizen of the United States. And I might suggest another reason why I think these claims should all be put in one bill and put under the same category. There have been a number of claims passed through this House in the last 10 years, special cases that have gone through, that were no more meritorious than the general class covered by this bill.

Mr. MANN. There has never been any objection to these general bills.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. Does this Senate bill permit the filing of new claims?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman further——

Mr. MANN. Only those old claims filed many years ago.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It only reinstates the old cases dismissed because they were not citizens instead of inhabitants, and I will state to the gentleman here the words "citizens" and "inhabitants" have been used for 75 years, and during all the time these depredations were committed on the frontier an inhabitant was entitled to recover the same as a citizen, but by reason of recent decisions of the courts they have struck out the word "inhabitant" and we want that restored.

Mr. FINLEY. How did that change come about, by court decision and construction?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. By construction of the courts of the country and for the reason that these people were as much entitled as citizens this bill has been drafted and recommended. The report of the committee says:

In response to a letter by the former chairman of this committee, Senator WILLIAM J. STONE, the Attorney General, through Huston Thompson, Assistant Attorney General, on March 26, 1914, stated with reference to the present bill as follows:

"As to the attitude taken with respect to bills similar to Senate bill 2824 by the Assistant Attorneys General formerly in charge of this work, I can only say they have neither advocated nor opposed the passage of such bills, but have contented themselves with presenting the facts to Congress. All laws on this subject, commencing with the act of May 19, 1796, prior to the act of March 3, 1891, provided for the recovery by citizens and inhabitants; therefore bills proposing to remove this jurisdictional requirement do not contemplate new legislation, but merely restore a right that had previously existed.

"HUSTON THOMPSON,
"Assistant Attorney General."

That is what the Assistant Attorney General says.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, will the gentleman answer this question: There is no question of interest involved in these claims, is there?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. None whatever.

Mr. FINLEY. What about attorneys' fees? To what extent is that proposition involved in this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is a matter between the man who has a claim against the Government and his attorney the same as any private party.

Mr. GARNER. I will state to the gentleman that these claims are on the same basis as to attorneys' fees as all other claims that come under the Indian depredation act. The original contracts were made and suits filed, and when the Court of Claims decided that an inhabitant was not entitled to recover under that statute the claim would have to be left on the docket.

Mr. FINLEY. What are the numbers of these claims?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They aggregate about $300,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the Chair get the parliamentary situation straightened out for a moment before gentlemen continue. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the reading of House amendment to Senate bill 2824 be dispensed with and that the amendment be disagreed to and that Senate bill 2824 may be considered, subject to the right of objection. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now the matter before the House, subject to objection, is Senate bill 2824.

Mr. FINLEY. Reserving the right to object, about what is the number of these claims?

Mr. GARNER. I do not know; but the Department of Justice, according to Mr. Thompson, special attorney, who looks after these cases, estimates about $300,000, or not exceeding $300,000 is my recollection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me state to the gentleman, if the gentleman will permit, that the Attorney General reports that in his opinion, included in report submitted under date of March 26, 1914, that the probable increased liability, if this amendment was adopted, would be about $300,000.

Mr. FINLEY. And the claimants, I presume, a majority are long since dead?

Mr. GARNER. A great many of them are; yes.

Mr. FINLEY. I will ask the gentleman if he has any other knowledge than that contained in the Attorney General's report?

Mr. GARNER. I will state to the gentleman from South Carolina: I know this, that a man who has acted as foreman of the grand jury, one of the most prominent citizens in the county, is not entitled to recover under this law on account of the fact that he came to this country when he was only 2 years old, and it occurred to me that this Government owed him the same protection that it owed to either the gentleman from South Carolina or myself.

Mr. FINLEY. I will ask this: Was it occasioned by changes in the immigration laws?

Mr. GARNER. It is a decision of the court, I do not know exactly the reason.

Mr. MANN. I think somebody ought to state this: A number of these Indian depredation claims which were dismissed very largely were dismissed for a great many different reasons. Now, practically this pending proposition it is understood, and if it is not so understood by any gentleman here I hope he will deny it, that if this bill passes, if it does pass, authorizing the reinstatement only where alienage is involved, that there would not be pressed any legislation for the reinstatement of any other claims.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. I want to say for myself—I do not know how long I will remain a Member of this body—but I have agreed, and I try to carry out my agreements in good faith, I not only will not ask for them to be considered, but I will object and try to defeat them, although some of my constituents are interested in them. And there is a very good reason. I can not conceive in my mind how it is possible that anyone can urge a good objection to this Government giving the same protection to an inhabitant which it gives to one of its own citizens, whereas I can conceive where the Government is at amity with Indians there is good reason they should not be held responsible.

Mr. MANN. The claims where the question of amity arises which were dismissed I think amount to millions of dollars.

Mr. FINLEY. That is included in this bill?

Mr. MANN. That is included in this bill; and it is the understanding—and I state again—both here and in the other body, that if this bill passes the bills for the other claimants are not to be pressed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is as I understand it. If unanimous consent for the consideration is given now, it is limited to cases where citizenship is the sole bar.

Mr. MANN. That is the only ground upon which the claims were rejected.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the bill H. R. 22, that I called up, was a bill that I introduced several years ago, and I have done everything in my power to put it through. I see that it is impossible to do so. This is the best that we can do, and therefore I withdraw my bill and agree to the Senate bill.

Mr. FINLEY. As I understand, the gentleman from Texas is willing to take this bill without pressing the Senate bill now or hereafter?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. That is the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill S. 2824?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, I would like some information. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] asked some question with reference to these probable claimants who have claims upon the Government, as to whether these are old claims that date back for a hundred years or so. There are no direct settlers living to-day, and it is only a matter of getting money out of the Treasury that goes to pay a lot of claimants' agents who have been hanging around the Capitol trying to get these claims through.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman, in answer to the first part of the gentleman's question, that it was said on March 26, 1914, that the probable increased liability in this amendment, if it should be adopted, would be about $300,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that. The question I want to know is, What information can the gentleman give the House in reference to the probable claims—whether they are old claims or not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No new claims can be filed at all. This is the end.

Mr. GARNER. If my colleague will permit me, these claims have all originated since the Civil War and most of the claimants are from 75 to 85 years of age. So far as my observation and experience go, they are largely in Texas. These claimants, or a larger portion of them, are old men still living, and there are a few cases where their heirs are still living. I do not believe there is 5 per cent of this money that will not go to the parties interested or to their descendants.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment providing that no attorney should receive a greater compensation than 10 per cent of the amount?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman the attorneys' fees are managed in this way: The court requests that in all of these claims the contract shall be signed by the parties, and there is an agreement as to the percentage. If the court thinks the agreement is reasonable they let them have it, and otherwise they do not.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble is that these men go out and gather up 30 to 50 per cent of the claims and hammer the life out of Members of Congress trying to get the bills passed, and the persons who have suffered losses get nothing. The claimants wake up to the fact that these claim agents get the largest part. It is a great deal like the old French spoliation claims. They make them believe that there is a whole lot of money, whereas if they got all of it and it was divided up there would not be over $5 apiece.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman let me read him this from the bill?—

Provided further, That all cases heretofore filed under said act of March 3, 1891, and which have been dismissed by the court for want of proof of the citizenship of the claimant or alienage shall be reinstated and readjudicated in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the presentation of any other claims than those upon which suit has heretofore been brought in the Court of Claims.

These are old cases, and there were very few of them. The claims do not amount to more than $300,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentlemen from Illinois yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I am in hearty accord with his position in reference to preventing unconscionable fees being collected, and especially where it is taking money from Indians. But here are a number of cases that were prosecuted in the Court of Claims by lawyers probably under contract with their clients for contingent fees. Now, after having gone through the courts, and finally having to go back to the courts, if this legislation is enacted, without having any information or knowledge as to what fee they are to receive, I think the gentleman will see that they ought to receive whatever fee their clients contracted to pay to them. They are not Indians, they are not incompetents, but are able to make their own contracts and ought to live up to them.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is a poor policy to vote money out of the Treasury in that way——

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri calls for the regular order. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BORLAND. I will, if the gentleman really wants any further information.

Mr. FOSTER. I am trying to get some information.

Mr. BORLAND. All right; go ahead.

Mr. FOSTER. The only thing about these claims is this, that practically all of this $300,000 that is estimated to be taken out of the Treasury to pay these claims is practically all to be paid out to claim agents, and I do not believe it is good policy for Congress to allow that.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I have seen a number of these contracts. Of course, I can not give testimony as to the contracts that I have not seen, but I know some of my constituents have made these contracts—made them years ago—15 or 20 years ago—and all the contracts that I have seen bear 15 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, that is not unreasonable.

Mr. GARNER. I want to state this fact further to the gentleman from Illinois, that these cases have nearly all been proven up. They are simply lying there awaiting the passage of this law, in order that the courts may take into consideration the facts that have all been proven in court.

I will say further that most of these cases that I have investigated show conclusively that the property was taken, and the courts have found the amount due, except that they can not render judgment on account of the condition of the law. Under these conditions I do not think that new contracts would be made by my constituents or by anybody else's constituents.

Mr. FOSTER Mr. Speaker, upon the statement of my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that he has seen some of these contracts, and that they call for 15 per cent—probably not an unreasonable fee—I am going to withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] withdraws his objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I very much dislike to object to this bill, and probably will not, but this is a practice that ought not to be permitted. Here is a bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, accompanied by a committee report. A Senate bill is now proposed to be substituted for the House bill, and it is proposed to adopt the Senate bill, which the House committee itself has not recommended should pass, but instead has reported an entirely different bill. Now, I do not know but that this bill is meritorious throughout, but when we go through bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and come to the bill H. R. 22, see it bristling full of objections, we do not take the time to go into all the details of the bill. Some parts may be meritorious, but we can not examine them in detail, and for that reason we do not pay careful consideration to all of the details of the bill when as a whole it is objectionable.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. My recollection was—and I will ask the gentleman [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] in charge of the bill whether it is not a fact—that the committee did really authorize the reporting of the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill. Did not the Committee on Indian Affairs do that? That is my recollection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The original bill, H. R. 22, was reported by the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Here is a bill of 12 pages, and only one-half of one page is devoted to this question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That bill has been voted down. The bill now before the House is a Senate bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The Committee on Indian Affairs is in favor of amending the present law so as to permit the adjudication of cases of nonjoinder and amity and alienage that failed to pass the House. The House refused to pass such cases. When the bill went to the Senate committee they amended the Senate bill so as to include all three of those characters of cases.

Now, then, knowing that this bill can not become a law, knowing that the judgment of the Committee on Indian Affairs can not be carried into effect, we tried to arrive at a compromise with those gentlemen who were opposing this character of legislation so as to get that portion of it that was unobjectionable. This is the only method we have to amend this bill now, and the sending of it back to the Senate will possibly or probably defeat the entire legislation, so that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] conceived the idea that the most practical and expedient way would be to substitute the Senate bill for this bill and pass the Senate bill.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman does not get my point. No Member of the House could have any notice of what matter was coming up under a practice of this kind. This is my objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Well, it seems to me that anyone would have full notice of what was coming up, although I may be mistaken. The House bill that was reported and the committee amendment to the Senate bill as reported provided that the alienage of the claimant or the want of amity in defendant Indians should not be considered as a bar against the claimant. That matter has been before the House repeatedly. I have quite a bunch of bills and reports thereon that have been before the House in previous Congresses. To those who have watched the matter it was very plain what they cover. That whole question is involved in the proposition.

Now, the committee are willing to say that they will throw out the want of amity as a lack of defense and leave that as a defense. Involved in most of the claims is the question of whether the Indians were in amity with the United States or not. Only the question of alienage is left. Now that whole matter is presented in both the House bill that was reported and in the committee amendment to the Senate bill that was reported, so that the whole matter is before anyone who has given any attention to it, and that, I think, is fair notice to every Member of the House.

The gentleman from Wisconsin would not claim that if the House has before it a bill that covers three matters it would not be in order as a matter of unanimous consent to pass a bill covering only one of the three?

Mr. LENROOT. No; but the gentleman certainly must see that with respect to a bill upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, involving a great many propositions, no Member is under any assumption that if there is one item in the bill that may be meritorious that is the one that is going to be considered and all the rest thrown away. He makes his objection to the bill as a whole, and when he sees several objectionable features to a bill he very naturally does not go to the minutiæ of whether one particular item in the bill may be meritorious or not.

Mr. MANN. I should think he would, especially a careful man like my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Wisconsin does not.

Mr. MANN. I know I do. I think now that the gentleman from Wisconsin has never taken any interest in this bill in the past.

Mr. LENROOT. I am frank to say that I have not much information about it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has probably never given it particular attention. Those who have given it particular attention in opposition to the claim think that the Government really, by the passage of this bill, wins a great victory. I made a very exhaustive study of this matter some years ago and fought the claim when the bill was reported, and I have some of my memoranda here now. No one else was in opposition to the bill, except the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], but we beat the bill in the House in the discussion of it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who I know has given a great deal of attention to this question, and confident as I am that the bill as proposed is meritorious, I will not object; but I do want to serve notice now that I believe the practice that has been indulged in with reference to this bill is a bad practice, and in the future I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend, on page 2, line 7, by striking out the word "claimant" and inserting the word "claim."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "claimant" and insert the word "claim."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 22 be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that House bill 22 be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BELL OF THE LATE U. S. S "PRINCETON."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 58) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to loan the bell of the late U. S. S. Princeton to the borough of Princeton, N. J.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan to the borough of Princeton, N. J., the bell of the old U. S. S. Princeton, which the Navy Department loaned the borough of Princeton for use in the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of the borough.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, why and on what conditions is it proposed to do this?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I have no knowledge of this bill, except that I see it is unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that the report is drawn by the chairman of that committee [Mr. PADGETT]. I know that there was a lamentable explosion on the Princeton about the year 1843, killing a great many prominent people, among them, I think, the Secretary of the Navy. I suppose the bell of that vessel would not be used on any other ship after that.

Mr. MANN. When is the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of the borough of Princeton?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That was some time ago. The bell was loaned to the borough of Princeton at that time, and it is now proposed apparently to make a perpetual loan of this bell, which is obviously not a very large article. I will ask the Clerk to read the report.

Mr. MANN. You need not have the report read on my account. Unless somebody makes an explanation, I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MANN. In the absence of anybody to look after the bill——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Then, I will ask that it be laid over.

Mr. MANN. If they wanted to give this bell outright to the borough of Princeton, I do not know that I would object. I am not in favor of loaning it without knowing anything about the conditions on which it is proposed to be loaned.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us give it to them.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Offer an amendment to give it to them.

Mr. MANN. No; I will not do that.

Mr. FOSTER. I will offer it, if the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. I will not object, if you will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to change the word "loan" to "donate."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to strike out, in line 4, the word "loan" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "donate." Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, will it not be necessary, then, to say "without expense to the Government of the United States"?

Mr. MANN. I think that would be proper.

Mr. BORLAND. If those words are put in, I shall not object.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no expense to the Government. You do not need to do that.

Mr. BORLAND. It is better to add those words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think this amendment ought to be agreed to without the concurrence of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. They will have no objection to it. They want to give this bell to the borough of Princeton.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Does the gentleman represent the committee that reported the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. No; but I will take the responsibility of saying that it is satisfactory to them. It is just intended as a memento.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask my colleague if he does not think we ought to change the word "loaned," in line 6, to "presented"?

Mr. MANN. No; it was loaned at that time. That is merely descriptive.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, that is right.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will venture to suggest that the title of the joint resolution ought to be amended.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "loan" in the title and to insert the word "donate."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to strike out the word "loan" where it appears in the title and to insert the word "donate." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL ENGINEERING CONGRESS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 307, authorizing the President to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Engineering Congress to be held at San Francisco, Cal., September 20 to 25, inclusive, 1915.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Engineering Congress to be held at San Francisco, Cal., September 20 to 25, inclusive, 1915: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted for the expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with the said congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this is to authorize the President to extend invitations to nations to appoint delegates to an international engineering congress. How many congresses which are international in character are to be held in San Francisco during the Panama Exposition?

Mr. KAHN. I have not the exact number on hand, but I understand that there will be 10 or 15 international congresses.

Mr. MANN. The officials of the Panama Exposition claim that there will be many more; but, of course, we expect some exaggeration about that. The officers of the exposition say that there is to be a congress every day.

Mr. KAHN. That is true, but they are not all international. Many are State congresses; some congresses embrace a number of States. I believe there is a congress of the League of Municipalities in the United States. The number of international congresses is rather limited. Now, the International Congress of Engineers, as I understand, is a fixed body and has periodical meetings in various parts of the world. This is possibly the first time the organization is to hold a convention in the United States.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, there are many international congresses. Is it expected to pass a separate resolution for each one, to have the President invite them, or can some come without having an invitation while others require an invitation? Would it not be better to give to the President the authority in one resolution to invite Governments to participate in any congress?

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, these organizations, when they hold their meetings in foreign countries, extend invitations through the Governments of those foreign countries. Some correspondence that I have had with officers of the International Engineering Congress would indicate to me that it has been customary in the past to receive invitations from foreign Governments for the sending of delegates. I understand that Col. Goethals is now and has been for some years the president ex officio of this congress; that it has an international standing; and that even some of the belligerent Governments will send engineers, or, rather, give its engineers from the respective countries credentials as delegates to this congress.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, where a Government invites delegates to a congress it imposes certain obligations on the part of the Government extending the invitations. This resolution says that the Government is responsible for the invitation, but when the delegates get here the Government is not responsible for their being properly taken care of. I fear that the Panama Exposition may become bankrupt before it is over. Of course I hope that it will not.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to my friend from Illinois that never in the history of California has that State undertaken anything that has been a failure. The exposition at San Francisco is the most beautiful that has ever been constructed on this mundane sphere, and I say that with a full knowledge of the magnificent exposition that was held at Chicago, and the splendid one that was held at St. Louis, and the other expositions that have been held in various parts of the world. The people of California are known the world over for their hospitality.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think that this could in anyway add to the financial injury of the exposition because the engineers in the great countries in Europe are otherwise engaged and would not attend?

Mr. KAHN. We have positive information that the great countries will send delegates if the invitation is extended. I want to say that France, even when she is at war, has sent her architects to San Francisco to put up her building and install her exhibit.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman from California suggest some way that a poor man can get out and see the exposition?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Illinois might be appointed as a delegate.

Mr. KAHN. I feel satisfied that there will be no difficulty in getting out there for those who want to go, and I know that everyone who does go will come back delighted and instructed.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say that my experience with California has been that it is one of the greatest States in the Union, and one of the most enterprising lot of people anywhere in the country. They are conducting simultaneously two great expositions in that State, and unless it was a great State they could not do that with the rivalry between them.

Mr. KAHN. There is no rivalry between the expositions; one is the complement of the other. They have a different scope, like the two that were held in Italy two years ago.

Mr. MANN. I do not think we ought to go into the business of having the Government invite delegates to every congress that chooses to meet. There is no information given in the report in this case, absolutely none at all. I do not see why the delegates can not come if the foreign countries appoint them, if San Francisco wants to pay the bill. They will probably have no difficulty in getting delegates to any congress. I can see no object in the Government starting in and inviting delegates to come from abroad and then not even knowing that they are here. Objection was made this morning to a similar resolution, not at San Francisco, but at another exposition in California.

Mr. KAHN. That was not at an exposition in California; it was at Riverside.

Mr. MANN. I did not know that you had cut Riverside out of California.

Mr. KAHN. We have not; but there is no exposition there; there is to be a display of oranges, but is not an exposition.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think that in the case of engineers of the character, reputation, and fame of Col. Goethals, whose fame is not only national but international, it would not be anything derogatory to the Congress to pass a simple resolution, which would involve no obligation and cost the Government nothing, inviting the great engineers of other countries who have also international reputations? It would be merely an act of politeness on the part of this great Government.

Mr. MANN. We do not even appoint delegates ourselves to attend this engineers' congress. Here is a proposition to have the Government invite foreign nations to do it, and when they come here there is nobody to meet them at the trains.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But they come by boat.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman know they come by boat?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There is no other way.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The United States is not entirely surrounded by water. There will be a great many of them come from Canada; in fact, that is where the most of them would come from.

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, there are organizations of engineers in every one of the States, and no doubt they will have committees to meet these gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that they will, without any invitation being extended by the General Government.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think the gentleman wants to put any obstacles in the way of having this done.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to put any obstacles in the way of this congress, but this is a mere fancy on the part of somebody connected with the engineering congress. The other international congresses get along without it.

Mr. KAHN. The information that I have is that it is customary in extending invitations to this particular congress to have the invitation issued by the Governments where the congresses are to be held.

Mr. MANN. We have extended an invitation to delegates from South America to attend congresses in the United States this year, and it was said that it would cost $30,000 or $40,000. I may be wrong about the amount. We appropriated the money, and now we have a supplemental estimate that it will cost in the neighborhood of $80,000 more. That is the way it goes.

Mr. KAHN. This does not call for any appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I know that it does not, but if we receive people we must see that they are properly provided for in some way.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will recall that when the matter was up before, especially at the other end of the Capitol, there was some complaint that the foreign guests had not been properly treated at former expositions, and the city of San Francisco promptly requested that the State Department designate somebody who would act in a semiofficial character, to represent the State Department and the Government. There has never been a single complaint since that time that a single representative of a single foreign Government has received any but the most courteous and most kindly treatment at San Francisco, and they have all come away from there delighted with their visit and fulsome in their expressions of appreciation of the courteous and kind treatment that had been extended them.

Mr. MANN. I know our Government has appointed a few people, and has made the Panama Exposition pay for them, to dance attendance upon some of these people. We have a bunch of fellows on the pay roll in that way, and I think it is a disgrace to the country and to the Panama Exposition Co.

Mr. KAHN. There are not many on the exposition pay roll.

Mr. MANN. I do not know, but you are paying for them. We have not made any appropriation, and they are drawing their salaries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the resolution will be stricken from the calendar.

CREATION OF COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2337) to create the coast guard by combining therein the existing Life-Saving Service and Revenue-Cutter Service.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MANN (interrupting the reading). I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

SALE OF LANDS IN LYMAN COUNTY, S. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11318) authorizing the sale of lands in Lyman County, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell for cash, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the unallotted, unreserved, and unentered lands in Lyman County, S. Dak., being lands formerly in the part of the Sioux Indian Reservation which was restored to the public domain by the act of March 2, 1889.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 7, strike out the words "being lands."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to have some explanation of the bill and how it will affect the public domain.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this bill affects 10,640 acres of land in Lyman County, S. Dak.

Mr. FINLEY. To whom does it belong now?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Lyman County was a part of the area ceded by the Indians in 1889, and opened to settlement under the homestead laws. The land has been subject to entry under the homestead laws since 1889, and all of it has been entered and patented many years ago except 10,640 acres.

Mr. FINLEY. Under what authority of law?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Under the homestead law.

Mr. FINLEY. Then what is the necessity of coming here now?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. These lands are isolated. They are located in the hills, rough and rocky, and can not be disposed of under the homestead laws.

Mr. FINLEY. How could they be entered and patented under the law if that is so?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. These lands have not been entered and patented. They are a part of the public domain. Nobody will take them because of their character. They are not lands that are susceptible of making a living on, considering the number of acres that a person is restricted to who makes a homestead entry.

Mr. FINLEY. About what is the value of the lands per acre?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume these lands will sell anywhere from $2 to $3 or $4 an acre. I want to say to the gentleman that in the bills that have passed Congress in the last 10 years disposing of surplus lands in Indian reservations we have provided that after so many years—in one instance four years and in others seven years—all of the lands that had not been filed upon should be sold at public sale to the highest bidder; and in a number of reservations that has been done. but there is no provision of law for disposing of these remnants.

Mr. FINLEY. Of Indian lands.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Of what were formerly Indian lands that were ceded to the Government, paid for by the Government, and which have been open to entry under the homestead laws and the provisions of the free-homestead law since May 17, 1900, and nobody has taken them or applied for them, and just so long as there is no legislation these tracts will remain public domain, doing nobody any good, and there is no way by which they can be acquired.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I incorrectly understood the gentleman when I took it that these lands had been patented under the laws of the United States.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, not at all. The balance of the lands have been acquired. These are only the remnants.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, is not this true, that these lands were set off to the Indians and since that time the county line has been changed?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not at all; and the Indians have no interest, directly or otherwise, in them.

Mr. FINLEY. And the money will go into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The money will go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, what is the proposition, to sell them as a whole?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not at all; under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and I will say to the gentleman they are small tracts of 40 acres and in some instances of a few hundred acres, possibly not to exceed a section or two in any one place, perhaps not as much as that.

Mr. FINLEY. There is no limit to the price that the Secretary may fix?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No limit whatever.

Mr. FINLEY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this land has been subject to homestead entry at 50 cents an acre for a number of years, as I understand.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me correct the gentleman. That is the price paid in commutations, but if the settler lived upon the land for five years he could acquire title without paying the 50 cents since May, 1900, when the free-homes act was passed.

Mr. MANN. All I know about it is in the report, which says:

And lands which have not been disposed of within five years from the taking effect of the act were disposed of at 50 cents per acre, entrymen being required to comply with the homestead laws.

So my statement is correct if the statement of the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior Department is correct. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will call the gentleman's attention to the same report from which he has just read, on page 2, to the words where it says:

The act of May 13, 1900, relieves the settler of the payment of said price.

Mr. MANN. Then it has been subject to homestead entry without any price?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Since 1900.

Mr. MANN. Having been for many years subject to be taken at 50 cents an acre, they could not find anybody to take it and then proposed to give title and could not find anybody to take it up. Now, what is it worth? I understood the gentleman to say some of it is worth $3 or $4 an acre. This might all be sold to one man under the terms of this bill for 10 cents an acre.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman accept a little practical information about how these remnants of land work out?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is what I want to state to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I was raised in a public-land country, and I know how it works out.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman will recall the opening of Gregory County, a part of the Rosebud Reservation, which was the first bill since we adopted the new policy of disposing of surplus land in Indian reservations.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That bill, I will say to the gentleman, provided that after four years all lands remaining undisposed of should be sold—the same as this bill—and the lands that were not taken by homesteaders were sold for an average price of about $4.87 an acre.

Mr. MANN. Those were little odd pieces of land——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is what these are.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether these are or not, and the gentleman says they will not be taken under homestead entry. That is not the situation here, as I understand it at all—I may be incorrect, but these are little odd lands where a man who had a homestead bought it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Many were bought by speculators.

Mr. MANN. Now, these lands the gentleman said are very bad—rough and rocky——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is true.

Mr. MANN. And you can not homestead. If that is the case there is no homestead right next to them. I think there ought to be some knowledge about the value of these lands and some restrictions about some one buying all of them.

Mr. FERRIS. On that point I want to suggest to the gentleman——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me say this to the gentleman: The reason why this bill is thrown open as it is is that the Secretary of the Interior may have full discretion to dispose of the land under such terms as he thinks are practical and to avoid future legislation. There is not enough land involved here to make it necessary to legislate again, and that is the theory of legislating as we did in bills that have passed heretofore with reference to disposing of the lands that would not be taken under the homestead law; and, as I have stated, it has worked satisfactorily, and all the remnants and isolated tracts have been sold at prices averaging $4 to $5 an acre, and they could not be disposed of under the homestead laws even though the price was only $2.50 an acre. Nobody would take them under the homestead laws at any price.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FERRIS. On several occasions since I have lived in the new State of Oklahoma we have had occurrences similar to this where Indian lands were sold and the proceeds put in the Treasury, and the Government went ahead and opened the lands and the lands dwindled down to only a few fragments—in this instance there are only 10,000 acres—and to leave these remnants hanging there is just an invitation for surrounding communities and towns to take advantage of and to fight and squabble over.

Now, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has come in with a bill here that is perfectly fair and square, and it authorizes the sale of these remnant lands under rules and regulations to be proposed by the department. What the department will do will be to send out some competent man and have the lands appraised, and put them up and sell them on competitive bids. But the lands nearly always bring more than they are worth, and I have seen lands sold through the department under the competitive plan that two or three years later, with many improvements on them, sold for less than they brought at the sale. I think the gentleman from South Dakota has adopted the right method to get rid of this scrap land and get the money into the Treasury and not leave it for the citizens to fight for. I can see no earthly objection to the bill. I think it is a matter that ought to be cleaned up. I think this is the correct way to do it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MONEYS TO SCHOOL DISTRICTS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 16738, to provide for the payment of certain moneys to school districts in Oklahoma.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all moneys heretofore paid for lands sold by the Government for town-site purposes at the price of $10 per acre under section 22 of the act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890, and under the act entitled "An act providing for the commutation for town-site purposes of homestead entries in certain portions of Oklahoma," approved March 11, 1902, which have not already been paid to the proper municipal authorities shall be paid to the proper authorities of the several school districts in which the lands for which such moneys were paid are located; and the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to cause such payments to be made out of the funds arising from such sales.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, upon what theory is the Government under any obligation to pay this money over?

Mr. FERRIS. The law provided for the opening of town sites, and that the money should be paid to the school districts as fast as it was collected. It was under the act of March 11, 1902, and under the act of May 2, 1890, two different kinds of town sites. The proceeds from all but 12 of them have been turned over to the school districts that were entitled to them. This treats the remaining 12 as the others were treated. This is a department bill. The report is short, and I know the gentleman is familiar with it. I think it gives all the information that I have.

Mr. MANN. I have read the department report.

Mr. FERRIS. I was satisfied the gentleman had done so.

Mr. MANN. We had provided that lands for town sites should be reserved, and provided that the money derived from the sale of those should be paid to the municipalities for school purposes, as I recall it——

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Now, we find that some of those reservations are not required for town sites at all, and they have been taken up for other purposes. Is not that the case?

Mr. FERRIS. That is about it.

Mr. MANN. And you now propose to pay that money to the school authorities?

Mr. FERRIS. As the gentleman knows, town sites are opened up throughout the new country here and there irrespective of railway facilities. Along came the railroad, and the railroad established railroad town sites near by, and everybody pulled up stakes from the Government town site and set up shop on the railroad town site, and there are oftentimes towns within that township, the same settlers and the same occupants, and they build quite a successful little town in the same community. For instance, in the little town of Pruitt, in my own community, plots, lots, and so forth, were filed for a Government town, and they went through the regular procedure, and along came the Frisco Railroad and missed that town by a mile. The townsite people would not do anything with the Government town site, and they opened the little town of Cache near by. That town is right in the middle of Indian allotments, which are just as thick as hair up and down the creek. And the town and township need this money now just as badly with Cache as the town site as they would had the town of Pruitt survived. There are 12 instances of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Will they get the money? The original town site was in one place.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. I think it will be all right. The department thinks so.

Mr. MANN. And the land sold was to go to schools in that town?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now they locate a town somewhere else, and it seems they are not in the same school district. It is proposed to pay the money realized from the sale of that land to the school district in which the land is located, although the town might not be in that school district.

Mr. FERRIS. The department drew this bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. That does not prove it was well drawn.

Mr. FERRIS. It says:

To pay the proper authorities of the several school districts in which the lands for which such moneys were paid are located; and the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to cause such payments to be made out of the funds arising from such sales.

If the gentleman has any amendment which he thinks would make it accomplish more fully what we want to accomplish, I would be glad if he would offer it. It seems to me, however, that the language offered is sufficient. It reads:

Which have not already been paid to the proper municipal authorities shall be paid to the proper authorities in the several school districts in which the lands for which said moneys were paid are located.

This makes them pay it to the proper authorities of the school districts in that particular town or township.

Mr. MANN. Well, it may be all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF OFFICERS OF PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1281) providing for the retirement of certain officers of the Philippine Scouts.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. LOUIS RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17762) to amend an act approved February 20, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the Interstate Transfer Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota."

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] if he wants to ask that the bill be passed over?

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman desires to ask that it be passed over I am willing.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill 17762 and the bill 15727, the succeeding bill on the calendar, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] asks unanimous consent that the House bill 15727 be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Both of them.

Mr. MILLER. H. R. 17762 and H. R. 15727.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And also the bill H. R. 17762. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

COMMISSION TO SURVEY CRATER BATTLE FIELD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill [H. R. 13923] authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to designate, define, and survey the battle field of the Crater at Petersburg, Va., and to collect certain data concerning the same and make report thereupon.

The bill was read, with a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WATSON. I was going to ask, Mr. Speaker, that the consideration of this bill go over to-day. It can be taken up at some other time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MAJ. CLYDE S. FORD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill [H. R. 15418] authorizing Maj. Clyde S. Ford, Medical Corps, to accept and wear the decoration tendered him by the Ottoman and Bulgarian Governments for services rendered in the Balkan wars.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to authorize an Army officer to accept a decoration. There are a great many of these decorations which have been tendered to Army and Navy officers and other officers of the Government that are up here in the State Department. Since I have been a Member of Congress I think no one has been authorized to accept one. I am not opposing allowing officers to accept decorations where it is proper. It may be proper in this case. But I am opposed, after refusing for years some of our best officers the privilege of accepting them, to singling out one man now and saying he may accept one.

I recently introduced a resolution reading as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the House of Representatives a list of decorations, medals, and other presents tendered to the officers of the United States, now held in the State Department.

That would be information that would tell us what there is up there. That resolution has been pending quietly in a pigeonhole in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which reported this bill, since October 7 last, and until I can get the information or at least have the resolution considered, I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CLAIMS OF THE UNITED STATES AGAINST THE STATE OF TENNESSEE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (S. J. Res. 65) to amend Senate joint resolution 34, approved May 12, 1898, entitled "Joint resolution providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee and certain claims against the United States."

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution to amend Senate joint resolution 34, approved May 12, 1898, entitled "Joint resolution providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee and certain claims against the United States."

Whereas the resolution in the caption mentioned, being Senate joint resolution 34, approved May 12, 1898, providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States and of the State of Tennessee, provides that the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War of the United States, as representatives of the United States, and agents or commissioners to be appointed by the State of Tennessee, as representatives of the State, shall proceed by conference to compromise, adjust, and settle the claims in the resolution mentioned, but that the compromise or settlement shall not be effective as final until approved by Congress; and

Whereas at conference held between said representatives they have been unable to proceed because the said representatives of the United States have insisted that the settlement or compromise of the claims of the State of Tennessee under said Senate joint resolution 34 should be precluded by the consideration that the State of Tennessee was during the Civil War, in the resolution mentioned, a public enemy and in rebellion, and not entitled to compensation for any losses suffered by reason of the action of the United States in suppressing such rebellion; and

Whereas it was the true intent and purpose of said resolution to provide for the compromise, adjustment, and settlement of all the matters in the resolution mentioned, upon terms that would do equal and exact justice to the parties, on the merits of their claims; and

Whereas it is not deemed just that the consideration of the claims of Tennessee should, or can be, precluded, or the same disallowed upon the ground that the State was a public enemy and in rebellion: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said Senate joint resolution 34 be, and is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following, namely:

"The claims of the parties respectively shall be considered, adjusted, and settled on their merits without regard to any question of loyalty or disloyalty, and upon such terms as to amounts and allowance of interest as shall do equal and impartial justice to the parties. The said compromise or settlement is not to be effective or final until approved by Congress."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, a good many years ago a commission was appointed, consisting of the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War, to adjust the matter of claims between the United States and the State of Tennessee. One resolution was passed a few years ago giving them additional power. It is proposed now to pass this resolution, which destroys the defense of the Government as to loyalty on the part of Tennessee.

When this matter was passed through the Senate I asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] to go to the Attorney General's office and obtain information in regard to it. There was no information available; not very much, at least in the debates on the passage of the resolution in the Senate, and although a report has been made to the House there is not very much information in the report of the committee to the House. The gentleman from Iowa went to the Attorney General's office, and, if I remember aright, the Attorney General then was from the State of Tennessee, and that office declined to give the gentleman from Iowa any information. Until we can obtain information concerning it from the Attorney General's office I am not willing to pass, by unanimous consent, a resolution which relinquishes practically all the claim that the Government of the United States has against the State of Tennessee.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. I am aware that the gentlemen representing the State of Tennessee are not to be held responsible for this failure on the part of the Attorney General; and yet where else are we to get the information? This is a very complicated matter. It is in the papers in the hands of the Attorney General, and although a resolution was pending affecting the matter in Congress, he declined to permit these papers to be examined in his office.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any reason that could exist that would prevent the Attorney General from giving such information, in response to the gentleman's request, as he asked for, but I am very much of the opinion that the Attorney General was not supplied with the information that was sought.

This controversy is of such a character that I do not think the facts in the matter appear in the Department of Justice. I can not understand why they should be there. It is a controversy growing out of some claims between the State of Tennessee and the United States that have not been adjudicated or adjusted. There has been no proceeding that I can think of that would cause the facts in this case to be in the Department of Justice. Now, this is an old claim which has been on hand a long time which the Government has against the State of Tennessee for some bonds and other indebtedness, but as against which the State of Tennessee claims an offset.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Since 1868 the Attorney General has been on a commission to settle these claims. Do I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that he thinks that although this commission has been in existence since 1868 it has no information on the subject?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I think that the commission, consisting of two different Attorneys General before the one of whom the gentleman made his inquiry and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury, never reached the point where they could ascertain the facts in this controversy, because they concluded that inasmuch as the offset claimed by the State of Tennessee arose out of matters that occurred chiefly during the war they were confronted with the question of the disloyalty of the State of Tennessee; and because of the State being disloyal they concluded that there was no occasion to go into the merits of the controversy or to ascertain what the real facts were. They stopped right on the threshold of the investigation, and never ascertained the facts or merits of the controversy. All this resolution seeks to do——

Mr. MANN. This resolution seeks to relinquish entirely the rights of the United States.

Mr. HOUSTON. No; I do not think that is a fair conclusion. All the resolution does——

Mr. MANN. Why certainly; that is what it is for.

Mr. HOUSTON. It only provides that these commissioners shall meet three commissioners appointed on the part of the State of Tennessee, and that they shall examine the equities of the parties in these claims and counterclaims; that they shall see what the real differences and what the equities of the parties are, and it proposes that that shall be done without regard to the question of loyalty or disloyalty. It further provides that the action of this commission shall not be final, but that it shall be reserved for Congress to pass upon this question. Now, this matter was up before the Senate and passed the Senate unanimously.

Mr. MANN. Without any information being presented to the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think there was a statement made to the Senate by the Senator from Tennessee that fully answered the demands of the occasion. Several Senators made inquiries, investigated it, and they were satisfied——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands that I do not desire to reflect upon the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly not.

Mr. MANN. But here is a case where there is a controversy, and it all hinges upon whether the Government had the right to deed some railroad property which belonged to a State that had voted to secede. That is the question in controversy. Now you propose to say that in considering the claim they shall not consider the question that Tennessee had seceded, and all the rights that our Government acquired by taking the property on the ground of secession fall to the ground, and we are rendered responsible. That is a settlement of the case in advance, so far as I can learn from the facts. I do not pretend to have the facts very fully. They are not set out in the report. The Attorney General, who I understand does have the information, did not decline on the ground that he did not have the information, but just declined because he thought it was too much trouble to let a Member of the House obtain information.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Attorney General can not have this information. The information that is sought in this matter is the very subject of this inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Then we ought to get the information before we pass the resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman speaks of the State of Tennessee being in rebellion or revolt against the Government, and says that the Government is asked to relinquish all the claims that it may have. Now, a part of the matter involved in this controversy grew out of the operation of this railroad by the Federal Government for months after the war had ended. There can be no question of loyalty or disloyalty involved in that. That is one feature of the controversy that they could report on, and on which they could get the information.

Mr. MANN. Why do they not do it?

Mr. HOUSTON. Because this commission never acted at all. They said at the outset that they were not prepared to go through the whole matter, and they have made no report on it.

Mr. MANN. But they have the authority to act. Why have they not acted?

Mr. HOUSTON. Because they did not see proper to make two bites of a cherry. I suppose they wanted to do it all at once when it was done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I think if all the facts were understood, there would be no objection to the passage of this resolution. If this involved the question of Congress surrendering any defenses the Government may have against the claim presented by the State of Tennessee, I myself, having at heart the interests of the Government as well as those of my own State, would not support the resolution; but on its face this resolution expressly reserves to the Government the defense to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] refers. It is left entirely to Congress to say in the end whether any report made by this commission shall be ratified. If the commission suggests a settlement of the claims and equities of the respective parties, the claims of the State and the General Government, it is then left to Congress to say whether the question of the attempted secession of the State shall operate as a bar to the claims of the State or any part of them. Now, as I understand this situation, some of these claims have been pending since before the war. Some of them accrued since the war. The State of Tennessee, upon the other hand, has had some alleged counterclaims. While there are conflicting views as to that, I have the impression that it may turn out that the claims of the Government exceed those of the State. But the main question in which I am interested is to see this controversy settled. If it develops that the Government has a larger amount of valid claims than the State, then the balance should be settled in favor of the Government. If, on the other hand, it should appear that none of the claims of the State are bona fide or legal and valid, then the matter will be developed through the report of this commission and laid before Congress, in order that the report may be ratified or rejected and the controversy forever settled.

Now, I think that since this matter was thoroughly discussed in the Senate committee and was discussed at some little length—two or three pages in the RECORD—in the Senate, and that it was agreed to by all the Members of the Senate, the House should pass the resolution to authorize this board to come together and agree upon a tentative conclusion with respect to these conflicting claims, and then that agreement would come back to Congress for its ratification or rejection and we could adjust the matter permanently. If the resolution should be defeated, if Congress should refuse to take such further steps as to enable the commission to perform its functions, then the Government and the State will be obliged to resort to the courts of the country in a number of different lawsuits and opposing lawsuits, and the matter would linger along, causing great trouble and expense.

Now, when this report comes in Congress could and would pass upon the question as to whether the attempted secession of Tennessee was, under the holdings of the Federal court, a bar; and if not, then they would act accordingly in passing on the validity of the claims of the State.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I will.

Mr. NORTON. There is no reason why this commission appointed 16 years ago can not report at once.

Mr. HULL. If my colleague [Mr. HOUSTON] did not make himself clear on that point, I want to say that, as I understand, whenever the commission acted heretofore they have become engaged in this discussion as to whether the attempted secession of Tennessee, through the vote of the general assembly, was such an act as operated as a bar to the claims of the State. The difference of opinion that arose upon that one question has prevented any further deliberation or investigation and consideration of the matter. Now, in order that these conflicting claims may be considered and the results put in a concrete form and brought to Congress, it is asked here in this resolution that that question may be pretermitted by the board and its conclusions upon other questions laid before Congress, and have Congress pass upon all of them, including the question of loyalty.

Mr. NORTON. This resolution before the committee now merely proposes to change the rules of law and equity as to the settlement of these claims.

Mr. HULL. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the resolution does not undertake to change any rule or any law; it refers to the commission with all the rights of defense reserved to Congress, so that when the report comes in it will have no binding effect whatever until Congress shall act upon it.

Mr. NORTON. The commission now has the right to report a proper settlement under the rules of law and equity.

Mr. HULL. The original commission was authorized to determine the conflicting claims, but the question of the attempted secession of the State rose at each meeting of the commission, and they failed to act.

Now, in order that the matter may be settled, instead of directing the commission to make final and complete determination of the matter the resolution seeks to direct the commission to consider all the conflicting claims and make a report to Congress and allow Congress to pass on the defenses of both the State and the Government.

Mr. NORTON. If the resolution is passed and the commission reports the equities as between the State and the Federal Government, and Congress decides that there should be taken into consideration the disloyalty of Tennessee, and determines that the State was disloyal, will Congress have before it the facts to determine what the damages are or what the claims of the Federal Government should be as against the State? Is it not a fact that the real purpose of passing this resolution is to cut out for all time the question of disloyalty of the State and bring in a settlement for this Congress where Congress will not have the facts as to what the rights were between the parties and the State was found to be disloyal at the time the property was taken over?

Mr. HULL. On the contrary, this resolution expressly reserves to the Government that defense to which the gentleman refers. If this resolution passes, the commission would make its report in the alternative.

Mr. NORTON. On its face it purports to give Congress the right, but, when the matter is brought up before the Congress, Congress has no facts to act upon.

Mr. HULL. The report of the commission will be such that if Congress determines that the attempted secession of the State was a valid defense, then certain claims would be eliminated.

Mr. NORTON. The matter would have to be sent back to the commission again?

Mr. HULL. No; it would simply be eliminated so far as the action of Congress was concerned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to speak with much information, for I have not been able to secure it up to this date. As I understand this matter, the State of Tennessee seceded, and at that time owned a lot of railway bonds, I suppose, for money advanced in aid of the railroads. The United States in the course of the rebellion seized the railroads on the ground that the State of Tennessee was in rebellion and that they had the right to seize them and operate them. The Government seized the railroads, and did operate them, and the rolling stock was greatly depreciated. Afterwards the State of Tennessee practically—I do not know whether actually—came into ownership of the bonds and made a claim against the Government for depreciation of the rolling stock and damage to the roads.

It seems to me that the question of loyalty is inextricably interwoven in that proposition. Now, the resolution says that the commission shall pass upon the question without considering the question of loyalty. That is to admit the claim of Tennessee. That is what this resolution means and that is what it amounts to. So that we are prejudging the case by the passage of the resolution, as it seems to me. While the gentleman from Tennessee calls attention to the fact that these commissioners can not enter judgment, that it is to be referred to Congress for final adjudication—that is, for an appropriation—still from the moment that the commission makes a report we will be told that a commission composed of impartial officials of the Government have made a report finding that so much was due.

I read in the Washington Post of this city this morning an editorial in which it was said that the Court of Claims had entered great numbers of judgments against the Government which were not paid, criticizing the Government because it did not pay these claims which had been allowed. Not one of them is a judgment. We pay a judgment secured in the Court of Claims, as a matter of course, without controversy, without question. Those were findings of the Court of Claims, they were not judgments, yet the distinguished gentleman who wrote that editorial thought that they were judgments. When a commission reports, we will say, or the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] will say, and everyone else, "Here is the report of a commission; we ought to pay whatever is found by the report of a commission." That is all right, if a man can act upon all of the facts in the case; but by this resolution you cut out any question of loyalty and you decide in advance that the Government had no right to seize this property and use these railroads without paying for the depreciation.

Mr. HULL. Is it the gentleman's contention that the Federal courts have not held that the attempted action of State legislatures to put the States in the attitude of secession was null and void?

Mr. MANN. That is not the question at all. The whole rebellion was null and void. All of the secession was null and void, but the facts are there just the same. They are theoretically null and void, but practically we were in a state of war between two countries.

Mr. HULL. I was just getting at the way this matter is developing. The administrations in power since the war have given sufficient importance to these claims of Tennessee that they have not undertaken to collect the claims of the Federal Government against that State without a mutual consideration and settlement of all the claims and counterclaims, and it has been upon the theory that the Federal courts have held as I have just indicated, and that is why I thought we ought to reach some method by which this entire controversy could be wound up and the Government rights secured, less whatever set-off the States might be able to show, provided Congress should hold as the courts have held on that question.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, theoretically, of course, the war determined that a State could not secede. That was not determined, however, until after the war was over. No one knew before the war was over whether a State could constitutionally secede or not. That was what we fought about. That was the decision of the war. The courts followed that decision. Theoretically a State can not secede, but actually the State did secede. If, as a result of that, the Government seized something which it has a right to seize upon the theory of secession, I do not see any reason now for changing that policy; I do not undertake to pass upon that, but you determine it in advance without having the facts before us.

Mr. HULL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is not the purpose of this resolution to do that. It is intended to keep that in abeyance until the commission makes its report as to the merits of the claims and counterclaims. The Congress will then pass on the question as to whether that will be a valid defense.

Mr. MANN. My friend from Tennessee, Mr. HULL, or the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HOUSTON, after the commission shall report, will come in and say, "We have a report of the commission composed of three officers of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Attorney General, and certainly you can not go back of a report of these three officers of the Government," and they will insist on paying the claims, although the three officers of the Government find their hands bound before they commence work.

Mr. HULL. Congress could just as well pass on that question then as on any other phase of the report, could it not?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it could. It could pass upon it then. It can not pass upon it intelligently now, because we do not have the information before us.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I thought my colleague [Mr. HOUSTON] would seek recognition. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the statements of the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the absence of certain information, that this resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER AT DECATUR, ALA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17168) to authorize the North Alabama Traction Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at Decatur, Ala.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the North Alabama Traction Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and all approaches thereto across the Tennessee River at Decatur, Ala., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That said bridge shall be constructed, maintained, and operated so that it may be used for steam and electric railroad purposes, and shall be provided with an adequate and separate roadway and approach for the continuous use by the public as a highway bridge to be used by vehicles, pedestrians, horsemen, animals, and all kinds of highway traffic and travel, for the transit of which reasonable rates of toll may be charged and received, but no rate for passage of a single passenger on a railroad train shall exceed 25 cents.

SEC. 2. That the North Alabama Traction Co. may not be required to construct that portion of the approaches on either side of said bridge that are required to make the same ready for vehicles, pedestrians, and other highway traffic until there shall be paid to said company, or secured to its use by local authorities or interests, the sum of $50,000, and said company shall not be required thereafter to maintain or bear any of the costs of maintaining such portions of said approaches, and shall not collect or receive tolls for use of said approaches.

SEC. 3. That the North Alabama Traction Co. shall have the right to sell, transfer, or lease to any county, city, or other municipality any part of such portions of said approaches or of the separate roadway provided for in this act, or both, and in the event of such sale, transfer, or lease the said North Alabama Traction Co. shall be relieved of any requirements to maintain the property so sold, transferred, or leased, and shall not thereafter charge or receive any tolls for use of said wagon way and approaches.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If this bridge is transferred or leased to a county, city, or other municipality, who is to maintain it?

Mr. HARRIS. The parties who lease it.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the bill to that effect.

Mr. HARRIS. The people who lease it will have to maintain it, I think.

Mr. MANN. Supposing you provide for tolls upon this bridge, is the gentleman willing to make that read so that it shall be in accordance with the provisions of the general bridge act?

Mr. HARRIS. This bridge bill is drawn just like the bridge bill at Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. Is the gentleman willing to accept an amendment, on page 2, line 9, by inserting, after the word "received," the language "in accordance with the provisions of the aforementioned act," so that there will be no question that the Secretary of War has jurisdiction over the matter of tolls?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the gentleman will notice that in the former part of the bill he will find that language.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not find it.

Mr. HARRIS. It is in lines 9 and 10, first page.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; I understand that. But, then, the gentleman goes ahead and says the bridge shall be built in accordance with the general bridge act. That covers the question of tolls. Then farther down he says that the tolls shall be reasonable, but no rate for passage shall exceed 25 cents. That is entirely useless unless the purpose is to relieve it from the operations of the general bridge act. I want to be sure it is still under the operation of the general bridge act.

Mr. HARRIS. We have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will insert, before the word "receive," "in accordance with the provisions of the aforementioned act," that removes any objection about it.

Mr. HARRIS. We have no objection.

Mr. MANN. Then, on page 3, why should this company be relieved of any requirement to maintain the property so sold, transferred, or leased, and no one else be required to maintain it?

Mr. HARRIS. It is believed that if this company parts with it the parties purchasing it will maintain and operate it. They have to pay for it.

Mr. MANN. But the authority given in here is for this company to construct, maintain, and operate. Then you provide that the company may sell, transfer, or lease, and then you say that the company shall be relieved of the requirement of maintaining the property.

Mr. HARRIS. After it is sold.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but you do not give anybody else the authority to maintain it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I suggest that the bill provides that it may be leased, transferred, or sold to a city, county, or municipality.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the county or municipality would have the duty imposed upon it to maintain it as a public highway.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they would have the right to maintain it as a highway; that is what I am talking about. Here is a bill conferring the right on the North Alabama Traction Co. to maintain and operate this bridge. Then you say that upon its sale the company shall be no longer required to maintain it, and you do not give anybody else the right to maintain it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bridge has to be constructed not only as a bridge for steam and electric railways but also as a combination bridge for a public highway.

Mr. MANN. I understand that; but the gentleman does not get my point. We give authority to the company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across a navigable stream.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We assume that without that authority they have no right to maintain and operate it even after they have constructed it. Now, you give authority to this company to construct, maintain, and operate this bridge. Then you say under certain conditions they shall no longer be required to maintain it, and you do not give the authority to maintain it to anybody else. I do not undertake to say whether the language "maintain and operate" in these bridge bills is necessary or whether it might not be assumed that when you give authority to construct that you thereby give authority to construct and operate, but we have always put it in these bills, and, if it is necessary, this bill would not give authority to anybody else to operate it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does the gentleman from Illinois think it is better to confer authority on the transferee or strike out the exemption to the bridge company?

Mr. MANN. I think it is better to strike out the exemption to the bridge company; then that company has authority to maintain it, and passes it to the transferee.

Mr. ADAMSON. In their contract they can pass it on.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think that is right.

Mr. MANN. That leaves the company the right to maintain.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman offer that as an amendment?

Mr. ADAMSON. The committee will offer that amendment, if the gentleman will permit, and strike out the language exempting the company.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, by inserting, after the word "received," in line 9, the following: "In accordance with the provisions of the aforementioned act."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on page 1, the gentleman from Georgia desires to offer an amendment, in line 1, striking out all after the word "Company" down to and including the word "and," in line 3.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the Clerk report the language proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 3, by striking out, after the word "Company," in line 1, the following: "Shall be relieved from any requirements to maintain the property so sold, transferred, or leased and."

Mr. ADAMSON. Does that include all the language?

Mr. MANN. That would leave it so that it would read:

The said North Alabama Traction Co. shall not thereafter charge or receive any tolls for use of said wagon way and approaches.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is right, because the public has to furnish the money.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "at" and before the word "Decatur," insert the words "or near."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended so as to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. BARKLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS ON ALLEYWAYS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the bill S. 1624, "An act to regulate the construction of buildings along alleyways in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," in on this calendar, being No. 339. A bill in exact language to that passed the House and Senate and became a law, and I ask that this bill not only be stricken from this calendar but from the Union Calendar, and that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the bill S. 1624, Calendar No. 339, be stricken from this calendar and also from the Union Calendar and be laid on the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MUNICIPAL BRIDGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of its regular order the bill H. R. 19424, a bill to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge in St. Louis, Mo.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion of the bridge authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved June 25, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, extended for the period of three years from the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri to take the bill H. R. 19424 up out of its regular order and consider it now?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. IGOE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING, GRAND JUNCTION, COLO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 412) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Grand Junction, Colo.

The bill was read in full.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Colorado if this bill has ever been called on this calendar before?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No, sir; it has never been reached before.

Mr. BORLAND. Is this the first time it has been called on this calendar?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr BORLAND. Then I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO MINORS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18851) to prohibit the sale or gift of intoxicating liquors to minors within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 288 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," is hereby amended by adding thereto the following as a new section:

"SEC. 288a. Whoever shall sell, give, or dispense in any manner intoxicating liquors of any kind as a beverage to any person under the age of 21 years, within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500 for each offense. The master of every vessel is directed to enforce this prohibition, and in case any violation of this act is permitted or is committed upon any vessel by any officer or employee of said vessel then said vessel shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, the amount of the fine to be determined by the Secretary of Commerce in the same manner that other fines for violation of the navigation and inspection laws are now determined under section 5294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am in entire sympathy with this bill and the purposes of it. No one can criticize the prohibition of the gift or sale of intoxicating liquors to minors, but I assume this bill is going to be used as a vehicle for amendment so as to project the prohibition question before the House at this late hour of the day. If it is, I shall be compelled to object. If it is the intention to pass the bill as it stands, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the gentleman was in the Chamber when I made that remark.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington rise?

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 11: After the words "United States" add the following: "or elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the United States and outside the jurisdiction of any particular State."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not germane.

The SPEAKER. Why is it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill under consideration restricts this proposition to the consideration of those cases which are within the maritime and admiralty jurisdiction of the United States. It is for one specific purpose, limited to that particular condition. The amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] seeks to open it up and make it a general proposition. It is well within the rulings of the House that where a bill refers to one specific case it is not permissible by amendment to make it a general law. The amendment of the gentleman from Washington seeks to make this general in its character. Therefore I think I am well within my grounds in contending that it is not germane.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment does not broaden the subject matter of the bill in any respect. The amendment merely goes to the extent of the area that this enactment, if it be enacted into law, shall apply to, and makes it apply, for instance, to islands that are outside of the jurisdiction of any State. I think that it is perfectly in order while this thing is before us, while we are considering whether or not we will make this law effective on the high seas, and on the Great Lakes, and on the rivers, and in the canals, and on the inland waterways, and the gulfs and bays, where our ships may go, for us to consider whether or not that other jurisdiction which is surrounded by this particular jurisdiction shall also be included. It is only a matter of area and not a matter of subject matter. It is certainly constitutional, a good amendment, and one that ought to be adopted.

The SPEAKER. It has been decided over and over again, so that it is not any more a controverted question, that where we are legislating on one particular class of subjects we can not spread them out to take in others. For instance, the important ruling along that line was to the effect that when we took one Territory into the Union we could not hitch on another to the same bill. Also when they had up the bill prohibiting the trading in cotton futures, since the present occupant of the chair has been Speaker, there was an amendment offered to it to take in wheat and corn and similar articles, of which I was very much in favor personally, but paying attention to the precedents the Chair had to rule it out. And the Chair rules this out.

The question is——

Mr. BRYAN. I have another amendment which I desire to offer, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 11: After the words "United States" add "or in the Philippine Islands."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRYAN. I submit another amendment, Mr Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the words "United States," add the following: "or elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the United States and outside the jurisdiction of any particular State."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, that is the amendment that was read a moment ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that that is not germane.

The SPEAKER. Is not that the same amendment?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes. I had not sent the other up. The Clerk did not wait.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the words "United States," add "or in Alaska."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order on that.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BRYAN. I offer this amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "exceeding," strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000," and add "or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 15.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the Bryan amendment to increase the penalty will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 13, nays 244, answered "present" 2, not voting 168, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. There is a quorum here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage. Those in favor of the motion will say "aye."

The affirmative vote was taken.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to offer an amendment. Under this condition can I not offer another amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is too late.

Mr. BRYAN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The roll call just this moment shows that there is a quorum present.

Mr. BRYAN. The period for the amendment of the bill had not been passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but any gentleman has the right to move the previous question on a bill at any stage of the proceedings. Of course, as a matter of practice and courtesy, the Chair generally recognizes the man in control of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes to explain that amendment and state why I offered it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered, and the Chair lays before the House the following report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills:

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13698. An act for the relief of Charles A. Coulson.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUOR TO MINORS.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. The negative has not been put to the House on that question. I made the inquiry before the Chair put it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair's recollection is that both sides were put. However, the Chair will put it again. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will say "aye;" those opposed will say "no."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It has been only three minutes since the roll call developed 257 gentlemen present.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] asks for a division. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will rise and stand until they are counted.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 181, noes 3.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, this demonstrates the want of a quorum, but I will not insist on the point.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman will note that 35 or 40 men did not vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting]. Two hundred and twenty-one Members present—a quorum.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, before you make that announcement I want to ask unanimous consent that my name may be recorded as against this bill, and I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum here anyhow.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may vote in favor of selling liquor to minors if he wants to.

Mr. BRYAN. But I will not be doing any such thing.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent—I believe it is my privilege—to extend in the RECORD my remarks in explanation of my opposition to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I assume that the gentleman wishes to extend his remarks in the back part of the RECORD and not in the body of the proceedings.

Mr. BRYAN. I agree to that.

The SPEAKER. That is where the remarks ought to be extended, whether the gentleman wants it so or not. That is the rule and practice of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MORIN, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. AUSTIN, for one week, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 22976, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE LATE SENATOR JOHNSTON AND THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RICHARDSON.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 693.

Resolved, That Sunday, January 31, 1915, be set apart for services upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. JOSEPH F. JOHNSTON, late a Senator from the State of Alabama, and of the Hon. WILLIAM RICHARDSON, late a Representative from the State of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNIFORM GRADING OF GRAIN.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17971) for securing the uniform grading of grain, preventing deception in transactions in grain, and regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of the "grain grades act."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to investigate the handling, grading, and transportation of grain and to fix and establish as soon as may be after the enactment hereof standards of quality and condition for corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, and such other grains as in his judgment the usages of trade may warrant and permit. In promulgating the standards the Secretary shall specify the date or dates when the same are to become effective, and shall give public notice, not less than 60 days in advance of such date or dates, by such means as he deems proper.

SEC. 3. That the standards so fixed and established shall be known as the official grain standards of the United States.

SEC. 4. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain no person thereafter shall ship or deliver for shipment from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country, any such grain which is sold or offered for sale by grade unless the grade by which it is sold or offered for sale be one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States, and the grain shall have been inspected and graded by an inspector licensed under this act, and the grain conforms to the standard fixed and established for the specified grade: Provided, That any such grain not sold or offered for sale by grade may be sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment by sample or by type, or under any name, description, or designation which is not false or misleading, and which name, description, or designation does not include in whole or in part the terms of any official grain standard of the United States: Provided further, That any such grain sold or offered for sale by one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may be shipped from any place at which no inspector licensed under this act is located to or through any place at which such an inspector is located, subject, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, to be inspected at the place to which shipped, or at the place through which shipped for inspection, and subject further to the right of appeal from such inspection, as provided in section 6 of this act: And provided further, That any such grain sold or offered for sale by any of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may, upon compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, be shipped from a place at which there is no inspector licensed under this act to a place at which there is no such inspector, subject to the right to refer any dispute as to the grade of the grain to the Secretary of Agriculture, who may determine and certify the true grade thereof: And provided further, That variations from the official grain standards may be permitted under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe. No person shall in any certificate or in any contract or agreement of sale or agreement to sell by grade, either oral or written, involving, or in any invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document relating to, the shipment or delivery for shipment, in interstate or foreign commerce, of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act describe, or in any way refer to, any of such grain as being of any grade other than a grade fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States.

SEC. 5. That no person shall certify or otherwise represent that any grain which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce is of a grade fixed in the official grain standards unless the same conforms to the standard fixed therein for that grade or is within the variations from that grade permitted by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 4 of this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause examinations to be made of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act, and which has been certified to conform to any grade fixed therefor in such official grain standards, or which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the owner or shipper of the grain involved, and to the inspector thereof if the same has been inspected, it is determined by the Secretary that any quantity of grain has been incorrectly certified to conform to a specified grade or the authorized variations therefrom, or has been sold or offered for sale under any name, description, or designation which is false or misleading, he may publish his findings.

SEC. 6. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain and any quantity of such grain which has been sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce shall have been inspected and a dispute arises as to whether the grade as determined by such inspection of any such grain in fact conforms to the standard of the specified grain, any interested party may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause such investigation to be made and such tests to be applied as he may deem necessary to determine the true grade: Provided, That any appeal from such inspection to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be taken before the grain leaves the place where the inspection appealed from was made and before the identity of the grain has been lost, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe. In such cases the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge and assess and cause to be collected reasonable fees, in amounts to be fixed by him. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The findings of the Secretary of Agriculture as to grade, made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties or their privies as prima facie evidence of the true grade of the grain determined by him at the time and place specified in the findings.

SEC. 7. That no person authorized or employed by any State, county, city, town, board of trade, chamber of commerce, corporation, society, or association to inspect or grade grain shall certify, or otherwise state or indicate in writing, that any grain which has been inspected or graded by him, or by any person acting under his authority, is of one of the official grades of the United States unless he holds an unsuspended and unrevoked license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture authorizing him to inspect and grade grain for interstate and foreign commerce. The Secretary may issue a license to any person upon presentation to him of satisfactory evidence that such person is competent to inspect and grade grain: Provided, That in States which have State grain inspection established by law the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, issue licenses to persons duly authorized and employed to inspect grain under the laws of such States at the time this act goes into effect. Any such license may be suspended or revoked whenever the Secretary of Agriculture is satisfied that the holder thereof has failed to grade grain correctly, in accordance with the official grain standards of the United States, or has violated any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made thereunder, or that the license has been used for any improper purpose whatsoever.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That every person who shall violate any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $200 for the first offense and for each succeeding offense not exceeding $1,000. After judgment by the court notice thereof shall be given by publication in such manner as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

SEC. 10. That every person who forcibly assaults, resists, impedes, or interferes with any officer or employee of the United States Department of Agriculture in the execution of any duties authorized to be performed by this act or the rules and regulations made hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 11. That the word "person" wherever used in this act shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, corporations, companies, societies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official agent, or other person acting for or employed by any corporation, company, society, or association within the scope of his employment or office shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, society, or association, as well as that of the person.

SEC. 12. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000, which shall be available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including rent and the employment of such persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] at half past 3, and that hour having passed, the Chair has now recognized him; but there is one bill on the calendar that, if it is ever going to be passed at all, ought to be passed to-day. That is the bill relating to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. It is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. It is the next bill on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. UNDERHILL], and after that bill is disposed of the House will recur to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] to suspend the rules and pass the grain-inspection bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6454) to authorize the Government Exhibit Board for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to install any part or parts of the Government exhibit at the said exposition either in the exhibit palaces of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. or in the Government building at said exposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill 6454. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Government Exhibit Board, created by the sundry civil act approved June 23, 1913, is hereby authorized to install, display, and maintain any part or parts of the exhibit of the United States Government at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in the exhibit palaces provided by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. or in the Government building provided for in the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, as the said Government Exhibit Board may determine.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERHILL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNIFORM GRADING OF GRAIN.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on the Moss bill for the grading of grain.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he is opposed to the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not to the entire bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to oppose the bill, and I also demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands a second.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendments I have sent to the desk be read. One of them is to correct a misprint in the bill, and I ask that the other one be made a part of my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's first amendment was read into the bill. Now, the gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that another amendment which he sends up may be considered as a part of the bill, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out, after the figures $1,000, all of lines 13, 14, and 15, the language of which is as follows: "After judgment by the court notice thereof shall be given by publication in such manner as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe."

Mr. MANN. Is that a part of the motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to incorporate that into the bill as a part of his motion to suspend the rules. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry, would it be in order for me, not being a member of the committee, to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. No; nobody can offer an amendment, except by unanimous consent, after it has reached this stage. If the gentleman wants to ask unanimous consent, the Chair will put it.

Mr. MOORE. Then I ask unanimous consent to have the following amendment considered:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "district," strike out "or to any foreign country."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "district," strike out the words "or to any foreign country."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this amendment being read into the bill?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana and Mr. NORTON objected.

Mr. MOORE. What became of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss].

The SPEAKER. He had unanimous consent to make it a part of his motion.

Mr. MOORE. I did not understand that unanimous consent was given to consider the motion of the gentleman from Indiana. I reserved the right to object, and the Chair did not again ask whether there was objection. Action has been taken only on the request made by me.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair announced that the request of the gentleman from Indiana has been passed upon.

Mr. MANN. No; the Chair did not.

The SPEAKER. What the Chair announced was that the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana has been read into the bill. Then the gentleman from Indiana asked unanimous consent to read the other one in, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania reserved an objection. The Chair was under the impression that he had put the request, but he thinks the gentleman from Pennsylvania is right. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana to read this amendment which has been reported by the Clerk into the motion to suspend the rules?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has 20 minutes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

[Mr. RUBEY addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] says, there is some objection to this bill, or at least to one phase of it, from the shipping interests along the Atlantic seaboard. It is contended that to require the inspection of grain that comes in bond from Canada, intended for export, will work a hardship upon the shippers generally and will not aid the farmers of this country who seek to be benefited by the bill. I have asked to strike out that portion of section 4 which is objectionable to those interests.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman realizes of course that this provides that grain may be sold by sample or by any other designation which does not appear to be an imitation of the Federal grades. Does not that obviate largely that situation?

Mr. MOORE. No; the principal objection is that under this bill very large quantities of grain that come from Canada and are intended for export would be subjected to an unnecessary scrutiny and would very materially interfere with the export trade generally. That export trade, it is believed, is of great advantage to the farmers of the United States, particularly in regulating prices and in generally maintaining the business when there is no very great market at home for grain—corn and grain in particular.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman refer to grain that comes into Canada for reexport?

Mr. MOORE. That is what I said.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman say that it is to the interest of the farmer that that grain be excepted from the provisions of this bill?

Mr. MOORE. I will read to the gentleman a statement from the Commercial Exchange, of Philadelphia:

The export interests, although little known in the West, who naturally disregard us and look to their interests should be encouraged. It is a safety valve to the country.

These are business men—dealers in grain—who are speaking.

For instance, during the years 1892 to 1895 and in the year 1907 the grain export business largely helped to stop and settle panics by bringing gold into this country. The export interest makes the price and saves it from further decline for the farmer. The export interest takes the farmers' grain when it is not wanted by our millers and manufacturers. This is best illustrated by conditions every year early in the movement of crops. Domestic interests are unable to take care of the grain as fast as it moves from the farm, and some of it is not in condition that the millers and elevator interests desire it. The export market comes to the rescue of the farmer and stops the decline in price and opens a market for the farmers' grain.

I think that answers the question of the gentleman. Now I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] whether he can enlighten the House as to the application of that part of section 4 which provides that the inspection shall apply to shipments—

From any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country.

Large quantities of grain, as the gentleman knows, come in from Canada, and they are shipped through to foreign countries without breaking bulk, leaving it largely to the purchasers, the people on the other side, to determine whether the grain is satisfactory to them or not. The question I am raising is, Will this export grain, shipped in bond, have to stand the proposed Federal inspection? I would like the gentleman from Indiana to answer.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. As I understand the gentleman's question, it is whether a grain shipment originating in Canada and passing through the United States for export purposes, going through as it is now called "in bond," would come under the operation of this law. Is that the question?

Mr. MOORE. It is.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. It would not come under the operation of this law.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment. The gentleman heard the amendment I sent to the Clerk's desk and had read a little while ago?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I did. The purpose I had in objecting to that amendment is that if the proposed language were to be stricken from the bill our domestic grain going to foreign countries would not come under the provisions of the bill. The change would have no relation whatever with the question which the gentleman has in mind at the present time.

Mr. MOORE. If those words were stricken out "or to any foreign country," does the gentleman think that would relieve the situation entirely?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. If those words were stricken from the bill, it would simply mean that all domestic grain that is sold for export to foreign countries, or what we now know as our export trade, would not come under the operations of the bill, whereas the gentleman's question is, whether or not grain grown in Canada passing through the United States on its way for export would come under the operation of the bill. The domestic grain for export will come under the operations of the bill. Canadian grain passing through the United States in bond will not come under the operations of the bill. I will say to the gentleman I will be glad to put in the RECORD the opinion of the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, under date of August 26, 1914, in which he answers the gentleman's question specifically, that grain passing through the United States in bond for export does not come under the operations of the bill. If the gentleman would like to have the Solicitor's opinion read, I will have it read in his time.

Mr. MOORE. I would be very glad to have it read in my time, because I am going to ask leave to insert certain documents which bear upon this question, as I expect to vote against the bill because of this paragraph, and I would be very glad to know on what the gentleman bases his opinion.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I send to the Clerk's desk the following letter to be read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOWLER). The Clerk will read the letter in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, August 26, 1914.

Hon. RALPH W. MOSS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MOSS: Recently you informally requested my opinion as to whether H. R. 17971, in the form in which it was introduced by yourself on July 18 last, would interfere with or affect shipments of grain in bond from Canada to a port in the United States for export. I am very glad to give you my views on this question.

Section 4, which is the only section of the bill that need be considered in determining the question at hand, prohibits any person from shipping or delivering for shipment from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country, any grain which is sold or offered for sale by grade unless it be one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States and the grain has been inspected and graded by an inspector licensed under the act and conforms to the official standard.

In order that this provision may apply to any particular shipment it must have its point of origin in some State, Territory, or District of the United States. In the case of a shipment of grain from Canada through the United States to some foreign country the point of origin would be in Canada and not in any State, Territory, or District of the United States. It seems clear, therefore, that the language of the provision cited would not apply to such a shipment.

There may be cases, however, in which the transit of grain from Canada is so interrupted that its export from the United States to a foreign country would constitute a new shipment and not merely a continuation of the original shipment. In such case the bill would seem to apply to such new shipment, but in general it is believed that it would not apply to through shipments of grain from Canada to a foreign country by way of the United States.

Very truly, yours,

FRANCIS G. CAFFEY, Solicitor.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia is not wholly satisfied that that interpretation of the law will hold, but I am very glad to have it in the RECORD. I desire now to ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a brief by the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia and a letter from the same organization.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing certain data. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has occupied 10 minutes.

The articles referred to are as follows:

THE COMMERCIAL EXCHANGE OF PHILADELPHIA,
Philadelphia, August 13, 1914.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant asking if I have any suggestions to make as to bill H. R. 17971, which is a modification of bill H. R. 17329.

In reply, would say our position with reference to the grading of grain is the same as that set forth in our brief, under date of May 15, 1914, a copy of which was forwarded to you, and also the letter of our president to you, under date of June 23, 1914, referring to the grain-grades act, bill H. R. 17329. The modified bill, H. R. 17971, requires all grain to be inspected under Federal supervision in accordance with the standards of grade established by the Secretary of Agriculture, whether for export or consumption within the United States.

The export business is a world's proposition, and we must meet the competition and conditions of other grain-exporting countries. The Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, therefore, is unalterably opposed to Federal inspection or supervision of grain when intended for export. We believe it would be greatly to the detriment of the export business and to the producers in the United States, and would suggest that all grain for export, whether grown within the United States or elsewhere, be eliminated from the grain-grades act.

We are heartily in favor, however, of this bill in so far as it relates to the Federal supervision of inspection of grain for consumption within the United States, whether it be domestic or foreign grown grain.

Yours, very truly,

A. B. CLEMMER, Secretary.

THE COMMERCIAL EXCHANGE OF PHILADELPHIA,
Philadelphia, May 15, 1914.

Hon. RALPH W. MOSS,
Chairman Subcommittee of Committee on Agriculture.
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We respectfully submit to you the following brief:

The Commercial Exchange was founded in 1854. It is comprised of merchants in the grain, flour, hay, and feed business, manufacturers, nearly all of the banks of Philadelphia, and all of the railroads and steamship lines. Through our exchange is handled all of the grain business, both domestic and export, that comes to the city of Philadelphia amounting to from thirty to sixty million dollars yearly.

We have a most able and capable inspection department, and it is not in any way affiliated with the grain business, the rules of our exchange forbidding that. A more honest, conscientious, able, and careful staff of inspectors we do not believe can be found. Their salaries are paid by the exchange; their employment is assured as long as their work is faithful, efficient, and honest.

Referring to bill H. R. 14493, we have the utmost respect and kindly feeling toward your honorable committee and realize that you have a very big task before you, and with your kind permission we desire to take exceptions to the bill as relating to or governing export grain. We would gladly assist in the formation of a bill for uniform grading of grain for domestic application, but we most respectfully ask your honorable committee to exempt the export trade from bill H. R. 14493, or, if that be impossible, to then insert a section in the bill making the present grades of corn its basis of grade for export. We have been many years in building up the foreign grain business, and the changes, as proposed by the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, for the grading of corn would be a great hardship, completely upsetting the export business in that commodity, because—

First. During a very important part of the corn season, from December until the middle of June, it is impossible to get corn of the quality required by the honorable Secretary of Agriculture of the proposed grade of No. 2 corn at 15½ per cent moisture content in its natural condition. This would result in forcing exporters to sell the next lower grade, which is No. 3, as proposed by the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, with a moisture content of 17½ per cent. The foreigner would be compelled to buy that, because the other grade is an impossibility. To adjust the foreign buyer to this changed condition would be difficult and harmful.

Second. The difference between the proposed grades of corn is not a practical, merchantable difference. The 2 per cent moisture content between No. 2 and No. 3 and between No. 3 and No. 4 corn is too great. It will work a hardship to the producer. In this climate experience has shown that it is perfectly safe for us to export corn with 18 per cent moisture and give satisfaction to the foreign buyer. There should be a difference as to moisture content of corn for export between North Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf ports, because of the shorter journey and climatic conditions, which are more favorable for the grain carrying in good condition. We have the world's markets and conditions to compete with. Ours is not a domestic proposition, and that, we feel, should be considered.

The export interests, although little known in the West, who naturally disregard us and look to their interest and condition, should be encouraged. It is a safety valve to the country. For instance, during the years 1892 to 1895 and in the year 1907 the grain export business largely helped to stop and settle panics by bringing gold into this country. The export interest makes the price and saves it from further decline for the farmer. The export interest takes the farmer's grain when it is not wanted by our millers and manufacturers. This is best illustrated by conditions every year early in the movement of crops. Domestic interests are unable to take care of the grain as fast as it moves from the farm, and some of it is not in condition that the millers and elevator interests desire it. The export market comes to the rescue of the farmer and stops the decline in price and opens a market for the farmer's grain.

The seaboard grades of corn for export are about one grade lower than the western grades. It is very necessary for the large western terminal markets to have their corn grades higher than the seaboard, because they—the western markets—are compelled to carry their corn indefinitely. Their business is to accumulate the stock and carry it until there is a demand for it. This often results in stocks of grain, including corn, being held in the western markets month after month—and, indeed, it has been held from one year to another.

The method at the seaboard is entirely different. Stocks are not carried for any length of time by exporters, but handled as quickly as possible. They do not bring grain to the seaboard unless there is a demand for it, because the proper place to carry it is in the West, or the source of the movement, and where it can be sent to any domestic market as well as to the seaboard.

If grain were brought to the seaboard without having a foreign demand, it might prove a very expensive experiment. From this you will see that by moving and handling without any delay or long term of storage grain is put into consumption and a moisture content of 15½ per cent is not at all necessary. We aim to give satisfaction to foreign buyers; our grades are doing that; and the moisture content of corn has been about 18 per cent.

Last year Philadelphia shipped 8,000,000 bushels of United States grown grain, about one-fourth of which was corn, and not a single complaint thereon; nor have we had a single complaint on any foreign grain since the bad crop of 1910 and 1911, which year the crop was improperly matured and was of a poor quality over nearly the entire United States. A great deal of it arrived at the seaboard out of condition from the West, and it was at that time or from that crop complaints were made; none to our knowledge since.

Third. We respectfully ask that Canadian grain in bond for export be exempt from any inspection in the United States. We do not understand that will be permitted according to section 5 and section 6. Much of our business in Philadelphia is bonded grain. Last year we exported 15,200,000 bushels, which, you will please note, is nearly double the amount of the United States grown grain that we exported through Philadelphia. Our total exports last year were 23,000,000 bushels, a smaller amount than we have often shipped before. The railroads and steamships, as well as the merchants, would be greatly injured if we were compelled to sell on United States grade only. The foreign grain buyer using Canadian grain does not wish to buy that on United States inspection, because in buying Canadian certificate of inspection only he is assured that there is no mixture of United States grain with the Canadian. The reason for this is plain. The Canadian grown grain is far superior in quality to that grown in the United States, their virgin soil producing a better quality.

Section 5, line 12, states that we shall not ship to any foreign country any grain unless the grade is fixed by the United States official standard, and section 6, line 4, states that "no person thereafter shall ship or deliver for shipment from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country, any such grain which is sold or offered for sale, whether by grade or not, under any name, description, or designation which is false or misleading in any particular." The provision in line 10 that "nothing contained herein shall prevent shipment or delivery of shipment, otherwise lawful, of any grain which is sold or offered for sale, without reference to grade under the names, descriptions, or designations which are not false or misleading" does not, to our mind, give us permission to ship for export Canadian grain on Canadian certificates of inspection, because their certificates of inspection are very similar to the grades or inspections of the United States. Both countries use like terms. For instance, both have No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3 wheat, oats, flax, barley, and rye. The names and descriptions and designations would surely be misleading in that respect.

To injure this Canadian grain business, which to the port of Philadelphia is amounting to twice as much as the United States grown grain, would be a hardship to the port of Philadelphia, which affects the railroads and steamships; the latter failing to get cargoes are withdrawn and sail to more profitable ports. Removal of steamships injures not only Philadelphia but the entire State and neighboring States on export and import business.

Philadelphia does not see any need at this time to put a greater expense on the Government of the United States by changing the methods of handling and inspecting grain, which long years of experience have improved to about as efficient a condition as possible. An efficient force of Federal inspectors of grain would require, in our opinion, a much larger force than the meat-inspection department, which we understand is upward of 2,500 employees, and which we understand cost the Government some $3,000,000 yearly. The grain business is vastly larger than the meat business. Of course, Federal supervision would not be so expensive, but should not the grain interests—meaning from the grower to the exporter—have the same privilege accorded them as the meat interests?—that is, no inspection charges are made for the inspection of meats. The grain interests would naturally expect to be placed on the same basis, or that no charges be made for the inspection of grain if done by the Government.

Fourth. The Federal supervision of corn only, as proposed by the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, would be most misleading to foreign buyers. They would suppose all grain was under Government supervision or inspection, and we believe if the Government is to take charge of the inspection of grain, it should be of all kinds of grain at the same time.

Referring to the trading in grain futures, there is no trading on our exchange, but many of our members use Chicago, Minneapolis, and New York markets. It is quite as necessary for a grain or flour merchant or a miller to insure himself against loss, either against the advance or decline of the market, as it is to insure houses, barns, or buildings of any kind from loss by fire or tornado; in fact, the risk is vastly greater.

For instance, we buy 25,000 bushels of wheat in Indiana for export; unless we happen at that time to have an order in hand that will pay a profit, we must sell an equal amount of wheat to hedge ourselves from loss in case of a decline in the market price. The expense of hedging or insuring is so small that it becomes a part of the cost for handling. If the market declines 2 cents a bushel, we can sell our 25,000 bushels of wheat at 2 cents decline, also, from the price at which we would have sold it at the time we bought it.

On the other hand, if one of our millers receives an order for 5,000 barrels of flour but could not at the moment buy the equivalent of 25,000 bushels of wheat to cover his sale of flour, he would buy, or should buy, 25,000 bushels in the market best adapted for his purpose to insure him from loss of an advance in the market.

Without this method of insurance against change in the market the grain dealers, millers, and merchants would find it necessary to have a much wider margin of profit, and this would mean a less price to the farmer. Business, of course, could be done again without trading in futures, but we would go backward about 50 years, and it would result in the big elevator interests and capitalists becoming more powerful than ever, because they would have the storage capacity and the capital to carry the grain in stock.

We thank you, gentlemen, for permission to file this brief, and regret exceedingly that the nondelivery of mail prevented our appearance. If you wish to question us by wire, we will answer immediately in that way. With the greatest respect and sincerety, we are,

Yours, very truly,

L. G. GRAFF,
GEORGE M. WARNER,
JAMES L. KING,

Delegates appointed by the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia to represent it at hearing on the "Lever grain-grading bill."

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

[Mr. SLOAN addresssed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely regret that I am compelled to vote against this bill, as I know the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] and his associates have labored so earnestly and with such a desire to produce a beneficial measure for the welfare of the agricultural interests of the country. But my district is the headquarters of the grain-inspection system of the State of Minnesota, and for more than 20 years our State has sustained one of the best systems in force in any State in this country. Its organization and the results of its work have been everywhere commended, and it justly possesses the confidence of our people. The Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota, as it is officially termed, is very strenuously opposed to this bill, because it believes that it would be greatly injurious to the agricultural interests of our section of the country. Early in the discussion the commission desired a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture, and the chairman, Judge Mills, sent me a telegram to that effect, which I delivered to the chairman of the committee, but by some inadvertence the commission was not notified, and, although the committee desired to hear from the commission and the commission was anxious to be heard, no hearing was had. I will send a telegram from the chairman of the commission to the desk to be read in my time. It is from the chairman of the commission, Judge Ira B. Mills, who has served very faithfully and ably for many years, and it states the views of the commission of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the communication referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. PAUL, MINN.

Hon. F. C. STEVENS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

This commission knows that several bills now pending before Congress will injure the northwestern grain growers, because they favor the buyer against the producer. The Federal rules for the grading of corn are impractical and have caused several losses to the growers, and local buyers can not comply with them. They were made by the theorists, who know nothing about grain conditions in the Northwest. If any of the bills now pending are passed, the grain business of the country will be demoralized and the producers be a large loser.

I. B. MILLS.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, one of the commissioners of the State, Mr. Jacobsen, who has had a very large experience as a member of the State board of grain appeals and later has served very acceptably upon the State railroad and warehouse commission, and has just been reelected to it by a large majority, during the summer came to Washington with the chief inspector of grain, Mr. Eva, also an official of large experience and splendid ability, and they conferred at some length with the officials of the Department of Agriculture in charge of this work.

Mr. Jacobsen set forth his views after such conference in a typewritten statement, which I shall not read here on account of lack of time, but which I shall ask to have inserted as a part of my remarks, in which he outlined the basis for the telegram just read, which is substantially this: That the rules as laid down by the department are so theoretical and impractical that the grain buyer in the field will be compelled to buy from the producer at some grade below what the grain might possibly fairly produce, in order to protect himself, because of the uncertainty of the requirements. It is obvious these must be such as the buyer and producer can readily understand and carry out in everyday business, and the grades adopted are not at all of that character.

Mr. Jacobsen states that the grades as adopted by the Agricultural Department do not consider actual conditions of production and marketing. Where this is so, it is evident somebody along the line will suffer from the defects, and that somebody is always the farmer. The Minnesota commission is particularly the guardian of the agricultural interests of our State. When it solemnly expresses its deliberate judgment that this bill is injurious, I am bound to respect and follow such judgment. It seems to be a defect in the bill that in a State like Minnesota, which has a first-class system of inspection and grading already established and in successful operation, that the Secretary of Agriculture would have power to also license a competitive system of inspection by the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce and by the Duluth Board of Trade, with exactly the same powers under this law. This will be encouraged and may produce chaos and injustice and injury.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks by inserting these papers and explanations in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Following are the papers referred to:

ST. PAUL, MINN., December 21, 1914.

Hon. F. C. STEVENS, Washington, D. C.:

This commission knows that several bills now pending before Congress will injure the Northwestern grain growers, because they favor the buyer against the producer. The Federal rules for the grading of corn are impractical and have caused severe loss to the growers, and local buyers can not comply with them. They were made by theorists who know nothing about grain conditions in the Northwest. If any of the bills now pending are passed, the grain business of the country will be demoralized and the producers be a large loser.

IRA B. MILLS.

Previous to the year 1913 the Minnesota Board of Grain Appeals at their annual meeting adopted rules for grading of different kinds of grain. For a great many years this board had about eight rules for grading of corn—either white, yellow, and also for moisture.

In February, 1913, Congress passed a law that gave the United States Agricultural Department the power to grade corn, or, as we may call it, "Federal inspection" of corn. These rules were adopted by several of the Western States, and, among them, Minnesota. The reason for adopting these rules was on account of the interstate shipping. The Eastern States, such as Maryland, Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts did not adopt the Federal grades, and therefore they are to-day buying our western corn according to Federal inspection and selling to European buyers on whatever grade they may put on the same. This shows that the producers of grain are the losers.

As stated above, Minnesota had eight grades, and the inspectors in Philadelphia and New York told Mr. Eva and Commissioner Jacobson that when a car of corn arrived from Minnesota it was not necessary to reinspect same for outshipment, because they knew that it was inspected according to grades. When the Federal Government or Agricultural Department sent out their new grades, as promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture for the grading of corn, which took effect July 1, 1914, their rules affected about 22 different kinds of corn. The Minnesota appeal board did not think, when they adopted the Government rules, that they would overturn the grading of corn, as they finally did, because the grading of corn to-day is impracticable. No elevator buyer in the country can buy corn intelligently and expect to get either 2 or 3 grade, according to the new rules.

Early in the fall several corn buyers in the State wrote to the commission asking for advice, as they could not understand the new rules sent out by the Government. It was almost impossible for the chief inspector to answer these letters. Therefore the chief inspector and Commissioner Jacobson went to Washington, D. C., to get information from Dr. Duval, head of that department, and, together with Congressman ANDERSON, spent about two hours with him. It much surprised all three to see that his explanation was theory and lack of experience. Therefore we came away no wiser than when we went.

Mr. Eva, Commissioner Jacobson, and Mr. Evanson, of the appeal board, attended a meeting of the National Association of Grain Dealers held in Kansas City last September. Dr. Duval, of the Agricultural Department at Washington, was invited to this meeting to explain the grading of corn, but, to the astonishment of all present, he could not defend his position against the practical corn buyers of the United States.

I am of the opinion that hereafter all corn in the country will be bought as sample corn, because it is impossible for the country buyer to do it in any other way. Consequently, it will mean a great loss to the producers of the country.

So far I have given my opinion why it is impracticable. Now I will give you a few of the rules in the new grades. We shall pass the first two grades and take up what is called "No. 3 corn." This rule reads as follows:

"No. 3 corn: Shall be sweet, exclusive of heat damaged or mahogany kernels, and must not contain more than 17.5 per cent moisture, 6 per cent damaged corn, 2 per cent foreign material, 4 per cent cracked corn.

"No. 4 corn: Shall be sweet and must not contain more than 19.5 per cent moisture, 8 per cent damaged corn, 2 per cent foreign material, 4 per cent cracked corn, one-half of 1 per cent heat damaged or mahogany kernels.

"No. 5 corn: Shall be sweet and must not contain more than 21.5 per cent moisture, 10 per cent damaged corn, 3 per cent foreign material, 5 per cent cracked corn, 1 per cent heat damaged or mahogany kernels.

"No. 6 corn: Must not contain more than 23 per cent moisture, 15 per cent damaged corn, 5 per cent foreign material, 7 per cent cracked corn, 3 per cent heat-damaged or mahogany kernels. May be musty, sour, and include corn of inferior quality, such as immature and badly blistered corn."

They have anothter rule they call "Sample corn." That includes all corn that does not meet the requirements of either of the six grades by reason of excessive moisture, damaged kernels, foreign matter, cracked corn, hot corn, heat-damaged corn, fire-burnt corn, infested with live weevil, or otherwise distinctly low grade.

I did not mention the two first grades because that is easy enough for any buyer to buy from, but besides these six grades we have white corn, six grades, and yellow corn and mixed corn and finely broken corn.

The moisture percentages, according to those provided in grade specifications, shall conform to results obtained by the standard method and testor described in Circular No. 72, Bureau of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture. Further than that, they have also a note that it is understood that the damaged corn, the foreign material, including pieces of cob dirt, finely broken corn, other grains, etc., and the coarsely broken or cracked corn as provided for under the various grades shall be such as occur naturally in corn when handled under good commercial conditions.

These rules undoubtedly read good and may be understood by theorists in certain departments where such work is performed, but it is impossible for any practical buyer in the country to know just how much moisture there is in corn when brought to the elevator, and it is impossible for such a buyer to determine the moisture content in his place. Under the old Minnesota rules it is true that it included moisture in the rules, but the practical buyers knew from experience what that meant, and the same when we speak about immature, badly blistered corn, foreign material, and mahogany color.

This, added to the above, I think, will convince any practical man that the so-called grades for commercial corn promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, taking effect July 1, 1914, are impracticable for both State and interstate trade.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] is recognized for two minutes.

[Mr. HELGESEN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this subject has been before Congress for a good many years. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at one time had jurisdiction of bills on the subject and had a number of hearings upon those bills. When the Moss bill was finally introduced I believe that was the result of various negotiations between people interested in the subject and was the outgrowth of several bills that had been introduced before.

I hold in my hand, for instance, a letter from the chairman of the Millers' National Federation Committee on Grain Standardization and Inspection, representing the millers of the land, very heartily approving the provisions of this bill. I also hold in my hand a letter from the secretary of the Chicago Board of Trade. While gentlemen speak of the Chicago Board of Trade in language that is not particularly pleasant, still that is the great body in the country that handles grain. The Chicago Board of Trade has come to the conclusion that Federal supervision of grain is desirable and ought to be put into effect, and the secretary, who has had considerable to do with working out the solution of this problem in behalf of the Chicago Board of Trade and the boards of trade quite generally, speaks in behalf of this bill.

I believe that it will be a good thing if the bill be enacted into law. It does not go as far as some people desire; it goes further than other people desire. But it gives us Federal supervision and undertakes to provide a uniformity in the standardization of grain which can be understood by everybody.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting these letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Following are the letters referred to:

BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO,
Chicago, July 24, 1914.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am in receipt of copies of H. R. 17971, introduced by Mr. MOSS July 18.

The object of this letter is to acquaint you with the present situation in this association in the subject matter of the bill, because you may receive letters from members for or against the enactment of this measure.

Some two and a half years ago a committee of this association went to Washington to interview Dr. Wiley relative to rulings he had recently promulgated bearing on fermenting and heating corn and oats having weather stain artificially bleached off by the use of dioxide of sulphur gas, with the result that within a month thereafter delegates representing the exchanges and grain associations of the country, including farmers, to the number of 82 met in Washington to make a representation to the three Secretaries constituting a board of control of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, the board at that time being composed of Secretaries Wilson, Nagel, and MacVeagh.

At a conference of the whole number in attendance, for the purpose of determining what should be presented to the Secretaries, the question of Federal inspection of grain was brought out by Mr. Brandeis, of Louisville—by the way, a brother of the well-known attorney—and he insisted that the Secretaries be informed that the grain interests of the country were in favor of Federal inspection of grain. A committee was finally appointed by the chair to draw up resolutions setting forth the attitude of the conference, on which committee Mr. C. B. Pierce, then a director of this association, a member of Bartlett Frazier Co., was a member. I was present as a delegate. This committee brought in a resolution, which was adopted, approving Federal supervision of grading of grain, but opposing Federal inspection. At the Norfolk convention of the Grain Dealers' National Association, held in October, 1913, delegates from this board participating, the resolution referred to was read and indorsed, thereby making it the action of the national body. In New Orleans, October, 1913, it was reaffirmed. The president and secretary of this association and other delegates were present and agreeing to it, therefore this association is committed to the principle of Federal supervision.

The bill herein referred to, in my opinion, can do us no harm. I have studied it carefully. Boiled down, it simply means that there would be Federal supervisors in our State inspection department in this city; that the appointment of our inspectors would remain as now, in the hands of our State authorities; that the interchanging of supervisors between markets would soon produce uniformity of grading throughout the country—this being the sole object of supervision, in order that No. 2 wheat or No. 2 corn may be of the same quality in all markets, which we believe would facilitate business with our buyers in this and foreign countries, the grade and quality being thoroughly understood, leaving price only to be adjusted to complete transactions.

I have met with representatives of the Department of Agriculture in conference with members of the Committee on Agriculture, and the statement was there made and agreed to that the rules and regulations to be made by the Secretary would be made after fully consulting with the grain growers and handlers.

I believe that we are more likely than not to have some legislation bearing upon this subject at no distant time in response to a more or less general demand. I believe this proposed measure will do us no harm, and perhaps another might, especially Federal inspection in the shape of the McCumber bill, would do us a lot of harm.

This association has held no public meeting to consider the matter, but it has been freely discussed for a considerable time, and I feel myself tolerably well qualified to express the conclusions of a major portion of our membership.

Yours, very truly, J. C. F. MERRILL, Secretary.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1914.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to my call on you this morning in connection with the Moss grain bill, H. R. 17971, I desire to confirm my statement that the Millers' National Federation, having a membership of over 1,000, favors the passage of this bill, believing it to be very much needed.

We do not believe that this or any other bill will or could be expected to eliminate all inspection or trade abuses. We believe, however, that this bill, if enacted, will decidedly improve conditions.

Yours, truly,

FRED J. HINGHAM,
Chairman Millers' National Federation Committee on Grain Standardization and Inspection.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1914.

The Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Millers' National Federation committee on grain standardization and inspection is as follows:

Mr. E. H. Evans, of Acme Evans Co., Indianapolis, Ind.; Mr. L. R. Hurd, president the Red Star Mill & Elevator Co., Wichita, Kans.; Mr. John S. Pillsbury, vice president Pillsbury Flour Mills Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; Mr. B. M. Renick, secretary and manager the Paris Milling Co. and secretary-treasurer Central Kentucky Millers' Association, Paris, Ky.; Mr. Alexander Stock, of F. W. Stock & Sons, Hillsdale, Mich.

Mr. M. N. Mennel, president Millers' National Federation, secretary Central Freight Association of Millers, and treasurer the Harter Milling Co., Toledo, Ohio, has been in constant touch and in full accord with our committee.

From the above you will note that our committee is representative of many sections of the whole country, and also of flour milling businesses, both large, small, and of medium size. In fact, we believe that a request for assistance from our Federal Government in improving general trade customs and practices could hardly be more general.

Yours, truly,

FRED J. HINGHAM, Chairman,
Vice President Federal Milling Co., Lockport, N. Y.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time remains to this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOWLER). The gentleman from Pennsylvania has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time allotted to me it is not my purpose to detain the House by entering into a detail discussion of this bill.

I believe it enough to say that the proposed bill provides for the standardization of grain for a uniform application of Government standards in determining the real grade of grain for which standards have been established and promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to fix, establish, and promulgate standards of quality and condition of corn, wheat, rye, oats, and other grains. The Secretary of Agriculture may issue license to a person competent to inspect and grade grain; that such license may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be suspended or revoked whenever the Secretary is satisfied that the licensed inspector has failed to grade grain correctly in accordance with the official standard or has violated any provision of this act or if the license has been used for any improper purpose whatsoever; also that no person shall certify that any grain which has been inspected or graded by him is one of the official grades unless he holds an unsuspended and unrevoked license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture authorizing him to inspect and grade grain for interstate and foreign commerce. Whenever standards shall have been fixed, established, and promulgated no person thereafter shall ship or deliver for shipment, sell or offer for sale, in interstate and foreign commerce any such grain by grade unless the grade by which it is sold or offered for sale be one of the grades fixed therefor and the grain shall have been inspected and graded by an inspector licensed under this act and the grade conformed to the standard fixed for the specific grade.

The practice of selling by sample, by type, or under name, description, or designation, may be continued, provided such name, description, or designation is not false or misleading. It provides further that whenever standardized grain has been inspected and a dispute arises as to whether the grain determined by such inspector of any such grain in fact conforms to the standards any interested party may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture; if so, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause investigatioin to be made and to determine the true grade thereof, to charge and collect a reasonable fee in amounts to be fixed by him. In the absence of private agreement the appeal from such inspector to the Secretary shall be taken at the initial point and before the identity of the grade has been lost. The findings of the Secretary shall be accepted in the courts as prima facie evidence of the true grade. It also authorizes the Secretary to cause examination to be made of any grain for which standards have been established, which has been certified, or which has been sold or offered for sale in interstate and foreign commerce under any name, description, or designation, he may publish his findings. Heavy penalties are to be imposed for violation of the provisions of the act. The bill carries an appropriation of $375,000 to enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of it.

As has been stated, the bill does not provide for Federal inspection and grading at first hand. It does provide for Federal supervision of the grading and final determination of the grade by the Secretary of Agriculture which, in fact, amounts to Federal inspection in the end. That is, if in case the inspection and grading by the licensed inspector is not satisfactory and an appeal is taken, the only difference then is that under the proposed bill the grain will in the first instance be inspected by inspectors authorized by the States, exchanges, or municipalities and licensed by the Federal Government, and if said inspection is not satisfactory either party interested may appeal and procure Federal inspection and determination, while with Federal inspection the grain would be inspected by a Federal inspector at first hand; but in case where an appeal is taken under either system the final inspection will be by one and the same, hence in the end, if an appeal is taken, we will have Federal inspection under either system.

The contention is that at present the inspectors are controlled and under the influence of the exchanges and interested parties employing them and therefore Congress should provide for Federal inspection and thus remove the inspectors from the influences surrounding them, such as the operators of exchanges, State politics, and interested parties who control their appointment. Undoubtedly inspectors are inuflenced and great injustice has been done to the shipper and buyer in inspecting and grading grain below its real grade when coming in and grading it above its real grade when going out for the benefit of the operators, manipulators, and jugglers of grading on the various exchanges; but when the inspector and those interested are made to understand that unless they do the right thing, that unless they grade grain correctly, appeals will be taken, fraud will be disclosed, licenses will be suspended and revoked, and publicity given to every evil practice of the kind. That, I believe, will have a powerful influence over the inspectors, States, exchanges, and those interested in maintaining the grain business at their market, and if the law is enforced and taken advantage of, no market can continue the evil practice of incorrect grading. If it does, it is sure to lose its business. If so, it will be up to every State and market to maintain an honest inspection and grading of grain or lose its grain business. Certainly no board of trade or market can afford to have numerous appeals taken and reversed, licenses suspended, and such facts published to the world. Under the bill, as a business proposition it will be to their interest to give a square deal. Be that as it may, whatever course they may pursue, the farmer, the miller, the brewer, the shipper, and the buyer are protected in their right to an appeal and thus have the true grade determined. Why this legislation? The answer is simply to do away with the present fraudulent practice in grading of grain, to protect the farmers, the elevator men, the millers, the brewers, the shippers, and the buyers against fraud, deception, to insure an honest grading, to do away with the manipulations of grades, and insure a square deal.

The farmer has long suffered from the fraudulent practice; his grain all these years has been undergraded. We find that his grain when it reaches the market is graded below its true grade, and, as the grade determines the price on grain, he receives a lower price as a result. Take, for instance, barley: If you would turn to the hearings, you will find Mr. Stuher's testimony. Mr. Stuher is a crop specialist and a barley expert, with many years' experience as a shipper and as an operator on the board of trade. His statement is that—

> There is something absolutely wrong with the present system of inspection and grading of grain.

He cites one case where the farmer sold his barley at Wahpeton, N. Dak. His barley was graded No. 2 feed barley, subject to 2 pounds dockage, and sold at Wahpeton at 40 cents a bushel. The barley was shipped to Minneapolis—commission, freight, weighing, and inspection charges, 7½ cents. The barley sold at Minneapolis at 58 cents, not by grade but by sample, with a No. 2 feed barley certificate stain on it, even grading and certifying it as feed barley, when in fact it should have been certified as malting barley. Mr. Stuher's statement is that—

> Barley coming to Duluth and Minneapolis is generally inspected by the inspection department as feed barley in order to correspond with the inspection and grade given the farmer; that the terminal men, under the existing laws, have to send the certificate back to the country points, and the farmer is shown the certificate in order to pacify him who is under the impression that his barley was malting barley.

Thus the farmer is deceived and defrauded of the difference in value of No. 2 feed barley and malting barley, which generally runs from 5 to 15 cents a bushel. Mr. Stuher stated to the committee that he collected and sent 30 or 40 samples of barley, all graded at Minneapolis as feed barley, to Pabst Brewing Co., to have them analyzed, and that every one of them, according to the analytical report, showed them to be malting barley. In other words, 30 or 40 samples, representing that many carloads, graded feed barley at the initial point and graded malting barley at the analysis, such being the general practice. Has not the farmer a right to ask for relief?

How about the miller, the brewer, and the buyer? Under the present system of grading, grain coming in is graded low in order to defraud the farmer and the shipper; in going out it is graded high in order to defraud the miller and the buyer. The operator gets the farmer and the shipper coming and the miller, the brewer, and buyer going. A number of years ago a bankers' association of North Dakota investigated the inspection and grading of grain in the Northwest. In going over the records of the grain-inspection department of Minnesota it found that a single terminal elevator in a period of three months had advanced the grade on 435,618 bushels of wheat. Out of its total receipt of 890,245 bushels, evidently nearly one-half of the grain handled was either undergraded coming in or graded too high going out. The records showed that 59,742 bushels had been graded rejected, 16,021 no grade, 201,267 as No. 4, and not a bushel graded such going out. All were converted into higher grades, every bushel of it going out as 1, 2, and 3 northern. According to the report only 513,213 bushels was graded Nos. 1, 2, and 3 coming in, and 890,245 bushels graded Nos. 1, 2, and 3 going out. It is clear that the manipulation of grading was for some purpose and that whatever the elevator operator gained must have been some one's loss, and of course came out of either the shipper or the buyer, and in the end largely, if not all, out of the producer. The shipper and buyer often lose, but most of the time they can protect themselves against losses by fixing prices accordingly. If malting barley, when graded as such, is worth 50 cents and its selling price is reduced to 40 cents by reason of false grading, necessarily he pays that much less. If the brewer and the miller buy grain graded higher than its true grade, they have something to say in fixing the price and fix the price according to its real value. With the producer it is quite different. If the price of grain is lowered by reason of manipulation of grade, he is helpless. He simply has to take what he gets. So, while the manipulation of grades is greatly to the disadvantage of the shipper and buyer, the injustice and loss falls most heavily on the producer.

How about selling and buying for future delivery? We have the testimony of Mr. Stuher, who sold 100,000 bushels of oats by sample for January delivery. He bought 100,000 bushels of standard oats which, by a purifying process, was to be made into fancy oats. He was buying the standard oats against what he had sold, and of course needed the quality of oats contracted for, namely, the standard oats. On December 2, 100,000 bushels of oats were tendered under certificate as standard oats. He had 10 or 20 cars of the oats tendered as standard inspected by a board of trade private inspector, who graded them as No. 4 white oats. He complained and took the matter up with the appeals commission. It passed on the oats as if standard oats. He served notice that he would take the oats under protest; that he would bring it into court and expose the rotten system. He was then told that the oats would be passed as standard in the East; but that did not help matters out, as he had bought oats to be made into fancy, and No. 4 oats could not be improved upon in grade to that extent and did not answer his purpose. What next? The firm financing him came to the rescue of the exchange by serving notice upon Stuher to stop; if not, it would break up the Chicago Board of Trade. If he did not stop they would stop financing him. Of course he stopped, as there was nothing else for him to do. Others testified before the committee, and all to the fact that grading and certification of grain has become so unreliable and false that millers and buyers of grain no longer do or care to accept of grain on contracts certified by the terminal elevators; that they are compelled to sell their hedges for anything they can get and buy grain elsewhere for their use. Their experience has been the same as that of Mr. Stuher; that their hedges are worthless except as an insurance, and as an insurance they have become very expensive by reason of the manipulation of grades.

It would seem that the statement made by those experienced, practical, and well-informed men who appeared before the committee—recorded in 588 pages of printed hearings before the House committee and 260 pages before the Senate committee—would be sufficient to convince anybody that there is something radically wrong somewhere. I believe that anyone who will investigate will agree that there is absolutely something wrong with the present system of grading grain, and that there is a pressing demand and just cause for the proposed legislation; that the farmers and shippers have sustained heavy losses by reason of this unfair grading and manipulation of grades; that our foreign trade in grain has suffered; that our markets have been demoralized by the incorrect grading; that it is due the farmer and shipper that Congress should prevent further wrongdoing through this incorrect and unjust grading system; and that it should protect him against fraud and further demoralization of his markets.

The bill comes to you backed up by the unanimous report of the committee, by representatives of the Department of Agriculture, by representatives of legislative committees of the Grain Dealers' Mutual Association of Elevator Companies, and Farmers' Cooperative Association, who appeared before the committee and advocated the passage of the bill; by publishers, millers, and representatives of the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and grain exchanges of Chicago, Louisville, Ky., Buffalo, Indianapolis, Peoria, Minneapolis, Duluth, Toledo, Omaha, Boston, St. Louis, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Baltimore, and others who appeared before the committee; representatives of the Warehouse Commission of Missouri; and Illinois State Public Utility Commission testified before the committee in favor of the bill. Mr. Stuher, specialist and barley expert, speaking, I believe, for the brewers, indorsed it; in fact everybody expressed themselves in favor of the bill, except, as has been stated, a few exporters.

It would seem that in this Congress, its Members professing so much interest in the farmer and so much concern about his welfare, a Congress so enthusiastic in its laudation for the farmer, coupling this with the unceasing flow of eloquence recorded in several hundred pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, all indicating a desire to help the farmer in every way possible, and with the promises in the platforms of all parties so loudly proclaimed from the stump, I take it that there will be no difficulty in passing this meritorious bill which means so much to the farmer and shipper.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman from Iowa tell the House whether he holds the same opinion—he being the ranking Republican on the committee—that is held by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss], that this act will not apply to Canadian grain in bond intended for export?

Mr. HAUGEN. In my opinion it does not apply to grain shipped in bond from Canada for export.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the gentleman for that statement.

Mr. HAUGEN. But it applies to grain entering into interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. SUMNERS. Are you in favor of the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am in favor of the bill; yes.

In availing myself of the privilege granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, in order that the RECORD may show the existing conditions I offer extracts from the report as printed in Senate Document No. 116, page 17:

REPORT OF INVESTIGATION BY NORTH DAKOTA BANKERS' ASSOCIATION MADE NOVEMBER 23, 1906.

To Members North Dakota Bankers' Association:

Your committee appointed to investigate the subject of grain inspection and grading, as affecting the interests of North Dakota shippers, met according to arrangement at Superior, Wis., on the morning of September 27, and, after a preliminary discussion as to the scope of the investigation, proceeded to visit some of the terminal elevators in order to familiarize themselves with the methods of handling grain as it comes from the shipper. We found that grain is inspected, graded, and the dockage fixed by the State inspector under the rules of the Minnesota grain inspection board. The grain is then ordered into one of the terminal elevators and after being unloaded is elevated to the top of the elevator where it is weighed. During the process of elevating all grain is subjected to a suction draft in order to keep the building free from dust (?). This is an injustice to the shipper, as, in our judgment, all grain should be weighed immediately upon being unloaded and nothing should be taken from it before it is weighed. The amount of light grain and dirt taken out under the present method simply depends upon the force of the suction draft.

We obtained a statement showing the grain of various grades shipped in and shipped out from one of the larger elevators during a period of three months.

* * * * * * *

We find that eastern millers want the grain as it comes from the farmer, and it is an injustice to the shipper and to the miller to prevent this, as is now done. The shipper must accept the inspection, rules, and customs which have been forced upon him by the powerful combination of elevator and railway interests, and the miller must take the grain that is offered him by the "grain trust," so called, and not in the condition as to mixing that he wants it.

In examining the report, above referred to, of grain received and grain shipped out of the terminal elevator we were able to get a report from, we found that during the three months covered the report showed the following grain received and shipped out:

RECEIPTS.	Bushels.
No. 1 northern	99,711.40
No. 2 northern	141,455.10
No. 3 northern	272,047.20
No. 4	201,267.20
No grade	116,021.10
Rejected	59,742.30
	890,245.10

SHIPPED OUT.	Bushels.
No. 1 northern	196,288.30
No. 2 northern	467,764.00
No. 3	213,459.30
No. 4	None.
No grade	None.
Rejected	None.
	877,512.00
On hand, estimated	12,733.10

* * * * * * *

What an eloquent story is told by the above figures. The fact that nearly 100,000 bushels more of No. 1 northern, the highest grade taken in, was shipped out than was received speaks so loud against the present system and rules of inspection that it is simply unnecessary to go on down the line and call your attention to the fact that nothing lower than No. 3 wheat was shipped out.

The profit in mixing the receipts of this elevator for the three months, as shown by their report, was $83,720.69. In order to arrive at the probable profits of the terminal elevators there should be added to the above the amount realized from the screenings, the charges for handling the grain, and the proceeds of the sale of wheat and other grain taken from the screenings, for we found that all screenings are carefully cleaned over and all good grain taken out, and that the good grain taken from the screenings is shipped out as screenings in order to avoid inspection and appearing in the amount of grain shipped out of the elevator. We are of the opinion that grain hospitals, either independent or in connection with terminal elevators, should be established, where shippers could have "off-grade" grain cleaned or scoured at a reasonable cost before it is offered for sale, the shipper to pay this expense and receive the benefit resulting from such treatment of his grain needing treatment in a hospital elevator. We also favor the amending of existing laws governing the handling of grain by terminal elevators so as to allow no more grain of a given grade to be shipped out than is taken in.

Your committee found much to criticize by visiting the freight yards, in the careless manner in which cars are handled by the railroad companies and the very poor class of grain doors used. The amount of grain lost by leakage from cars and by the careless shunting and switching of cars in the yards is very large.

All the foregoing are, of course, matters of minor importance as compared with the apparent combination of the railroad and elevator interests in forcing all grain received at terminal points to be inspected under Minnesota inspection rules. A competitive market was established under Wisconsin inspection at Superior. The Wisconsin law provides that the grain and warehouse commission shall consist of three members—one from Wisconsin, one from New York, and one from North Dakota. Under this law the shipper in this State has a representative on the board, and the influence of this representative can be of great benefit to our shippers if his duties are conscientiously performed.

This board appoints all inspectors and weighers and can see to it that inspection and weighing is honestly and properly done. Our shippers were undoubtedly greatly benefited during the time the Wisconsin inspection was in force, but by the apparent combined efforts of the interests above named this Wisconsin inspection is inoperative and all grain received at the head of the Lakes must be inspected by Minnesota inspectors under Minnesota rules.

The story of how the Wisconsin law was made absolutely inoperative is an interesting one. The Duluth Board of Trade made a rule that no member of the Duluth Board of Trade could hold membership in a similar organization within a hundred miles of Duluth. This was done to compel all grain men doing business at the head of the Lakes to confine their business to Duluth. Then all terminal elevators located in Superior suddenly were closed as public elevators and became private elevators, operated by individuals holding leases. As private elevators, they were able to discriminate in the business offered them, and this discrimination took the form of refusing to receive grain inspected under Wisconsin rules and by Wisconsin inspectors. It does not require anything further to show you how Wisconsin inspection was put "down and out" and why all of our grain must now be graded, inspected, and weighed under Minnesota inspection rules.

Your committee attempted to have a hearing with the Duluth Board of Trade and met with some of the officers and members of that board for this purpose.

* * * * * * *

Your committee is of the opinion that the reforms outlined will be of material benefit to the grain growers of the State and will be a stepping-stone to a better system of inspection, viz:

Federal inspection, which would do away entirely with the many conflicting inspections established in the various States.

Respectfully submitted.

Also, page 231, hearings before the Senate committee in 1908, a report from the chief inspector of the grain and warehouse commission of the State of Minnesota, which show the receipts and shipments for the year ending August 31, 1901, to be as follows:

	Receipts.	Shipments
	Bushels.	Bushels.
No. 1 hard	341,567	1,000,433

Rejected	256,063	134,471
No grade	1,335,531	344,825

It will be observed that for the year 1902 about 5,000,000 bushels of the No. 2 northern was converted into No. 1, and that of the 19,693,454 bushels graded No. 2, 7,035,133 bushels No. 3 northern, 892,241 bushels were rejected, and 2,561,595 bushels, no grade; when coming in very little of it shipped out as such, the major portion of the lower grade going out at a high grade. The statement and reports tell the story. Comments seem unnecessary.

Another table, taken from the records of the weighing department of the State of Minnesota, shows the amount of each grade weighed in at, and the amount weighed out of, the elevator at Duluth during the years 1902, 1903, and 1904—found on page 207, Hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate, April 4, 1908.

The table is as follows:

The following is a letter written by Robert A. Patterson, chairman of the European international committee on American grain certificates. He is an English miller and also president of the Corn Exchange of Great Britain and continental Europe. It is dated the 15th of February, 1908, and written from London to the President. It reads:

LONDON CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION,
EXCHANGE CHAMBERS, 28 ST. MARY AXE,
London, E. C., February 15, 1908.

MR. PRESIDENT: I am instructed by the European international committee on American grain certificates to communicate to you the following facts:

There has been for some years past a general consensus of opinion among European buyers of grain that the operation of the present system of certificating grain for export is increasingly unsatisfactory and that whatever may be its merits for the purposes of domestic trading, it no longer gives to European buyers the confidence and protection which is necessary in a trade where the only guaranty for reliable quality and condition in exchange for buyer's money is a paper certificate. Formerly buyers in buying from the United States of America were able, as they still are in their dealings in grain with other exporting countries, to recover from shippers any damage they sustained owing to defects in quality or condition; but since the introduction of the certificating system this is no longer possible. Even after its introduction, indeed until comparatively recent times, it was seldom found that any serious abuses arose, and trusting to their belief in the reliability of the grading system, buyers were willing to continue trading with America on less favorable terms than they demanded elsewhere; but whether from the increase of individual competition, or, what is probably more important, the rivalry between the older ports and their smaller and more recently established competitors, there seems little doubt but that the standard of grading has been lowered, either temporarily or, in some cases, permanently, in order to attract business from interior points; and we in Europe feel that the burden of such departure from the more reliable and stricter method in force formerly has been borne chiefly by European importers, who, being far away, have no power of protecting themselves against errors, or worse, in the grading methods of recent years. The result is that American grain suffers as regards price when in competition with grain from other countries. The increasing dissatisfaction culminated some 12 months ago in a general request from the principal European grain centers that a conference should be summoned by the London Corn Trade Association to consider the best measures to adopt in order to remedy the defects of the present system of dealing in grain from the United States of America.

The conference was held in London on the 8th of November, 1907, and was attended by delegates from all European importing countries. It was unanimously resolved that a committee be appointed, consisting of seven members from the United Kingdom and an equal number from other European countries (the latter being represented as follows: Belgium, 1; France, 1; Germany, 3; Holland, 1; and Scandinavia, 1), to suggest necessary improvements and to negotiate with American grain trade for their adoption.

This committee met and drew up a scheme (a copy of which I have the honor to append), which was submitted to the principal grain associations of the United States of America, but which, I regret to say, did not only prove unacceptable to the American exchanges, but even failed to draw any counter proposals from them. Indeed, the way in which this subject has been treated by some of the leading grain associations, there would almost seem to indicate that there is no desire to recognize the undoubted fact that serious faults have arisen or that there is any need to amend a system which is responsible for abuses of which European importers universally complain.

Traders here generally recognize that a reliable system of inspection and certificating presents many advantages, but that to be thoroughly reliable it must depend not only upon the expert knowledge, integrity, and independence of the inspection officials, but that the rules for grading by which these officials are bound must be uniform, applying equally to every port, and should be generally known not only in the various American but also in the principal European grain centers, and that wherever possible from time to time type samples should be sent to our leading grain associations.

This is the system adopted by the agricultural department of His Majesty's Government in the Dominion of Canada, and has hitherto proved generally satisfactory.

My committee observed with great satisfaction your reference to this important matter in your last presidential message, and that there is before your Senate and House of Representatives at the present time a bill embodying some of the above suggestions. While they would, of course, have preferred to get their own suggestions accepted by American traders, they wish to be permitted to offer you their sincere congratulations and thanks for the steps you are taking to remedy an undoubted evil, and to assure you of the warm support of the European grain trade in your efforts.

I have the honor to be, your most humble and obedient servant,

ROBERT A. PATTERSON,
Chairman European International Committee on American Grain Certificates.

The PRESIDENT,
White House, United States of America, Washington, U. S. A.

In a letter to Senator MCCUMBER, under date of February 15, 1908, he stated:

I believe that great efforts are being made to persuade your Senators and House of Representatives that the proposed change is not only unnecessary but not generally desired, but I can assure you that unless some such change is made, and that shortly, your export trade will suffer severely.

European buyers have lost confidence in the reliability of United States certificates, and American grain consequently suffers in price, buyers giving a preference whenever possible to other grain, and only buying yours when compelled to do so, or at a reduction in price sufficient, in their opinion, to compensate them for risks they run in buying certificate final.

Another letter from Holland and one from our consul at Marseille, which is also a very strong letter. The Holland letter reads as follows:

P. J. MCCUMBER, Esq.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

During the last Berlin grain conference, held January 29 and 30 of this year by delegates of the German, Holland, and Scandinavian grain trade, the McCumber bill and the other bills of similar character introduced into Congress were one of the chief subjects on the program.

The question of American grain inspection has been a very important one these latter years, and its having been a subject of the conference program induces us to assure you of the sympathy that the proposed change in the inspection system has among the members of this association.

During many years already the American grain-inspection certificates have been very unsatisfactory, and immense losses were caused to the buyers on this side by the careless inspection of American grain shipped for export. It has been said by American opponents of the bills mentioned above that the fixing of grades on better and higher standards would injure the export trade, and that the European buyers will not buy anything but the grades which have always been shipped and to which they are accustomed.

We want to energetically deny that anything like this is the case or may be expected when Government grain inspection will have been introduced. On the contrary, we think that a more reliable inspection will greatly benefit the American export trade.

Many important firms in the importing centers on this side have absolutely given up importing American corn, taught by the experience of several years, when a single parcel of this article, certified No. 2 mixed, sail mixed, etc., and still showing 30 to 90 per cent damage on arrival, caused a loss greater than the small gain made on many shipments together. They preferred to buy from Argentina, Russia, and the Danube. A better inspection, however, and certificates which give sufficient guaranty that the grade has really been given in accordance with the grain's quality and condition will induce these firms to take up the import of American corn again.

We don't object to the export of inferior grain, but to the fact that the grades are not given according to the condition of the grain, so that the certificates are entirely unreliable. Perhaps some buyers on this side want the inferior grain, but those who deal in the better qualities want to be sure that when they pay a better price for the higher grade the certificate gives them the guaranty to get this grade. Up till now this has not been the case, and it is quite evident that a more satisfactory inspection will be of great benefit to the trade.

As soon as grades all over the United States are uniform, and as soon as certificates of inspection will be reliable, the import of American grain will certainly increase again after the sharp decline which it has experienced.

Uniform Government inspection will bring a higher standard of export grain, induce the European importer to buy American grain more freely again, and consequently greatly benefit the honest American exporter at the cost of his dishonest competitor. It will greatly purify the trade and make an end to an unbearable situation.

Yours, truly,

HET COMITÉ VAN GRAANHANDELAREN TE ROTTERDAM.

ROTTERDAM, February 20, 1908.

The letter from the United States consul at Marseille is in part as follows:

GRAIN-INSPECTION METHODS.

It is highly desirable that certain facts in regard to American grain-selling methods be given immediate and wide circulaton, and that something be done, either by action of Congress or by the concerted action of American commercial bodies, to reform or rather standardize the system under which the great cereal-exporting business has been created.

There is little popular knowledge in the United States in regard to the fact that wheat, corn, grease, and similar products of American origin are not now sold abroad by sample, but by nominal grade. The European buyer knows nothing of the merchandise whatever before it reaches his possession. He imports and resells various classes of merchandise the quality or grade of which is certified to him, not by the merchant who has sold him the article, but by the official inspector of a board of trade or other equivalent body at the port of shipment. He pays for the goods before he receives them, and when the exporter in the United States delivers to him a certificate of inspection declaring the goods to be of a given grade he has no alternative but to honor the drafts. The bargain is absolutely final upon the production to him of this certificate of inspection.

Although no two ports in the United States may absolutely agree as to the descriptive terms to be applied to a given grade of wheat, although previous shipments may have been of obviously different quality, if the certificate delivered conforms to the grade ordered, the buyer must accept delivery. These are "American conditions." The fact that for many years we have exported nearly all our surplus agricultural products under these conditions speaks well for American business methods, and the fact that these methods are generally acceptable is of advantage to the people of the United States.

Of late years the murmurs against this system have been increasing in Europe, and whereas a short time ago they took the form of isolated private complaints that goods did not always conform to the certified grade they now take the form of organized protests. I have before me not merely private correspondence running through a number of years, but the recent proceedings of the London Corn Trade Association and the proceedings of a delegate conference held on December 12 at the Berlin Bourse, the general tenor of which is that foreign importers are vexed with prevailing conditions in the United States and are determined to force an improvement. At these two conferences a great many harsh things were said in regard to American certificates, and specific instances of irregularities were mention which I need not now repeat. The vital point which it will be well to separate from so much context is this:

"Mr. FRIEDBERG (Hamburg). It is perfectly clear that if an American inspector certifies we have no right to doubt, or if we do we are asked, 'Why do you go on buying?' I may assure this meeting that a good many of us are not going on buying. We have none of this trouble in South America. For the general trade I think that there are respectable people enough in America, and I am wondering why they do not stop the glaring abuses that are complained of."

It was the fact that not many years ago the vast bulk of our grain exportations went forward from New York, and that every year standard samples of cereals were sent out to European buyers bearing the seal of the New York commercial bodies which issued certificates of inspection. Under such circumstances, when European buyers received a certificate from New York stating that a certain cargo afloat was of X quality, they could refer to their sample of this X grain, and there was at least a moral guaranty that sample and cargo would be alike. The practice of sending out standard samples is no longer followed, while grain is being shipped under certificates of inspection from Duluth, New York, Baltimore, New Orleans, Galveston, and probably elsewhere. In each port or place a commercial organization assumes the right to issue certificates of grade, and yet no two ports or places have agreed upon the text of the terms which they use to describe the standard grades, let alone upon the grain itself. Nor is this all. I quote from the printed rules of a great board of trade:

"The committee on grain shall have full power and authority to establish grades of grains and to alter and amend the same as may be deemed necessary or expedient."

This instability is naturally one of the conditions of American business that is least acceptable to foreign importers, and what with rivalry between ports for export business it has created not only bitter feeling abroad but definite differences in the prices at which grain of the same nominal grade is offered for sale at the different ports of shipment. There are "easy ports" and "good ports," and sometimes the "easy ports" are penalized, as thus explained in a recent letter from an importer to an officer of an American commercial organization:

"As you know, at present exporters have great difficulty selling on certificates, but were quality is reasonably assured they are willing to pay a premium over lower inspections. Newport News and Norfolk were excluded on the London and Liverpool contracts because of last year's No. 2 corn shipments, while, as you know, your inspection maintained a premium all last season over the Atlantic."

No wheat importers desire to pay a premium here, or to exact a penalty there, based upon their appreciation of inspection methods. Wheat will fix its own price readily enough, and what the importer wishes to know, and has a right to know with as much certainty as attaches to any human transaction, is that No. 1 white winter wheat, for example, is the same kind of grain, whether it be inspected at Duluth or New Orleans. The importer insists that if the American Government, commercial bodies, and individual exporters have not agreed upon the qualifications of various grains necessary that they may receive specific gradings, it is the result of their own negligence, very possibly encouraged in certain quarters by those who profit by this unsatisfactory state of affairs.

The remedy sought is so easy of application and the demand for its application is so entirely reasonable that to the importer protracted resistance is incomprehensible. The proper remedy may be applied either by our Government or by the cooperation of our trade bodies. The starting point of the reform would be, naturally, the establishment of standard descriptions by law. This done, if the Government were charged with the issuance of inspection certificates, the service would be removed from local influences, and our so-called official certificates would be rehabilitated. If this very rational proposition be objected to, the surest means of effectively combating it would be the holding of a conference of American grain-inspecting bodies for the adoption of grain standards and for the adoption of ways and means of drawing standard samples, to be deposited in American consulates at great European ports or to be issued upon demand to importers, and to provide for a board of inspectors, the members thereof to be transferred at intervals and liberated from every form of local pressure.

ROBERT P. SKINNER,
Consul General.

MARSEILLE, December 8, 1906.

Also, in order that the RECORD may show how the manipulation of grades affect our foreign markets, I will include correspondence printed in Senate Document No. 116 and hearings before the Senate committee:

Mr. Tedford, State grain inspector of Kansas, testified that the standard of grades going out of elevators was the minimum or lowest character of grade, while others testified that of the grain as it went into elevator the lowest grade in the car was the standard.

On pages 788, 789, Mr. Bevan testified as to the custom of "car plugging," and gave instances of where from 150 to 200 cars were so plugged, and described the plugging system as follows:

"Q. What is the practice of plugging cars?"

Mr. Bevan answered:

"It is putting a poor grade on the bottom and covering it with good stuff, so the inspector can not get at it. They have what is called 'trier' to push into the car. If it does not go deep enough, he does not know the poor stuff is there."

On page 790 Mr. Forsaith testified to his knowledge of the plugging of wheat going to public elevators, as follows:

"They would run up tailings, bin-burned wheat, stumpy wheat—all inferior grades of wheat they had in the house—in one spot and run contract wheat in the others. They would get a string of cars in and give me the capacities and tell me how much to drop, as they call it, of the 'dope.' I would drop it, and when I got that dropped I would drop contract on top of it."

GRAIN-TRADE COMPLAINTS AS REPORTED BY AMERICAN CONSULS, AND CONSEQUENT LOSS TO AMERICAN PRODUCER.

Consul Thomas R. Wallace, in a report from Crefeld, says that the grain dealers in northern and western Europe have been holding meetings, the principal purpose of which seems to be to take united action with regard to a change in the rules and methods of transacting business with the United States in their line and to correct abuses now existing in the same. The consul continues:

"The grain trade from the United States with this district has been declining for some time, and if such dissatisfaction becomes general throughout Europe the losses to the people of America in this important branch of their export trade will be enormous. To gain some idea of the causes of the complaints regarding the grain exported from the United States I have made personal inquiry among the millers and dealers in these products, and am told that the conditions complained of here are the same all over Europe.

"The dealers say they have suffered excessive losses through the purchase of grain from America by its not grading up to the standard given in the inspector's certificate in kind, quality, or condition when received. Wheat sold as good winter wheat and so certified to by the inspector, is very often found to be new wheat mixed with old and often wormy wheat. Grain often arrives in very bad condition. Wheat purchased as new is found weevilly—very good wheat with badly damaged grain mixed with it.

"They say, further, that the American shippers well know these facts, but of late years refuse to take these precautions, and because of the rule that the inspector's certificate is final the purchaser is compelled to suffer the loss arising from this negligence of the shipper. If the purchaser presents a claim for loss caused by grain received in bad condition, or of inferior quality from that certified to by the inspector, he receives no satisfaction from the shipper.

"UNITED STATES ALONE TO BLAME.

"I am informed that such conditions have become worse; that the purchaser here does not receive what he buys, and that no reliance can be placed on the inspector's certificate. The result is the miller has ceased to buy American grain for his mill and the farmer for his stock. It is further said that grain received from South America, Russia, or Roumania arrives in good condition, that received from the United States alone being bad.

"A general meeting of those engaged in the grain trade was held in 1905 by representatives from Holland and Germany. A meeting was held in London in November last, in which appeared representatives from Germany, France, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Italy, and England, Ireland, and Scotland, and still another meeting was held on December 12 at Berlin. At all of these assemblies the principal topic for discussion was methods to correct the alleged abuses in the grain trade with the United States.

"COERCIVE MEASURES THREATENED.

"The dealers having radical or extreme views do not believe that an amicable settlement of the matter can be made with the shippers unless coercive measures are used, and this is one of the reasons of the international character of these assemblies. It is said by them that some of the same conditions prevailed in the grain trade with Russia some time ago. The Russian dealers were invited to Berlin to a conference, but treated the action with indifference, whereupon the German dealers refused to buy any Russian grain, and in a short time Russia asked for a meeting.

"The seriousness of this movement, threatening the loss of trade in this important branch of American exports, should not be underestimated. It is general in its character and covers the countries buying about all of the surplus crops of the United States.

"The unanimity of sentiment expressed at these meetings indicates there must be good cause for complaint, and as representatives of nearly all the nations of Europe are taking part in these assemblies and the meetings have become international in character, it is time the American people, who are interested in this great and important branch of the Nation's industries and commerce, should take some action to preserve it from further losses."

FRANCE.

FAULTY AMERICAN GRAIN-INSPECTION METHODS.

Consul General Robert P. Skinner, of Marseille, thinks it is highly desirable that certain facts in regard to American grain-selling methods be given immediate and wide circulation, and that something be done either by action of Congress or by the concerted action of American commercial bodies to reform or, rather, standardize the system under which the great cereal-exporting business has been created. Mr. Skinner writes:

"There is little popular knowledge in the United States in regard to the fact that wheat, corn, grease, and similar products of American origin are not now sold abroad by sample, but by nominal grade. The European buyer knows nothing of the merchandise whatever before it reaches his possession. He imports and resells various classes of merchandise the quality or grade of which is certified to him, not by the merchant who has sold him the article, but by the official inspector of a board of trade or other equivalent body at the port of shipment. He pays for the goods before he receives them, and when the exporter in the United States delivers to him a certificate of inspection, declaring the goods to be of a given grade, he has no alternative but to honor the drafts. The bargain is absolutely final upon the production to him of this certificate of inspection.

"STRENUOUS OBJECTIONS.

"Of late years the murmurs against this system have been increasing in Europe, and whereas a short time ago they took the form of isolated private complaints that goods did not always conform to the certified grade, they now take the form of organized protests. I have before me not merely private correspondence running through a number of years, but the recent proceedings of the London Corn Trade Association and the proceedings of a delegate conference held on December 12 at the Berlin Bourse, the general tenor of which is that foreign importers are vexed with prevailing conditions in the United States and are determined to force an improvement. At these two conferences a great many harsh things were said in regard to American certificates and specific instances of irregularities were mentioned. The vital point, which it will be well to separate from so much context, is this:

"'Mr. Friedberg (Hamburg) stated: "It is perfectly clear that if an American inspector certifies we have no right to doubt, or if we do we are asked, Why do you go on buying?" I may assure this meeting that a good many of us are not going on buying. We have none of this trouble in South America. For the general trade I think that there are respectable people enough in America, and I am wondering why they do not stop the glaring abuses that are complained of.'

"This instability is naturally one of the conditions of American business that is least acceptable to foreign importers, and, what with rivalry between ports for export business, it has created not only bitter feeling abroad, but definite differences in the prices at which grain of the same nominal grade is offered for sale at the different ports of shipment. There are 'easy ports' and 'good ports,' and sometimes the 'easy ports' are penalized, as thus explained in a recent letter from an importer to an officer of an American commercial organization:

"'As you know, at present importers have great difficulty selling on certificates, but where quality is reasonably assured they are willing to pay a premium over lower inspections. Newport News and Norfolk were excluded on the London and Liverpool contracts because of last year's (1905) No. 2 corn shipments, while, as you know, your inspection maintained a premium all last season over the Atlantic.'

"SIMPLE REMEDY PROPOSED.

"The remedy sought is so easy of application and the demand for its application is so entirely reasonable that to the importer protracted resistance is incomprehensible. The proper remedy may be applied either by the American Government or by the cooperation of American trade bodies. The starting point of the reform would be, naturally, the establishment of standard descriptions by law. This done, if the Government were charged with the issuance of inspection certificates the service would be removed from local influences and the so-called official American certificates would be rehabilitated. If this very rational proposition be objected to, the surest means of effectively combating it would be the holding of a conference of American grain-inspecting bodies for the adoption of grain standards and for the adoption of ways and means of drawing standard samples, to be deposited in American consulates at great European ports or to be issued upon demand to importers, and to provide for a board of inspectors, the members thereof to be transferred at intervals and liberated from every form of local pressure."

Consul General Skinner, of Marseille, France, under date of January 10, 1907, writes as follows:

"In continuation of my report, dated December 18, 1906, I wish to say that my attention had been called to a report presented to the Syndical Chamber of Grain and Flour, at Paris, by George Lefebvre, delegate to the International Reunion, organized by the London Corn Trade Association. This report has been sent to me by a prominent Marseille miller, and I take it that it is a résumé of the sentiments of the trade in this city, which has not acted upon the subject as yet in an official manner, although at this port the great bulk of American hard-wheat exportations are received. The report of M. Lefebvre is quite long, and I translate merely the salient passages, as follows:

"'I have the honor to render an account of my mission as your representative at the conference of November 8, organized by the London Corn Trade Association for the purpose of considering final certificates covering grain exportations from America. The conference was attended by not less than 45 members, whose opinions were unanimous as to the necessity of reforming the actual system. Some wished to ameliorate it and others to abolish it. Complaints were made of a detailed nature, which I have no need here to repeat, except as to two cases, which deserve to be set forth.

"'Complaint was made in regard to the delivery of hard winter wheat No. 2, in which not only the old and the new crop were mixed, but in which there was to be found also a considerable quantity of seriously damaged wheat. From the American inspectors who delivered the certificates, the only answer received was this: "We consider our principal duty is to secure the consumption of our crop."

"'Corn certified as No. 2 or "sail grade" (the quality capable of supporting a voyage in sailing ships) and which should have been able to endure a long voyage, arrived in a completely bad condition after a rather short journey. The complaint made was met by the reply that "It is the fault of the buyers who purchase during the months when corn germinates."

"'Mr. Montgomery, of Liverpool, speaking first, declared that the inspection service was badly established in the United States; that the European buyer renouncing any right of appeal as to quality when an inspector has delivered a certificate, thus constitutes the inspector an arbiter between the seller in America and the receiver in Europe.

"'The abuses concerning which complaints arise from all parts of Europe prove that the buyers must come to an understanding, in order to determine the methods by which this business should be handled between America and the Old World. This conference is probably the first effort along these lines between the interested countries.

"'First of all, what is it that is called an "official" certificate of inspection as to quality? This is a very broad definition. There is not in the trade any definition of the word "official," and in consequence every certificate of an inspector who holds an official position must be accepted by the buyer.'"

CANADA.

The following Associated Press dispatch is corroborated by the Agricultural Department:

"GRASS SEED IS BEING DOPED WITH ADULTERATIONS FROM CANADA.

"WASHINGTON, February 13, 1907.

"The Department of Agriculture has issued a circular relative to the investigation of the adulteration of orchard grass, bluegrass, clover, and alfalfa seed. The department gathered seed from all parts of the United States, buying in the open market, and of the seed examined about one-third was found adulterated. The degrees of adulteration varied from 10 per cent to 75 per cent. The names of upward of a hundred firms which the department alleges are selling adulterated seeds are printed in the circular. It is estimated that 700,000 pounds of Canadian bluegrass seed are annually imported into the United States and mixed with Kentucky bluegrass seed and sold as the latter. A similar amount of trefoil is imported from England, mixed with alfalfa seeds, and sold at a corresponding advance, says the circular."

SCOTLAND.

AMERICAN FLOUR HURT BY MISBRANDING.

Consul R. W. Austin, of Glasgow, writes that the friends of American flour in Scotland are elated over the passage by Congress of "the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906," and are predicting that with the enforcement of the law mentioned the American flour will regain its old-time reputation and be restored to the head of the list which it occupied in Great Britain prior to 1904. Mr. Austin continues:

"At that time no flour—home or foreign—equaled the American article, which had grown in popular favor to such an extent that it had no real competitor.

"The American wheat crop of 1904 being short, enabled the continental mills to introduce their flour into Scotland, many of them not hesitating to use popular American labels. This scheme was worked successfully for some time, to the injury of the American trade and the excellent reputation of its flour. Finally a vigorous protest under the British 'sale-of-goods act' was made, and this practice of the millers of the Continent discontinued. While this afforded relief, American flour is, and has been for several years, seriously injured in Great Britain by its being misbranded or labeled before leaving America, and this unfair method, it is hoped, will be discontinued by an observance of the 'food and drugs act.'"

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I voice the news and interests of the largest grain-shipping port in America, namely, the city of Baltimore. The city of Baltimore can, through its system of modern elevators, handle something over 2,000,000 bushels of grain a day. It is the nearest port on the Atlantic seaboard to the great grain-producing sections of the Middle West, and for that reason it is the channel through which passes a large amount of our grain shipped abroad. Those interested in the grain business of Baltimore have written me in opposition to this provision, and I have been urged by the chamber of commerce of our city to record my vote against it when it is brought before this House. Our city has established a reputation throughout the country for grain inspection, and that inspection is regarded by grain merchants and others in this country and throughout the world as being in every way acceptable. I am told that the passage of this provision will be of no benefit to those affected by it, but, on the contrary, will work considerable harm. I therefore call the attention of this House to the views and attitude of those men of Baltimore who are versed and experienced in this business, and submit to this House that the apprehensions of these men and their views in this matter, which is one affecting their livelihood, should receive our careful consideration before we take action which may be decidedly prejudicial to them. It is because of these statements and this attitude of the business men of my city that I object to this provision and why I oppose it on this floor.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman from Indiana use any of his time?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I shall close in one speech if we have any remarks at all.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Committee on Agriculture on the fact that this bill, if enacted, will be clearly within the constitutional powers of Congress, which its companion, the Lever bill, as clearly is not. I want to call attention to section 7, to some obvious defects which I hope may be remedied by unanimous consent. The proviso in lines 17 to 21, page 6, reads:

Provided, That in States which have State grain inspection established by law the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, issue licenses to persons duly authorized and employed to inspect grain under the laws of such States at the time this act goes into effect.

Now, surely it could not have been the intention of the committee to limit the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to issue licenses to persons employed by the State who may be employed at the time this act goes into effect. Clearly it must have been the intention to authorize the Secretary to issue licenses to any inspectors employed by the State at any time. I ask unanimous consent that there be included in the motion an amendment to strike out the words in line 4, page 6, "at the time this act goes into effect."

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. LENROOT. To strike out the words, on page 6, line 21, "at the time this act goes into effect."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 21, after the word "States," strike out the words "at the time this act goes into effect."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to read into the motion the amendment that has just been reported. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, and I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] has no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. Speaker, one further defect. At the beginning of section 7 it provides—

That no person authorized or employed by any State, county, city, town, board of trade, chamber of commerce, corporation, society, or association to inspect or grade grain shall certify, or otherwise state or indicate in writing, that any grain which has been inspected or graded by him, or by any person acting under his authority, is of one of the official grades of the United States—

And so forth.

This prohibition ought not to be limited to those persons who may be employed by a city, county, or State. This prohibition should be general, that no person should be permitted to certify that it is an official grade of the United States unless he has been licensed under the Federal law. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be included in section 7, striking out all of line 5 after the word "persons" down to and including the word "grain," in line 8.

Mr. MANN. That would prohibit a Federal official from so certifying.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that it will be considered when it gets into conference, for it should be remedied.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and after obtaining that permission I ask that we take a vote. I have no further debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendments read into it.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE) there were 98 ayes and 11 noes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 221, nays 17, answered "present" 1, not voting 188, as follows:

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, having in charge the Indian appropriation bill, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama, on behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. QUIN. I rise to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. Really, as a matter of fact, it is too late.

ENLARGEMENT OF WALL STREET FRONT, ASSAY OFFICE, NEW YORK.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order by which Senate bill 3342 was passed to-day and to lay the bill on the table. A similar House bill has already passed the Senate and been approved.

The SPEAKER. What is the number?

Mr. FITZGERALD. S. 3342.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to vacate the order by which Senate bill 3342 was passed and to lay the same on the table. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. There is a communication here from the Secretary of the Treasury, a letter which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, that ought to have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations (H. Doc. No. 1427). Without objection, it will be so referred.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALEXANDER requests leave of absence January 5 and 6, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I object—on account of important business?

The SPEAKER. On account of important official business.

Mr. DONOVAN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Tuesday, January 5, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DILLON: A bill (H. R. 20525) to establish a standard of weights for various commodities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, a bill (H. R. 20526) to establish the metric system as the standard for weights and measures, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. TRIBBLE: A bill (H. R. 20527) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgages, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide a method of applying postal savings deposits to the promotion of the public welfare, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GARDNER: A bill (H. R. 20528) to authorize the maintenance of organizations of the mobile army at their maximum strength and to provide an increase of 1,000 officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 15, 1915.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thee in the altitudes of prayer before we address ourselves to the common tasks of life. We stand upon the common platform with our unity of interest and with our common need before Thee. When we enter the arena of life, and in the great discipline of life that Thou hast committed to us, we must stand in our own individual personality. We pray that we may carry with us into the tasks of this day the impression of Thy Holy Spirit and that we may realize that the oneness of our life is in God. In our effort to bring peace, prosperity, and happiness to the people of a great Nation we shall be successful according to the measure of our interest in Thy kingdom and of our obedience to Thy will. So do Thou guide us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

YAKIMA INDIAN RESERVATION (H. DOC. NO. 1472).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a plan for the distribution of water on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and for reimbursing the Government for sums it may have expended or may expend for a complete irrigation system for that reservation, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

INDIANS OF NORTH CAROLINA (S. DOC. NO. 677).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of June 30, 1914, a report of an investigation of the condition and tribal rights of the Indians of Robeson and adjoining counties of North Carolina, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SHIPMENT OF NAVAL STORES ABROAD.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have several telegrams with reference to the naval-stores question. One of them, which is short, I should like to have read and the others placed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Georgia will be complied with unless there is objection. The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the first telegram sent to the desk.

The telegram was read, as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., December 29, 1914.

Senator HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Have just wired Secretary of State emphatic protest against action of British Government in declaring rosin and turpentine absolute contraband. You are well aware of the enormous losses already sustained by the Southern States growing out of this European war through the paralysis of the cotton market, and this additional burden now proposed to be put upon our people prompts the inquiry as to what rights neutrals have which belligerents are bound to respect. We emphatically insist that there is no good reason why rosin or turpentine should be made contraband, and that to do so will do more damage to neutrals than to the belligerents against whom it is directed. Whether contraband or not, we also insist that our commerce with neutral ports in these commodities should suffer no interference. Over 60 per cent of these commodities are exported to Europe, a large portion of which goes to North Sea ports. The proposed action will be an additional and heavy burden imposed upon the South, and we request that you cooperate with the State Department to the extent of your abilities in averting this threatened destruction of our commerce in these commodities.

JOHN W. MOTTE,
President Savannah Board of Trade.

The remainder of the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ATLANTA, GA., December 29, 1914.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Naval stores, lumber, and crosstie industries so closely interdependent that if one is hurt all suffer. In Georgia these lines aggregate over thirty millions annually. Please spare no effort to keep turpentine from contraband list.

C. J. HADEN,
President Georgia Chamber of Commerce.

SAVANNAH, GA., December 31, 1914.

HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Whether turpentine is or is not used in manufacture of new explosive which we understand is called "turbinite" from name of its inventor and not because of its supposed ingredients, we insist that this affords no justification whatever for declaring rosin contraband nor for interfering with trade between neutrals in either turpentine or rosin. Under Lord Salisbury's interpretation of the rule, as we understand it, Great Britain must show not merely that shipment might be used for purposes of war, but that it is actually destined for enemy's military service. We feel confident firm insistence at this time by our State Department on our rights as neutrals will accomplish the result desired and prevent immense losses which our people must otherwise suffer. We bespeak your continued cooperation and earnest support in our efforts to avoid this disaster.

J. W. MOTTE,
President Savannah Board of Trade.

VALDOSTA, GA., December 30, 1914.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The Valdosta Chamber of Commerce approves protest of United States against English action placing naval stores on contraband list, and urges you to use all possible influences to have these commodities going to neutral ports remain on noncontraband list.

J. M. ASHELY, Secretary.

SHIPMENTS TO NEUTRAL COUNTRIES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a letter from a manufacturing company in New Hampshire touching upon a public question that is now in the mind of the people of the United States, and I ask that it may be read.

There being no objection, the letter was read, as follows:

PIKE MANUFACTURING CO.,
Pike, N. H., December 31, 1914.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: We believe you will desire to have the widest possible knowledge concerning the attitude of manufacturers and business men in the United States toward the position the administration has just taken in its note to England with regard to the interference of shipping to neutral countries.

We therefore wish to say that this course meets with our entire approval, and we earnestly hope that President Wilson will have your support and that of all patriotic Congressmen irrespective of party in his effort to lift this embargo, which, if long continued, means certain and far-reaching disaster to American industry. In our own case we are utterly unable to ship the product of one of our mills, 80 per cent of which goes into the European market. If this condition is long continued, it inevitably means that the employees of that plant will be out of work. We are straining every point to provide them with something to do through the winter months in order that their families may be kept from actual want. Hundreds of manufacturers with whom we have close acquaintance are confronted by more or less similar conditions, and there must be thousands of others.

The restrictions placed upon exports have been getting severer from week to week, so that steamship companies now operating trans-Atlantic boats have been imposing conditions which are equivalent in many cases to absolute prohibition of transportation. The list of contraband and "conditional contraband" goods has of late been increased beyond all reason. Manufacturers of goods that are not clearly "contraband" are certainly entitled to the active support of Congress in their efforts to get safe and reasonable transportation of those goods to foreign markets, and we earnestly hope there may be united effort to that end.

Sincerely, yours,

E. BERTRAM PIKE,
President Pike Manufacturing Co.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BURTON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PITTMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fallon, Nev., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. OWEN presented a petition of the city council of Shawnee, Okla., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide pensions for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Payne County, Okla., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented a memorial of the State Grange of Maine, Patrons of Husbandry, remonstrating against placing the rural free-delivery system on a contract basis, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lewiston, Me., remonstrating against the adoption of a literacy test for immigrants to this country, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KERN presented a petition of Inland City Lodge, No. 374, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the extension of the boiler-inspection service, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Fort Wayne, Bremen, and Decatur, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CLAPP presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STERLING presented petitions of H. J. G. Koolz and sundry others of Scotland; of F. W. Schmitt and others of Tripp; and of Rev. H. Achtermann and others of Alpena, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 93) to regulate the judicial procedure of the courts of the United States, to report it adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 95) to amend chapter 11 of the Judicial Code, to report it adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1762) relating to procedure in United States courts, to report it adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. O'GORMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4545) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 852) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12750) relating to procedure in United States courts, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 853) thereon.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19545) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 855) thereon.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. OWEN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 15038) proposing an amendment to the Federal reserve act relative to acceptances, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 854) thereon.

The amendments are to permit the banks of the Federal Reserve System to issue acceptances above one-half of the paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus of the bank by authority of the Federal Reserve Board under such regulations as said board may prescribe, but that such regulations shall apply to all banks alike, regardless of the amount of capital stock.

This bill has passed the House of Representatives, and it was authorized reported by the unanimous vote of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency who were present, there being a quorum present this morning.

It is a short bill, which the Federal Reserve Board is anxious to have enacted into law, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the chairman of the committee will not press that request.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw the request.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am a member of the committee, but I was unable to be present this morning, and I am very desirous of looking into the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 7148) for the relief of Ellen Sexton; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 7149) granting a pension to Maggie Turner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 7150) to divorce transportation in interstate and foreign commerce from manufacture, mining, production, and dealing, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 7151) to correct the military record of Samuel D. Chase (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7152) granting an increase of pension to Sarah McDowell (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 7153) granting a pension to John M. Evans; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 7154) for the protection of officers of the United States in the eastern district of the State of Oklahoma, authorizing the search for and seizure of liquors introduced into the eastern district of the State of Oklahoma, and making the possession of such liquors prima facie evidence of an unlawful introduction, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 7155) to give to any State entitled to at least three Representatives in Congress the privilege of electing them by proportional representation, and to supplement the act of August 8, 1911, entitled "An act for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Thirteenth Census"; to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

A bill (S. 7156) granting an increase of pension to Sadie Hatch (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 219) looking toward an international peace conference at The Hague immediately after the close of the present war in Europe; to the Committee on Forern Relations.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause investigation to be made concerning duplicate and fraudulent enrollments and allotments in the Creek Nation, and to enforce the rights of said Creek Nation; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 221) withholding from allotment the unallotted lands or public domain of the Creek Nation or tribe of Indians, and providing for the sale thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending ship-purchase bill (S. 6856). I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table. I also ask that it may be read.

The amendment was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following:

"Provided, That no vessels shall be purchased under this act which are the property, in whole or in part, of or which are in any manner controlled or subsidized by any of the nations now at war, nor shall any vessels be purchased under this act which are the property of any of the subjects or citizens of said belligerent nations."

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 18459) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100 for the erection of a headstone to mark the grave of Scarlet Crow, a Sioux Indian chief of the Wahpeton Tribe, who was buried March 13, 1867, in the Congressional Cemetery, Washington D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20150), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the total appropriation for support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Fort Totten Indian School, Fort Totten, N. Dak., for improving the water system and for the construction and equipment of a gymnasium and assembly hall, from $73,500 to $103,500 intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20150), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $101 to credit the account of William Schuldt, of Lewiston, Idaho, late deputy United States marshal, expended by him in traveling on official business, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for investigation and promotion of efficient instruction and training in citizenship, including personal service in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 19909), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment providing that hereafter officers of the Navy and Marine Corps appointed student Navy air pilots while lawfully detailed for duty involving actual flying in air craft shall receive the pay of their rank and service plus 35 per cent thereon, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20975), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SHIPMENT OF NAVAL STORES ABROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 512, submitted yesterday by Mr. HARDWICK, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate copies of all communications transmitted to or received from the Government of Great Britain touching the recent order of said Government declaring naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products absolute contraband of war; and the previous order of said Government declaring that the products above enumerated were not contraband of war.

Also copies of any other communications transmitted to or received from any foreign Government in reference to the classification of naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products as contraband of war.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution just read may go over without prejudice until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such will be the order unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

GOODS PRODUCED BY CONVICT LABOR.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent to take from the table for consideration the bill (H. R. 1933) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory, a similar bill having been reported by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and is now on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to take up for consideration at the present time House bill 1933, which is substantially a copy of Senate bill 2321, which has been favorably reported and is now on the calendar.

Mr. HARDWICK. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. HUGHES. Then I move that the bill be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1933.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before I can vote upon the motion I should like to know what the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's request to have the title of the bill stated will be complied with.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1933) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to ask what is the calender number of the bill and if a similar bill has been introduced here and reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. HUGHES. The calendar number of the Senate bill is 672.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill which the Senator from New Jersey moves to take up at this time is said to be a copy of the bill on the same subject heretofore reported to the Senate and which is now on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill read, and I will follow it as it is being read.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a report out of order from the Judiciary Committee upon two bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey to proceed to the consideration of House bill 1933.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that a bill which has just been sent down from the other House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the bill has been here for some time; that it was referred to a committee; that the committee was discharged from its consideration; and that the bill was ordered to lie on the table, to be considered in connection with the Senate bill on the same subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has it been reported back from the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so advised. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the bill read before the motion is put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convict labor, or in any prison or reformatory, transported into any State or Territoy of the United States, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall, upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Is that a motion——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the fact that the bill just handed down is not the same as the Senate bill which has been reported.

Mr. HUGHES. I said it was substantially the same bill. I think it comes within the rule. There are but two slight amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I think they are two very important amendments.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think they are very important.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think they are slight amendments. I think they are very vital to the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. They were not so considered by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be best, if the Senator will do so, to ask that the House bill be substituted for Senate bill 2321 and allow it to go over one day, so that we may see just what will be the effect of the proposed changes.

Mr. HUGHES. I should prefer not to take that course.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I want to say that I am in favor——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that; but I merely want to say a few words by way of explanation.

I am in favor of the bill as reported to the Senate, but I certainly shall vote against the motion submitted by the Senator from New Jersey at this time.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Utah understands that I am simply making my motion to get the bill up for consideration. The question is not on the passage of the bill. The Senator will have abundant opportunity to debate it later.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this report has been made, as I understand, this morning. I make the point of order that it should go over for one day under objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the House bill had been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and that committee had been discharged from its further consideration with the direction that the bill lie on the table, to be considered in connection with the Senate bill on the same subject. That action was taken on March 12, 1914. The House bill has been here since that time.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Chair to say that this bill has been referred to the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so advised. The bill was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor on March 9, 1914.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask that the report of the committee be read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I simply wanted to know the parliamentary status. I should like a little time to look into this bill; I presume it is all right, but my thought was that if it has just been reported from the committee, under our rules it should go over for a day under objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The ruling of the Chair is to the effect that the House bill is not subject to that rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the House bill is not subject to that rule, of course I have nothing further to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now properly presented to the Senate is as to whether or not the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I supposed a House bill held exactly the same status as would a report on a Senate bill, and that this is a report from a committee. I confess I do not quite understand why the rule does not apply; but if the Chair has decided otherwise——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report on the bill was made on the 14th of March, 1914; the bill has been on the table of the Senate ever since. The question is on the adoption of the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. McCUMBER. Has morning business been closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Routine morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then one objection prevents the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am asking whether routine morning business is closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Routine morning business is closed; but the morning hour has not yet expired.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then one objection stops it, as I understand, until the close of routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made; but the Senator from New Jersey, in the exercise of an alternative right, has moved to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But is that motion in order, Mr. President, before morning business is closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Routine morning business is closed. The motion would not be in order pending the disposition of routine morning business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I had been out of the Chamber for a moment, and I was told that morning business had not closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The routine morning business has closed.

Mr. CLAPP. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to proceed to the consideration of House bill 1933.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may we have the bill read as it passed the House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill as it passed the House has been read at the desk.

Mr. GRONNA. May we have the bill offered by the Senator from New Jersey read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the bill that has just been read to the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill, of which I am heartily in favor, should be agreed to, I should like to know whether it would displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not until 2 o'clock.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as I understand the motion of the Senator from New Jersey, it is to take up this bill, so that it can not now be before the Senate. I simply want the bill read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary has just finished the reading of the bill. That was the last action taken.

Mr. GRONNA. The bill as passed by the House was read, but not the bill as presented by the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary has not read the Senate bill on the same subject. Does the Senator desire that bill to be read?

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the Senate bill may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the Senate bill for which it is proposed to substitute the House bill.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2321) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convict labor, or in any prison or reformatory, transported into any State or Territory of the United States, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall, upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey to proceed to the consideration of House bill 1933. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes appear to have it.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this subject if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. As I do not see him in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I do not observe him in the Chamber and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). I wished to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN] and to make the statement that he is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I observe that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has not voted. I have a pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is detained from the Senate on account of indisposition.

Mr. BRADY (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). As I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who I observe is not present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the negative). I neglected to state the transfer of my pair. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. WHITE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BRYAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. Inasmuch as he has not voted I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HARDWICK. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is absent on public business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY].

Mr. JAMES. I inquire if the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed the Senator has not voted.

Mr. JAMES. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] having entered the Chamber and voted, I withdraw the transfer which I announced a moment ago, and I also am compelled, under the circumstances, to withdraw my vote.

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the affirmative). I am advised that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the negative). A moment ago I transferred my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. WHITE]. Since that time the Senator from Alabama has appeared in the Chamber and voted. As I am unable to secure a transfer, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Burton	Kern	Perkins	Sterling
Chamberlain	La Follette	Pittman	Stone
Chilton	Lane	Poindexter	Sutherland

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1933) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, some time ago I gave notice that I would address the Senate this morning upon the Public Health Service. I do not want to interfere with the regular course of the business of the Senate if this bill is to be taken up and voted upon without lengthy discussion. If, however, it is likely to go past the morning hour, I should prefer to proceed with what I have to say under the notice I have given.

I have no assurance upon that question and therefore I shall proceed to the discussion of the subject noticed heretofore.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. In order that the Senator may feel wholly justified in proceeding now I will state to him that there will probably be considerable debate upon this bill.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, what I am about to say is composed very largely of quotations from others, and extracts from various publications. They are identified in the manuscript I am using. In order to save time I ask in advance that as I come to those portions that I do not desire to read I may omit them, and make them a part of my remarks, without calling attention to each of them separately as I reach them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, permission will be granted. The Chair hears none.

Mr. WORKS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 2 o'clock p. m.) The Senator from California will please suspend until the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20241) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and prior years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California may proceed.

Mr. WORKS resumed his speech, and after having spoken for three-quarters of an hour he said:

Mr. President, I have now reached another branch of the subject which I desire to take up. I have been talking for a couple of hours and am somewhat wearied. I shall, with the consent of the Senate, suspend at this point, and I give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the close of the routine morning business, I shall conclude what I have to say.

[Mr. WORKS's speech is printed entire in proceedings of Wednesday, January 6, 1915.]

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20241) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. KERN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Hughes	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Burton	James	Owen	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson	Page	Sterling
Clapp	Jones	Perkins	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Poindexter	Thomas
Cummins	Lane	Ransdell	Thompson
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Thornton
Fletcher	Lodge	Shaforth	Tillman
Gallinger	McCumber	Sheppard	White
Goff	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Works
Gore	Myers	Shively
Hardwick	Norris	Simmons

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to state that my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is unavoidably detained on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there is one item, on page 3 of the bill, which has been passed over. It is under the heading "Military Establishment." I ask that that item be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $554,371.24.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in connection with this item I wish to call to the attention of the Senate a number of matters, and perhaps in doing so I ought to read to the Senate——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to strike out the item or modify it in any way?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President, so that the matter may be before the Senate I move to strike out lines 23 to 26, on page 3 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in connection with this amendment I think there are a number of questions involved in this general subject which should be brought to the attention of the Senate. In the first place, I wish to state that this item of $554,371.24 is not all that will be asked for at this session of Congress for transportation of the Army and its supplies. I have no doubt that in the next deficiency bill there will be an item of something over a million dollars more for these purposes. I am not going into the question of what the Mexican difficulties have cost the Government, nor am I going into detail as to what the entrance of our Army, by order of the President, into Vera Cruz has cost the Government; but I intend at this time to confine my remarks to the cost incurred by the Government in chartering transports during the year 1914, payment for which has been made from the appropriation for the transportation of the Army and its supplies.

Maj. Gen. James B. Aleshire, Quartermaster General, appeared before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations in relation to this particular item of $554,371.24. This is the information he gave to that subcommittee:

The CHAIRMAN. The item is as follows:

"Transportation of the Army and its supplies: For all purposes of the appropriation mentioned under this heading in the act of March 2, 1913, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1914, $554,371.24."

The appropriation was $12,984,980

Gen. ALESHIRE. The amount of the deficiency we have estimated for is required to settle transportation accounts that are due—as they became due on June 30, 1914—for services rendered up to that date. The apportionments were made as provided for by an act of Congress which, I think, was passed in 1906 (Feb. 27), and those apportionments, as made, were approved by the Secretary of War. The deficiencies were incurred in the apportionments for refitting chartered transports, the charter of vessels, and for the payment of travel allowances of enlisted men upon discharge. The amount estimated for refitting chartered transports is $110,000, and the amount estimated for the charter of vessels for use as transports is $411,400, making a total of $521,400. Now, the actual amount expended for refitting chartered transports was $398,991.59, while the amount actually expended for the charter of vessels was $429,663.60—

That, mind you, was up to June 30, 1914—

making a total of $828,655.19. The total of these two amounts exceeded the amounts estimated for by $307,255.19, and that is the deficiency occurring in these two items.

The CHAIRMAN. We gave you in the deficiency bill $5,214,000 in two items.

Gen. ALESHIRE. Yes, sir. When the amounts fell due for refitting chartered transports, on June 30, and when we came to settle for the charter of transports up to that date the bills were presented and we had to pay them. The funds for that purpose were made available by transferring funds, by authority of the Secretary of War, from the apportionments made for settling railroad accounts under the several transportation items. The Secretary of War issued in writing a waiver of the apportionment which was made of the several items, and that enabled us to settle those accounts, but we will have to reimburse the apportionment for paying railroad accounts by that amount.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the state of the law as to the authority of the Secretary of War to take money from one fund and use it for a different purpose than that contemplated by the law? It is stated in the testimony from which the Senator has just read that they took money which was appropriated for railroad transportation and used it for chartering transports. I should like to ask the Senator, if he is familiar with the matter, as to whether or not the Secretary of War has any legal right to do that, and if that extends to all the appropriations for military purposes. If it does, if that is the state of the law, then there is very little use in segregating these appropriations, and we might just as well take the estimate of the War Department for the entire sum needed for the department and appropriate it in a lump sum, if he can transfer a fund appropriated for one purpose and use it for another purpose.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Lee, Md.	Reed	Smoot
Brady	Lodge	Robinson	Stone
Clapp	McCumber	Root	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury	Thornton
du Pont	Overman	Shafroth	Tillman
Hitchcock	Owen	Sheppard	Weeks
James	Page	Shields	White
Johnson	Perkins	Shively	Williams
Kern	Poindexter	Smith, Ga.	Works
Lane	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I make the same announcement as before in regard to my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON]. He is detained on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is not present. The Secretary will call the list of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. STERLING, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. THOMPSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. JONES, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. MYERS, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. GORE, Mr. CAMDEN, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. BURTON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], I will state that I know of no law that authorizes the Secretary of War, or the head of any other department of the Government, to transfer funds from one account to another after the apportionment has been made. The Senator will remember that but yesterday we had this same question up in regard to the Forestry Service. The amount is taken from the lump-sum appropriation. In this case it was $12,984,980. Under the act of February 27, 1906, the apportionments were made, and after those apportionments were made the Secretary of War issued a written authority to transfer from one account to the other. Now, we are asked to appropriate here in a deficiency bill to take care of that, so that each account can be credited with the amount of the deficiency.

Mr. OVERMAN. If that were not so, if the Senator will yield to me, we would have no deficiency.

Mr. SMOOT. We would have a deficiency.

Mr. OVERMAN. Every department does that. It has been the rule, and that is what I complained about yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. And I think every member of the Appropriations Committee and every Member of Congress ought to complain against that practice. It is not ceasing. The matter has been called to the attention of the heads of departments in the past, but it is increasing.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if that authority exists, if we should appropriate money for maintaining one branch of the Army the Secretary of War could use it for maintaining another branch of the Army, and the purpose of Congress would be entirely defeated. If that principle prevails, the Secretary of the Navy could take money that was appropriated for constructing ships and use it in the maintenance of navy yards, and the ships which were authorized by Congress would not be constructed, because there would be no money for their construction.

I asked the question only because I was surprised to hear from the report of the committee that such a thing had been done.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a statement of the Quartermaster General, and not a report.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is contained, as I understand, in the hearing before the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. I will say to the Senator, however, that in the past the head of every department has relied upon the generosity of Congress, and in the past it has never yet been denied them whenever a deficiency has been asked for the purpose of repaying an amount which has been used for one purpose, but which belonged to another. The practice is growing, and growing rapidly, and it ought to cease.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It looks to me as though, when the money is obtained from some other fund, the emergency is ended. The head of the department has met the emergency by depleting another fund from which he has no legal authority to take money for that purpose.

If we are to have an emergency appropriation, it seems to me the real emergency should be presented to Congress. For instance, if there is an emergency for chartering transports, instead of taking money that was appropriated by Congress for another purpose to pay for the transports, the matter should be presented to Congress for the purpose for which it is needed, and let Congress act upon the emergency. Then we would have a bill which in truth and in fact would meet the emergencies of the Government.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. ROOT. If the Senator will permit me, does the Senator from Utah mean to say that the head of a department transfers money from one specific appropriation to another and different appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. I mean to say that, Mr. President; and I say it upon the word of Gen. Aleshire; and I will read to the Senator what the general says:

The CHAIRMAN. We gave you in the deficiency bill $5,214,000 in two items.

Gen. ALESHIRE. Yes, sir. When the amounts fell due for refitting chartered transports, on June 30, and when we came to settle for the charter of transports up to that date the bills were presented and we had to pay them. The funds for that purpose were made available by transferring funds, by authority of the Secretary of War, from the apportionments made for settling railroad accounts under the several transportation items.

Now—

The Secretary of War issued in writing a waiver of the apportionment which was made of the several items, and that enabled us to settle those accounts, but we will have to reimburse the apportionment for paying railroad accounts by that amount.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. The process which the Senator from Utah has described by reading from the testimony of the Quartermaster General of the Army is not what I understood the Senator from Washington to describe, and it is not what I described in my question. The action which the Quartermaster General describes is a transfer from one category or division of expenditure established not by Congress but by the Secretary of War——

Mr. SMOOT. Established by law.

Mr. ROOT. To another division of expenditure established by the Secretary of War. That is, we make an appropriation for transportation.

Mr. SMOOT. No; we have been making a lump appropriation of $12,984,980, and that was apportioned.

Mr. ROOT. By the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMOOT. By the Secretary of War, under an act of Congress of February 27, 1906.

Mr. ROOT. Yes. The act of Congress required the Secretary of War to apportion it. Congress did not apportion it. Congress did not say, "So much shall be paid for railroad transportation and so much shall be paid for transportation by water"; it required the Secretary of War to apportion it, and it was his apportionment that he amended or changed.

It is not a case of taking money across the line that Congress had established. That would be so wholly illegal that I can not suppose that the vouchers would pass the accounting officers of the Government. It is quite a different thing for the Secretary of War to amend or modify his own apportionment of a lump appropriation, changing it from one specific object under that appropriation to another specific object under that appropriation. That is quite a different thing from taking money appropriated for one purpose and applying it to another purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, only yesterday we had the same thing in the Forestry Service. We made a direct appropriation of $150,000 for fighting forest fires, and in a miscellaneous item in the same bill following we gave an additional amount of $100,000 for the same purpose, making $250,000. Now they come, in this very bill, and ask for three hundred thousand and some odd dollars more, that they have already expended.

In this particular case, I will say to the Senator from New York, where they have tried to transfer the apportionment to some other account, the auditor would not pass it; and the transfer was made, as Gen. Aleshire stated and, in order that it might get past the auditor. Now they come in and ask for this deficiency of $554,000; but the $554,000 is not entirely for the transports nor for the deficiency in refitting the transports. It also applies to the deficiency in the travel allowance of enlisted men upon discharge. They apportioned a certain amount of the $12,000,000 for that purpose, and a part of this deficiency is for that purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this was transferred from the transportation account of $12,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, that is the general account, the general lump sum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Therefore the Secretary of War having apportioned that much and transferred it, he had a right to transfer it again and make another apportionment. That is all he did.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no. He could not make the second apportionment without taking it from some other account that had already been created by the apportionment under the act of February 27, 1906.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, is the apportionment to which the Senator refers the apportionment by months?

Mr. SMOOT. No; by years—for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. ROOT. I mean it is declaring that so much of the lump appropriation of $12,000,000 shall be used for railroad transportation, so much for——

Mr. SMOOT. So much for travel allowance to enlisted men upon their discharge.

Mr. ROOT. So much for another purpose and so much for another?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. But not applying by months?

Mr. SMOOT. Not applying by months; by the year. Now, they have used not only the appropriation for the full year but $554,000 more.

Mr. ROOT. The whole $12,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, Mr. President, but you will find out when the next deficiency bill comes in that for transports alone there will be over a million dollars more.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask the Senator, then, how this was paid—how these payments in excess of the whole appropriation got past the accounting officers?

Mr. SMOOT. I can only tell that by what Gen. Aleshire says.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, they had money in one division of the apportionment.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. They took that money to pay for the boats. Then in two or three months the deficiency thus created appears in the division from which the money was taken, and they have to make it good in that division.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what Gen. Aleshire says.

Mr. LODGE. There is no deficiency in the pay of enlisted men, except that they took money out of that to pay for steamboats.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the general says. I will go on and read what the general says in relation to the travel allowance to enlisted men upon their discharge.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was not that expenditure made by reason of an emergency which had arisen, and did not Congress specifically authorize that expenditure by a joint resolution asked for by the President and voted for by both Houses?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; Congress never authorized the expenditure. In the resolution the Senator speaks of there is no mention whatever of a dollar of appropriation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I realize that; but let me read the resolution which Congress adopted at that time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, before he reads the resolution, that our Army had been ordered into Vera Cruz before ever the Senate passed upon that resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Just let me put it in the RECORD at this point:

That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States.

That was adopted and approved April 22, before the department incurred these expenditures. Now, does the Senator criticize the department for doing what it was ordered to do by the President and authorized to do by Congress?

Mr. LODGE. It is the method.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not criticized the President for doing what he did after Congress acted upon the question. I am criticizing the method. It is not only this case, but it is in every department of the Government, and it ought to be stopped. The Senator knows that if an emergency arose and the President or the head of the War Department should ask that a bill be passed through Congress, it would not take very many days to do so, and the appropriation could have been made directly and would have been made directly, I have no doubt. That has not been the policy in the past, however; it is not the policy to-day; and if there is not some criticism made of it by Congress it will not be the policy in the future.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is a vast difference between the act of an administrative officer in diverting funds which Congress has voted for a specific purpose and the act of an administrative officer in diverting funds from one branch of the service to another after Congress has made a lump-sum appropriation and after Congress has specifically authorized the act that must be paid for at some time. It is not very important whether Congress specifically votes the appropriation after the act or before the act, as long as it is authorized.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if there was to have been any expense attached to the resolution the expense ought to have been estimated for, and it should have been a part of the resolution. That is the way we do with every other demand made by the departments at the beginning of a fiscal year, and that should be the practice in every expenditure of money by any department of our Government. Congress then would know what the money was going to be spent for or would demand to know what it was to be spent for. Congress would know whether it was necessary to have all these transports tied up here from April 23 until December 12 of this year, some of them costing a thousand dollars a day, and we spending $118,000 to refit them, and never leaving the wharf—tied up at the wharf all the time.

I do not believe Congress would agree to any such thing as that, and I do not believe it is necessary. Therefore not only do I criticize this, but I criticize the method of using for one purpose money that has been appropriated for another purpose.

Gen. Aleshire says, further:

> The act of Congress provided that travel allowance should be paid at the rate of 2 cents per mile, or transportation in kind and subsistence; but the Paymaster General's estimate included only $300,000, it being made on the basis that the Paymaster General's Office would only pay mileage at 2 cents. In the Quartermaster's Department estimate there was no amount included for that item, and in the Subsistence Department's estimate no amount was included, because we had never included it. Therefore when we came to have our hearing before the Military Affairs Committee I explained the situation to the committee, as set forth on pages 61 and 62 of the hearings. I invited attention to the fact that the comptroller had ruled that this allowance was properly paid from one appropriation—not from three appropriations, but from a single appropriation—and with a view to carrying out the comptroller's ruling, I recommended that the item be transferred from appropriation Pay of the Army to the appropriation Transportation of the Army and its supplies. Then it was stated that considering the expenditures made in previous years by the Pay Department on the 4 cents per mile basis, this amount of $300,000 would be too small, but that in making the apportionment for the fiscal year 1914 I would recommend to the Secretary of War such an additional amount from Army transportation as we could spare and endeavor to get along. We were only able to add to that $300,000 the sum of $86,300 by apportionment, which made available for the purpose of paying the travel allowance of enlisted men the sum of $386,300. Now, there was actually expended on this account $842,690.52, or an excess of $456,390.52. At the end of the fiscal year there were unexpended balances from other apportionments, or apportionments to other items of Army transportation, which amounted to $209,274.47. This amount of $209,274.47 was applied to the settlement of the claims on account of the travel allowance of enlisted men on discharge, thereby reducing that deficiency to $247,116.05. That amount, with the $307,255.19, the amount of the deficiency incurred in the refitting of chartered transports and the charter of transports, makes the total of the estimate $554,371.24.
> The CHAIRMAN. The deficit on account of the refitting of chartered vessels and the charter of vessels was occasioned by the situation in Mexico?
> Gen. ALESHIRE. Yes, sir.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Do you know how many vessels were chartered?
> Gen. ALESHIRE. There were 11 vessels chartered.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Have you a statement covering that?
> Gen. ALESHIRE. I have a statement here giving the names of the vessels, their gross tonnage, capacity, date of charter, rate of charter per day, cost of refitting, cost of charter to June 30, 1914, and port where refitted.

In this connection I wish to call attention to those vessels.

The San Marcos has a gross tonnage of 2,839 tons and her capacity is 377 men and 320 animals. She was chartered April 24, 1914, and the rate of charter per day was $600. The cost of refitting was $4,843.06. The cost of charter to June 30, 1914, was $40,800.

The next was the Denver. I will simply give the cost of charter per day, the cost of refitting, and the cost of charter to June 30, 1914, in each case, so that I shall not have to repeat the heading of each.

The Denver was chartered May 10, 1914. The rate of charter per day was $910; the cost of refitting was $12,456.48; the cost of charter to June 30 was $47,320.

The Colorado was chartered May 12 at a rate of $442 per day; the cost of refitting was $4,391.81; the cost of the charter to June 30 was $23,868.

Mr. STONE. How much was the tonnage?

Mr. SMOOT. The tonnage was 2,764.

The Satilla was chartered April 25, 1914, at $450 a day, with a refitting charge of $3,382.18. The cost of charter to June 30, 1914, was $30,150.

The Ossabaw was chartered May 9, 1914, at $425 a day; the cost of refitting was $4,918.40; the cost of charter to June 30 was $22,525.

The City of Memphis was chartered May 9. The rate of charter per day was $1,000; the cost of refitting was $100,195.60; the cost of charter to June 30 was $53,000.

The City of Macon, on May 9, was chartered at $1,000 a day; the cost of refitting was $118,287.28; the cost of charter was $53,000 to June 30.

The Kansan was chartered May 9 at $1,200 a day; the cost of refitting was $10,195.41; the cost of charter to June 30 was $63,600.

The Minnesotan was also chartered May 9 at $900 a day; the cost of refitting was $69,675.25; the cost of charter to June 30 was $47,700.

The Panaman was chartered May 11 at $900 a day; the cost of refitting was $60,665.07; the cost of charter to June 30 was $45,900.

The Dorchester was chartered May 9 at $405.92 a day; the cost of refitting was $981.05; the cost of charter to June 30, although it was released before June 30, was $1,800.60.

In other words, Mr. President, the cost of charter per day, on an average, was $8,232.92; the cost of refitting was $398,981.59; the cost of charter to June 30 was $429,663.60.

Mr. STONE. The total?

Mr. SMOOT. The total to June 30.

Mr. STONE. Does that include the refitting?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is the total for the charter vessels to date.

Mr. STONE. The refitting is added?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the refitting was $398,981.59.

Mr. STONE. So altogether about a million dollars——

Mr. SMOOT. No; about $800,000. I can give the exact amount.

Mr. STONE. Approximately.

Mr. SMOOT. A little over $800,000 to June 30.

Mr. STONE. Then the Government paid for the refitting?

Mr. SMOOT. The Government paid for the refitting.

Mr. STONE. It would have been better for the Government to have bought the vessels.

Mr. SMOOT. As to some of them it would have been, but, then, with other vessels, such as the City of Macon and the City of Memphis, it would not have been.

Mr. STONE. Is not that a pretty good argument in favor of the Government ownership of vessels to be used for this service?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly they should not be used in this way. I do not think that this was Government economy.

Mr. President, that is not all. I have here a letter giving the dates of the release of these vessels.

The San Marcos was released December 12 last, the Denver December 11, the Colorado September 23, the Satilla September 23, the Ossabaw September 23, the City of Memphis December 14, the City of Macon October 8, the Kansan December 9, the Minnesotan October 3, and the Panaman October 3.

So it will cost the Government for the transports alone from June 30 to the date of release $1,118,895, or for these transports that they have held from the time that they were chartered until the date of their release an amount equal to $1,540,188.76.

Now, when the next deficiency appropriation bill comes in we will have an item for $1,118,895. They are already discharged, the money is due, and I can not see why that was not put in this deficiency bill and have one item covering the whole amount.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am curious to know whether the Senator from Utah is of the opinion that these transports ought not to have been chartered.

Mr. SMOOT. I am of the opinion that they should not have been held until December 12.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will permit me, our troops were at Vera Cruz waiting to return. We had chartered these vessels. No one knew when those ships would have to come back. Is it the Senator's idea that we ought to have released those vessels and then chartered and refitted other vessels when there was no telling when the troops would have to be brought back?

Mr. SMOOT. It would be very much easier to do that than to do what was done. Not only that, but no one had an idea that there would be some 11 vessels wanted for the transportation of the few men we had in Mexico.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am trying to ascertain——

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, Mr. President, but I do not believe there are many people in this country who did not know that after the A B C mediators had passed upon the question, and it had been agreed to by whatever authority or government there was in Mexico, and agreed to by our President, there was no need of any troops being retained at Vera Cruz.

Mr. OVERMAN. They were there.

Mr. SMOOT. They were there; but there was no necessity for them to go there.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am trying to ascertain whether the line of criticism of the Senator from Utah is on account of bookkeeping in the department or whether it is upon the conduct of the department in putting the Government to this unusual and extraordinary expense.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not quite catch what the Senator said.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is evidently of opinion that something has been done that ought not to have been done. I want to know whether his criticism is based upon the transfer from one account to another of a certain part of the appropriation of last year or whether it is in incurring the expense itself.

Mr. SMOOT. Both.

Mr. CUMMINS. The former seems to me to be rather a trivial matter. The latter is a very serious matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Both, Mr. President, and I do not look at the former as very trivial. If the heads of this Government can transfer appropriations from one account to another and then go beyond all the appropriations made for the purpose without saying a word to Congress and come in at every session with a deficiency and we pass bills here covering those deficiencies without a word of complaint or without a word of warning to them that they must cease that practice, what is the use of having appropriation bills? We might just say to the heads of departments: "Go and spend all the money you want and then we will pass a bill to cover it."

Mr. CUMMINS. I listened with a good deal of interest to the colloquy between the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and the Senator from Utah. I have been unable yet to reach a conclusion as to what has really been done. If we appropriated $12,000,000, or a matter like that, for a certain range of purposes, and the Secretary of War, looking forward to the various needs of the branches of the service, apportioned at the beginning of the year this lump appropriation to various objects, I can see nothing wrong at all if he finds that he was mistaken in his apportionment in recasting it and taking from one account and putting it in another. But I can see something very wrong in committing the Government to an expense in excess of the appropriation itself. I have not been able to find out yet, although I assume it is because I am unfamiliar with the subject, whether the real objection here is because the Government has spent too much money or more than was authorized by Congress, or whether it is because the Secretary of War was not able to accurately apportion the appropriation at the beginning of the year.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in all my experience in this body I have never yet known a transfer of money from one account to another and then a deficiency asked for to cover that amount that the apportionment for any other account in the department has been cut down one cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does that mean that the twelve million and odd dollars which Congress appropriated for these several purposes will be insufficient to cover the expenses incurred by the Government in those several services?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it. I will say to the Senator right now that this is not the only deficiency that there will be, nor is the one that I have already called attention to all that we know will be asked for, but there will be other deficiencies for other apportionments in that department and in nearly every other department of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is what I am trying to find out. Is it true that the officers of our Government incur obligations in excess of the amount appropriated for a specific purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. OVERMAN. It always has been so.

Mr. SMOOT. It became so bad in 1906 that we passed an act here specifically stating that they should not do it, and in that act there was a proviso that, except in case of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property, it should not be done.

I feel that I am warranted in making this assertion. If the Senator would go and ask the Secretary of War to-day whether he was authorized by law to spend the money that this item is for, he would say, "No; I was not authorized by law."

Mr. OVERMAN. He says in his report that he submitted it to the legal authorities, and they said he had a right to do it. The Senator read that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say now that when we had a representative of the State Department before us in relation to the payment of the deficiency for the interned Mexicans and he was asked whether there was any law that would allow the payment of that money for caring for those interned he admitted that there was no law covering such a case.

Mr. OVERMAN. The law I put in the RECORD yesterday prevents him from using this money except as stated in the proviso—to protect life or prevent the destruction of property. The Mexicans were interned to save life, and I suppose that is the way they construed the law

Mr. SMOOT. There was no such excuse, even, given by the department.

Mr. CUMMINS. Putting aside the Mexican case, I understand both the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the Senator from Utah, who is a member of the committee, are agreed that the departments spend regularly more than is appropriated for the purpose and then ask Congress to supply the deficiency.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ever since I have been here that has been the practice. We have what is known as an urgent deficiency bill and we have what is known as a deficiency bill. Toward the last of the session we shall have another bill called the deficiency bill. This is an urgent deficiency bill.

Now, take the Forest Department. They did not do like the War Department. I will ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to listen. They transferred from another account and spent $600,000 in six months for forest fires. That is what I was criticizing. That was a more flagrant abuse of law than this. My criticism is that the deficiency ought not to be made unless it is necessary for the protection of life and property.

Mr. CUMMINS. I see no such exception in this bill, although it may be there.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, however, that may be——

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, the law reads, "except in cases of sudden emergency."

Mr. CUMMINS. The statement is extraordinary. I did not know our administrative officers looked upon it as within their power to spend money or to commit the Government to the expenditure of money beyond the amount appropriated and then ask for a reimbursement. I supposed that deficiency bills were to cover expenditures yet to be made.

Mr. SMOOT. I will go further, and tell the Senator that many of the bureau heads in the departments go to work and will hire men and put them on work with no appropriation whatever made to pay them. It goes on that way, and it will be paid out of some account or other until the end of the year, and then the deficiency bill is brought in, and we are told that the money has been spent, and it must be paid; that we owe those men for so many months of labor.

Mr. CUMMINS. None of those officers have ever been punished for this plain violation of the law?

Mr. SMOOT. No; and not only that, Mr. President, but if we do as we have done in the past it will not cease, as I said, and it is going to grow.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should think the Senator from Utah, having known of these things, would have put in motion long ago the processes of the law to punish those who have been guilty of such plain violations of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and myself have called attention to these matters every time that there has been a deficiency bill considered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question? I understand that there was a lump-sum appropriation of approximately $12,000,000 for the purpose of transporting troops and the like.

Mr. SMOOT. That was a general appropriation for many purposes.

Mr. STONE. That was the amount appropriated. Now, if the emergency had never occurred which seemed to necessitate the transportation of troops from the barracks where they were stationed, perhaps, in different parts of the country to the seacoast and thence by ships to Vera Cruz, and if this extraordinary expense had not been made, then this deficiency would not have arisen. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the one in this particular account would not have arisen.

Mr. STONE. I am speaking of this particular one, as that is the one now under discussion by the Senator.

If that be true, then if there was an emergency of sufficient moment to justify the President in taking the action he took, and which action was approved and justified by the act of Congress, can it be said that the expenditure was not a legitimate one? Can it be said that in the circumstances Congress should not reimburse the Treasury or make whatever payment was necessary to meet the expense?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me a second, I do not wish to trespass upon him but to make this observation: The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] expresses astonishment—and I am not out of sympathy with what he said altogether—that the administrative officers should assume to make expenditures in excess of the appropriation. As a rule I think that practice should be discouraged and forbidden, and if indulged in in some way punished, whether punished by refusing to make appropriations to meet deficiencies and therefore impose losses upon innocent people or punish the executive officials guilty of the offense by some judicial procedure in the courts. But undoubtedly emergencies will arise or may arise when the President can not wait even the presence of the Congress, much less to summon Congress and wait for it to come and then take action. If a foreign power, for example, should send an army of invasion across our border we would not expect the President to wait until Congress could be assembled and take action before he would resist it. To resist it would require large expenditures not authorized by act of Congress but justified by the emergency, and Congress would not hesitate to appropriate to meet it.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the statement of the Senator, Mr. President, but this particular item is not such as that. Congress was in session on June 30. A bill introduced in the House of Representatives for this purpose would have passed that House any day; it would have come to this body and been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Appropriations Committee would have reported it likely the very day it was referred to the committee and the appropriation made. There is no trouble at all in a case such as the Senator recites. No one would hesitate to appropriate for it in either House of Congress. But that has not been the practice, Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I make a suggestion to the Senator? I differ from the Senator in the position he assumes that these expenditures were not authorized by law. As a matter of fact, they were authorized by law. They were created under current statutes, and it was such deficiency as the War Department had a right to incur. For instance, the statute upon which the Senator bases his objection, page 49 of the Statutes at Large, volume 34, part 1, provides that—

> No executive department or other Government establishment of the United States shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong in assuming any such statement as that. We are discussing the question of transferring an appropriated amount from one fund to another, and that is prohibited by the act of February 27, 1906, not the act the Senator has referred to at all. The question the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] brought up had reference to the act the Senator now refers to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the reason why I thought the Senator was addressing himself to this particular section. The position I take——

Mr. SMOOT. The section had reference to the appropriation in this bill for the prevention of forest fires. That is the section of the law Mr. Graves invoked to justify his expenditure of $339,000 more than was appropriated for that purpose last year.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, the position is that here the War Department must carry out certain obligations created by statute. For instance, they are required to pay the Army; they are required to transport the Army from one point to another. They are required to repair these transports and fit them for the use of the Army. If Congress at any particular session fails to make an appropriation sufficient to carry out these purposes, the obligation is on the department to perform such service anyway, and any obligation that they create is a proper one to be paid.

Mr. SMOOT. No one has denied that, Mr. President; I have not criticized the amount of the appropriation; but in this connection I call attention to the appropriation that is yet to come. Nobody is going to say that they should not have kept the transports until June 30; nobody will deny that that was the proper thing to do; but that is not what they did. They kept the transports until December 12, and there is an obligation of $1,118,895 made for those transports that is not included in this amount.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am more mystified than ever. I tried to find out whether the criticism was lodged against the discretion reposed in the department or in the President, or whether it was laid against a violation of law. The former is, of course, a mere matter of opinion and the department might find a defender; but as against the other they could have no defender. What I have been trying to discover is, whether the War Department in making the expenditure or in incurring the obligation of which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has spoken violated the law. I understood the Senator from Utah to say that they had violated the law.

Mr. SMOOT. I say they did so in the transfer of the funds from one account to another.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let us see about that. Is there any law that forbids the head of a department recasting the apportionment that he may make at the beginning of a year?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no law authorizing him to do so, but there is a law stating what he shall do.

Mr. OVERMAN. That he shall apportion the amount.

Mr. SMOOT. That he shall apportion the amount.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; but certainly it can not be urged that if the head of the department is mistaken in his estimate of what would be required for the various services he can not correct that mistake.

Mr. OVERMAN. Or reapportion the amounts.

Mr. CUMMINS. But if he expends more as a whole than the law permits him to spend, then it seems to me he is justly open to censure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, to show the Senator from Iowa that the law means that the apportionment shall be made and strictly adhered to, I want to call his attention to the fact that wherever there is an apportionment made for any purpose in any department of this Government and that apportionment is insufficient, if there are funds that have been transferred from another account to that particular account, we always find the appropriation bills providing for the deficiency for the original apportionment. It is not a general deficiency nor does it become a general deficiency; it becomes a deficiency of the account to which the first apportionment was made that fell short of being sufficient to carry out the orders of the department.

Mr. CUMMINS. Suppose the account from which the money is taken in order to supply the needs of the service that has not been anticipated should be abundant for this other purpose, then there would not be any deficiency at all?

Mr. SMOOT. There would be this deficiency in the account and the auditor would so hold. Not only that, but the amount would be retransferred back to the account from which the amount was taken.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as Congress is concerned, there would be no deficiency.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as dollars and cents are concerned, if any such thing ever happened; but I want to say to the Senator that it happens so seldom that it is hardly worth considering, for no appropriation was ever made by Congress that was not all used up except in very rare instances. In the case which the Senator cites, if the money had not been spent, that amount of money would go back into the Treasury of the United States from the account and the apportionment that was originally made.

Mr. CUMMINS. Would it not be retransferred to some other account?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not under the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, it is only a question of bookkeeping. The heads of departments do not actually spend more money than is appropriated.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. OVERMAN. If we appropriate $3,000,000 for the Forestry Service they do not spend more than three millions.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; they do.

Mr. OVERMAN. They do not spend more than the total amount appropriated, though they may spend from this amount more than is appropriated for a certain purpose. If, for instance, the War Department should have an appropriation of $110,000,000, they may spend more for certain items than had been apportioned for them, and then they borrow the amount from some other apportionment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. It has been stated here that we appropriated something like $12,000,000 for certain purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. For travel pay and transportation.

Mr. CUMMINS. At the end of the year, was there more spent for all those purposes or were there more obligations incurred for those services than the $12,000,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. There would be if we did not pass this deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, somebody violated the law, unless they can find authority under some other provision of the statute.

Mr. OVERMAN. Gen. Aleshire says he has got authority for it. The authority is to allow this apportionment of a lump sum. It is more flagrant in some things than in others. This was a lump sum of $12,000,000 that was apportioned to this fund for travel pay and for some other purposes—I have forgotten the various items. He transfers from one to another fund and spends the $559,000 which had been apportioned to another fund by the Secretary himself, and not by Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The shifting from one apportionment to another, I am inclined to think, he had a right to do; but the net result is that there is a deficiency of $554,371.24 over and above the appropriation of the lump sum.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, the deficiency is here.

Mr. CUMMINS. And that is a violation of law?

Mr. LODGE. That is what the Senator from Iowa is trying to get at.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is what I am trying to find out. That is a violation of law, unless authority for it can be found outside of the appropriation.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] suggested that the excursion into Mexico might be regarded as an emergency—I call it "an excursion"; I possibly ought to call it "an invasion"—but that was not for the purpose of saving life or saving property definitely and specifically. That was for the purpose of securing reparation for an insult. There was no emergency with regard to that offense against our country that could bring it within this statute, nor do I think it would fall within the general principle that has been stated by the Senator from Missouri, with which every loyal man must agree. Does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who cited certain other statutes, concur in the general statement that the President of the United States or the Secretary of War had no authority to incur this obligation or to authorize the expenditure?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think he had a right to authorize it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under what statute?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Under the theory that he is in duty bound, under contracts that have already been made to pay the privates—the enlisted men of the Army—so much money; that he is bound under contracts that are made with the officers of the Army to pay them so much; and wherever Congress fails to appropriate enough money at any session of Congress to meet these obligations, which are fixed by statute, the Secretary of War can not get around and the President of the United States can not get around the obligations which they had a right to incur, because they were so authorized by statute.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly that is true; but the statute did not create any obligation to go into Mexico and to hire transports for the purpose of carrying our Army there. There was no statutory obligation to do anything of that sort. That was done, I will assume, by the President under the authority of Congress—that is, the general policy that was approved by Congress—but would that general approval of his course toward Mexico warrant him in expending more for the transportation of soldiers than the law had authorized him to expend for such purpose?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not think there is any doubt about that, because Congress has expressly authorized the President of the United States to incur this very obligation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, of course, in just the same way he could have increased our Army to a million men and our Navy he could have multiplied, all because we had approved a certain course toward Mexico.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And had authorized it.

Mr. CUMMINS. In other words, he could have incurred any expense that he might have thought necessary in order to carry out that general policy which we had approved? I can not agree with the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will excuse me a moment in that connection——

Mr. SMOOT. Just one moment. I might suggest to the Senator from Iowa the fact that Congress was in session all of that time; Congress was in session on June 30, and, as I suggested to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], a bill could have been introduced in the other House, this amount appropriated, the bill passed there in a day and then passed in a day in the Senate, and been signed by the President; but it was never asked to be done.

Mr. STONE. Why did not Congress make the appropriation if it was in session and thought it was necessary?

Mr. SMOOT. Because the department never asked Congress to do so.

Mr. STONE. The department did not have to ask Congress to do it; Congress had authorized this step; the step was taken; Congress could appropriate the money, and it had the right and the power to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong in the statement that he has just made.

Mr. STONE. How am I wrong?

Mr. SMOOT. The statute does not provide that way of appropriating money when there is no estimate made.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. STONE. I undertake to say, as a Senator here tells me now, during the Spanish-American War $50,000,000 was appropriated without an estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but it was asked for by the head of some executive department.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Missouri attend just a moment?

Mr. STONE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator will not assert that if Congress neglects its duty and fails to appropriate money for some proper purpose, therefore and thereupon the President can go forward and expend the money or commit the Government to an obligation in the absence of an appropriation?

Mr. STONE. If the Congress should refuse to do it, that would present one question; but while the emergency exists and the movement to meet it is afoot and in progress with the approval of Congress, and Congress stands still, taking no action, I think the President can proceed under the reasonable assumption that the Congress will provide the means for whatever is undertaken, for he has the approval of Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand, however, that there was nothing in the communication from the President to Congress upon which the resolution was based indicating a purpose to occupy Vera Cruz. I think we all understood when we adopted that resolution that we were sustaining the general policy of the President toward Mexico and were supplementing his own view that we ought to demand promptly and effectively reparation for an insult. I am astonished to hear anyone express the opinion that under an authority of that sort the President of the United States or the War Department may exceed the appropriations which have been made for the maintenance of the department and substitute his or their own discretion with regard to what the Government ought to spend in its service.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him right there, I think warrant for it is found in the very section of the statute to which I directed attention awhile ago, which provides that—

> No executive department or other Government establishment of the United States shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year—> or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law.

There is the exception; and the authorization was the authorization which was given, Mr. President, to transfer the troops to Vera Cruz or to transfer them to any other point. That is the rule, if the Senator will pardon me just for a moment, that has been adopted by the States. Where the legislature has provided that no money shall be expended in excess of the appropriations except as authorized by law the courts have held universally that where there is some statute devolving upon an executive a particular duty and that duty is performed and requires the payment of money, the executive is warranted in creating obligations for the payment of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon has stated a sound principle of law of course. My difference from him does not lie in the application of that principle or the recognition of that principle, but I differ from him as to the purport and effect of the resolution of general support, or, as the President himself stated, moral support, which we passed. He said in his communication that he did not need to ask us for any authority to do what he wanted to do, but he wanted the American people to know that the Congress of the United States was in sympathy with him in the policy he was proposing to pursue.

There was not a Member of Congress, I think, who believed that the resolution which we passed at that time gave to the President authority to spend money. It never occurred to me that in holding up the hands of the President in that juncture or in that extremity we were authorizing him to spend large sums of money for the purpose of invading Mexico.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is an intensely interesting and illuminating debate, and I observe that less than one-sixth of the Senators are present. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah has the floor. The Chair does not think the Senator from New Hampshire can rise for the purpose of making that suggestion until the Senator from Utah has yielded the floor. The Chair declines to submit the request. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did not understand the observation of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that the Senator from New Hampshire could not make the suggestion of the absence of a quorum while another Senator has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Utah yielded to me.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New Hampshire asked me if I would yield, and of course I yielded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He did not say for what purpose, and the supposition was he yielded for the purpose of allowing a question to be asked.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, that is a novel ruling. I am not going to resist the ruling of the Chair, however the Chair may rule, because I have got beyond that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is in accordance with some of the precedents. It seems to fall in with what would be proper on this occasion. If the Senator from Utah desires to yield the floor, of course the Chair will put any request the Senator from New Hampshire may make, regardless of what he would do on any other occasion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us understand this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the suggestion of the Senator is well made; but the Chair will not accept the suggestion of the absence of a quorum when the Senator making it has not the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield the floor now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah has yielded the floor. The Senator from New Hampshire makes the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before the Chair directs the roll to be called I will inquire, Has any business intervened since the last call for a quorum?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator would think so if he had been here all the time. [Laughter.] Several Senators have seemed to work themselves overtime.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My recollection is that the Senator from Utah was speaking the last time we had a call for a quorum, and he still has the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are precedents, however, to the effect that substantial debate is business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been ruled several times that debate was not business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire makes the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	O'Gorman	Sterling
Bryan	Jones	Overman	Stone
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Perkins	Sutherland
Clapp	Kern	Ransdell	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Robinson	Thompson
Cummins	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Thornton
Fletcher	Lodge	Sheppard	Vardaman
Gallinger	McCumber	Shively	Williams
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.	Works
Hardwick	Norris	Smoot

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. JAMES, Mr. PAGE, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. WHITE answered to their names when called.

Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. LEE of Maryland, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. CAMDEN, Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. BANKHEAD, and Mr. POINDEXTER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a question, but I do not see him in the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, pending that I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. How many ships were there altogether?

Mr. SMOOT. I think 11 transports were chartered.

Mr. LODGE. What was their total tonnage?

Mr. SMOOT. Their total tonnage was 49,803.

Mr. LODGE. In round numbers, what would they cost per day?

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the cost of the boats?

Mr. LODGE. Of the 11 ships.

Mr. SMOOT. As to that I have no information.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator know to what extent these ships were used to transport our men?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the very question I was going to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN entered the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Oregon will give me his attention, I should like to ask him, he being chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, if he knows whether the 11 ships which were chartered were used in the transportation of our Army to Vera Cruz and back, or whether the Army was transported by regular Government transports?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not advised as to that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was in New York City last August, at which time this question was discussed. I was then told that some of the boats which had been chartered in May had never been used a day by our Government, that they had never been used to transport any portion of our Army from any point in the United States to any point outside of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did the Senator ever try to get that information from the Secretary of War?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I have asked the War Department within the last hour to give me the names of the transports that were actually in service, and out of the 11 there were only 6 that were used. Five of them have not been used at all. The City of Macon, belonging to the Ocean Steamship Co., controlled by the Central Railroad of Georgia, has never been used. We chartered that boat on May 9. We paid for the boat $1,000 every day. We also paid for refitting the boat $118,287.28, and we will yet have to pay for her, from June 30 until the day she was released, $167,000.

The Colorado was not used. The Minnesotan was not used.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did the Senator get that information from the department?

Mr. SMOOT. I did.

Mr. OVERMAN. They were not used at all for any purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. They were not used for the transportation of our troops.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator if they were used for any purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt whether they were used for any purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator, if he wants to inform the Senate, ought to have full information as to whether or not they were used at all. They might not have been used for troops.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what they were chartered for.

Mr. GALLINGER. What else could they be used for?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; what else could they be used for? To be absolutely candid with the Senator, however, I will say that I did not ask whether the Government of the United States used them for any other purpose, because I did not think of it. I did not know of any other purpose for which they could be used.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, transporting supplies, provisions, animals.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he knows of any purpose for which they were used?

Mr. OVERMAN. I know nothing whatever about it.

Mr. LIPPITT. I imagined, from the way the Senator spoke, that he had some information on the subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I have no information at all. I asked the Senator if he got information only as to troops or as to other things. They might have transported stock or provisions or something else. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. SMOOT. If that were the case, I do not think they would have spent $118,000 in fitting up the City of Macon for the transportation of troops.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. I merely wanted to suggest that really the burden of explaining why this very large sum was paid to the Central Railroad of Georgia for this vessel rests upon the Senators who have reported this bill favorably.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Utah voted to report this appropriation favorably. He was on the subcommittee and on the general committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must know that I reserved the right to speak upon this amendment in the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator said he was going to speak on it, but that he was in favor of the appropriation and would vote for it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah is now engaged in supporting this appropriation, he has the most extraordinary methods I have ever observed. [Laughter.] It appeared to me that he was criticizing the appropriation, and that the Senators who were in favor of it were attempting to throw upon him the burden of proof of maintaining it.

Mr. OVERMAN. These speeches are made with a different aim than that. They are made for the purpose——

Mr. SMOOT. I resent that insinuation on the part of the Senator, because I want to say, Mr. President, that I believe the appropriation is open to criticism; and, that being the case, I am criticizing the appropriation. I did not want to take the time of the committee to go all over the details, because I know it would do no good in the committee, and I do not think it will do any good in the Senate as far as the ultimate result is concerned.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I want to dissent from that suggestion of the Senator from Utah. I have not a doubt that the Secretary of War—who, I suppose, is the officer under whom these vessels were chartered—will have a ready explanation of the uses to which they were put. I do not doubt it. I think we ought to have it. I think, sir—and I say this from a lively recollection—that the exhibition of a settled purpose on the part of the Congress of the United States to look after the expenditure of their appropriations; to inquire, not indiscriminately or perfunctorily, but as a matter of performance of their duty, into the way in which the money appropriated by the Congress is expended, is not merely demanded by the duty of Congress, but is a most beneficial thing for executive officers.

As I have said, I say this from a lively recollection. I know that the ever-present expectation of being called to account is a most wholesome check upon the head of an executive department. It makes him watchful and it furnishes a means by which he can hold his subordinates to strict accountability and to carefulness in their use of money.

I am not opposing this appropriation. I do not know anything about it. I think, however, that the Senator from Utah is rendering a useful service, and that he ought to have the cooperation of the Members of this body in seeing to it that we perform our duty. No amount of friendly consideration for the head of an executive department, no amount of confidence in an administration, can justify us in neglecting our duties, and it is our duty to exercise some sort of oversight as to the expenditure of the money we have appropriated. If we neglect it, no matter how kindly the feeling may be which leads to the neglect, things are sure to go wrong.

I have long felt, sir, that it would be a very useful thing for us to have a committee, such as is the case in the British House of Commons, specially charged with looking after the use that has been made of the money appropriated.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have 26 committees, I think, altogether.

Mr. ROOT. I know; and the result is that not one of them follows up an appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have committees on expenditures in all the departments.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; and none of the committees do anything about it, except that when there is a change of administration there is a little spurt in the way of an attempt to find fault with something, to get somebody in a hole, to injure somebody. Under our Government, however, there is no systematic arrangement by which the Congress follow up the use that is made of the money they appropriate, and the only approach to it we can have is by somebody who is on the other side of the aisle getting up and criticizing an appropriation and asking questions. I think it is a useful service, and I hope my friend from North Carolina and other Senators on that side of the aisle will help us. I think we ought to know what has been done.

Mr. OVERMAN. I spent half a day here yesterday trying to show that one department had expended money without any authority.

Mr. ROOT. I do not doubt that the Senator was successful.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in that connection I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York to this situation, which actually exists to-day: Take the appropriations for our national parks. They are not all carried in one appropriation bill. The appropriations for the national parks are carried in five different appropriation bills. I have called attention to the matter several times in this body. I have called it to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior. I have asked that a change be made, but so far I have been absolutely helpless in the matter.

Here we are. We continue in the same way. The appropriation for a given national park is carried partly in this appropriation bill and partly in another one. There are five appropriation bills carrying appropriations for our national parks.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, Mr. President; and another method is to appropriate in one place one sum for a certain purpose, and in another place to appropriate another sum for that purpose. As I showed yesterday, we appropriated $150,000 for fighting fires, and then in the miscellaneous appropriations——

Mr. SMOOT. In the same bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. In the same bill we appropriated another $100,000 which was used for the same purpose. Then, having spent all of it, they had in six months a deficiency of $671,000.

Mr. ROOT. Well, it is our fault.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator did not pay any attention to it, and left me talking here all the evening, when there were only about half a dozen Senators listening.

Mr. ROOT. We ought to have a better system of keeping tab on the expenditure of the money we appropriate. It ought to be systematic. It ought not to be left to sporadic efforts on the part of the Senator from North Carolina or the Senator from Utah or other Senators who want to perform their duty. It can only be done by a systematic, regular machine which attends to the business of looking after expenditures everywhere through the executive departments, and always so that the gentlemen who are expending the money will have, if not the fear of God before their eyes, the fear of Congress before their eyes.

I can tell you that it is a very hard thing for the head of an executive department, however anxious he may be to restrain expenditures, to accomplish it, because the vast multitude of details in one of the great departments can not be within his continual knowledge and under his continual attention. The exercise of a proper restraint, by scrutiny of expenditures on the part of Congress, furnishes the most potent means by which the head of a department can control his subordinates. Under our present lack of system the way to render that service is, when a case comes up calling for a deficiency, to be rigid in requiring explanations of the reason for it. I do not doubt there is a reason; but if there is no demand for the reason, if the making of appropriations to cover deficiencies is assumed as a matter of course, the reasons will be very slight and colorable before we get through.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has stood at the head of one of our great departments of Government; and I take it for granted that there was not a subordinate in that department who was not pressing the Senator all the time he was Secretary of War for increased appropriations.

Mr. ROOT. Why, Mr. President, the general rule is in our departments, and always has been in the thirty-odd years I have been familiar with them, to consider that it is rather discreditable to leave any money over from an appropriation. When the close of a fiscal year approaches the men who are in charge of the subdivisions of the department go looking around, and if they find that there is fifteen or twenty or a hundred thousand dollars left of their appropriations, they say "We must do something with it. We can not let that go back." They look for some way to spend it. Of course, if they are worth their salt, they are considering their own particular work.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not only that, but they come here when they have a balance and ask us to cover it into the next appropriation, always.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; if it ever should happen.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it ever should happen.

Mr. ROOT. There used to be a statute which made it a penal offense to spend money which had not been appropriated. What has become of that?

Mr. OVERMAN. I put it in the RECORD yesterday. That is exactly what I put in the RECORD on yesterday. There is a law providing against it.

Mr. SMOOT. That law was passed February 27, 1906.

Mr. ROOT. Why was this $500,000, and so forth, spent? I do not know. I have no doubt there is a reason for it, however.

Mr. OVERMAN. The exception is, cases of emergency involving the preservation of property or the saving of life. There is where they get the authority for it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator puts that incorrectly. It is not that way.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator to read it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It says, "where authorized by law."

Mr. SMOOT. These are the exceptions; the Senator put it too broadly:

> Except in cases of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, that is the way it is done.

Mr. SMOOT. Those are the only exceptions there are; and whenever the head of any department or any bureau of the Government expends more than the appropriation made, unless there is an emergency which involves the loss of human life or the destruction of property, he violates the law. Those are the only exceptions there are under the law.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, if executive officers exceed their authority in the way stated it seems to me there is but one or the other of two things that may be done. We may refuse to make the appropriation to cover the deficiency——

Mr. SMOOT. Which we never have done.

Mr. STONE. To do that might entail suffering or hardship to——

Mr. SMOOT. To the officer responsible.

Mr. STONE. Well, to the officer responsible, or possibly to others. If that is not done, then the other remedy, and the only other legislative remedy, it seems to me, would be to have the fact of the violation of the law laid before the proper judicial officer of the District of Columbia, in order that he may proceed in the courts to indict and punish the men who have violated the law.

If there is now no adequate statute to authorize a proceeding of that kind, then a bill on the subject should be introduced by some Senator familiar with the subject who would know how to treat it and let the whole matter be discussed and such action taken as might be necessary.

The Senator from Utah has had the floor to-day for two hours, criticizing one item in this deficiency bill, the only one not agreed to. The Senator from New York says the Senator from Utah is performing a useful public service in calling attention to these official improprieties on the part of executive officers. He thinks it wise to criticize them, to rivet public attention upon them, and all that; but it boots nothing if we go right on, as we did yesterday, after the Senator from North Carolina, as he says, had spent half a day here showing how a deficiency had been improperly incurred, and then the Senate almost unanimously voted to pass it, as we will doubtless do in this instance; and the Senator from Utah, after spending these hours in making criticisms, says he is going to vote to pass the item he is opposing.

Mr. President, it seems to me enough has been said, so far as mere criticism goes. I do not wish to impugn motives, but it begins to look to me very much as if behind it all there was some ulterior object in wasting the time of the Senate to prevent the consideration of other measures. In other words, to my eye this proceeding has the complexion of an organized filibuster.

I suppose the object of it is to prevent the consideration of what is known as the shipping bill. Senators should know now that the bill will be considered, and obstructive measures thrust in to prevent its consideration will not accomplish their purpose. It is a good while from now until Christmas——

Mr. LODGE. Fifty days.

Mr. STONE. From now until Christmas, 1915.

Mr. LODGE. The 4th of March intervenes.

Mr. STONE. Yes; but there will be plenty of time after the 4th of March before the next Christmas.

Mr. LODGE. You have, with a new Congress.

Mr. STONE. Yes; with a new Congress; and some of those who would like to prevent action will not, I am very, very sorry to say, be present then to give us the benefit of their counsel. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. I hate to disappoint the Senator, but if I am alive I shall still be here.

Mr. SMOOT. For the information of the Senator from Missouri, I want to say that if there had not been any shipping bill reported to the Senate, if the Senator from Missouri had not even introduced a shipping bill, and if there had not been such a thing spoken of in public, I would have made the same remarks I am making now.

Mr. STONE. Not so extendedly, perhaps.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I have been patient. I have not objected to interruptions, and I want to be patient. I do not want to object to interruptions. I want to be long suffering. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERMAN. You would rather have interruptions than not. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. You invite them.

Mr. STONE. And with it all, the good and kindly disposed Senator from Utah will not fool anybody.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is the last person in the world that I could fool, and I would not if I could.

Mr. STONE. And you are not fooling him now.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I would not if I could.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is well acquainted with filibustering, himself.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator from Missouri if he ever knew the time when the Senator from Utah stood on this floor and filibustered upon any question?

Mr. STONE. I have had a suspicion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have not only had a suspicion as to his filibustering but I have known that he has been filibustering.

Mr. STONE. Well, I admitted it. [Laughter.] I have been candid; and have admitted it. Unlike the Senator from Utah, I have made no pleasant evasions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will let the Senator from Missouri have his suspicions this afternoon, but when I am engaged in a filibuster I am going to say so. No one in the Senate will ever doubt it. I want to say to the Senate, also, that there are very few bills that have ever come before this body on which I would undertake to filibuster, and this is not one of them

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think it is about time the Senator was bringing his remarks to a conclusion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would have been through before this if it had not been for the interruptions of the Senator from Missouri. He is the only Senator I have noticed this afternoon who has tried to filibuster. I expect him, before I can proceed, to ask me another question that will require an answer, and I would not be discourteous to the Senator from Missouri for anything in the world. There is not a Senator in this body for whom I have higher respect than I have for him. In fact, there is a kind of bond of friendship and love that has sprung up between us. We came into the Senate on the same day. We took the oath of office on the same occasion.

Mr. OVERMAN. He was reelected, and you were reelected.

Mr. SMOOT. I have noticed his labors here, and, as you know, they have been of the highest order. He has always looked out for Missouri, and I have had the greatest respect for him for that. There was never any matter that affected his people in which their interests were not guarded and watched early and late.

Mr. GALLINGER. The tariff bill, does the Senator mean?

Mr. SMOOT. He thought so, and I think even in the tariff bill he did, because lead and zinc was taken care of. I think that aspersion is wrongfully cast upon the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, the few criticisms I have made upon this bill this afternoon have not been a criticism upon the head of the department. I have the highest regard for the Secretary of War. I have the highest regard for him not only as a man but for what I believe he stands for—honor and honesty not only in private affairs but governmental.

I was referring when I was interrupted to the transport City of Macon. Is it not rather strange that the City of Macon was not released until the very last boat? Or, in other words, from June 30 she was held for 167 days and was the last transport that was released.

Mr. LODGE. And not used.

Mr. SMOOT. And not used by our Government for the transportation of one soldier. Not only that; as I said before, $118,000 was paid for fitting her up so that our soldiers could be comfortable when they were being transported by that boat.

I do not know, Mr. President, whether it is necessary for me to put into the record of the other boats that were not used for the purpose of the transportation of our troops. As I stated in the first place, out of 11 there were only 6 used for that purpose. I was not reflecting at all upon the city of New York when

I stated that it was in that great city I first heard of these boats being tied up to the wharves and never being used. I was told about the City of Macon, the Government paying $1,000 a day, and that she was tied up at the wharves at that time and that she had not been released. I could hardly believe it; but when I came to Washington and inquired as to whether it was true or not, I was informed that it was, and I have been informed this afternoon that it never had been used.

So I am not criticizing the appropriation here so much, nor am I calling it to the attention of the Senate to-day, for this appropriation but for what is coming. By the end of this month we will have another deficiency bill here in the Senate, and it will include an item of $1,118,895 for the payment of transports. I have not the information to tell the Senator how many had been used since June 30, but I do know that not more than six of them were used if they were all used for bringing troops that were used for taking them to Vera Cruz.

I do not know, Mr. President, that I have anything more to say at this particular time upon this particular subject, but I believe that not only this paragraph should be scrutinized most carefully by the Senate but I think it would save the Government of the United States millions and millions of dollars annually if a little more attention were given to the items of the appropriation bills.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, just a moment before the Senator finishes. The Senator did not call attention to instances when the passing of deficiencies appropriations may be perfectly legitimate; that it was a deficiency is no evidence that it was not a proper expenditure. The gentlemen who are interested to-day have had their attention called in the past to deficits covered as living appropriations—money purporting to be appropriated to be expended in the ensuing year when the appropriation actually covered a deficit. That kind of work should be stopped, and stopped peremptorily.

I was reading an account the other day—I think, in the Literary Digest—showing that this country had expended in the last 10 years nearly as much money as the German Empire had expended in the same length of time in building her navy. We have ours and they have theirs. They came out with a good, efficient navy and ours is one whose efficiency is questioned.

It would save this Government hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of dollars if each executive department—this has gone along under every administration—were compelled to come in here with a clear, plain businesslike statement. Let Congress then scrutinize them and pass them on their merits. There is no business which could succeed if it were conducted in the manner in which the governmental affairs of this country are carried on. The Senate has been partly to blame for it in the past. The Senator from Utah has occupied his seat with very little interest evinced by him when deficits amounting to $100,000 or $200,000 in a single appropriation bill were put through as living appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator what he means by a living appropriation?

Mr. LANE. Appropriated to be spent in the ensuing fiscal year when the money was to be used to cover a deficit and had been spent the year before.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is an instance of that kind.

Mr. LANE. I called attention to it last year in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Indian appropriation is one appropriation bill to which I have not given attention.

Mr. LANE. No man knows how many deficits are covered in these appropriation bills, nor will he ever be able to find out until a different system of accounting is adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I do not understand how that could be done under the law. The appropriation bills are made for each fiscal year, and there is no authority of law to use an appropriation made in one fiscal year for another fiscal year. I really do not understand how any such thing could happen as the Senator from Oregon cites.

I want the Senator to understand I do not say that it has not happened; but really I do not understand how it could possibly happen, because it certainly would be a violation of law if any such thing occurred.

Mr. OVERMAN. But nothing of the kind has ever happened with our committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Not with our committee, I am quite sure. As I said, I have not given very much attention to the Indian appropriation bill, but I have given attention to the details of all the appropriation bills that come before the Committee on Appropriations, and I was not satisfied, Mr. President, with the mere fact of the estimate, but I have gone into the question as to where the money went, who drew the money, and salaries paid.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will allow me, he himself is a member of that committee which, I understand, makes these appropriations, and it should have been his duty at the time, it seems to me, when these items were brought forward to demand an explanation there and make his protest and come in here loaded with the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. I have read to the Senate to-day the testimony that was given. It was given by Gen. Aleshire, the Quartermaster General of the Army, and I think he knows more about this question and why it was required than any other man. I did exactly what the Senator thought I ought to do.

Mr. LANE. Did you get a statement from the department showing it?

Mr. SMOOT. I did, and I have the statement here. I have the testimony, and I have read it to the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. LANE. Then I should like to ask the Senator why he did not come in here with a minority report upon this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. There was no necessity for a minority report.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator had been here this afternoon, he would have heard a very large amount of ammunition discharged on this question. The Senator from Utah has been speaking on this matter for two hours and a half. I do not see why any Senator could reasonably object on the ground that he was not amply loaded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is still voting for this appropriation. That is the point the Senator from Oregon is making. Despite the fact that it has been all wrong, yet he gives it his support.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to repeat what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] so well said. It is not altogether this appropriation, but if some one does not call the attention of the Senate of the United States and of the country to it and record his objections to this mode of creating deficiencies and say to the department that this practice must cease or the appropriation will not be made every head of a department will come to the conclusion that he can go right along and increase the amount, if necessary, and there will be no limit to the expenditure of Government money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I do not think that merely calling attention to it is going to stop it. I see but one way of stopping it, and that is when you find out it is wrong not to vote for it. I remember, unless my memory plays me a trick, away back in 1874, when the Democratic House refused to make an appropriation for the Army because they would not agree not to use the soldiers at the polls, and they let the Army appropriation bill fail, a Republican administration went ahead and spent all the money for the Army just as if Congress had appropriated for it and kept it up until the next Congress, and then came back in the next Congress with a deficiency bill.

Now, what ought to have occurred was, of course, to refuse to pay the bills and leave those people who had undertaken to take the word of executive departments against the law to suffer. Then we would have had no more trouble, but any amount of calling attention to it on the floor does not do any good.

I have been in Congress since March, 1893. The first session I ever attended met in August of that year, I believe, and at that very session a matter just like this was up, involving this same general principle. In the last Congress that I served in the other House a Member from Minnesota, Mr. Tawney, got a provision upon an appropriation bill to try to stop this very sort of thing. Talking does not do any good. In this particular case I think the expenditure was justified by the fact that Congress had given authority to the officer for the end, for the aim, for the thing done, and in doing that had given authority to expend money in order to do it.

During the Civil War, if the Senator will pardon me a minute, I dare say there were never three months when the executive departments were not exceeding the appropriations. They had it to do. When you say to an administration, "Go forward here and do this thing," in a case where it is impossible to make specific statements beforehand of how much it is going to cost, specific recommendations of an exact amount, as was the case then and was the case in connection with this particular item, the general authority granted by Congress is sufficient under the very law read by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], standing a few moments ago where I am standing now, and that says "unless authorized by Congress."

Now, can the Senator from Utah enlighten the Senate and the country as to how the President of the United States and the Secretary of War could go on and make an estimate of how much it was going to cost to accomplish an indefinite purpose of resenting a special insult to the flag? All that was necessary was for Congress to authorize the accomplishment of the purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. But, Mr. President, this appropriation was made after they had gone into Vera Cruz. It was made on an estimate from the Secretary of War. The estimate for this purpose was $411,400.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but after the fact—after the execu- department was able to determine what it was going to do. When we gave the authority of law, we did not give the authority of law, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] says, to go to Vera Cruz nor Tampico nor to go anywhere else, nor had the President, I suppose, made up his mind what were the proper steps to be taken. He merely wanted the authority to take the steps necessary to accomplish what he had in view.

One word more: What is fish to one can not be fowl to another. The Senator is standing here now attacking the Democratic administration because under the general authority which Congress freely gave—if my memory does not mislead me, unanimously gave—the President in trying to carry out the general purpose announced in the law incurred certain expenses, and yet there stands behind the Senator in the history of his own party the most memorable defiance of the legislature that ever occurred in the history of any party in any country in the world. The ministry in Great Britain would have gone to the block for it. Congress deliberately refused to make appropriations for the Army for fear it might be used at the polls, and after having put a rider on the Army appropriation bill that it should not be used at the polls, and getting vetoed, the executive officers proceeded not only to keep up the Army, pay the expenses, but to use them at the polls besides.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is not quite correct in the statement that the policy of the President had not been agreed upon before the action of Congress. The President of the United States ordered our troops into Vera Cruz before ever the resolution authorizing it was passed by Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course——

Mr. SMOOT. Our troops had killed nearly 200 Mexicans. We had 17 or 18 of our own men killed before ever the resolution passed Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator means before the resolution actually passed Congress, but the recommendation of the President came in before that time.

Mr. SMOOT. The recommendation of the President came in on the 20th day of April, 1914. That is the day the President made his address in the Hall of the House of Representatives before the two Houses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And Congress knew and the Senator knew—I had forgotten that. Now he tells me that he knew and Congress knew at the time the troops had been ordered to Vera Cruz.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say I knew it. I said I knew they were at Vera Cruz on the 21st day of April; that the fighting had begun; that the papers reported there were about 200 Mexicans killed and about 17 of our own men killed. That was before the Senate of the United States voted upon the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I am coming to. In other words, at the time the Senator voted upon that resolution he knew that the President had sent troops to Vera Cruz. Notwithstanding the fact that he knew the President had sent troops to Vera Cruz, he voted for the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I did not vote for the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, the Senate did, and the Senate was sufficient, under the circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, the Senate having voted for the resolution with the troops already sent to Vera Cruz, the Senator now stands here and says the Senate did not authorize the expenditure of money. How did he expect the troops to get to Vera Cruz without expending any money?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, the troops would have gone to Mexico. The appropriation was made to provide for the transportation of troops.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but they were there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. They were there at the time we passed the resolution, but not at the time the President asked the legislation. The President at a certain time asked legislation to give him power to accomplish a certain purpose. Between the time that the President asked the power and the time that the Senate by a vote granted it troops had been landed in Vera Cruz and a little skirmish had taken place. The law provides that the department shall not exceed an appropriation unless so authorized by law. At the very time that we did authorize the President in pursuing a certain policy—authorized him by law—we knew exactly how the President was going to carry it out, because we knew before we voted upon the resolution that we had landed troops at Vera Cruz.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and in that connection I want to say to the Senator that knowing that the Secretary of War stated in an estimate that it would take $411,400 for the transportation of those troops, and he also stated that it would take $110,000 for refitting the chartered transports. That was the estimate that was given; that was the amount that was apportioned for this purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, he made a mistake in his estimates.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; but that is not the question that is involved at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair have the attention of the Senator from Utah? The line of debate——

Mr. WILLIAMS. He made a mistake in his estimates, as did the engineers make a mistake in reference to the estimates for the Panama Canal, and as they are doing every year in connection with rivers and harbors and everything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The line of debate adopted by the Senator from Utah seems to invite interruption. The Chair has therefore not attempted to strictly apply the rule which requires that each Senator intending to interrupt him should have the recognition of the Chair. Therefore the Chair thinks, in order that the opportunities may be equal, the Chair will announce that he will continue the nonobservance of that rule, under the belief that the Senator from Utah can take care of himself, and in that way will not only give an additional number of Senators an opportunity, but will probably increase twofold the amount of matter that will appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The Senator from Pennsylvania may, therefore, address such inquiries to the Senator from Utah as he may see fit.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I simply wanted to say that I hope the Senator from Utah will be allowed to proceed with his speech and to conclude; otherwise, there may seem to be some ground for suspicion—to use the word of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]—that the Senators on the other side are filibustering against their own bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah is like the statute of limitations; every time you interrupt him he takes a new start. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that this is not the first time that I have criticized appropriations; this is not the first time that I have criticized such appropriations as are contained in bills like this. I have done it many times when the Republican Party was in power, and I shall continue to do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will yield for a moment. Was the Senator in Congress when President McKinley sent troops to the Philippines without any authority of law at all?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I was not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was the Senator in Congress when the subsequent appropriation was made to pay for the movement of those troops?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never heard any Republican Representative criticize that.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, I was not in the Senate at that time.

This is only one of hundreds of such items. I asked the Senator from North Carolina if he had the Book of Estimates at hand. If I had the Book of Estimates I could take it and show to the Senate not one item but hundreds of deficiency items, and whenever the Committee on Appropriations undertakes to strike one of them out the head of the department or the head of the bureau——

Mr. OVERMAN. Or some Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. Or some half dozen Senators appear before the committee and say, "You can not strike this item out; it is going to hurt so-and-so; he has done the work; the work has been accomplished; he has earned his money; and it is not right for the great Government of the United States not to pay him, now that it is done." That happens in the case of nearly every appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At every session.

Mr. SMOOT. At every session; and it will continue to happen, Mr. President, so long as we do not give the heads of departments to understand that these deficiencies must cease.

I was in sympathy with the statement made by the Senator from Missouri that one of two things to which he called attention should take place, and I hope the Senator from Missouri will join the members of the Appropriations Committee to bring a reform about. I will assure him that I will cooperate with him in passing any law that will make it impossible for the head of any department to spend money beyond the regular appropriation; and when I say "impossible" I mean that there shall be some way provided, so that if the practice is continued as it has been pursued in the past and is now, some action will be taken, and not merely words of warning uttered from the floor of the Senate, such as have been spoken this afternoon and during the half a day which was spent yesterday upon the same subject matter.

Mr. President, I do not know that I have anything further to say on this matter. I will conclude, therefore, by expressing the hope that if some action is not taken at this time, when the general deficiency appropriation bill comes before this body, a majority of the Senate of the United States will refuse to appropriate for some of the items in that bill.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. With the consent of the Senate, I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 856) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It becomes the duty of the Chair to interpose an objection to such proceedings, but the Chair has relaxed so many of the rules this afternoon that he believes he will continue that practice until the adjournment. Therefore, unless there is objection, the report will be received. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Washington in the Chamber. He asked me whether the bill would be reported this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not be disposed of this afternoon; it has only been reported.

Mr. SMOOT. I think myself it is all right, but I told the Senator from Washington I did not think it would be reported. I do not know whether or not he wanted to make any objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Utah refer to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I refer to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Washington was present at the meeting of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the report will be received. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I wish to say that I shall endeavor to call up the bill in a few days for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20241) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am as anxious as possible to pass the appropriation bills. I am anxious to avoid an extra session—perhaps not so anxious as Senators on the other side, but I am very anxious to escape that burden. I do not want to delay the appropriation bills.

I think the item under consideration makes provision for an expenditure that was honestly incurred. I think, of course, there is but one thing to do, and that is to pay the debt, to pay the bill; but it is a new doctrine to me that we can not discuss an item in an appropriation bill unless we are opposed to it. That seems to me to be carrying things rather far.

I have no intention of opposing this appropriation. I think it is possible that the expenditure has been somewhat improvident, and that the idle ships might have been put into that carrying trade in which we were so deficient in the summer, and helped to have moved some of the American exports; but I repeat that I think the debt was honestly incurred, the money honestly expended, and that its payment should be provided for. I do wish, however, to say something in regard to the circumstances which brought about and made necessary this expenditure and the appropriation to meet the deficiency which the department was forced to create. I think I am entitled to do that. I am going to speak very briefly, and I should be very much indebted to the Senator in charge of the bill if he would not compel me to speak at this late hour of the day.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that there will be no delay on his side of the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. There will be no delay, so far as I am concerned, except possibly a 30-minute speech on this item.

Mr. OVERMAN. With that understanding, I am willing that the bill be laid aside temporarily, and I will call it up at the close of the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be very glad if the Senator will adopt that course, and I will make my speech as brief as I can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Without objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside, to be called up to-morrow morning.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Committee on Commerce has had under consideration and has acted upon favorably a short bridge bill introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. As I understand, the bridge is very much needed and the Senator from Kentucky is anxious to have the bill passed this afternoon. I therefore ask unanimous consent to report the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 7107) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Metropolis, Ill., and I submit a report (No. 857) thereon.

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Texas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the words "State of," to strike out "Illinois" and insert "Kentucky."

Mr. JAMES. That amendment is made necessary only by reason of a mistake in the original draft of the bill in stating that the corporation was created under the laws of Illinois, when it was created under the laws of Kentucky. I ask that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASE OF MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on December 21 last Senate bill 2651 was passed by the House with amendments and came over to the Senate. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] asked the Senate to concur in the amendments made by the House. At that time I asked that they be not acted upon, and I am informed that the RECORD shows that I asked that they be laid on the table. I therefore move that the vote by which the bill and amendments were laid on the table be reconsidered and that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah moves that the vote whereby Senate bill 2651 and the amendments of the House were laid on the table be reconsidered. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I now move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the amendments of the House read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out "within such parts of Indian reservations" and insert "in Tripp County in what was formerly within the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota"; on page 2, line 11, strike out "for agricultural purposes" and insert "to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior"; and amend the title so as to read: "An act providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing the minerals kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, china clay, and ball clay, in Tripp County, formerly a part of the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota."

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is what is known as the kaolin bill. We applied it generally to Indian reservations, but the House desired it to be restricted to the one county in South Dakota.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I remember, however, Mr. President, that in the bill there was some effort to make these lands subject to lease by the Government. Has that been eliminated?

Mr. SMOOT. That has been entirely eliminated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. So that there is now nothing of the kind in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Nothing whatever.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 6, 1915, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 5, 1915.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 5, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our heavenly Father, impress us continually with Thy presence that our devotions may spring spontaneously from our hearts; that we may do the work to which we have been called willingly, faithfully, efficiently, and thus find ourselves in harmony with Thee and with our better self, now and always in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6776. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; and

S. 6839. An act extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Delaware River authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River," approved the 24th day of August, 1912.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6839. An act extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Delaware River authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River," approved the 24th day of August, 1912; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HINEBAUGH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to move for a conference on the bill H. R. 6060, the immigration bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the bill is not printed. It is lying on the Speaker's table, and nobody in the House knows what the amendments to it are. I notice, however, that the Senate amended the bill so as to exclude negroes, if I may class them that way. We have over 10,000,000 negroes in this country, most of them Americans, and they go back and forth, and their friends may want to come from any place in the world. And unless we can have a separate vote on that amendment I shall object to sending the bill to conference.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection to a separate vote. You mean when it comes from the conference committee?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I mean now, before you go to conference.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the committee, to the fact that another amendment has been placed in the bill by the Senate, and that is one which gives special privilege to the Belgians. Now, unless we can get a vote on that, I want it distinctly understood I shall be opposed to this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BURNETT. I think when the conference report comes in the gentleman may have an opportunity, and possibly this thing may be very much changed.

Mr. MADDEN. When a report of the conference comes in w' have to vote the bill either up or down. We can not get a separate vote at all unless it be taken before the bill goes to conference.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. There is no reason why there should not be a separate vote on the two amendments now.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection whatever to a separate vote on either one of the propositions, or both of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. At this time?

Mr. MADDEN. At this time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask whether or not the Indian appropriation bill, being under consideration, has preference over the matter submitted by the gentleman from Alabama?

The SPEAKER. If you make the motion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20150, the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was of the opinion—just guessing at it, of course—that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] could be disposed of in a minute or two.

Mr. MANN. It is a privileged motion, anyhow. Nobody asked unanimous consent, but it would be privileged to move——

The SPEAKER. The other one is privileged, too; and if the Chair had any choice he would go ahead with the appropriation bills, so as to get them finished at some time or another.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Alabama withhold pressing the matter, so that Members may have time to look over the amendments? I had not a copy until this morning, and have just been able to get it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object, anyway. If there are any unanimous consents asked, I am going to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] objects.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the committee of conference.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURNETT. I shall not press it at this time. It is all right. I am willing to have it go over until Thursday morning, and I give notice that I will call it up and ask unanimous consent to have it printed with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] asks unanimous consent to have the bill printed with Senate amendments.

Mr. BURNETT. It is already printed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Copies were distributed this morning.

Mr. MADDEN. They were distributed to the Democrats, but I sent to the document room and could not get a copy.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper informs the Chair that there are plenty of them here at the desk.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20150, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20150, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in the paragraph which was last read when the bill was under consideration.

I desire to call attention on page 5 of the bill, line 25, to the proviso beginning on that page and ending on line 3, page 6. When that paragraph was read the gentleman from Illinois moved that it be stricken from the bill, and when asked the purpose of his motion said, "Because there is no such thing as the act referred to," which is the act of August 24, 1912. And then he made some reference to the "sloppy" way in which he says the bill had been prepared. Now, Mr. Chairman, it so happens that there is an act of August 24, 1912, which amended the act of June 7, 1897, and therefore the language ought to be restored as it appears in the bill as reported. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the action of the House in adopting the amendment changing the date to June 7, 1897, be vacated, and that the language as it appears in the bill as reported be restored on pages 5 and 6.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the amendment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Simply that the language be restored as the bill is printed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent that the amendment adopted on line 3, page 6, of the bill be vacated; that the action of the committee in adopting the amendment on line 3, page 6, be vacated; and that the language as it appears in the bill be restored. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I make the same request as to the proviso on page 7, beginning with line 16 and ending with line 21. It has the same purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is for the same purpose, and I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the action of the committee in adopting the amendment on line 16 of page 7, down to line 21, be vacated, and that the language of the bill as reported to the House be restored. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees of the Indian field service, in the supervision and administration of the affairs of the Indians, 20 motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, at a cost not to exceed $15,000; 40 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, not to exceed a total cost of $8,000; and to expend for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, including those now on hand and those to be purchased for the Indian Service, $200,000; in all, $223,000, payment to be made from applicable funds herein appropriated or otherwise available.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] makes a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order should not be sustained, for the reason that this carries no appropriation, but simply continues the authority now granted to the Secretary of the Interior for the purchase of these vehicles. I will read to the House the law upon which this is founded—section 5 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915. This extract is found in the hearings had before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I read:

No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments or any branch of the Government service unless specific authority is granted therefor and after the close of the fiscal year 1915, and there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law.

This is the act that specifically authorizes that, and it carries no appropriation, but simply authorizes it to be paid out of other available funds. Therefore it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] will be unable to show any authorization of law for the purchase of these vehicles. The provision which would prevent any department from purchasing out of the contingent fund any motor-propelled vehicles of any kind was intended to put a stop to the indiscriminate use of money appropriated for other purposes, not intended to buy these motor vehicles.

Now, then, I think that provision, if it is read closely, as the gentleman from Texas read it, will show that it says none of them shall be bought unless it is provided for by law. I do not think the gentleman from Texas will contend for a moment that there is any provision of law for the purchase of motor-propelled vehicles. I do not think there is any law. I have never heard of it, and I do not think the gentleman from Texas will be able to show it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. COX. The very law that the gentleman from Texas reads does not give the authority.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; and that was what I was calling attention to. It prevents the purchase of them unless they are provided for by law; and that provision, which was inserted in the bill last year, did not authorize the purchase of any vehicles of that kind.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order on that?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I would rather make it.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will reserve it, I would like to know what the purpose is.

Mr. FOSTER. This provides for 20 passenger vehicles proposed to be purchased by the Government for the use of the Indian Service.

Mr. CARTER. I just want to call the attention of the gentleman to the statement of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he says section 5 of the act in question is very broad and sweeping and that if we do not get this legislation their hands will be tied completely. And he adds, "We shall not be able to buy, and we shall not be able to operate the vehicles we now have in the service." If the gentleman wants to cut down the number of vehicles purchased, I think that would be a more intelligent and better way to get at it.

Mr. FOSTER. How many vehicles have they?

Mr. CARTER. They have 857 horse-drawn vehicles and 157 motor-propelled vehicles. They can not maintain them without this.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to their maintaining them.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this is not a proposition to maintain vehicles, but to purchase them at the fixed price of $750 per vehicle, so that it is a provision to bring these within——

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman evidently did not read the item. It says:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees of the Indian field service, in the supervision and administration of the affairs of the Indians, 20 motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, at a cost not to exceed $15,000; 40 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles not to exceed a total cost of $8,000; and to expend for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, including those now on hand and those to be purchased for the Indian Service, $200,000; in all, $223,000, payment to be made from applicable funds herein appropriated or otherwise available.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; but if there is anything in a section that is subject to a point of order the whole section is subject to it. The main purpose is to buy 20 vehicles at a total cost of $15,000.

Mr. CARTER. I was not discussing the point of order. I was discussing the merits of the case and the condition we would be left in if they could not make this purchase.

Mr. BORLAND. The committee put that restriction in against the expenditure of money out of the contingent fund for the purchase of vehicles so that you will have to come in and ask for a law for that purpose, and when you ask for a law to do it that is new legislation, and that is the very purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman will understand that in the past it has been the practice to buy these vehicles out of the different parts of this bill.

Mr. BORLAND. Out of the contingent fund?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; out of the different portions.

Mr. BORLAND. It is not confined to the Indian Department. It extends to all the departments.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that very well. There is some urgent need, perhaps, for a few new vehicles of this kind. The superintendents are enabled by them to get over the reservations and do their work with much more rapidity and to do much more work if these vehicles were operated. The doctors have to have vehicles to travel around in to go to see their patients, and the matrons have to have vehicles to go to the reservations and see that they are properly regulating the Indian homes. It will create considerable havoc if we do not have something for maintenance, and it might create some havoc if we do not have something with which to buy new vehicles. I will not insist upon the number here.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me suggest to the gentleman that if he separates his proposition of buying new vehicles from the maintenance of existing vehicles he will find that the maintenance of existing vehicles is not subject to the point of order. The gentleman has a proposition to purchase new vehicles, to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] raises the point of order, and it seems to me that the point of order is good; but if he separates them, he undoubtedly can maintain those now in the service.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] who has the floor will permit me to ask a question of the gentleman from Oklahoma——

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice in the hearings that this question was asked the assistant commissioner, Mr. Meritt, by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] on page 90:

What I am trying to get at is what use is made of all of these vehicles? You have 857 now, and 90 more will give you 947, and you have less than half that number of superintendents, doctors, and farmers.

It seems from the reading of that question that the gentleman from Oklahoma was opposed to the purchase of about nine hundred and some odd motor-propelled and passenger-carrying vehicles, when it was shown there were only about 500 men who actually needed them. In reading the hearings I was very much gratified to see the stand the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] took. Is not that about correct?

Mr. CARTER. That is about correct.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman this in connection with that? I notice that the assistant commissioner came before the committee and he asked for an appropriation of $20,000 for 30 automobiles, together with another appropriation for some traveling vehicles. The committee, evidently inspired with the spirit of economy, did not want to make that appropriation, but thought probably it was too much. It did appropriate, however, $15,000 to allow him about 20 automobiles. In other words, I believe the question was put by the chairman of the committee:

The CHAIRMAN. I see you want 30 motor-propelled vehicles. Of course, that means automobiles, at a cost not to exceed $20,000. That would be $666.66 per automobile. What kind of an automobile do you propose to purchase, and what kind have you been purchasing—the most expensive or the least expensive?

Mr. MERITT. I do not like to advertise any particular brand of automobile, but we usually limit our automobiles for farmers, matrons, and doctors to the well-known cheap automobile.

The CHAIRMAN. Something that you can afford and still have a Ford, is that it?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

The committee evidently did not want to buy Fords but wanted a more expensive car, and, contrary to the bureau's request, appropriated $750 for each automobile. Why was that spirit of economy shown in the matter of these automobiles?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that there is no money appropriated by this provision, as he will see if he reads it closely. It merely authorizes this money to be used out of other appropriations. This within itself does not carry any appropriation.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman is mistaken about that, because it says:

and to expend for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles.

And other language is employed that shows it clearly to be an appropriation.

By "operation" it may be that you gentlemen want to pay some chauffeurs to drive around those matrons who get only $150 a year. Is that right?

Mr. CARTER. But the gentleman has not read the following language:

payment to be made from applicable funds herein appropriated or otherwise available.

Mr. FOSTER. That shows that it is subject to a point of order, because the money was appropriated for another purpose, and you are proposing to change it.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman that I am not discussing the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], made the best argument in behalf of the point of order when he read the law that was passed with respect to the heads of bureaus purchasing automobiles in the future.

Let me read that section once more:

No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments or any branch of the Government service unless specific authority is granted therefor and after the close of the fiscal year 1915, and there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law.

The question is, Why do they want to pass this legislation? If it is not new legislation, what is the need to pass this provision? I submit that the only object in asking for this provision to be incorporated in the bill is to get money to expend for the purchase of automobiles, because they realize that this provision of law which was passed by a previous Congress prohibited them from appropriating money to be used for the purchase of automobiles without special legislation, and their object here is to get a provision of law that will give them authority to appropriate this money for the purchase of automobiles. I submit that the point of order ought to be sustained.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can the gentleman inform us how they are to feed their horses or to get gasoline to run their automobiles or do anything else if we do not make this appropriation?

Mr. HARRISON. The merits of the question are not now presented. We are discussing the point of order now, and I want to say to the gentleman it looks to me as though there is no spirit of economy shown by the committee when they bring out a provision like this, that not only purposes to expend such a large amount for traveling vehicles, but which increases the price that the department in the past has paid for automobiles. If the Bureau of Indian Affairs has been in the habit of buying Ford automobiles, paying about $600 a year for them, so that these matrons, farmers, and superintendents, who wait on the Indian children, can be driven through the pleasant western country, I can not understand why the committee want to increase it to $750 for each automobile now. That is what they do in appropriating $15,000 for 20 automobiles. The department did not ask to have that done. The department asked for $20,000 with which to purchase 30 automobiles, and I am curious to know what prompted the committee to increase the price that they formerly allowed the department to pay for automobiles to the now higher price. Can the gentleman tell us?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state the reasons are given fully in the hearings.

Mr. HARRISON. I read the hearings.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We did not wish to confine the purchase of these automobiles to any certain class of automobiles, so that they can make the very best contracts they can for the automobiles.

Therefore, as he has stated, $666 is the limit, and we could not and would not undertake to state what certain kind of automobiles should be purchased. But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to read to you the law authorizing and giving the creation and history of the Committee on Indian Affairs. You will find it on page 785 of volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, section 4204, section 16 of Rule XI.

The rule gives to the Committee on Indian Affairs jurisdiction of subjects relating to "the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor." Now, section 4205 says this:

The Committee on Indian Affairs has a broad jurisdiction of subjects relating to the care, education, and management of the Indians, including the care and allotment of their lands. On December 6, 1888, the resolutions distributing the President's message used this language relating to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, giving to that committee so much "as relates to the care, education, and management of the Indians." This language had been used for a long time in these resolutions, and the committee has exercised a broad jurisdiction as to the care of Indians on the reservations and in Indian Territory while that reserve existed as a separate territory, and also as to the care and preservation of Indian lands and the allotment in severalty.

There is therefore given to this committee jurisdiction of so much as relates to the care, education, and management of the Indians. Now, how can the Indians be cared for when they are sick unless the doctor has some means of reaching them? How can they be managed unless there are some vehicles to use upon the reservation? And this has been the language for many years. The reason that this item is in the bill is, as has been stated, that we prevented, by the act of last year, the use of any funds unless specifically authorized for this purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman in that connection what was the object of the wording of the provision which says:

And to expend for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, including those now on hand and those to be purchased for the Indian Service, $200,000.

Was it the idea of the committee to employ chauffeurs to drive these people around to these various places to their work? Is that what is intended by the word "operation"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is to feed the horses and to provide for the repair of vehicles, whether they be buggies or motor-propelled vehicles of any kind or character. If the gentleman has had any experience with automobiles or motor-propelled vehicles, he knows that it costs more to keep them than to buy them in the first place.

Mr. HARRISON. I have never had any experience with them. I am not able to ride in them. I have to walk.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And unless they can purchase everything needful to keep them in working order, it is better not to have them at all, because a mule or horse is always ready for business.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas point out to the Chair the statute authorizing the purchase of automobiles or motor-propelled vehicles?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is in the general item I have just read, the general authorization that this committee has over Indian matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is reading from Hinds' Precedents and not from the statute. The Chair would like to have the gentleman, if he can do so, send him the statute which authorizes, or under which the power has been exercised heretofore, of purchasing these vehicles.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], who has examined the matter more closely than I have.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the point of order is insisted on, there is not much doubt about it. Congress, following the Committee on Appropriations, prohibited by law in the last session, as I understand it, the purchase of automobiles or other vehicles except as authorized by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman is going too far when he takes that position. It merely stated in the legislative act that no appropriation shall be utilized for the purchase of automobiles unless it so specifically provides. The question before the committee at the present time is whether—there being automobiles in service now—the department has the right to purchase additional ones; whether there is any authority for the continuing of a present work in operation. I have not examined the question directly, but I think——

Mr. FOSTER. I think that provision limited them to what was provided by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to section 5 of the legislative act, which has been referred to and which was called to the attention of the Chair by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], found on page 88 of the hearings:

No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments or any branch of the Government service unless specific authority is granted therefor and after the close of the fiscal year 1915, and there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law.

The intendment of this provision is to place a limitation on the departmental officials so that they can not purchase automobiles from lump-sum appropriations, but that there must be specific authorization for such a purpose.

The committee, in this paragraph, is attempting to authorize specifically the purchase of 15 automobiles. It is conceded that there are at present in the service some 70 or more.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there are 800 vehicles.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; 118 automobiles.

Mr. STAFFORD. One hundred and eighteen are now in the service.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And 739 horse-drawn vehicles.

Mr. STAFFORD. And 739 horse-drawn vehicles.

Mr. FOSTER. There are over 800 vehicles in all.

Mr. STAFFORD. There being already in the service 118 automobiles, I do not think there can be any question—I will not say there can not be any question, but I think it is a mooted question—whether Congress can not authorize the replacement of some of these 118, this being an institution already established.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole is a member of the Committee on Appropriations. Of course he is familiar with the legislation placed in appropriation bills to prevent the purchase of motor-drawn vehicles unless the authority is specifically granted for that purpose.

Now, the authority read by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs gives the Committee on Indian Affairs jurisdiction over all this matter. Therefore the committee could bring in a bill authorizing the purchase of automobiles, because they have full jurisdiction of that subject matter. They can legislate on the question. They have failed to do that, and under the statute passed in the last session of Congress prohibiting the appropriation for motor-drawn passenger vehicles, unless specifically appropriated for, this item is subject to a point of order.

In the absence of such a statute, however, under the general rules of the House the decisions read by the chairman of the committee simply apply to the general jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs and legislation for the Indians. But that does not mean that they could on an appropriation bill regulating the Indians include an item of this kind, because that would mean that on this appropriation bill you could load it down with all sorts of legislation. The very reason that this appropriation is put in the bill is because, as the law now stands, they can not use any of this money provided for in this bill for doing this specific thing. If they could do what they are seeking to do now, there would be no necessity for the legislation, and the fact that they are asking for the legislation is because the Commissioner on Indian Affairs can not do the very thing that they are asking in this bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees that the gentleman from South Dakota is on his feet, and he will ask the gentleman if he can cite to the Chair any provision that authorizes the Indian Bureau to purchase automobiles. The Chair refers to authority prior to the passage of the act referred to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I was about to say that I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. I think the action of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting the provision that was enacted in the last session—I was going to say is almost absurd—but they did it, and it is now the law. They might have gone a great deal further and said without specific authority of law we could not purchase an ax or a plow or a harrow or a mowing machine or any other implement used in the Government service. The fact is, that the different appropriations that have been made in the past for the support and civilization of the Indians, for the different branches of the service, such as the Forestry Division, the Irrigation Division, and other branches, have been used in the purchase of implements and such things as were necessary to carry out the purpose of the appropriation, including automobiles and horse-drawn vehicles.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state what he understands the Committee on Appropriations had in mind. It had been found that some public officials had been using funds for the purpose of purchasing automobiles. This provision that has been referred to was framed and made a part of the legislative bill for the purpose of preventing any possible abuse.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand that, and it includes horse-drawn vehicles.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it was the intention of Congress, as the Chair understands, not to deprive any department or bureau of the privilege of purchasing automobiles when needed, but to provide that hereafter when it was desired to purchase them there should be some specific authority from Congress for such purchase.

The Chair does not understand that the effect of this provision is such as to prevent Congress from authorizing the Bureau of Indian Affairs to purchase automobiles as an administrative necessity, provided there has been authority heretofore for the purchase of such vehicles. It was for that reason that the Chair asked the gentleman if he could cite to the Chair any statute under which the Indian Bureau has authority to purchase automobiles and vehicles.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think there is any specific statute; it is implied when we make the appropriation. We make appropriations for certain purposes, and in order to carry out the purpose it is absolutely necessary that we have certain implements and tools with which to do it. It has been done, and done ever since we have been making appropriations for the Indian Service. The Committee on Appropriations, as I understand, with good intentions determined that hereafter there should not be any authority in any of the administrative offices by which they could buy these vehicles without authority of Congress. I think it was in the mind of the Committee on Appropriations that when the different appropriation bills were being prepared and considered that it would be quite within the power of the House to grant the authority. But in doing so it changes the existing law, which prohibits it, and consequently it is legislation. That is the way it seems to me.

The provision undoubtedly goes further than was probably intended. It is very apparent to every Member of this House that if this provision goes out of the bill it is going to seriously cripple the Indian Service, because if a wagon breaks down or a horse dies, if an automobile is worn out, the Indian Bureau will be absolutely without any authority whatever to purchase a new one or to repair one that is out of order. For these reasons I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important proposition upon which the Chair is to rule. I assume that every appropriation committee will carry an item similar to the one carried in the Indian appropriation bill. I know that the Agricultural bill will carry one.

I disagree with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] as to his understanding of the proposition. As I take it, the Committee on Appropriations which brought in this statute had in mind this one fact, namely, to compel the appropriation committees to set out in their appropriation bills the amount of money that was to be used for the purchase of these various vehicles, and for the upkeep and maintenance of them. I think that was a wise purpose. I can not conceive that the Committee on Appropriations had in mind a statute or provision which would make it impossible, under its terms, for a Cabinet officer to have a wheel of his carriage repaired. And yet, if the Chair holds that this item is subject to a point of order, it means that very thing—that you could not buy a single vehicle; that you could not maintain or operate one; that you could not provide for its upkeep; that you could not provide for anything about it. It would mean that all vehicles in the service of the Government must go out or else the various appropriation committees will have to bring into the House separate bills authorizing the purchase of motor-propelled vehicles, automobiles, and the like of that, and for their maintenance, upkeep, and operation. I do not believe the Committee on Appropriations had any such thing in mind. It seems to me that the very provision which is being invoked here as sustaining the point of order in itself makes this proposition in order. The proposition says that except when specifically authorized you shall not do certain things. Now, the Committee on Indian Affairs has come in here with its regular appropriation bill. It is carrying out the intent of this provision. It is authorizing the setting aside of a certain amount for that purpose, authorizing the Indian Service to do these certain things which the Appropriations Committee had requested should be done. It strikes me that this provision is carrying out the very intention of Congress which passed the other provision, and that it is clearly not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman says the Committee on Appropriations has requested that this be done. Has it not by solemn act provided that it shall not be done?

Mr. LEVER. No; my understanding of the motive in the minds of the Committee on Appropriations was this——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is no doubt about the motive.

Mr. LEVER. That it desires that every appropriating committee shall set out by specific items the amount of money that is to be expended for these certain purposes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the gentleman is right about the motive?

Mr. LEVER. And I think that being the case, that we are following the intention, at their request, if you want to call it that, and in bringing in these items on the bill we are carrying out the will of Congress, and I do not believe it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this section 5 of the legislative, executive, and judicial act of 1915 covering this proposition is divided into two propositions, as the Chair will see. The first clause says:

> That no appropriation in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishment or any branch of the Government service unless specific authority is granted therefor.

Now, that is a limitation upon these appropriations. Then follows an item of permanent law, which says:

> And after the close of the fiscal year 1915, there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law.

Now that is a provision of future law. This is a permanent provision of law, and whatever may be the wisdom or unwisdom of it, as the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has said, it is the law, and unless specific authority of law appears for the purchase of these vehicles they can not be appropriated for. The result is it is perfectly possible for a committee having jurisdiction of a subject, either the Committee on Indian Affairs for its bureau or the Agricultural Committee for its department, to authorize by law the purchase and maintenance of a certain number of vehicles and thereafter to appropriate for that purpose. But section 5 of the statute under consideration says that this must be done by law, under specific authority by law.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. In just a minute. The specific authority by law for particular vehicles might be the existing law, in existence at the time this section 5 was adopted, or it might be a new law brought in at some future time, but it must be an act of legislation, and the section itself defines it as an act of legislation.

Mr. HAY. Is not an appropriation act the law?

Mr. BORLAND. An appropriation act is law when it is passed; it is the current law of that year, but it is not permanent law beyond the current year unless it be made so by the word "hereafter," or words of similar import, and that makes it subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask whether or not, in the opinion of the gentleman, it was the intention of Congress in the passage of this provision of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to deny to itself the right to permit any bureau or department of the Government to purchase automobiles whenever Congress in its wisdom and discretion thought it was necessary for administrative purposes?

Mr. BORLAND. No; certainly not; for it defines exactly the way in which it should be done, and that is it should be done by law. If a department thinks it wants 20 automobiles, it comes in and asks for legislation—not an appropriation—but for legislation authorizing it to have 20 automobiles for a particular service, and Congress reserves to itself the right to pass upon the wisdom of that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the gentleman's attention to the latter portion of this section—and the Chair is simply asking for information—which provides:

> And there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law.

Now, the Chair wants to ask the gentleman if the authority granted in an appropriation bill, if Congress should see fit to give that authority, is not an authority granted by law?

Mr. BORLAND. The point I made, if the Chair will permit me, was that any general language under which these vehicles had been purchased in the past was expressly repealed, as the gentleman from South Dakota says, by that provision that hereafter it should not be done out of any appropriation unless specifically authorized by law. Now, "specifically authorized by law" means legislation.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order, unless the Chair is ready to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. Unless the Chairman has made up his mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that every appropriation bill which will be considered will contain a provision providing for the operation and repair, and also the purchase, of either motor-driven or horse-drawn vehicles. The Army, for example, has a very large number of both kinds of vehicles; how large I do not know, but certainly running into thousands. Now, if, under section 5 of the legislative act, to which gentlemen have referred, it is only possible to provide for the maintenance and upkeep of those vehicles by a special act, the Government service will be practically destroyed, and the vehicles which the War Department, for instance, has and those in the Army will be allowed to be worn out, and it will be necessary to purchase new ones much more frequently than it would be if there could be carried in the appropriation bill an appropriation for the upkeep of these vehicles. So much for the upkeep.

Every year in the Army it is necessary to purchase wagons, which are horse-drawn vehicles, and ambulances for hospitals, and motor vehicles of various kinds, and it never could have been contemplated by the Committee on Appropriations when they reported this provision, nor by the Congress when it was adopted, that a separate bill should be brought in every year for the purchase of vehicles which were necessary for the use of the Army and the other departments of the Government.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. LEVER. Is it not safe, I will ask my friend from Virginia, to assume that the Committee on Appropriations had in mind that each of the departments had general authority under general law to make these purchases and repairs, and the like of that, of vehicles, and that the Appropriations Committee had in mind the fact that they desire the amounts expended for these purposes should be segregated in the various appropriation bills, and with this section 5 of the appropriation bill they hold this item in order on the various bills?

Mr. HAY. I was coming to that very thing—that the purpose of this provision was to prevent abuses in the purchase of these motor-drawn and horse-drawn vehicles. That was the purpose of it; and in order to get at that they required that in every appropriation bill there should be specific authority for the purchase of any of these vehicles which are spoken of in this section. As to the contention of the gentleman from Missouri that this is specific law, and that therefore any provision in an appropriation bill which provides for the purchase of a vehicle or for the upkeep of a vehicle must be a separate and distinct law, and that if it is put on an appropriation bill it violates the general rule about legislation on appropriation bills, I want to say that anybody who will read this section carefully must come to the conclusion that when the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress adopted this section, which, in part, reads—> unless specific authority is granted therefor, and after the close of the fiscal year 1915, and there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law—it meant the appropriation bill.

I will place in the RECORD the full quotation from the hearings, as follows:

VEHICLES, INDIAN SERVICE.

Section 5 of the legislative, executive, and judicial act for the fiscal years 1915 reads as follows:

"No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments or any branch of the Government service unless specific authority is granted therefor and after the close of the fiscal year 1915, and there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law."

In compliance therewith and in order to make the general appropriations of the Indian Service applicable for the purchase of additional passenger-carrying vehicles and for maintaining, repairing, and operating those on hand and those to be purchased this item has been inserted. Transportation facilities in the Indian country are an absolute necessity in order that the various employees of the field service may visit among the Indians for the purpose of ascertaining their wants and relieving their conditions and needs, etc.

Senate Document No. 461, Sixty-third Congress, second session, shows that in the Indian Service at that time there were 118 motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, valued at $113,978, and 739 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles. Many of these vehicles, both horse drawn and motor propelled, have been in actual service for a number of years, and, due to constant and hard usage, are or have become unserviceable and must be replaced in order to permit the officials to carry on their duties. The superintendents must go over their reservations in order to learn the conditions and be able to report the facts to the office. The field matron must visit among the Indians in their homes and advise them as to their needs, etc. The physicians must visit among the sick, and time is of the essence in reaching many of the patients. Farmers and stockmen should have transportation facilities to get out among the Indians to teach them farming, operations regarding the care and upbreeding of stock, and the like. Without this item the work of the Indian Service must to a very large extent be at a standstill.

An appropriation bill is just as much a law as any other bill or any other law, and the Committee on Appropriations must have intended to have conferred upon the various appropriating committees of the House the power to specifically give that authority in the appropriation law. I also want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that if this point of order is sustained the whole public service, not only in the Indian Bureau but the entire public service, will be crippled in a way which will be criminal, and I do not believe that this is subject to the point of order upon the grounds stated by the gentlemen who have so argued.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment before he takes his seat?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. LEVER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he has considered the proposition in this light—that this item in the Indian appropriation bill may be considered as a limitation upon an appropriation bill, and therefore not subject to a point of order?

Mr. HAY. I have not, and I do not think it is a limitation.

Mr. LEVER. I am not sure of it myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the Chairman's attention to something which may help him without going into such a broad field, and that is the provision which says "from other funds available," and in the hearings, if the Chair will notice, he will see that they propose by this authority to take from other funds which have been appropriated for another purpose and use them for this, which changes the existing law. Now, I suggest to the Chairman that that is one reason why this will be subject to a point of order. It might give him an opportunity to look up this provision, because I think there is no question about that. If the Chair will look on page 89 of the hearings, he will find that statement made, and then as to the provision which says "herein appropriated or otherwise available."

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, that will not prevent anyone from offering the paragraph we have left out, and that would leave it to the Chair for a decision.

Mr. FOSTER. That might give the Chairman a chance to consider the question more fully.

Mr. STAFFORD. A breathing spell.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the chairmen of these other committees are unduly exercised about the provision in this bill, and I want the Chair's attention a moment, inasmuch as he is on that committee and on the subcommittee that reported that bill, and it was discussed at length. This statute is against vehicles, horse drawn or motor drawn, that haul passengers. It can not affect the motor vehicles in the Army or in the Agricultural Department; it only affects those used for social purposes, a vice the department had grown into by buying them and using them for social purposes, and if you will read the language of this legislation put upon this appropriation bill you will find it is limited to passenger vehicles.

Mr. LEVER. Then, the statement of the chairman of one of these committees that an automobile was being used for public purposes would relieve the item of the point of order?

Mr. SISSON. No. If it is a vehicle that can be used for hauling passengers. If it is and it can be used for the hauling of the individual passengers, it comes within the contemplation of this statute. Now, I want to call the Chair's attention to this proposition. There are two reasons why this is subject to a point of order: First, it is on account of this legislation placed upon the appropriation bill; and, second, they have no right to complain if the rules of the House prevent legislation on appropriation bills. Now, they will not find any authority anywhere justifying these people in purchasing automobiles, and if they can not find it, it is subject to a point of order, even though this statute had not been passed on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when I first read this item in the Indian appropriation bill I thought without very careful reflection it was subject to a point of order because apparently it endeavored to confer authority. But as I read it more carefully I find it is simply a matter of appropriation and not a matter of authority. In other words, this does not extend the authority which the department would now have, but simply appropriates the money.

Some years ago the question arose in the House as to whether an appropriation for automobiles in the Army was subject to a point of order. Well, we appropriate quite a number of millions of dollars for transportation of the Army. There was quite a debate on the subject in the House as to whether appropriating money for automobiles in the Army was in order, or whether it required specific legislative authority in advance. The Chair held at that time that transportation in the departments was just as essential and necessary as any other branch of the service and held that Congress, having the authority to appropriate large sums of money for transportation of the Army, might specify the character of the transportation, and hence might appropriate for automobiles.

No one will contend for a moment that we can not appropriate for the traveling expenses of officers in the Indian Service. Now, there is no distinction, so far as the law is concerned, between traveling by rail and traveling by automobile, and if we can appropriate for the traveling expenses in one way, we can appropriate for traveling expenses in another way.

I take it that on an Indian agency or on a reservation where there is an Indian agent it is not supposed that the officials of the Government are required to walk, because that would be a great deal more expensive than riding. We can appropriate for the purchase of horses in order that they may have transportation. We can appropriate for automobiles in order that they may have transportation, that being a matter left to the sound legislative discretion of Congress. But the authority to make the appropriation is covered by the right to provide for the service.

Such was the state of the law and the practice before the legislative appropriation bill passed last year. My recollection is—and I am not sure it is correct—that when that item was reported to the House I made a point of order on it, and it went out, and that it afterwards came back as a Senate amendment and was agreed to in conference.

But what does it mean and what does it say? It simply covers the matter of using appropriations. It says, "No appropriations made in this or any other act shall be used for a certain purpose." It does not forbid the departments purchasing automobiles except that they can not use appropriations therefor unless it is specifically provided for, unless specific authority is given therefor.

That does not mean, as I take it, that it requires a legislative act by Congress to authorize the purchase of an automobile here or a motor cycle there or a horse-drawn vehicle somewhere else, but the authority is contained in the appropriation. We appropriate the money for this purpose. That is the specific authority given.

Now, where the language is used, "unless the same is specifically authorized by law," it means the same thing. The purpose is and was to have the specific authority of law contained in the item making the appropriation. In other words, it has become the practice of the departments, out of general appropriations—lump-sum appropriations for various purposes of transportation and otherwise—to purchase these vehicles for carrying passengers, and the purpose was to give Congress the legislative authority, in passing the appropriation act, to determine in the appropriation whether it would authorize the purchase and use and maintenance of these automobiles and other passenger-carrying vehicles; and to carry out that purpose in the same section of the bill and of the law it provides that the departments shall make estimates of the appropriations for that purpose. It says:

There shall be submitted in detail estimates for such necessary appropriations as are intended to be used for the purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of these vehicles.

The whole purpose of the section was to provide that the departments shall make estimates of the appropriations, and that in making the appropriations Congress should determine in the appropriating act itself whether it authorized the use of any of the money for the purpose of purchasing these vehicles.

Now, this item, while it is not very clear in form, is either an appropriation itself or is an authorization to pay out of other appropriations in the bill. It is not an uncommon thing in an appropriating act to give a general authority, based upon the appropriations in the bill, and that is all this item does. I think it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has discussed the main proposition. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman what he has to say with reference to the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] as to the words "or otherwise available"?

Mr. MANN. Well, personally I do not think that means anything at all. The provision of the law is that "no part of the appropriation shall be used for the purchase." It does not refer to any other funds. If the department has other funds for the purchase of automobiles, the prohibition in the legislative act does not apply. This item refers to payments to be made from applicable funds "herein appropriated or otherwise available." I do not think that language means anything at all myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, let me ask my colleague, Does he not think that changes existing law and takes funds that are appropriated for another purpose?

Mr. MANN. Oh, in an appropriating bill we have the right in making the appropriation to appropriate. We can appropriate any funds in the Treasury for any purpose that is in order. That is a part of the appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. They must have thought they had not the authority to do that now, so they were asking to change the law so that they would have the authority.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know of any other reason for putting that in there.

Mr. MANN. I think it is an appropriation of $223,000, in the bill as drawn, but I am informed by the members of the committee that that was not their purpose. I think it ought to be corrected, although that would not affect the point of order. The purpose of the item was to make certain funds available for these purposes. We have the right to appropriate money for these purposes. We have the right to say that any funds in this bill shall be appropriated for a certain purpose. We have the authority, in my judgment, to provide that all the funds of the Indian Service may be used for the purchase of automobiles. Of course we will not do that. As far as the point of order is concerned, we have the right to make the appropriation, and that is all this does.

Mr. FOSTER. And if it has been appropriated for another purpose, does it not change existing law——

Mr. SISSON. To authorize it for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. To authorize it for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. No; probably not.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought it did. I do not know why they want it, unless it does.

Mr. MANN. I do not think myself that it means anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the paragraph beginning with line 9 and ending with line 21 on page 11:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees of the Indian field service, in the supervision and administration of the affairs of the Indians, 20 motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, at a cost not to exceed $15,000; 40 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles not to exceed a total cost of $8,000; and to expend for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, including those now on hand and those to be purchased for the Indian Service, $200,000; in all, $223,000, payment to be made from applicable funds herein appropriated or otherwise available.

It is contended that this section is not authorized by law and is new legislation on an appropriation bill. Gentlemen have cited, in support of the point of order, section 5 of the legislative, executive, and judicial act for the fiscal year 1915.

The Chair has some personal knowledge of the reasons which brought about the action of the Committee on Appropriations in recommending the enactment of such legislation. As has been stated several times, it was intended to correct a possible abuse in applying the lump-sum contingent fund to the purchase of automobiles, and so forth. This section was passed in order to afford Congress some information as to the automobiles that were to be purchased, and why they were to be purchased.

The Chair does not think it was intended by Congress to deny itself the right in an appropriation bill to authorize any executive department of the Government to purchase motor-drawn vehicles or any other kind of vehicles, where they are needed as an administrative necessity. The section in question provides that these automobiles and vehicles shall be purchased for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees of the Indian field service in the supervision and administration of the affairs of the Indians.

It is very clear to the Chair that the occasion might arise as an administrative necessity where an automobile, or a motor-drawn vehicle, or some other class of vehicle, like a wagon or other horse-drawn vehicle, would be necessary in order to properly perform the duties of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Chair does not think that the section which has been quoted and relied on to sustain this point of order goes so far as to require, or that it was intended to require, special legislation. It seems to the Chair that it was passed for the purpose of providing a check by Congress, so to speak, on the purchase of motor-drawn vehicles used by the various departments of the Government, so that Congress might have before it estimates from these various departments as to the number of vehicles required, and why they were needed.

The point has been made that this section of the legislative, executive, and judicial act provides that there shall not be expended out of any appropriation, and so forth, any money for any vehicle for any branch of the Government service unless the same is specifically authorized by law. The Chair thinks that is nothing more nor less than a limitation upon an administrative officer, and that if Congress in its wisdom sees fit to authorize the purchase of motor-drawn vehicles or other vehicles for the administrative purposes set forth in this bill, then it would be authorized by law within the meaning of the section referred to, because an appropriation bill after it has passed, is as much law as any other statute which may be passed.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, in line 13, page 11, I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 13, strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "ten."

Mr. FOSTER. And in line 14 strike out "$15,000" and insert "$6,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, line 14, strike out "$15,000" and insert "$6,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; you have.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a substitute to offer for that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have a substitute for the paragraph, but, as I understand it, it will not be in order to offer it until the paragraph has been perfected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to offer the substitute and have it read, in order that it may be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I offer the following as a substitute for the paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for paragraph, lines 9 to 21, inclusive, on page 11:

"That not to exceed $220,000 of the appropriations made herein for the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be available for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees in the Indian field service: Provided, That not to exceed $12,000 of this amount shall be expended for the purchase of not to exceed 20 motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and not to exceed $8,000 in the purchase of not to exceed 40 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that such vehicles shall be used only for official service."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered reduces the number to 10 and provides that the amount shall be $6,000. The gentleman from South Dakota offers a substitute which provides that the total amount in this bill shall be about the same, but limits the amount that can be paid for the new automobiles.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It simply makes the amount the same as does the gentleman's amendment, but increases the number of machines.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that we ought to limit the number of these passenger-carrying vehicles. Congress ought not to be spending this great amount of money every year for a lot of automobiles which in many instances are used by people to ride around the cities and in the country with at the expense of the Government, not on official duties but for other purposes. We see them around Washington and see them going to markets and to residences, and even places of amusement.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I caught the reading, it prohibits the use of these automobiles except on official business.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes; I know we provided at one time that large letters should be placed upon the automobiles. They were placed on the automobiles, but they were placed on the inside, where they could not be seen, until Congress again changed the law.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, under this appropriation none of them could be used in the city of Washington.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is true.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman have any idea that if this amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota is agreed to it will have any tendency to reduce the number that are employed in this line of work?

Mr. FOSTER. No; but I will say that if my amendment is adopted I propose to offer another to reduce this sum of $223,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman appreciate that if his amendment prevails it does not reduce the amount carried in the bill a 5-cent piece?

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to offer an amendment reducing the sum of $223,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Where are you going to reduce it, what part of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. This paragraph here, which provides for $223,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The paragraph as printed in the bill and as proposed by my substitute expressly provides that it shall be money used from appropriations carried in this bill; the paragraph does not appropriate anything.

Mr. FOSTER. I take it that the commissioner will follow the intention of Congress, that no more should be used. The commissioner is a man of excellent judgment, and I believe he is trying to do what is right. I have the very highest regard for him.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman has any doubt about the standing of the Indian Commissioner, I can call as evidence the commissioner himself on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I might not agree with everything the commissioner would say or be willing to give him everything that he wants.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I might say that the commissioner estimated for the purchase of 30 automobiles. The committee reduced the number to 20.

Mr. FOSTER. That was the assistant commissioner.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Illinois, without any information on the subject except what he has been able to get in a short time, proposes to reduce the number to 10. Does the gentleman think, in view of the fact that we have 118 of these machines now in the service and that we may need a few new ones, that 20 is an excessive number to provide for?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think that 20 is more than we need; but I am willing to risk getting along with 10.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11 line 13, after the word "Indians," strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five." Strike out in line 14 the figures "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000." Strike out in line 19 the figures "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$75,000."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify that amendment, so that it will apply as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. His figures reduce the number to 10 and mine reduce it to 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi will be modified to that extent.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that it is too large an appropriation carried in this item for automobiles and for traveling vehicles. It occurs to me that there is extravagance somewhere. I do not say that in criticism of the Indian Bureau, because I think they have a man presiding over it who is excellently qualified for the duties that devolve upon him. He is a man of splendid accomplishments—patriotic and able—and I know he is trying to bring about efficiency and economy in that department. It strikes me, though, that when you appropriate such a large amount for automobiles and traveling vehicles that you are breeding extravagance in a bureau of this Government.

To substantiate the uselessness and folly of the appropriation of this vast sum of money for automobiles it is only necessary to read the hearings and the testimony of the assistant commissioner on that point.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], a member of the subcommittee, asked certain questions of the assistant commissioner as to these automobiles. Here is a question he asked:

What I am trying to get at is, what use is made of all these vehicles?

Evidently Mr. CARTER had in his mind the idea that there were too many being asked for, because he follows that question up with the remainder of the question, saying:

You have 859 now, and 90 more will give you 949. And you have less than half that number of superintendents, doctors, and farmers.

You will note that appropriation as carried provides for automobiles for superintendents, farmers, and physicians, matrons, and so forth. In other words, you want to appropriate a large part of $223,000 for the purchase of automobiles and other traveling vehicles for some farmers and some matrons and superintendents.

Mr. COX. How many are there altogether?

Mr. HARRISON. In the whole Indian service now there are nearly 900 automobiles and other traveling vehicles, and the gentleman from Oklahoma, chairman of the subcommittee says: "You have less than half that number of superintendents, doctors, and farmers." I do not know what the idea of the committee was in wanting 947 of these automobiles and passenger-carrying vehicles when they have only 500 people to use them. If they want to provide two automobiles and passenger-carrying vehicles for each person, then I can see their idea in making this most extravagant appropriation. Of course they do not want every employee in the whole Indian service to use one. They would have no use for one.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. But the gentleman is in error as to the number. That is the entire number.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I so stated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. There are only about 118 automobiles.

Mr. HARRISON. I stated passenger-carrying vehicles of every kind. As I said, there are only approximately 118 automobiles. In looking over what these matrons do, for whom they want to provide an automobile and a passenger-carrying vehicle, I am impressed with the thought that it may be that they desire them to use the buggy at one time when the automobile is in the garage, and use the automobile at another time when the buggy is in the stable. I notice that some of them get about $150 a year and others $180 a year. Some of them are employed just a little while and others for a longer time. I do not know why they want to provide an automobile for these matrons at a cost of seventy hundred and fifty dollars, to carry about employees who get only $150 a year. I notice later on in this provision they say that $200,000 of this appropriation shall be used for operating these automobiles and passenger-carrying vehicles. It may be that they need this amount to hire chauffeurs to drive these matrons and other people around and about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this is the most extravagant provision that has ever come in an appropriation bill in this House. There is less merit in it and justification for it. In the Agricultural bill, where they have superintendents of farms and farm demonstrators, men in the Forestry Service, cattle business, and employees of every kind who might need vehicles such as are appropriated for here, there is an appropriation for this service, I think, not to exceed $75,000, and probably it is not over $60,000. Yet for this Indian Service to employ these few superintendents and farmers and matrons they want $223,000 appropriated. I have proposed by my amendment to cut this appropriation to $75,000 and the number of automobiles to 5. I submit that the amendment ought to prevail, that we may cut a small part of this extravagance and rottenness from the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to that. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] would like to discuss his substitute.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will make it 15 minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in his discussion of this paragraph evidently overlooked the fact that it does not appropriate a dollar. It simply provides for the use of funds, as has been stated so often from the floor of the House, from appropriations now already carried in the bill; and if the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi prevails, it will not save one dollar to the service; it will not cut this appropriation one dollar, because this item carries no appropriation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. If it carries no appropriation, evidently it is money that is here authorized to be taken out of some other fund.

Mr. CARTER. It is.

Mr. HARRISON. And in the end it will cost the Government just that much money.

Mr. CARTER. If the money is not used for some other purpose, it might; but the chances are that the Indian Bureau will find other uses for the money, so it will not be a saving, and the gentleman from Mississippi has undertaken to say that he wanted to cut this "rottenness" out of the bill. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing rotten about it. It is a plain, specific appropriation for the purchase of automobiles, 10 less than the commissioner said were necessary, and a great many less horse vehicles than he said were necessary.

Mr. COX. Out of what fund does this come?

Mr. CARTER. This comes out of different contingent funds for other agencies. It comes out of funds carried in this bill for other agencies.

Mr. COX. That contingent fund is made up by appropriations from time to time.

Mr. CARTER. It is made up by appropriations.

Mr. COX. I can not get it through my head, to save my life, if the gentleman's amendment prevails, why it will not reduce the appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. It will not reduce the appropriation, because if the funds are not used for this purpose they can be used for some other purpose.

Mr. COX. How long has that fund been kept at that figure of $200,000?

Mr. CARTER. This is the first time it has appeared in the bill.

Mr. MANN. If they do not use this fund to purchase automobiles, they would have to use it to buy horses to ride on. There is no prohibition about that.

Mr. CARTER. There is much virtue in what the gentleman from Illinois says. If the money is not used for this purpose, doubtless the Indian Bureau will find some other purpose for which to use it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to vote intelligently on this proposition, and I know the gentleman can give me information. How are appropriations made for the Indian Service, if they are not specifically made? How can you divert one fund from one channel into another without legislative authority?

Mr. CARTER. You are doing it by this provision.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to know the modus operandi by which it is done.

Mr. CARTER. It is set forth in this provision. This is a provision that does it. The amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], if I remember correctly, which is now under consideration, I believe provides that not more than a certain amount of the available funds in this bill shall be used for these vehicles.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. SISSON. It simply means the committee has appropriated in some other items more than they ought to have for the other items. In other words, you can dig into these items and get out $223,000. Does the gentleman believe that is a scientific way of making up an appropriation bill?

Mr. CARTER. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that is about as near as we can get at it. I do not know how you can go about that. For instance the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is not able to tell us exactly what motor cars and what horse-drawn vehicles he might need at this time, and he would not know because some might break down during the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made.

Mr. HOWARD. I see the committee provides 20 motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles to cost not exceeding $15,000.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Why should you not specifically state in the section the other items as definitely——

Mr. CARTER. My time has expired, although I should be glad to answer.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall only consume a moment. It happened to come under my observation that one of the Indian farmers had one of the automobiles in my home district. They buy for them these little $550 Ford automobiles, and this farmer, Mr. Hutto, has a district of approximately 60 miles square, and the regulations require that he must go and call on the Indian farmers at least twice a month.

Now, if this Indian farmer, this employee of the Indian Office, must go to the Indian allotments and instruct each individual allottee twice a month as to how to conduct his farm, it is absolutely impossible for him to do it with an old horse and buggy or with two horses and a buggy. There was a time when any man who rode in an automobile had the public ban put upon him out in the country precincts, and there was a time when the automobile scared the farmers' horses and there was some prejudice among farmers against them; but that time has vanished with the farmer, and it seems to me it ought to vanish here. Every time the word "automobile" is mentioned on this floor, why, some of the Members seem to throw a fit and go into a spasm about automobiles. I can not believe, where an automobile is a matter of economy and where a public servant can do twice as much business with an automobile as he could with an old horse and buggy, why that prejudice should not vanish when the use of such vehicle brings about the best results.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. TRIBBLE. It appears from the statements of gentlemen and from evidence in the hearings that the bill is providing for twice as many automobiles as there are superintendents. What do you want with all these?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think that can be borne out in the hearings, but, on the contrary, I read from the hearings, which I hold in my hand, that the Indian Service will be crippled and impaired if we do not give them these vehicles.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. FERRIS. I do answer the gentleman's question. I think the gentleman is not correct in his statement about it. The members of the committee do not corroborate the gentleman's statement. The gentleman must remember I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, as a matter of information, the hearings show that there was at the time 118 automobiles, valued at $113,000, and 135 superintendents, not including doctors, farmers, and matrons, each of whom think they should have one.

Mr. FERRIS. I am with my friends who want to practice economy, but we are not talking about buying $2,000 or $3,000 automobiles and turning them over to an agent to ride over the country; we are not talking about that sort of transportation; but out on the prairie reservations, where the roads are good and where the agent can cover 115 miles a day in an automobile, and where he could only cover, say, 35 miles with a team and buggy, why, it is economy to buy these little Ford automobiles. They can do three times as much business, instruct three times the number of farmers; and if anything on earth is needed among the Indian people it is to try to get them to be on a self-supporting and industrious basis. Nothing will educate the Indians so fast, nothing will lift them aloft so readily, as to teach them agriculture, and I understand the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the able assistance of Mr. Meritt, is trying to inculcate in the minds of the Indian a disposition, first, to stay on his allotment, and, second, to do something with his allotment, and in order to have that done the Indian agent or farmer, so called, must go around and instruct. The committee, of course, will know better than I whether they need these particular automobiles or not.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would not want to do or say anything that would cripple a great service of the Government, and I am heartily in favor of dissemination of agricultural knowledge among the Indians. The reason I can not give my assent to this appropriation is this: I know and every other Member of Congress knows and sees the use of passenger-carrying vehicles abused every day in the year right here in the city of Washington. The Government has hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in passenger-carrying vehicles here in Washington. You can go to any social function in this town at any time in the day or night and you can see vehicles that are paid for by the taxpayers of this country hauling Army officers and naval officers and other administrative officers of this Government and their wives to public functions in magnificent equipages. Now, that is what is the matter with these appropriations. They are being abused. Now, the Indians will be attending tango dances out there with these automobiles——

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think that is better than war dances?

Mr. HOWARD. No. The war dance is more decent and elevating than many of these new dances. Now, let me call attention to something all of you know to be a fact. We have got a branch of the Agricultural Department in which we have farm demonstrators. They are located in the counties throughout the Union for the purpose of demonstrating to the American farmers generally something about scientific agriculture. This work has and is accomplishing more real good than any branch of the Agricultural Department.

Now, I know a half dozen of these gentlemen in my district. What do they get? They get $600 to $900 a year. They sometimes have to take their horse out of the buggy when they are going around in the county, to put in their own crops, in order to make a living and thereby supplement what they are making. Now, if there is any class of Government employees on earth that needs an automobile in which to travel about, it is these farm demonstrators, who have to cover a county sometimes 30 to 40 miles wide and 60 to 80 miles long.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are 206 of those men, exactly, in the Indian Service.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not care whether there are 406. I was talking about the economy of the situation and the discrimination this bill makes. You were talking about the automobile. If you could have a mechanically devised automobile that would have one seat in it and nobody else on the face of the earth could ride in it but one person at a time, I probably would be willing to vote for automobile passenger carriage. But they will get these touring cars, and instead of using them for the official business of the Government they will use them about one-tenth of the time for official business and about nine-tenths of the time for pleasure. That has been the experience here. That has been the experience wherever you grant these special privileges to the employees of the Government.

Now, if you are going to give these matrons, if you are going to give these teachers, these farm demonstrators in the Indian Service automobiles, why should you deny in the agricultural appropriation bill automobiles for these farm demonstrators who are doing so much in every section of the country other than in the Indian Service? Why not give the rural mail carrier an automobile? He does a great public service. When is this thing going to end and where, if you are going to continue these appropriations? They say it is not an increase——

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I will yield to my good friend.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the gentleman think it would perhaps be economy for the rural carriers themselves, in their work, if the road permitted, to have these automobiles rather than to have four horses and to pay for horse feed?

Mr. HOWARD. Well, I think it is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee when you come to keeping horses and a buggy, and a cheap automobile. They talk about the Ford. It is a splendid car. I think it is the best car made, because it comes nearer my pocketbook than any other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee, because I know he is an expert on that subject, as to the cost of operating electric automobiles? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. I can not. I have always been afraid of these electric automobiles. It is true I never received a shock in one equal to the shock I have received here in this House for the ruthless and extravagant manner in which the money of the people of the country is spent. I think it takes a good deal of courage for a man not only to ride in one, but it takes a good deal of courage for him to walk along the highway when they are running. But I am getting down to the economy of this thing. We are getting crazy about riding folks around in automobiles. I never saw anything like it. They want to ride everywhere. They do not want to ride like our daddies, on "shank's two ponies," any more; they have gotten too big when they secure a Government job to ride with a horse and buggy, but they want an automobile. Would not these automobiles cut a shine out there on those sandy plains in Indian Territory?

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I will.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to state that not one of these automobiles provided for here goes to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know where they go, except I know that they go to the Indian Service, and cost $223,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to state that I am anxious to get some of these automobiles for 19 tribes of Indians out in my territory, where they have country that they can not walk over.

Mr. HOWARD. My judgment is that if the manipulation of these Indian funds had not been so flagrantly abused, from my view of legislation that has been passed in the interest of the Indian, every Indian on earth could not only have a Ford automobile, if his funds had been administered in a businesslike way, but he could have a Packard limousine and be riding with that over the western plains to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just spoken always commands the interest of the House, and I have listened to him on this occasion with more than ordinary pleasure. He states that he is afraid of automobiles. Mr. Chairman, I am not. I am not afraid of an automobile in the hands of a private individual or in the hands of a public servant, if it is being applied to a proper purpose and being operated in a proper manner. If we set our faces against the introduction into our public administrative work of all the modern means and appliances, if we keep our faces set to the past and against all progress, we will not advance very far in the humanitarian and necessary work we are trying to do. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it is just as sensible to say that we will not use the telephone in connection with our Indian Service, or that we will not use the telegraph, or that we will not use any of the modern conveniences in the transaction of business, as it is to say that we shall not use a little automobile. All the world knows, or pretty nearly all of it does, that a small automobile can be operated with less expense than a man can keep a team of horses.

Mr. HELGESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. HELGESEN. When you talk about economy—I do not know anything about the Indian Department, but in the Agricultural Department in its estimates they estimate that the upkeep of a Ford automobile is $400 a year without a chauffeur; but you want to realize that in public business you can not do anything in an economical way, because they had the upkeep of a one-horse buggy at $50.

Mr. MILLER. I am not responsible for the estimates of the Agricultural Department. If they estimate that it costs $400 for a man to run his own automobile, I am inclined to think they have poor mechanics in that service.

Mr. HOWARD. I agree with you about the upkeep. It is estimated that they could replace everything on the automobile except the horn and the push button at a cost of $400.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; the horn and the toot of the horn. [Laughter.]

Of course, Mr. Chairman, any such estimate as that is without the range of common sense, because we know it can not be, and there is no such estimate in this paragraph. There is no purpose in this paragraph contemplating the expenditure of any such sum as that in the upkeep of a machine.

Now let me call the attention of the committee to this, to me the vital feature: When the Indians were grouped together on reservations and all whites were excluded, they were fairly close together, because they resided usually in villages. Their affairs could be administered therefore with a greater degree of ease, because they were right there where you could administer their affairs, because you were in physical contact with them. To-day there are very few places like that remaining in the United States. In most cases the Indians have been allotted. They have not been allotted in solid masses; they have been scattered out over quite an area. Their surplus lands have been opened up to white settlement, and to-day the whites are more or less interspersed among the Indians.

Now, the thing to my mind that we need to do in order to put the Indian on a self-supporting basis and to remove the necessity for continued appropriations for him and the supervision of his acts, business and otherwise, is to teach him agriculture, teach him mechanics, teach him to be self-supporting with the instrumentalities he has at hand, and for this purpose it is necessary to have farm demonstrators to teach agriculture. It is also necessary to have matrons and physicians to visit the homes to see that sanitary conditions take the place of the horrible disease-breeding, germ-infested regions that they inhabit. It is necessary that the superintendents themselves get about among the Indians to see the needs of the respective individuals and devise means for their betterment and welfare. I do not think we fully appreciate the necessity of frequent communication between the administrative officers and the Indians, and I want to burden the committee with one illustration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, can we come to some arrangement about the time for closing debate?

Mr. MILLER. I do not care for more than three or four minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] wants five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I may want five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Would it be satisfactory to close the debate on this paragraph in 15 minutes? I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on this paragraph close in 15 minutes—5 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], 5 by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and 5 by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] will proceed.

Mr. MILLER. Let me cite one illustration. I visited one Indian reservation. There were 900 Indians on that reservation. I hunted up the farmer. In order to find him I was obliged to go to a place about two miles and a half away from the main village. He happened to be there. I found he had about a dozen harrows or drags piled up. He had four or five other agricultural implements, all brand new, lying out in the open, without any covering. I asked him what he was going to do with them. He said he did not know. They had been sent to him for use. I asked him, "Are you going to turn them over to the Indians or use them in some kind of demonstration work?" He said, "I do not know. I have no team." I said, "When did you last go out to visit these allotments that the Indians are trying to improve?" I had passed by a good many that had been improved. "Well," he said, "I try to get around a little, but the truth is I have no means of conveyance; and while I have been here a year, I have not visited more than five or six farms. I depend on their coming to me, and I give them all the advice they want when they come to me."

Thank God, as soon as I got back to Washington that man was amputated from the service. He was not in the spirit of doing his work, either with a team or without one. But that is a condition that easily might exist, even where there was a man with the proper spirit, if he did not have the means of getting about among his people. The farmers and the matrons and the agents need these vehicles to take them out to their work.

And then there is another class, and that is the physician. We had a little debate here the other day on the subject of physicians. I find that one of the greatest difficulties of having medical attention brought home among the Indians is to get the doctors to go out and treat the people. That is not saying anything in the way of strong criticism against many good doctors who are in the Indian Service. I know of two or three cases that have recently arisen where the doctor says he did not go and could not go to attend the ailments of people afflicted, because he had no means of getting 15 or 20 miles away. I do not expect that you can get a doctor who will walk a long distance to visit an Indian patient. Not all the physicians need vehicles of this kind, but some do. But if any of them do, do you think it is possible that a physician on a salary of $1,100 a year or $900 a year—and within those two limits most of them are paid—can afford to keep a horse or team or automobile of his own? Not at all. These instrumentalities are an absolute necessity in the administration of the Indian Service.

Now, I do not know how many they need. I do not know anything about it, I am frank to say. I do not know whether they need 5 more or 6 more or 20 more. But I do know that the amount they have indicated means that they will purchase what we call very cheap automobiles, but good ones, for the service; nothing luxurious, nothing extravagant, but something useful and designed for their immediate work. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is recognized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, because I believe that automobiles add to the efficiency of the service, no matter in what department that service may be, I rise in opposition to the antagonists to automobiles in the Government service. Every committee of this House that has consideration of transportation has recommended from time to time the substitution of automobile service for the old, obsolete horse-drawn vehicles. Even in the Postal Service we find the rural carriers themselves voluntarily purchasing their automobiles, because their work can be done more cheaply and more efficiently. Those who are seeking to convey the idea that an automobile is an extravagance fail to take into consideration the value of the service of the official in his work of disseminating knowledge. If it were the purpose of the superintendent, of the doctor, of the matron, of these inspecting farmers, to remain in their offices, why, then, perhaps it might be considered as an extravagant proposition to afford them automobiles. But when we know that it adds to the efficiency of the service to allow them to go afield and come in contact with the Indians, it can not be considered as extravagant at all, because you are but multiplying the time and efficiency of the official.

It has been my good fortune to know very well a country doctor whom on occasions I visit on week ends and accompany about the country district where his practice exists. I know that his field of clientage has been extended twice by reason of having a small, inexpensive automobile. I know that he can care for many more patients. I know that the cost is much less, when you consider the territory covered, than the old, abandoned, obsolete service of horse-drawn vehicles.

The department, according to the hearings, comes before the committee and asks for an increase of 30 automobiles. They have in use at the present time 118. There are 135 superintendents. No provision whatsoever is made for doctors and the other employees of the Indian Service who need automobiles in going about the districts, and the committee have recommended an increase of 20, not 20 touring cars, but 20 automobiles, the average price of which would be $750 each. Can anyone consider it as extravagance to replace perhaps a few of these 118 that are worn out? Why, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that one of the rural carriers in Waukesha County last year ran his automobile and served his district with it for 10 months, in all kinds of weather, and found it more economical to do so. We find it more economical in the Postal Service to substitute automobiles in City Delivery Service. In my home city we are to-day inaugurating a motorcycle service. These motor cycles are much cheaper than the old, obsolete, $400, yearly leased, horse-drawn vehicle, because a man can cover four times the distance that he covered before. You are paying that letter carrier $4 a day. He can cover four times the distance. If you considered only the amount of oats that a horse would eat, perhaps you might be able to show that the motor cycle was more expensive, because the cost of the gasoline is more than the cost of the oats; but the fact is that it is cheaper to operate a motor cycle, driven by one man, who covers four times the district, when you consider the multiplication of the efficiency of the carrier, and that is the very question before the committee.

These superintendents should not be in their offices. These doctors also should go about the country; and the question is, Ought they to have the convenience to take them three or four times the distance that they would travel with a horse-drawn vehicle? I say to deny them moderate-priced automobiles is poor economy and inefficient service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recently made a very interesting report, filled with information concerning the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and not so very much information about the Indians. He issued a circular letter concerning himself, so that people might understand what a great man he was and what great work he was doing. This was a letter issued to the press, for their benefit, and it is seven pages long. He says, referring to the commissioner, that he found the Indian Service disorganized and discouraged, and that he has endeavored to place it on a sound economic and efficient business basis, working in harmony and with enthusiasm, with a view of promoting the best interests of the Indians; and, among other things which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is called upon to do, is to entertain all of the Indians who come to Washington. He says that to this end he has made it the practice in the case of every delegation and every individual Indian visiting Washington to understand their wants and needs from their point of view and has given them his personal attention wherever possible.

Now, I think we ought to provide an automobile for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. When I walk up F Street occasionally and meet the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with a number of Indians in tow, showing them the sights, I really feel chagrined. I think he ought to have a chance to ride around the town and show them these sights.

Mr. MADDEN. With a bodyguard of Indians around him.

Mr. MANN. When he is talking about how he has reduced the Indian Service to a sound economic and business basis, I find that he wants to increase the appropriation. That is always the case. Every reformer who comes along to institute a reform for the sake of economy always starts out by increasing the expenditure.

Now, here the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has $200,000 to spend for the maintenance of automobiles. I assume that is what he has been spending in the past. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says they have 125 superintendents and only 118 automobiles; but they have $200,000 to spend for automobiles and horse-drawn passenger vehicles. All of the superintendents probably do not require automobiles in addition to a horse and buggy or a team and carriage. Now, we are reducing expenses this year, not at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. We reduced the appropriation for industry among the Indians. That is to teach the Indians how to farm. We reduced it from $600,000 this year to $200,000 next year. It is proposed to cut off an appropriation of $400,000 that was practically expended to aid the Indians in farming. Well, we ought to be able to cut off some automobiles while we are cutting off this large expenditure.

We have reduced the appropriation for irrigation of Indian reservations from $345,000 to $259,000. That reduces the number of automobiles required. We have reduced the appropriation for education; that reduces the number of automobiles required. We have made a number of reductions in the bill, and yet they want more automobiles. Whenever you reduce the service then they want more automobiles. The Indian Service has 118 automobiles, and I do not know how many horses and carriages or horses and buggies. It seems to me that when we reduce the appropriations for various purposes they have quite a sufficient number of automobiles to get along for one more year.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the $223,000 provided in the bill will buy 446 runabout automobiles of the cheap variety. If you spend one-half of the amount you could get 223, then for a single horse and buggy at a reasonable price you could get 446. In other words, it means 800 or 900 vehicles of some kind in the service.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think the gentleman from Mississippi wants to be unfair.

Mr. SISSON. Certainly not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is a limitation here as to the number of vehicles that may be purchased under the appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that, but I am going to figure what must be used in the maintenance. You have 118 now, and you propose to buy 20 more, and you could buy 446 at the price that has been asked for, showing unquestionably that if you intend to buy 20, your appropriation is twenty times what it ought to be unless it costs twice as much to maintain a machine as it does to buy one.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman realizes that there is no appropriation carried here.

Mr. SISSON. I have heard that repeated many times. If you are not appropriating a specific sum, you have appropriated more money than you ought to in some other department. If you have done that, you are diverting a sum where they have made an estimate deliberately for more than they needed so that it might be used for this purpose.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal said about people being opposed to the buying of machines for the public service. I have yet to hear a Member of the House say that he is opposed to buying automobiles at reasonable prices for the public service, provided it is used for the public service and the public service needs it. What I have been hearing inveighed against is the purchase of passenger-drawn vehicles to be used by officials of the Government for social purposes, and the taxpayers of the Federal Government ought not to have to furnish machines used for social purposes.

Now, there is a great deal of misconception about economy. Some men say: "Yes; buy automobiles, because you can do so much more with them." That is true; if you have the money to buy things that you want, why buy them. But the private individual consults always the amount of his income, and he endeavors, if he is a wise man, to live within his income. I hope the time will come when this Government may look with the same scrutiny upon public expenditures that they do their private expenses. The question ought to be, What the revenues of the Government will be, with a reasonable taxation of the people, and how shall we wisely expend what we will get by this reasonable taxation, and spend it for the good of the people? If you need more machines than we can reasonably buy, the proper thing to do, if your Treasury is low, is to reduce the number of machines and live within your income.

I was taught when a child to go and emulate the ant, that saves up something and puts it aside for the future. That old philosophy has been thrown away here for years in Congress. Men are expending money in many avenues for the purpose of securing votes to get back to Congress. A Senator at the other end of the Capitol some years ago stated that if this Government was run on a business basis we could save $300,000,000 a year. This Senator was not a man in the habit of making remarks of that kind unless he meant it. I refer to Senator Aldrich, a man of great business ability, who for years was a Member of the Senate, passing appropriation bills, and it was a criticism of his own conduct as well as of others.

So in considering this item I feel that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] are timely. You can cut these appropriations for the amount to be expended in this manner in half, and the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to have cut the other half off from some other items in the bill and shown the economy which they claim. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, is it too late to offer an amendment to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a substitute also pending to the paragraph.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] to offer a substitute for the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The situation is this: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] offered an amendment, and the gentleman from Mississippi offered an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] also had read and pending a substitute for the whole paragraph.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment to the amendment read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment to the amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 13, after the word "Indians," strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "five"; strike out of line 14 the figures "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000"; strike out, in line 19, the figures "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$75,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed by order of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division of the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first provision of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 13, after the word "Indians," strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "five."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARRISON and Mr. COX) there were 25 ayes and 26 noes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. HARRISON and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other portion of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 14, strike out "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next portion of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 19, strike out the figures "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$75,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARRISON) there were—ayes 24, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by a gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. MANN. Let us have that reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 13, strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

Page 11, line 14, strike out the figures "$15,000" and insert the figures "$6,000."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to offer a substitute for that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can do that.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, on line 13, page 11, insert a semicolon, and strike out all after the word "Indian," down to and including "$15,000," on line 14; and strike out, in line 19, the figures "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$185,000"; strike out, in line 20, the figures "$223,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$208,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The object of that would be to strike out all of the automobiles?

Mr. HOWARD. The object of it is to strike out all of these new automobiles.

Mr. MANN. The mathematics of the gentleman's amendment would not be correct, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, a little thing like that does not make any difference. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I shall have to ask for a division of the amendment, because the addition is not correct. The gentleman proposes to strike out $15,000 and then to reduce $200,000 to $185,000, making a cut of $30,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Leave the $200,000 as it is. In other words, leave $200,000 and take $15,000 off the $223,000. I have taken off too much in my zeal to economize.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11 line 13, after the word "Indian," strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 14, which language is as follows: "Twenty motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, at a cost not to exceed $15,000."

And in line 20, on the same page, strike out "$223,000" and insert "$208,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and, on a division demanded by Mr. HOWARD, there were—ayes 27, noes 26.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas and Mr. HOWARD were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to modify the substitute which I have offered to the amendment that has been made, so as to perfect the paragraph, changing the figures to correspond with these figures.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from South Dakota will be granted permission to modify his amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let us now have it reported as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

That not to exceed $200,000 of the appropriations made herein for the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees in the Indian field service: Provided, That not to exceed $8,000 shall be used in the purchase of not to exceed 40 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that such vehicles shall be used only for official service.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That covers the ground exactly.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not as good a provision as the existing paragraph, because there is nothing limiting the use of the automobiles to the service of the Indians. They may be used for joy rides.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse A. G. Pollock, former disbursing agent of the Santee Competency Commission, for moneys expended for printing and stationery used by the Santee Competency Commission, $49.25.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washnigton. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, during the debate with reference to automobiles for Indian superintendents, supervisors, and others the statement was made that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should be permitted to have an automobile here for the purpose of entertaining Indians when they were in Washington, D. C. I believe that he should have one. I believe, too, that the superintendents and agents should have them, and good ones, too. As a matter of interest I would like to read to those who are interested in the welfare of the Indians a letter which I received from an Indian a few days ago, as follows:

TAHOLAH, WASH., December 5, 1914.

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: Can you help me sell a little of my timber? Get me permission to sell some of it. I would like to use a little of my money while I live. After I die I will have nothing to use it for. I want to buy an automobile. * * *

Yours, truly, JOHNSON WAUKENUS.

He is one of 800 Indians living on the large Quiniault Reservation, where the timber is estimated to be worth, at the least calculation, $5,000,000. Probably it is worth much more. Waukenas owns some under allotment, which he can not sell. He gets from fishing barely enough money for ordinary expenses. He is not permitted to sell his timber. He is getting on in years and will die long before the timber is sold, and he can not have an automobile. Neither does the superintendent of his agency have one, although the agency is many miles from the nearest railroad point, over a road where teams are driven at far more expense than an automobile could be. While on this floor we discuss automobiles, joke about them, harangue against their use by public servants, such conveniences are needed and are generally properly used. Only last Saturday we discussed here the need of a physician for this tribe of Indians living so far from a railroad, and the statement was made that $720 was the most that could be paid for a doctor for the Quiniault Indians. As a result of that discussion, and on evidence submitted concerning the cost of travel, I am to-day informed that the department has decided to authorize the sending of a doctor there at pay of $1,200 a year. If he is going to serve the Indians on the Quiniault, he will be badly in need of an automobile. I am sorry, indeed, to see the item for a few additional cheap automobiles go out of the bill. It is simply another case of the wrong kind of cheap, buncombe economy.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to insist on my point of order, but I want to get some information from the chairman of the committee, because I think, while the point of order would lie against this paragraph without question, that this is one instance in the case of the committee where really they have written one paragraph in the bill which is good [applause], and I thought, in frankness to the committee, that they ought to explain this item and show why it is not as bad as the balance.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As the gentleman has objected to everything else in the bill, why does he make this discrimination?

Mr. HARRISON. I will not discriminate against this good paragraph, so I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to the heirs of Farmer John, an Indian, for land purchased by the Government for a boathouse site on Pelican Lake, Minn., $20.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the following as a new paragraph:

"To reimburse William E. Johnson, former chief special officer and special disbursing agent, for expenditures made by him under direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the defense of Juan Cruz, a noncommissioned officer engaged in the suppression of liquor traffic among Indians, for the payment of which no appropriation was available, $1,853.95."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that that it is clearly new legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think it is necessary. I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 12, after line 3, by inserting a new paragraph, reading as follows:

"That so much of section 4 of the act of May 11, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 102) as prohibits granting permission, in writing or otherwise, to any Indian or Indians on any Indian reservation to go into the State of Texas under any pretext whatever, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new legislation. It was not in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I realize it is new legislation, but I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not in the bill at all. We would like to go ahead with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is nothing before the House. The last paragraph is the first paragraph on page 12—

For payment to the heirs of Farmer John, an Indian.

Mr. HARRISON. That has not been finished yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state we have passed that paragraph and we are considering a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. For support and civilization of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, including pay of employees, $330,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I offered two amendments a moment ago, and the chairman of the committee [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] made points of order against them and refused to reserve the points of order. I really think if he had given it any consideration he would have withdrawn the points of order. The reason why I offered this amendment for the relief of this man Johnson was because the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs asked the Committee on Indian Affairs to write this provision into this appropriation bill. I do not know who this man Johnson is, but in reading the hearings it seems to me that he ought to have had that money, and it seems to me that the Appropriations Committee ought to have written it into the bill. Here is the explanation of that amendment. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs says:

Mr. Johnson in 1911 was the special officer of the service for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and he received instructions from the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Valentine, to "help in his fullest protection every way in your power" an Indian by the name of Juan Cruz, a noncommissioned officer engaged in the suppression of the liquor traffic. He was having some trouble in the courts at that time, and Mr. Johnson complied with the instructions of the commissioner, and in carrying out those instructions he incurred certain indebtedness which the comptroller held could not be paid out of the appropriation then available, and the office believes that, inasmuch as Mr. Johnson was acting under instructions from his superior officer, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that this amount should be paid.

Now, these reasons that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs gave to the committee ought to have persuaded the committee to appropriate this small amount to a man who had acted in the discharge of his duty at the instance and under instructions of the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the gentleman aware that is subject to a point of order——

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me conclude. If we let in one claim of that character, does not the gentleman know this bill would be loaded down with claims of a similar character?

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman knows he has passed over two claims here on which I did not make a point of order, and they were subject to a point of order, and if I had made it they would have gone out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are under $100.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is one for payment to the heirs of Farmer John, an Indian, for land purchased by the Government for a boathouse site on Pelican Lake, Minn., and another item, to reimburse A. G. Pollock—I suppose he must be some man in the employ of the Government up there—a certain amount of money. These items are all right, but both were subject to points of order.

And yet when the commissioner says here is a man who was directed to go and spend some of his own money in defense of the employees of this Government who were trying to stop the illicit sale of liquor to Indians, and when he asks that he be reimbursed the committee says because it is subject to a point of order they will not incorporate it in the bill. I will say to the chairman of the committee that there are many items in this bill subject to a point of order, and he could not defend on that account at all. O Consistency, thou art a jewel!

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will examine the bill he will find that we cut out over a million dollars' worth of claims.

Mr. HARRISON. The bill would have been much better if his committee had cut out that automobile piece of extravagance that the House cut out a few moments ago.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The House will regret that.

Mr. HARRISON. I offered another amendment—the one relating to Texas—that by all means no point of order should have been made against, especially by the gentleman from Texas, because the amendment purports to give to Texas some benefit and to some Indians some privileges.

Away back in 1880 there was some law passed that prohibited an Indian on reservations in the then Indian Territory going into the State of Texas. Now the once Indian Territory is Oklahoma, and the State has progressed by leaps and bounds. It now has men in high places who have Indian blood in their veins—men of superb and splendid character and strong ability. And yet with all this progress among the people of that State and the Indians of that State, here the same old restriction is kept in the law prohibiting Indians off of the reservations in Oklahoma from going into the State of Texas. I submit it is not fair to the State of Texas that Indians out of the adjoining State of Oklahoma, if they want to go into the State of Texas, should be kept from going into the State of Texas. It is not fair to the Indians of Oklahoma who might want to go to Texas to be prohibited from exercising that right. Give the Indians of Oklahoma at least some liberty and freedom.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for two minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. And yet, when I offer this amendment to repeal this obnoxious piece of legislation that is on the statute books now, the gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against it. I submit there would be no opposition at all in this whole House to repealing that old law that prohibits those Indians from going into Texas, and I appeal to the gentleman now if he will not withdraw his point of order so that we can write into this bill at this time a repeal of the law, so that these people whom my friends from Oklahoma are so anxious to take care of—their constituents—may be permitted to go into the State of Texas and visit my friend's [Mr. STEPHENS] constituents in that State?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman knew as much about that district as I do, he would know that this has been a dead letter on the statute books for 20 years. Twenty years ago Quanah and the Apache Indians, and also Geronimo, the famous Apache chief, came to my town for several celebrations, and we had the permission of the agent at Fort Sill for them to do so. That was after they had been defeated, in 1876, by Gen. Kinsey. The reason we passed that law was this: Immediately after the Civil War these Indians were all known as blanket Indians and were west of the Five Civilized Tribes' territory.

They were under the control of an agency at Fort Sill and Fort Cantonment, then north of Fort Sill 20 or 30 miles. These agents permitted the Indians to draw rations from the United States Government, and permitted them to draw arms and ammunition from the Government on the pretense that they were going to the Staked Plains, hunting. Instead of that, they would cross the Red River and come into Texas and destroy our property and kill our people, and that was the basis of the claim for which we passed the bill yesterday—to recoup and repay the people of Texas for the damages done by these Indians in Texas.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman does not think they would do that now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; I do not think they would do that now. They are civilized now. Congress passed the act making it unlawful for these Indians to cross the Red River and go into Texas. And I will state to the gentleman that I was living at the frontier of Texas at that time, at one of the extreme outposts of Texas, located in the county of Montague, and the rangers, under Maj. Ross and Lieut. Jones, at that time controlled that territory from the Rio Grande to the Red River, and I, as a scout—a young man then, much younger than I am now—assisted those troops in driving those Indians back. So you see it was absolutely necessary at that time that this frontier should have been protected and that the Indians should not be permitted to cross the Red River. That was the reason for the law; and the reason for the law having passed away, it is now necessary that the law be repealed.

Mr. HARRISON. I am quite sure that it was a good law at that time; it answered its purpose; but the argument that the gentleman has made would convince every Member of this House that it ought not to remain longer on the statute books, because the gentleman himself says it is a dead letter and useless.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to recur to the paragraph where I offered the amendment, so that I can offer it now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not necessary, because it is not in the bill. If the gentleman can find any clause of that kind in the bill, he can move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] asks unanimous consent to recur to a previous portion of the bill for the purpose he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, there is no paragraph to refer to.

Mr. HARRISON. Just before we got to the item of Arizona and New Mexico, I thought it would be very appropriate to write it in there.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provisions of the sixth article of the treaty of June 8, 1868, between the United States and the Navajo Nation or Tribe of Indians, proclaimed August 12, 1868, whereby the United States agrees to provide school facilities for the children of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, $100,000: Provided, That the said Secretary may expend said funds, in his discretion, in establishing or enlarging day or industrial schools.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] about the provision there in the last paragraph as it is written. Will the gentleman explain that?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is the same amount as has been appropriated for some years. It is made in pursuance of a treaty by which the United States agreed to furnish the Navajo Indians with school facilities.

Mr. HARRISON. Does this appropriation carry $100.000 a year?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Indian bill carried that amount last year. I do not know as to other years.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the chairman of the committee tell us how many years that item has been provided for?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Ever since the treaty went into effect. Otherwise the Government would have been violating its good faith with that tribe of Indians and would have been refusing to carry out a treaty, which, I presume, is of the same solemnity as a treaty with a foreign nation.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdrew my reservation of the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi withdraws his reservation.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SISSON. Calling attention to the provision at the bottom of page 13, with reference to the $100,000 item, concerning money appropriated in that item for Arizona and New Mexico for the support of schools, does the gentleman know whether any of this money is used in denominational schools or not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am informed it is not. I have not investigated the matter personally, but if it is so used it is in violation of a statute.

Mr. SISSON. I am informed that there are some items in the bill which may need explanation. I shall call the gentleman's attention to them later. I want to get the record straight on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing the irrigation system for the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians in the vicinity of Sacaton, in the Gila River Indian Reservation, within the limit of cost fixed by the act of March 3, 1905, $10,000; and for maintenance and operation of the pumping plants and canal systems, $10,000; in all, $20,000, reimbursable as provided in section 2 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 522), and to remain available until expended.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentlemen of the committee what was the original estimate for this work?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On page 121 of the hearings the gentleman will find it. The amount appropriated was $15,000. The unexpended balance for previous years made a total of $26,735.64. The amount expended was $25,332.78, and the unexpended balance is $1,402.86. Then there follows an analysis of the expenditures, and they amount to $25,332.78.

Mr. HARRISON. Was an original estimate made on this work?

Mr. HAYDEN. The estimated cost of the project was $150,000, of which there has been expended heretofore $116,735.48.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Arizona yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arizona yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. MILLER. Are those figures for the Pima Indian project? Is that the correct amount?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is for the construction and repair of necessary channels and laterals for the utilization of the pumping plant.

Mr. HARRISON. That is not what I was asking about.

Mr. MILLER. The estimated cost of this project was $725,000, was it not?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. It was $725,000. We were reading from the wrong page of the hearings. The estimated cost, as the gentleman from Minnesota says, was $725,000, of which there has been expended up to June 30, 1914, $515,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Do the settlers get the benefit of this irrigation work or is it for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. HARRISON. Incidentally the white people do not get any benefit from it? It does not benefit their land?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is all for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not this a part of the Phoenix project?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. The only connection between this and the Salt River project is that the electric current that is used to pump water for this project is purchased from the Reclamation Service.

Mr. BORLAND. My recollection is that the Indian Service paid a certain amount of the cost of the Roosevelt Dam project.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; not a cent.

Mr. BORLAND. And that for that they got a certain amount of power, which they use on their own lands.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is a contract between the United States Reclamation Service and the Indian Office, which provides that the Indian Service may purchase electric power at certain rates from the Reclamation Service. They pay for what they get. But the Indians paid no part of the cost of the construction of the Salt River reclamation project.

Mr. BORLAND. Did they not pay $50,000 for a transmission line to run to the Indian reservation, and then, in addition, agree to pay their acreage cost of the maintenance of the Salt River project?

Mr. HAYDEN. No operation and maintenance charge is paid by these Indians to the Salt River project. They pay for what electric current they use at a comparatively low rate.

Mr. BORLAND. This is not an independent irrigation system on the Pima Reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; entirely independent.

Mr. BORLAND. It is connected with the Salt River project.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; the Pima lands are in another valley.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is on the Gila River, and the Salt River is entirely different.

Mr. MILLER. I want to ask the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] a question or two, but I will wait until the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has completed his questions.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I want to get some information later; that is all.

Mr. MILLER. As the gentleman from Arizona well knows, some individuals who have been interested in Indian affairs in one way and another made the claim, a few years ago, that the expenditures heretofore made on this project were inadvisable, because the water provided by wells contained alkali and salt and destroyed the land, and they worked among the Indians to such an extent that they got the Indians to believe it. It almost resulted in a scandal; whereupon the Indian Committee, a short time ago, authorized a full investigation both as to the feasibility of the project and as to the engineering features, and a report was subsequently made. I should like to ask the gentleman from Arizona—and I hope he will make the statement for the RECORD—just what the facts have now been found to be respecting this water.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no question that the water from wells containing alkali is not as good as stream water which contains a less percentage of alkali; but alkaline water is better than no water at all, and the Pimas had no water. They are making a beneficial use of the water from these wells. For instance, it has been found that an alkali-resistant plant like Egyptian cotton can be grown with water from these wells just as well as with any other water.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not a fact that they have been growing at this exact spot some of the finest cotton grown in the United States?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; excellent cotton.

Mr. MILLER. From the land irrigated by this water?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The Indians are learning how to use it. It is a question of methods of using the water and finding a crop suitable to it.

Mr. MILLER. There is no question about the advisability of completing this project.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; and I think the appropriation in this bill is well justified.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to ask the gentleman whether or not the white people get any incidental benefit or protection from this project?

Mr. HAYDEN. Absolutely none.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ascertain whether all this money should come out of the tribal funds or whether the white settlers, who get the benefit of it, ought not to be made to pay their pro rata part.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman is mistaken in two particulars. First, there are no tribal funds. These Indians are very poor. In the second place, there are no white settlers on this reservation.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, all this $750,000 will come out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; reimbursable under the law.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Indians have no tribal funds?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; none at all.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reclamation and maintenance charge on Yuma allotments, $40,000, to be reimbursed from the sale of surplus lands or from other funds that may be available, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911: Provided, That maintenance and operation charges shall not be made against any of said allotments prior to completion of the distributing system so as to provide for actual delivery of water to each 40-acre tract of said allotted land, and any such charges heretofore paid upon any other basis shall be adjusted to conform hereto.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that part of the paragraph beginning with the word "Provided," in line 21, to the end of the paragraph.

This language was placed in the bill as the result of a dispute between the Indian Office and the Reclamation Service over what was the proper charge for operation and maintenance. I am informed by the Indian Office that they have reached an agreement with the Reclamation Service, so that this proviso is not necessary, and therefore I make the point of order that this is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. If it were necessary, I would make the point of order. It has no place in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that the two offices have agreed on an arrangement of the matter that is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas admit that the proviso is subject to the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I admit that it is subject to the point of order, and it should be stricken out, because the department wants its stricken out.

Mr. MANN. That is a great reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

FLORIDA.

SEC. 4. For support and civilization of Seminole Indians in Florida, including the purchase of such lands as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper, $10,000, of which $3,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the section.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think it is subject to a point of order, but I hope the gentleman will not make it, for the reason that this $3,000 to be immediately available is to be used, as I understand it, as an additional amount for the purchase of lands for these Indians. They seem to be a homeless band of Indians in the Everglades of Florida. A few years ago the Government investigated them and found them in a deplorable condition. This is like the item for support and civilization of all the other Indians in the United States, and while it may be subject to a point of order, I hope the point of order will not be made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a few years ago we made an appropriation of $10,000 at the request of somebody for the support and civilization of the Seminole Indians in Florida. They were not asking for it. The department did not spend the money, because they could find no way of using it. That appropriation was reappropriated once or twice I believe. They sent a man down finally to see if there was not some excuse upon which they could spend this money. The Seminole Indians were in fairly good shape. They do a lot of work for tourists and earn something in various other ways. Of course they are not millionaires—they have to work for a living—but in some way they have been getting along for many years without difficulty until some bright genius in the House or in the Indian Office suggested that we ought to support and civilize them. Then we appropriated for their support and civilization; but we have found no method of spending the money in behalf of those Indians, and they come in now with an appropriation to have us buy them land in Florida. Why, there is more land in Florida than anybody wants that they can get on—land that is not made use of and where they will not be interfered with. But the only way the department has found to make use of this appropriation to support and civilize the Indians, after an investigation, is to purchase land for them.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Has the gentleman overlooked the fact that they spent $2,000 of it for salary?

Mr. MANN. The first year they did not spend anything and the second year I think they did not spend anything, although I am not sure about that. Then they employed some agent to go down there and find some excuse for spending the money, and they paid him several thousand dollars in salary. They never have spent a dollar for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. MILLER. I notice an item of $12.35 spent for subsistence, and that is the only item in addition to the item for salary and traveling expenses of the agent. Is it possible that that $12.35 went for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. MANN. If they spent $12.35 for subsistence out of the $10,000, it has not been for the Indians, but for the subsistence of the agent in endeavoring to find some excuse for spending money on the Indians. They have never found any excuse yet. I think the Seminole Indians are liable to be self-supporting if the Government will let them alone. We have discovered in the past, in relation to other Indian tribes, that in taking them under our wing and appropriating for them they never become self-supporting. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the word "Florida" go out with the section?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that will go out with the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

IDAHO.

SEC. 5. For support and civilization of Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho, including pay of employees, $30,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I notice several items in this bill for support and civilization of Indians in different States. As I understand, there is no authority of law for any of these appropriations, they are merely gratuities.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The authority is found under the act of 1821, establishing the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and in the act of 1886. The act of 1821 creating the Indian Bureau states what its duties and purposes are, and so forth. This language has been carried for many years, as long as I have known anything about Indian legislation, in these words: "for support and civilization."

Mr. HARRISON. But there is no authority of law for the appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is in the general law creating the bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman thinks that a point of order against it does not lie?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It could not, because the law authorizes the Indian Bureau to control the Indians' property, and authorizes anything that will tend to educate and civilize them.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of testing the question as to whether or not a point of order will lie, I will make the point of order to this paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman's point of order comes too late.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh no: I reserved the point of order. Now I will make it. It has been my idea all the time that this was merely a gratuity, and that all these items were subject to a point of order. I do not care particularly to make it, because I am in favor of the item, but if there is any authority for it it may cut some figure in an amendment that I propose to offer hereafter.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the clerk of the Indian Committee informs me that there is a law that authorizes these appropriations, and I will have it very soon. In the meantime I will call attention to Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 4204, which recites the rule of the House giving the Committee on Indian Affairs jurisdiction of subjects relating to the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that that only gives jurisdiction to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CARTER. I stated that it was a rule of the House, and that I was going to read it to the Chair while the clerk of the committee was getting the law that has been sent for.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, while they are looking up that law I want to say that it seems to me that this is not subject to a point of order; that it is clearly carrying out the policy that was authorized in the statute that created the bureau to handle and support and maintain and civilize the Indian tribes in North America. It seems to me that it comes within that policy and within that statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to hold that it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, as I recall the rule, it devolves upon the committee to show that it is not subject to a point of order, and I was hoping that they would show some law that would authorize this appropriation. I can not understand how there is any law already on the statute book that would allow any future Congress to just donate gratuitously a lot of money to Indians. I do not think there is any treaty that the United States is bound by in regard to it. I do not recall any general law that would say that Congress has the authority, whenever it wants to, to send out a donation of money to these Indians or any other Indians in any place in any State in the United States. It strikes me that it is subject to a point of order and that there is no authority of law for it. Certainly it has not been shown yet.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to section 4204 in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 785, which gives the creation of and the history of the Committee on Indian Affairs:

4204. The creation and history of the Committee on Indian Affairs, section 16 of Rule XI.

The rule gives to the Committee on Indian Affairs jurisdiction of subjects relating "to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor."

Section 16 of Rule XI provides for the reference of subjects relating "to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor; to the Committee on Indian Affairs."

This committee consists of 18 Members and one Delegate.

It was established as a standing committee on December 17, 1821, by a resolution moved by Mr. Samuel Moore, of Pennsylvania, who became its first chairman. The present form of the rule dates from the revision of 1880, as modified by the distribution of the appropriation bills in 1885. The committee may report its appropriation bill at any time.

4205. The Committee on Indian Affairs has a broad jurisdiction of subjects relating to the care, education, and management of the Indians, including the care and allotment of their lands. On December 6, 1888, the resolutions distributing the President's message used this language relating to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, giving to that committee so much "as relates to the care, education, and management of the Indians." This language had been used for a long time in these resolutions, and the committee has exercised a broad jurisdiction as to the care of Indians on the reservations and in the Indian Territory while that reserve existed as a separate Territory, and also as to the care and preservation of Indian lands and the allotment in severalty.

I think that is perfectly clear to show to the House that we have jurisdiction of this matter, and it has been exercised from that time to the present time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The Chair would suggest that the question is not one of jurisdiction. The gentleman from Mississippi raises the question of the right to make the appropriation under the law.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee this question: Do I understand that the gentleman's view is that under existing law the committee has the right to appropriate money for the support and civilization of Indians in any State? The point is it does not limit it to any particular State. For instance, if you write a provision in here for the support and civilization of Indians in Mississippi, that would not be subject to a point of order, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not, because it relates to the care, education, and management of the affairs of the Indians, and it is certainly strong enough to do that.

Mr. MANN. What is the provision of law creating the Indian Office?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have not the original act before me, but I quote from Hinds' Precedents. He makes the statement of what the law is.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that the law authorizes Congress to make an appropriation for support and civilization.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does. There is no question about that.

Mr. MANN. There is a question about it just now which nobody can answer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have read the best authority in the House, Hinds' Precedents.

Mr. MANN. The best authority would be the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the law been produced to show the authority for making this appropriation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is authority in law, and it has never been questioned before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to see the law. The Chair was inclined to believe there was such a law, and yet he is not clear upon the matter. The gentleman from Texas read only from Hinds' Precedents.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the Chair believe that Mr. Hinds would write a book which would be approved by Congress and would put something in it that was not so?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands what the gentleman from Texas read as being the authority of the Committee on Indian Affairs. If there is anything different, the Chair does not understand it. If the gentleman from Texas will be kind enough to send that volume to the Chair, the Chair will be obliged.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to have the act of 1821. I ask unanimous consent to pass this item until we can get the act of 1821.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to pass this temporarily. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment that will be along the line of that appropriation—one that affects the Indians in Mississippi—and I would not like to be barred from offering my amendment by this unanimous consent. I do not want to lose my right——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that would not affect that. The Chair would not like to rule upon this point of order until the matter is thoroughly investigated. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Texas will be granted.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Coeur d'Alenes, in Idaho: For pay of blacksmith, carpenter, and physician, and purchase of medicines (art. 11, agreement ratified Mar. 3, 1891), $3,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, we are reading all of these items, and, of course, they will all be subject to a point of order, if that point of order that is now pending is sustained.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am willing to admit that.

Mr. MILLER. Do I understand that all of these paragraphs are to be returned to?

Mr. HARRISON. Those for the support and civilization of Indians in the various States.

Mr. MILLER. That means a paragraph every few inches of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair is compelled to rule, of course he will rule; but the Chair thinks that this is important enough to pass it over temporarily until he has the authorities.

Mr. HARRISON. I mean only the provisions that relate to the support and civilization of the Indians. They will be in the same attitude as the paragraph now pending.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is only one of that kind. This is for support and education, and not support and civilization. Does the gentleman make the point of order against that?

Mr. HARRISON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to advance to the executive committee of the White Earth Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the annual celebration of said band to be held June 14, 1915, out of the funds belonging to said band.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. Has this appropriation been allowed for several years?

Mr. MILLER. It has been allowed for a great many years.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman tell us what these celebrations are that these appropriations are made for?

Mr. MILLER. I will be very glad to. The Chippewa Indians have one day each year that to them is a very big event. That day is June 14. The members of the various scattered bands throughout the northern part of the State of Minnesota go to the White Earth Reservation, because there most of the Indians are located together, and they have a celebration at that time lasting three days. Some one suggests that the Indians get drunk at this celebration.

There is very close supervision and excellent care exercised to prevent any intoxicating liquors reaching them. This celebration, to the Indians, apparently is of more value than any other one thing that they have. We do not do this, because they pay for it themselves. The thousand dollars is usually utilized in providing food for the visitors. They have games and they have an opportunity to meet and communicate with each other and determine matters of large importance to their interest.

Mr. HARRISON. How many are there in that tribe?

Mr. MILLER. Well, all the Indians in our State except the Sioux Indians, who are over on the western border, belong to the Chippewas of the State of Minnesota. So, while there are several distinct and separate bands, yet there is a general grouping of them all, and their property rights are in common. The general fund in the hands of the United States belongs to all the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, although they comprise several separate and distinct bands. These various bands have large matters in which they are interested, and at this celebration they have an opportunity to meet and talk things over at that time.

Mr. HARRISON. Do all of these Indians take part in this celebration?

Mr. MILLER. All of them—that is, members from the various bands—and it is a kind of home-coming for them all. It gives also an especially fine opportunity to exhibit their wares, products of the soil, showing each other what the various peoples in the different bands are doing. It has a very strong and great educational effect.

Mr. HARRISON. The cost of holding this celebration is quite a large amount, is it not?

Mr. MILLER. Well, it is a thousand dollars.

Mr. HARRISON. I mean generally, for the whole thing. Of course we only appropriate here $1,000.

Mr. MILLER. No; that is about what is expended.

Mr. HARRISON. About all that is expended?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. They may raise a little locally for some local purposes, but that is about what they spend.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the appropriation ought to be passed. I think it is spent in a most beneficial cause, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized so I may ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] a question. The language of this is that the $1,000 appropriated by the bill is "to be paid out of the funds belonging to said band." The only band mentioned is the White Earth Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota. Now, I do not know whether my attention was ever directed to it before; it certainly never occurred to me, and I want to ask if this was the language heretofore employed. As a matter of fact there are no funds belonging to the White Earth Band of Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The language must be sufficient, because it has been paid under such language by the department. They paid it last year.

Mr. MILLER. I am surprised at the comptroller letting it go that way. That should be out of the funds belonging to the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have so construed it.

Mr. MILLER. All right, then, we will let it go.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, is hereby authorized to use for or advance to any individual Chippewa Indian in the State of Minnesota entitled to participate in the permanent fund of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota who is blind, crippled, decrepit, or helpless from old age, disease, or accident, in the aggregate not to exceed one-fourth of the amount which would now be coming to said Indian under a pro rata distribution of said permanent fund: Provided, That any money received hereunder by any member of said tribe or used for his or her benefit shall be deducted from the share of said member in the permanent fund of the said Chippewa Indians in Minnesota to which he or she would be entitled.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 18, after line 19, by adding a new paragraph reading as follows:

"MISSISSIPPI.

"SEC. 9. For the support and civilization of Indians in Mississippi, including the purchase of such lands as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper, $500,000; the said sum to be reimbursable from the funds now to the credit of the Choctaw Tribe of Indians in the Treasury of the United States or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment that it is new legislation and is not authorized and is not germane to anything in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I see the permanent Chairman has just taken the chair. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] was in the chair when a similar point was raised, and they have had that point under advisement and consideration for about an hour and a half. It has not yet been decided. The point that was before the Chair before the present Chairman took his seat was to an item under the heading "Idaho," reading as follows:

For support and civilization of Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho, including pay of employees, $30,000.

I made a point of order to that item, because I did not think there was any authority of law for that appropriation. The Chairman of the Committee, however, stated that it was not subject to a point of order, and that there was authority of law for making the appropriation, holding that under the general law Congress had the right, and he made this assertion in answer to a question I put to him—whether Congress had the right to appropriate money for the support and civilization of Indians in every State in the Union if it wanted to do so. So that question is before the Chair and has not been decided. It is my opinion that Congress has not the authority to gratuitously give money away out of the Treasury of the United States without authority of law. I do not believe that there is any such law upon the statute books that would give the Committee on Indian Affairs the right to bring in a bill here that would give away all the money in the Treasury to Indians of any State in the Union; but the gentlemen of the committee took the opposite view to me, and they say that there is authority of law for the Committee on Indian Affairs to bring in a bill and for Congress to appropriate money to any amount to any Indian in any State in the Union, so that, they having taken that view, I wanted the Indians of my State to be taken care of just the same as other Indians in other States. The only difference between their proposition and mine is that I am not trying to get by this amendment money for Indians in my State out of the Treasury of the United States, but trying to get it where it should be given—out of the funds of the tribe.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. In one moment I will yield to the gentleman. I submit that if it is in order for the committee to bring in a provision for the support and civilization of Indians in Arizona, Idaho, or Oklahoma, and in every other State in the Union, that certainly the amendment is not subject to a point of order that proposes to take care of and support and civilize the Indians in the State of Mississippi, so with these observations I submit the question to the Chair. Did the gentleman from Texas desire to ask me a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. The gentleman is aware that in Idaho the point of order he raised was against the support and civilization of the Fort Hall Indians in Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that those Fort Hall Indians have been recognized as wards of the Government for a good many years? Is it not a fact?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And is it not a fact that your Indians have not been recognized as wards of the Government? Has there ever beeen an appropriation made for them?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to make this suggestion: He understands that while he was absent from the chair a point of order was raised against another item in the bill which may or may not involve the point of order that is now made against this amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I think I can convince the Chair in a moment in relation to this particular amendment if he will hear me.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asked me a question and I did not have opportunity to answer it. I want to answer it. I want to say, in reply to the gentleman's question about the Mississippi Indians, that I notice from the record that in the Sixtieth Congress the gentleman himself on December 2, 1907, introduced a bill in behalf of these Mississippi Choctaws. I notice in the same Congress, on January 29, 1908, the gentleman introduced another bill for these Mississippi Choctaws, evidently thinking that those Indians down there ought to be recognized by the Government. And again in the Sixtieth Congress, on April 13, 1908, he offered another bill for their relief. And I could quote where the gentleman introduced many other bills for their relief.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Well, is it not a fact that each of those resolutions and bills were directed to the point of whether or not they had any right in Oklahoma?

Mr. HARRISON. It was done for the purpose of doing something for them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For those Indians?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; for the Mississippi Indians. And I want to congratulate the gentleman, too, on the magnificent stand he took at that and the magnificent fight he made for four years and more in behalf of those poor Indians down in Mississippi. They are grateful to him. I am only too sorry that the gentleman's efforts and energies did not meet with some reward. I am sorry his help in their behalf is not now employed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman offered a bill similar to the amendment now offered in behalf of the Indians in Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. Pretty nearly. If the gentleman will permit one now, I will soon furnish it.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman furnish the Chair the statute which will show that this amendment is authorized?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the Chair did not understand me to say that I thought the other proposition was not subject to a point of order. I have no law to offer, because I have contended that there was not any law for the United States Government to gratuitously give to the Indians in any State money. But if the Chair is going to hold they can do it in other States, then I certainly want to be put on record as being in favor of the Mississippi Indians getting some money.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to say whether or not the point of order against Idaho was well taken or not, but certainly the point made against the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is well taken, because the present law provides that all the funds which he proposes now to use shall be devoted per capita among the enrolled Indians in Oklahoma. I will read, if the Chair will indulge me, the treaty and act of Congress in regard to that. It is the treaty of July 1, 1903, which was duly negotiated between the duly authorized agents of the Chickasaw Nation and the Federal Government, and approved by Congress and by the general vote of the tribe. In article 365 occurs this provision:

No person whose name does not appear upon the rolls prepared as herein provided shall be entitled to in any manner participate in the distribution of the common property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, and those whose names appear thereon shall participate in the manner set forth in this agreement.

Then, again, in the act of April 26, 1906, we have the following:

That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear upon the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

If the gentleman's amendment did not propose to make payment out of the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes in direct contradiction to this law, I do not know whether it would be in order or not, but it evidently is not in order in face of these two plain provisions of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] offers the amendment which has been reported at the Clerk's desk, and the gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against it that it is not authorized by existing law. The Chair thinks the point of order to be well taken. The Chair finds an authority in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, section 3809, page 544, which he thinks exactly in point. It appears that—

On December 20, 1900, the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration in the Commmittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Clerk had read this paragraph:

"For the support and civilization of the Shebits, Muddy, and other Indians in Southern Utah, $2,500."

Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, of Illinois, made a point of order against the paragraph.

Hon. James A. Tawney, of Minnesota, a former very distinguished Member of this body, was in the chair at the time, and he sustained the point of order made against it. Among other things he said:

The Chair does not understand the claim is made that this appropriation comes within the provisions of either one of those two clauses of section 2 of Rule XXI. It is not claimed that it is made in accordance with any treaty stipulation or existing law; and the latter clause of the paragraph is so general in its terms that it might include other tribes of Indians. The language is, "and other Indians in southern Utah." Not being in accord with treaty stipulations, therefore, and not coming within the other provision of section 2 of the rule, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Chair will state that section 2 of the rule to which he refers is a rule providing for the continuation of appropriations for public works and objects already in progress. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], upon whom the burden rests, has not furnished the Chair with any treaty stipulation or any existing law which would authorize this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Chair a question?

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment certainly can not be held as a continuation of public works and objects already in progress. The Chair understands that there never has been any appropriation heretofore for the purposes proposed by this amendment or anything in relation thereto. In other words, it is an entirely new appropriation.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Chair this question: Does the Chair differentiate this amendment and the law and the rules of the House applicable to it to the provisions along in the bill, especially the one where I made the point of order under the item for the support and civilization of Indians in Idaho? Does he think there is any difference in the two propositions? In other words, the same ruling would apply to both propositions?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair answers that will the Chair allow me to make an observation right there?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the Chair would scarcely hold that on a different state of facts his ruling would be identical with the other ruling. I think the Chair will find, as a matter of fact, that in the Idaho case, where the point of order was submitted a few moments ago by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], under the original organic act creating the Indian Bureau, which was in 1834, while the Indian Bureau was under the War Department, these were regularly enrolled Indians, that a regularly constituted agency was established, and that a regular quota of employees was there engaged in the conduct of the Indian business; so that a point of order in that case would not rest upon the identical state of facts with an amendment similar to the one offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, which proposes to do an entirely new thing, to wit, first, to appropriate for Indians not on the roll; second, to appropriate for Indians not under a regularly organized agency or in any organized service; third, it would amount to the creation of new and additional officers; and, fourth, it differentiates in this, that the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi proposes to divest other Indians of their funds in order to supply his Indians with funds as distinguished from the general obligation which the Federal Government owes to the American Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants it clearly understood that this ruling is confined strictly and alone to the amendment pending before the committee. It has nothing to do with the point of order on the question raised against the Idaho proposition, which, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] states, perhaps rests on an entirely different state of facts.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish the present Chairman had been in the Chair when the original point was up, because I offered this amendment on the decision—whatever it might be—of the Chair in deciding the point of order made with respect to the Idaho item, and I think the Chair ought to rule on the point of order that was first made in the reading of the bill, and ought to decide the point of order that I made to the Idaho item before the point of order is decided on this amendment that I have offered. The present Chairman was not in the chair at that time, but I would call the Chair's attention to the fact that my amendment was offered several pages back under the Idaho item.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at that time.

Mr. HARRISON. I realize that, Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent that the Chair do not rule on my proposition until he has ruled on the pending point that was made some time ago.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very clear to the Chair that in the absence of any treaty stipulation or any existing law this amendment is subject to a point of order, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Chair to recur to the ruling on the other proposition.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I shall object, Mr. Chairman, until we reach the end of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is the place where I would offer my amendment with respect to Indians in Mississippi. I do not want to lose my parliamentary rights. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. This is the place in the bill where I had intended to offer an amendment. My offering an amendment will depend upon the ruling of the Chair on the Idaho proposition, and I ask unanimous consent that my right to offer an amendment at this place go over, pending the decision of the Chair on the other point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to return to this particular portion of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman could offer his amendment at almost any part of the bill—for example, at the place where the Oklahoma items are stated, I assume—and for that reason I feel compelled to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] objects, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Chair think I would have the right to offer an amendment to take care of the Mississippi Indians at any time later on the reading of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not undertake to say as to that.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Chair that it is only fair to us Members from the State of Mississippi that the Chair should rule on the other proposition before we go to the other place, or that we be assured that we will be permitted to do so later on.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me, Mr. Chairman, under section 9 of the bill, under the heading of "Montana," there is an item for the support and civilization of the Indians at Fort Belknap Agency, Mont., including pay of employees.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee, and the Clerk will read.

At this point Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee vacated the chair, which was assumed by Mr. FOSTER.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The Chair is ready to rule on the proposition. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] makes a point of order on the paragraph on page 15, on the words:

SEC. 5. For support and civilization of Indians on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in Idaho, including the pay of employees, $30,000.

The Chair was under the impression that there was a law for these appropriations, but on examining the different statutes with reference to Indian affairs and what he was able to find, with the help of most of those who were interested in the subject, he has not been able to find the law with reference to this matter which gives the right of appropriation.

This matter came up in the House on December 20, 1900, in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and the Hon. James A. Tawney, of Minnesota, at that time was in the chair. Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, made a point of order against the language, "For the support and civilization of the Shebits, Muddy, and other Indians in southern Utah, $2,500." The Chair understands the decision of the Chair has been read, so that it is not necessary to do that again at this time.

Again, an item was offered "For support and civilization of the Yakimas and other Indians," in Oregon, "including pay of employees, $5,000." A point of order was again made by the Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, then a Member of this House, and the point of order was sustained for the same reason. So that with this ruling and without any authority of law, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will not insist upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair has procured all the information he is able to get; he believes he could make no other ruling than the one he has made, and he thinks the regular occupant of the chair during the consideration of this bill—Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee—will fully agree with the temporary occupant of the chair in this matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 15, line 17, after the figures "$30,000," by inserting the following

"Provided, That $100,000 is hereby appropriated for the support and civilization of Indians in Mississippi."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment, as new legislation and not authorized by law. These Indians have not heretofore been under the supervision and control of the Government of the United States and are not wards of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. Do I understand that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] insists upon his point of order to the Idaho item?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I withdraw the point of order which I made.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent that so much of section 5 as has gone out on a point of order may be reinstated in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer it as an amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I offer as an amendment the words printed in lines 15 to 17, inclusive, on page 14.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 15, by inserting after the word "Idaho" the following:

"SEC. 5. For support and civilization of Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho including pay of employees, $30,000."

Mr. HARRISON. I have an amendment to offer to that paragraph, as a proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 15, by inserting, at the end of line 17, the following:

"Provided, That $100,000 is hereby appropriated for the support and civilization of Indians in Mississippi."

Mr. CULLOP. I make a point of order against that.

Mr. FERRIS. I make the point of order that that is new legislation and not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this particular amendment was recently ruled out of the bill on the ground that it was new legislation.

Mr. BORLAND. The further point of order is made that it is not germane.

Mr. FERRIS. The further point that it is an appropriation for a tribe of Indians wholly foreign to the Idaho Indians and wholly foreign to the State of Idaho, to wit, in the State of Mississippi. That is not germane to an Idaho provision or to an appropriation for Idaho Indians. For that reason it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The Chair has just ruled the item that was offered under the heading "Idaho" was not in order and was subject to a point of order. The Chairman sustained the point of order that I made to that item. The ruling of the Chair has been made on that proposition. Now this same item that is not germane to the bill and is subject to a point of order is reoffered. I have made no point of order to it, and under the rules of the House when a provision is incorporated into the bill that is subject to a point of order you may offer an amendment to that provision, and while it would have been subject to a point of order in the original case, it is not subject to a point of order when it is offered as an amendment to a provision that in the first place was itself out of order.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Is not the rule exactly the reverse of what the gentleman from Mississippi has stated? Is it not the rule that if an amendment is offered to a section that would be subject to a point of order, though that section is passed without the point of order being made, if a point of order is made to an amendment which is offered to it, and if the amendment is subject to the point of order, does it not, like a demurrer to an answer, carry it back to the complaint to which the answer is addressed, and is not the demurrer sustained as to both? This provision is subject to a point of order, but none was made to it. The amendment to this provision against which the point of order has been made the Chair has held was subject to a point of order. Therefore the point of order ought to be sustained, not only to this provision, but carried back and sustained to the original provision which it seeks to amend. This, it occurs to me, should be the logical result in such cases. The point of order, like a demurrer, searches the entire record; that is, not only the amendment, but also the provision which it seeks to amend.

Mr. HARRISON. The difference is that while the first provision was subject to a point of order, yet the point of order not being made, under the rules this amendment is in order if it is germane. The question of germaneness is for the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment to the amendment, to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] interposes the point of order that it is not germane. There are a long line of precedents which sustain the Chair in holding that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is not germane. For instance, it has been held that an amendment proposing relief to an individual is not germane to a bill proposing similar relief to another individual; that to a bill proposing the admission of one Territory into the Union an amendment for the admission of another Territory is not germane. The Chair does not think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is germane, and therefore sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CULLOP. As the Chair has now sustained a point of order to the amendment, would not that ruling also carry back the point of order so that it must be sustained to the section which was introduced as an amendment to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order was made against the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand, if the Chair will permit me to state it, that no point of order was made against that, but an amendment was offered to it, and the point of order was made against that. Now, on the same ground that the Chair sustains the point of order to the amendment, ought not the point of order to be sustained against the paragraph which was sought to be amended?

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. If a point of order had been interposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, it would have been sustained, but no point of order was made. The Chair sustains the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] on the ground that it is not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MONTANA.

SEC. 9. For support and civilization of the Indians at Fort Belknap Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $20,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Chair has just sustained the point of order made to the language in the bill for support of civilization of the Indians on authorities which he cited from the fourth volume of Hinds' Precedents. I wish to add to that, because it might be caught some time in the future, a decision rendered by Mr. Olmsted, of Pennsylvania, in the chair on February 21, 1910, found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the second session of the Sixty-first Congress, page 2192, to the same effect. It was a point of order I made in relation to an item for the Florida Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is glad to have the authority.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The Committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea; had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. SMITH of Michigan as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and operation, including repairs of the Milk River irrigation system on the Fort Belknap Reservation, in Montana, $20,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following paragraph:

"For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be or which have been heretofore disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $500,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910."

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, the Indian bills for a number of years have contained items for the irrigation work begun on three Indian reservations in Montana. This amendment is in line with the paragraphs which have always been included in these bills since these great works were begun, seven or eight years ago. The Flathead irrigation project was started in 1908, and at this time there has been expended one million five or six hundred thousand dollars on that project.

Much to my astonishment, and without any reason so far as I have been able to discover, all reference to that project is excluded from this Indian bill this year. It is patent that this appropriation can not go in at any other place. It is an appropriation for the irrigation of Indian lands, and to stop now means the abandonment of the project, which, as I stated, has cost the Government or the Indians a million and a half dollars and has reclaimed something like 40,000 or 50,000 acres of land, and contemplates the reclamation of 70,000 acres of Indian lands, including also 75,000 acres of unallotted white settlers' land.

As I understand, the objection always has been to this project that they are using Indian money for the reclamation of lands settled upon by white people. I wish to state, however, that the reclamation of the unallotted lands is simply incidental to the main project, which is the reclamation of the Indian land. These lands are mixed up; there will be a section belonging to an Indian and the next to it an unallotted section settled upon by some white fellow. It would be manifestly impossible by any system of engineering to construct a project that would irrigate the Indian's land without running the ditch by the land settled upon by the white settler. Of course, the white settler expects to pay his portion of the cost of the project. It will be reimbursed to the Indians and the Indians will reimburse the Government in the final wind-up of the project.

I can not understand just why the Indian Service has omitted this. I can understand why the Indian Committee has not included it in the bill because, as I understand, no estimate for it was made by the Indian Service. I went to the Indian Service, and they stated that the Reclamation Service was going to take care of it. I have positive assurance that the Reclamation Service has no intention of taking care of it, saying that it is an Indian matter. So we are confronted with the prospect of having two bureaus in the department playing battledore and shuttlecock with these projects which have cost so much money and which propose the reclamation of hundreds of thousands of acres of land. It is so manifestly a proper expenditure, and these projects will be so very desirable when completed and it is so utterly absurd to abandon the projects after all that has been expended upon them, that I could not conceive of any reasonable objection to the amendment I have submitted. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to this paragraph by the insertion of certain tables.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any question but that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman if there is any work going on now in reference to the construction for this project of irrigation. On its face the amendment shows that it is for a continuing work.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. STOUT. Oh, yes; Mr. Chairman, the construction is in progress, and they have an unexpended balance of less than $160,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is another reason, Mr. Chairman, why it is not subject to a point of order, and that is the act which provides for the sale of the surplus lands in the Flathead Indian Reservation provides that the proceeds may be used in the construction of irrigation projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to follow in after the one that has just been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, to follow the amendment just adopted, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

"For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the lands of the Indians of the Black Feet Indian Reservation in Montana, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $100,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, this is the same sort of a project as the one upon which we have just voted. The project has been started there and several hundred thousand dollars have been expended. They are now working on that with a force of men.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the continuation of a public work?

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I will simply state that this is reimbursable to the tribal funds.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Montana has completed his statement, I would like to ask him a question or two.

Mr. STOUT. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman how much is the estimated cost of this project.

Mr. STOUT. I think it is approximately $3,000,000.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not $4,000,000?

Mr. STOUT. Perhaps it is.

Mr. MILLER. Four million dollars is the estimated cost of the project, and, as a matter of fact, is it not true it is going to cost over $6,000,000?

Mr. STOUT. Not that I know of.

Mr. MILLER. I can inform the gentleman that that is true. Is it not also a fact that this is being built in what might be called units, a unit having already been completed for the accommodation of the Indians, another unit perhaps can be completed for the exclusive accommodation of the whites, settled on Indian lands, and a third additional unit for the purpose of developing a great water power at that place. Am I not correct in stating the situation?

Mr. STOUT. All of these reclamation projects are pretty much operated in that manner. They attempt to complete one unit, so as to get a portion of the land under cultivation as soon as possible, rather than to wait until the whole project is completed.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not also necessary as an engineering feat, in order to complete this additional unit, that some very extensive engineering works shall be constructed for the purpose of diverting water quite a distance away that it might reach what is now an upland?

Mr. STOUT. That is a project that does not necessarily have to be carried out.

Mr. MILLER. Is not that the remainder of the project which remains to be completed?

Mr. STOUT. Not according to my information.

Mr. MILLER. At least that is a portion of it, I will say to the gentleman; the major portion of it.

Mr. STOUT. That is a part of it, but not all of it by any means.

Mr. MILLER. That region is inhabited exclusively by whites settled on Indian lands.

Mr. STOUT. I am not so informed. If the gentleman has any other information upon it, I will be glad to have it. I am under the impression that Indians reside on that land.

Mr. MILLER. Possibly the word "exclusively" is a little bit too strong. Ninety-eight per cent of the people inhabiting the area to be improved by the additional unit are whites, I think.

Mr. STOUT. I think the gentleman is about 50 per cent too strong yet.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman has any better information than I have, I would be glad to receive it.

Mr. STOUT. I would be glad to hear the gentleman's information.

Mr. MILLER. How much has already been expended on this project?

Mr. STOUT. I will have that here in just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STOUT. I had the information here a moment ago.

Mr. MILLER. I will ask the gentleman if his information is not that the sum is over $2,000,000? Have we not already expended more than $2,000,000?

Mr. STOUT. I think we have; yes.

Mr. MILLER. About $2,000,000 is probably the amount that we have expended. May I ask the gentleman why he does not offer his amendment instead of $100,000 in the sum of $4,000,000, so as to complete the project?

Mr. STOUT. I am trying to get the information the gentleman desires.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think he will find it in the hearings.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Montana if he is not a little modest in only asking $100,000 when he has just gotten an amendment through for $500,000 for the Flathead Indians. I would suggest to him that he modify his amendment and make it $500,000. We have made a good record here to-day in economy by eliminating a few automobiles, and we might just as well appropriate a million or two for these irrigation projects in Montana.

Mr. STOUT. I will say I have talked with the Bureau of Indian Affairs about this, also the Reclamation Service, and that is what they feel will be necessary to carry out an orderly development.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly the officials are prepared to go ahead and complete all the projects immediately, and probably could do it if they had the money.

Mr. STOUT. I would be glad, indeed, if we could appropriate many times this.

Mr. MILLER. I asked the gentleman a question a few moments ago, but his attention was momentarily diverted, and I would like to repeat it. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment asking for $4,000,000 instead of $100,000?

Mr. STOUT. Because I know I could not get it.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman has just gotten the most outrageous sum ever appropriated by this Congress for any project connected with the Indian Service when he received $500,000 without any reason or need for it, no estimate, no plan for expending it, and when a man has hit the trail like that, burned up powder and dust so beautifully and successfully, why not fire off the biggest cannon he has got? He can not tell what that side of the House may drop in his basket.

Mr. STOUT. I am proceeding upon the same line the gentleman from Minnesota would, and am offering this amendment in good faith——

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman did a year ago.

Mr. STOUT. I have only asked for what is absolutely needed for the orderly development of these projects. We do not need a half a million dollars for this project; if we did, I would ask for it. As it is, I am only asking $100,000. That is what is actually needed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I really think the gentleman's modesty has overcome him at the last stretch and that his mind is giving evidence of failure just as he sees the tape in sight. I certainly was in hopes at last Montana would come to the front. I certainly had indulged myself in the fond expectation at this moment this new genius which has arisen would see that the great doors of the Treasury had been opened wide and all the wealth therein contained poured out upon the plains of Montana in order that the poor, suffering handful of Indians and the long-suffering and long-hungry whites might have their places irrigated and their lands made productive and useful; but, Mr. Chairman, at the last moment this great, powerful Gideon has hauled down his flag, thrown away his saber, smashed his lance, and said farewell to the people who sent him here, has forgotten the splendid efforts he so nobly began with, and, instead of asking for $4,000,000 in order that this project might be completed, breathed just a faint gasp and asked, "Please give just $100,000." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to have a vote after the outburst of the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted, for the reason the department did not estimate for this amount. They estimated only $200,000. That was the amount received last year——

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to have the amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BORLAND. Is this money payable in the first instance out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no tribal fund out of which it can be paid.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; none whatever. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted, for the reason, Mr. Chairman, that the white persons in that vicinity will have a greater benefit than the Indians. The department has refused to give more than the amount given, for the reason that these Indians have money out of which this amount can be paid.

They have quite a lot of land and a great deal of timber that is not available at the present time. Consequently these payments will have to be made out of the Treasury of the United States, and we do not think it advisable at the present time to appropriate this great amount of money for that purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In what respect does this proposition differ from the one that was just agreed to in regard to the Flathead Reservation? That was not estimated for by the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was a similar provision, but because we did wrong in that event we should do right this time. That should have been voted down.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There were a few of us here who voted against it, and everybody on that side of the House seems to have voted for it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is entirely wrong. I voted against that and the committee voted against it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It seemed to have gone through by unanimous consent over there.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It did not. I think every member of the committee voted against it. And I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, last year there was included in the Indian appropriation bill three irrigation items for various irrigation projects in the State of Montana, one at Flathead Reservation, $200,000; one at the Blackfeet Reservation, $50,000; and one at the Fort Peck Reservation, $50,000. This year when it came to making up the estimates the department did not ask for any appropriations for these irrigation projects, and the committee did not report any item in the bill for any one of these projects.

This afternoon for nearly three hours this great committee, composed of all the Members of the House, sat here in wise deliberation and succeeded in eliminating from the bill a provision, which the committee had reported, for $15,000 to purchase needed automobiles. For three hours we discussed the advisability of appropriating that $15,000, which the committee had recommended on the advice of the Indian Office and the Department of the Interior. A few moments ago, after a discussion of two or three minutes, the committee agreed to an amendment appropriating $500,000, which the department had not asked for, which the committee had not recommended, and the gentleman in charge of the bill did not even ask for a division on the vote. That is Democratic economy.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In three hours they cut out $15,000, and in three minutes they inserted $500,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not easier to get a vote on these propositions by a separate vote when the bills are reported to the House?

Mr. MANN. That is so. That is the reason I am making these remarks, hoping I can goad the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill into demanding a separate vote on this amendment and getting his side of the House, which, after three hours, eliminated $15,000 that was needed and put in $500,000 which was not asked for, to vote on the proposition.

Mr STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is aware that we are voting against the elimination of the automobile item on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I voted in the affirmative on the amendment for the Flathead Reservation. I move that the vote by which that was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. FERRIS. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. That motion is not in order.

Mr. BORLAND. Why not?

Mr. FERRIS. We have passed the section. The way to reach that is to demand a separate vote at the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to reconsider is not in order in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following paragraph:

"For continuing construction of irrigation systems to irrigate allotted lands of the Indians of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in Montana, including necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $100,000, the same to be reimbursable: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make allotments in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 558), to children on the Fort Peck Reservation who have not received, but who are entitled to, allotments as long as any of the surplus lands within said reservation remain undisposed of, such allotments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the interior may prescribe."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that because it contains legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment on its face says it is a continuation of public work now in progress.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It contains other provisions—one in regard to the children of the Fort Peck Reservation. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, in any event.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is subject to the point of order, and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the employment of "line riders" along the southern and eastern boundaries of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, $1,500.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. May I ask what these "line riders" are?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that this item has been carried in the appropriation bill for many years. A line rider is employed by the Government for the purpose of riding the line in order to keep the cattle of the Indians on their reservations and to keep the outside cattle from intrenching on the Indian reservations. It serves in the place of a fence. I understand recently they have erected fences, and they now ride the fences.

Mr. HARRISON. If they have a fence, what is the necessity for the "line riders"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For the purpose of keeping up the fences and keeping the cattle from the white man's ranches adjoining from breaking down the Indian fences and mixing with the Indians' stock. And I will state to the gentleman further that persons in the West owning adjoining ranches pursue the same policy. They have line riders to separate their stock from those of their neighbors.

Mr. HARRISON. How many line riders are employed in this work?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have two.

Mr. HARRISON. How much do they get?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The amount appropriated was $1,500, and the amount expended under that item was $1,440. As I stated, there are two line riders.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think the title of these men ought to be changed to "fence riders" instead of "line riders"? [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a cow-camp expression, and it is generally known out there, and it has the force and effect of law.

Mr. HARRISON. How much of a line have they got out there? How far do they have to keep that line protected?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Well, it is quite a large reservation. Perhaps the distance is 50 miles around it.

Mr. HARRISON. Are any appropriations made in other States for their line riders?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know of any other reservation where the Indians own a separate part of the reservation on which they have their stock except the Crow Indians. I think there is a fence between the tract of land on which they keep their own stock and the land which they lease to the cattlemen.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a provision here for line riders for other tribes that need to have their lines protected?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think there are none except the Crow Indians. We leave that entirely with the inspectors and agents in charge of the Indians, and if they made it appear to the department that it was necessary the department would probably put it in their estimates, and if they did that we would consider the matter, and if we thought it advisable we would recommend the employment of line riders.

Mr. HARRISON. Two line riders are created here. Can the gentleman state whether or not the department furnishes them with traveling vehicles, either horse drawn or power propelled?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Government furnishes them with horses.

Mr. HARRISON. Could the gentleman tell us how they are maintained?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All the line riders that I know of furnish their own horses at so much per month and take care of their own business.

Mr. HARRISON. I was wondering whether that provision that we passed this morning about automobiles would take care of these two line riders.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi withdraws the reservation of the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States not to exceed the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana, for the purpose of purchasing and caring for cattle for the use of said Indians, to enable them to become self-supporting, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as said Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the chairman of the committee or the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] about this provision? It has not been necessary heretofore to appropriate this money, has it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is needed, and it is from their own funds. It is needed for the purpose set forth here—for the purchase and care of cattle. They own the grass on a very valuable range, and the best way of sustaining these Indians is to let them raise stock. They can do that better than they can farm. It is the best arrangement that can be made and the best use of the money and of their lands that can be devised. We have found in all this Montana and northern country that the Indians who are engaged in stock raising are more successful than they could be if engaged in any other occupation.

Mr. HARRISON. The bill says it is reimbursable. Is that the law now, that it is reimbursable?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is their own fund. They withdraw that much of their own fund from the Treasury. It is good legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any moneys which may be due from the Indians of the Fort Belknap Reservation, State of Montana, and unpaid on June 1, 1915, for property purchased under the provisions of the sections of the Indian appropriation acts approved April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., pp. 70–83), appropriating the sum of $25,000 for the purchase of implements and other equipment for said Indians, under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior might prescribe for the repayment by the Indians to the United States of the sum so expended, and March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., pp. 781–795), authorizing the use of the repayments made by the Indians until June 1, 1915, shall be collected as soon thereafter as is practicable, and any moneys heretofore or hereafter repaid by the Indians shall be available for reexpenditure under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for its repayment to the United States in the purchase of seeds, live stock, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as may be deemed proper in promoting the civilization and support of said Indians until June 30, 1925.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire specifically as to the paragraph contained on page 21, authorizing the reexpenditure of all the moneys that the Indians have either paid in the past or will pay in the future which are to be utilized for the purchase of seeds, live stock, vehicles, and so forth, until the year 1925. Why not make it in perpetuity? If you are going to extend it until 1925, why not extend it for a century?

Mr. CARTER. Well, it is hoped by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that by 1925 they will be able to pay it back.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no provision here directing that it shall be paid back. It is a mandatory provision that the money shall be utilized for this specific purpose.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps I was unfortunate in the language I used. I meant that it might be used for other purposes at that time, and that there might be a settlement of the affair by 1925.

Mr. STAFFORD. All the money is going to be utilized or may be utilized until 1925.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any question in his mind that if the money is available it will be utilized in the next 10 years?

Mr. CARTER. I think it will be.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there will not be any money left to be used in 1925.

Mr. CARTER. It will be used up until 1925.

Mr. STAFFORD. If you give authority to the commissioner to use it, it will certainly be used; but what is the need of providing such a long time?

Mr. CARTER. It is one of these reimbursable, revolving appropriations, and there is merely an arbitrary time set for the settlement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the committee at any time made one of these revolving appropriations for so long as 10 years?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; it is in almost all of them now—until 1925.

Mr. BORLAND. The revolving plan has never been a success.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is very bad practice to have a certain amount of money turned over to an official of the Government for use extending over a long period of time. Therefore I make a point of order against the paragraph. I have no objection to having the paragraph reoffered down to the word "practicable," in line 3 on page 21.

Mr. MANN. Why not make your point of order to the language following that?

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order to the language after the word "practicable," in line 3, page 21, down to the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BORLAND. It seems to me that the word "thereafter," in line 3, page 21, should be "hereafter."

Mr. CARTER. That has been stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. MILLER. The period of collection begins June 1, 1915, which is in the future, and "thereafter" relates to that time.

Mr. MANN. It is to extend the time of payment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the language is correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEBRASKA.

SEC. 10. For support and education of 375 Indian pupils at the Indian School at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $60,000; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $65,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 10, on page 21, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For support and education of 400 pupils at the Genoa Indian School, at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $68,800; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, this amendment increases the authorization from 375 pupils to 400 pupils. This was recommended by the department. The Genoa School has a capacity of 400 pupils. Some 150 pupils are now sent across the country from Genoa territory to Carlisle to be educated at that institution, at a per capita expense of something like $189, whereas the appropriation in this bill for the Genoa School is $160 per capita. I want to call attention to the fact that out of the 25 Indian schools that are appropriated for in this bill, this school and one in Arizona have the lowest per capita appropriation in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to his figures. If he will look at page 201 of the hearings, just printed, he will see a statement made a few days ago and will find that the cost per capita on enrollment is $184.51 and the cost on average attendance is $211.98.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is true, Mr. Chairman; but I want to call attention to the fact that this bill carries a $60,000 appropriation to educate 375 pupils, and $60,000 divided by the number of pupils gives $160 per capita, and that is the lowest per capita appropriation carried in this bill for any school in the United States, except the one in Arizona that has 700 pupils, and therefore can stand a lower per capita appropriation. It not only has 700 pupils in attendance, but it is in a warm climate, where no fuel is required, and can be operated at a much less expense than it can in Nebraska.

I want to call attention to a comparison of the actual rate per capita of appropriation carried in this bill for support of these schools: Genoa, Nebr., per capita, $160; Fort Mojave, $175; Phoenix, Ariz., $158; Truxton Canyon, $180; Riverside, Cal., $166; Fort Bidwell, $164; Greenville, $184; Lawrence, Kans., with 750 pupils, $172; Flandreau, S. Dak., $168; Pierre, S. Dak., $175; Rapid City, $195; Carlisle, Pa., $189; Albuquerque, N. Mex., $172; and so on down the list, not a single one of them receiving as small a per capita appropriation as does Genoa, except the one noted at Phoenix, Ariz.

I maintain that it is a mistake on the part of the committee, and I believe they will recognize it at once when they understand and appreciate the force of the facts I have stated in regard to the comparison of the appropriations.

I want to call attention to the fact that we are sending out of Nebraska to Carlisle 58 pupils to be educated at $189 per capita, transporting them across the country at an expense of $50 or $75 a head, and paying $189, whereas the appropriation for Genoa is only $160.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. If the amendment offered by the gentleman is agreed to and the appropriation made, has the gentleman thought of insisting on reducing the appropriation for the Carlisle school?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I have; and I propose to offer an amendment to prevent the transportation of pupils from the territory of other schools to the Indian school at Carlisle.

Mr. MADDEN. So that if the amendment of the gentleman is adopted the appropriation, as a whole, will not be larger, owing to the adoption of his amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Well, that depends upon whether my amendment with reference to the Carlisle school is adopted. We are paying a per capita for Carlisle of $189.

Mr. MADDEN. It would not do to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska and then continue the appropriation at the same figure for the Carlisle school?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. No; I think the appropriation should be reduced. The pupils attending there from other territory contiguous to other schools ought to be compelled to attend their own schools. If your child does not care to attend the school in your school district, he can not be transported at the public expense to some other district and attend without paying tuition and traveling expenses.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman inform the House as to the character of the instruction at Genoa, whether the character of the instruction is substantially that given at Carlisle, or about the same.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It is; the only difference being that at Carlisle they have a football team, and I am of the opinion that the work in Genoa is infinitely better suited to the western Indian than the work in Carlisle. It seems preposterous to transport an Indian out of his environment and educate him in a foreign environment, as we are educating them in Carlisle.

Do you know that the institution at Carlisle has but 250 pupils who are legitimately entitled to go there? It has something like 141 from the State of New York, 54 from North Carolina, and perhaps a few more from other localities, making about 250 pupils that are legitimately within the territory of the Carlisle School. The Government of the United States has been paying tens of thousands of dollars for transporting pupils from the most isolated localities in the United States to Carlisle. For instance, there are 4 from Arizona, and it must cost $100 per capita to take them to Carlisle. There are 16 from California, 10 from Idaho, and so on down through the list scattered through the States in which Indians live. I think it is economic waste for us to transport pupils out of the neighborhood of a good school clear across the country to Carlisle, and then make a larger appropriation for that institution than we do for the school at the Indians' dooryard. The Genoa School is equal in every particular to the Carlisle School, and it gives those boys the kind of education they ought to have. It teaches them how to farm in the most approved manner.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman where the pupils at this Genoa School come from?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I have the list here. Two hundred and fifty of them approximately come from Nebraska. The others are scattered around in different parts of the country. For example, 2 come from Maine. Can you conceive of anything more idiotic than that, excepting the 16 that go from California to Carlisle? I do not know how we happened to get those 2 from Maine, but I know that it is bad practice and ought not to be allowed. We ought not to tolerate pupils being transported from Maine to Nebraska and from California to Carlisle. What I am trying to do is to amend this bill so that this school, which is located right in the heart of four Indian tribes, will receive proper treatment. The pupils do not have to travel to exceed five or six hours on a railroad train, not much more than a day's travel by wagon, to get to this school. It is practically a reservation school, and we have enough Indians there to fill it to its capacity under proper stimulation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not this a nonreservation school?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It is a nonreservation school, but it is located midway between four Indian tribes; 4,000 Indians live within not to exceed five hours travel of it. Every Indian in Nebraska that attends this school can do so with less than $5 expense for traveling expenses.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that for a number of years not only the department but the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House has been endeavoring to build up boarding schools and day schools on the reservation, and has stood out against building any more nonreservation schools or adding to the pupils in those schools?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The committee has, and I am in accord with that idea. I believe that the Indians of this country should be educated at home on their own reservations where it is possible to do so, and as long as these nonreservation schools are maintained I insist they should be patronized by the Indians that are nearest to them. This amendment I am offering here is only justice to the Genoa School. It has been discriminated against, not intentionally, because I know that this committee did not intend to do it, I know they overlooked these facts. This school is entitled to as much per capita as any other nonreservation school, and it has not had as much by from $10 to $45 as these other schools that do the same character of work.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman aware of the fact that if this bill becomes a law in the form in which it passed this committee up to this point, there can not be expended of the money that we have appropriated this year to exceed $167 per capita, because we have eliminated on a point of order the provision that allows any more than that amount?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. You mean we can not under the law appropriate any more than $167 per capita?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This bill provides that. The item that heretofore has permitted an expenditure to exceed that amount went out on a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. My amendment falls within that rule, because I have not asked in my amendment for even the amount the Indian Office has asked for. I have asked for $167 per capita, the standard amount that has been fixed for many years by the Indian Committee, and I think the school is entitled to $167 per capita when all of the other schools in the United States have that amount or more, excepting the one in Arizona to which I have referred.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What does the gentleman claim has been expended at Genoa?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The amount appropriated this year for the support of the school is $60,000, carried in this bill, and the amount carried in the bill last year for support was $60,000, or $160 per capita.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The statement made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says the per capita cost based on enrollment was $181.54, while the cost per capita based on average attendance was $211.98.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; but that takes into account the cost of transportation and the transportation of the food supplies and other items that are paid out of the general fund that is appropriated in the beginning of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I say to the gentleman the calculations are based upon the same figures that are used in arriving at the cost at other schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. The committee did something I think it did not intend to do. It did not treat the Nebraska school as it did the other schools. It did not follow the recommendations of the Indian Office in making the appropriation, but instead they cut it down from $68,800, the total amount called for in the Indian Office, to $60,000 in the bill, and my amendment simply increases the amount for the support of the superintendent and the school to $68,880, or $167 per capita, which is many dollars below the per capita appropriation for the Rapid City School, which is $195 per capita.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Where does the gentleman get the figures?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I get them from the actual amount appropriated; $48,500 carried in this bill for the Rapid City School, which has 250 pupils in attendance, and you can perform the calculation and will find it is $195 per capita, and when you take the Pierre School, with $43,750, with 250 pupils in attendance, you have $175 per capita. Now, I only ask $167 per capita for this Genoa School.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If there is any difference in the cost of maintenance of these schools, the gentleman, of course, appreciates that where there are 400 pupils you expect the amount to be less than if there were 200 pupils or 250.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I wish to call attention to the fact that down here at the Carlisle School, where there are something like 700 pupils, the per capita appropriation for support is $189, and at the Haskell Institute, where there are 750 pupils, the per capita appropriation is $172, and in every one of the large schools their per capita appropriation is much in excess of that which is appropriated for the Genoa School, and I believe the committee, in justice to me and to this school, ought to concede this amendment, because I think it is clear it was an error on the part of the committee in reducing the commissioner's estimate to this amount. I have not had opportunity to call their attention to it——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is not the amount appropriated this year in this bill the same amount that was appropriated last year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It is exactly the same, but I made no protest last year because they appropriated $24,000 for some extra buildings which were needed on the grounds.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of the buildings.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The amount was just the same. I did not call the attention of the committee to it, but I feel this year, in justice to the school, I ought to do so.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has proposed an increase in the number. Does the superintendent out there claim that he can not maintain the school unless he gets the money?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I do not know what he claims in regard to that, but he evidently does, or the department would not recommend it be increased to 400.

Mr. MANN. This increase was made before the school commenced operation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. No; the department recommended the number be increased to 400 in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I am speaking of the amount we appropriated for the maintenance of the school. Is there any information to show that the amount of $60,000 appropriated is not sufficient to maintain the school as far as the school is concerned?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Why, the more money the school has the better work it can do.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that necessarily follows; sometimes they do less work——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted, for the reason we have refused in every instance in this bill to enlarge the number of pupils in any nonreservation school, and this amendment would enlarge the number from 375 to 400, and I find the total average attendance in this school at Genoa was only 340; and there is no necessity why it should be enlarged to 400 when they only have an average attendance of 340. We provide for the 375 pupils the same sum of money we appropriated last year. We give them exactly the same amount for the same number of students, and unless the gentleman can state to us—and they have failed to do it when we had the hearing—that it is necessary for them to have more money than last year, there is no necessity for enacting the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Does not the gentleman think that this school is entitled to an appropriation of $167 per capita for 375, then?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not, because it is a nonreservation school and because we have religiously opposed raising the number of students in nonreservation schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The gentleman does not understand my question. You have appropriated more than $167 for every single one of these schools save one. Now, the question I am putting to you is, Do you not favor appropriating at least the standard amount you have agreed upon, namely, $167 per capita, for this school, upon the enrollment, as you claim, of 375?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We followed the estimates made by the department for 400 pupils, and consequent reduction to this amount, like the amount the committee has allowed you; and that is in keeping and on all fours with the amounts allowed all other nonreservation schools, and we could not make any difference between yours and those in other States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I do not see how you can claim you have treated this school exactly as you have other schools, when the appropriation is $60,000 for 375 pupils. Now, in every single one of these other schools the figures are all the way from that up to $195 per capita. Now, all I ask is that this school be appropriated for at the standard rate of $167 per capita, and I think it is entitled to have that apropriation in all justice and fairness.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will you not admit that some schools in some States, owing to climatic conditions, and so forth, cost more than schools in other States, and our estimates must be based on the country, what it costs to get the pupils there, and the surroundings of the schools, what it has cost heretofore, and so forth? We have to base our estimates upon that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The climatic conditions have a great deal to do with it. At Chilocco, Okla., they have 500 pupils, and the rate in this bill is $172 per capita. That school is situated in a warm climate, where they hardly ever have to buy any coal, and the rate is $160 at Genoa, Nebr., which is located in a cold climate. Take every school appropriated for in this bill and it is the same way.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think it would be possible for the committee to guess what it should cost per capita as against the estimates of the superintendents who have charge of the schools, and the department, which sends inspectors every few months to inspect these schools? All the reports they have are certainly much better than anything we could do, and they are better informed than we are.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Certainly not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then should we not be compelled to take their figures?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. You do not take their figures. That is what I am protesting about. If you had taken the estimates of the Indian Department in this matter, I would not protest. But you did not do that. They estimated $68,800 for support, and you have only given us $60,000. It is the only school in the whole list that you have cut. There is no justification for that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They estimated for 400 pupils——

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. When I make my statement I will. That estimate was made for 400 pupils, and not for 375. We refused to increase from 375 to 400 because we had refused in every other nonreservation school, and that is the difference between the statement the gentleman has made and the estimates made by the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to ask the gentleman from Nebraska a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Nebraska a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the appropriation cut all these schools the same as they did Nebraska, or did they just pick Nebraska?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. If they had cut them all, I would have no objection to make. I did not ask for buildings or repairs in this amendment. I simply asked for what I thought was just and right as compared with appropriations for other schools.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman said the cost per capita at the Chilocco School, in Oklahoma, was over $172. From the report it says that the per capita cost is $157, based on the attendance. I call your attention to page 240 of the hearings.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. But I call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the fact that this bill carries $86,250 for the Chilocco School, for the support of the school and the superintendent. Now, there are 500 pupils there, and $86,250 divided by 500 gives a per capita appropriation of $170. That is $170 per capita carried in this bill for the support of the Chilocco School.

Mr. CARTER. But the gentleman must remember that the superintendent of the Chilocco Agency also has other Indians to look after on the reservation. That is the cause of that expense. The actual cost per capita for maintaining the school, according to this statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs given to us on page 240 of the hearings, is $157, based on average attendance; $133 on enrollment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this item and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on this item and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is recognized.

Mr. CARTER. I notice, further, Mr. Chairman, that the statement given by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the per capita cost of the school at Genoa is $211.98.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That takes in transportation of children and the transportation of food supplies and other items of that kind and character that are paid out of a general fund, and not out of the appropriation per capita that is carried in this bill.

Mr. CARTER. But it does cost $211.98 per capita.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is figured on another basis and does not affect my comparisons in the least. The figures I give for each school are based on the same facts.

Mr. CARTER. I was just giving the figures furnished by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and those are all the figures we could go upon.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understood that what the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] is complaining about is that the appropriation for the Genoa School in Nebraska is on the basis of $160 per pupil, whereas all the other schools are on a higher basis.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is it exactly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And that it would be impossible to maintain this school if those figures as to the per capita cost were correct. That is, that there would not be money enough.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I do not know that it would be impossible, but——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They say here that the per capita cost was $180 on the enrollment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If they have only $160, how have they been able to spend $180 per capita?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The school has an income of something like $9,000 from its farm and its other items that enter into that per capita cost, which fact does not need to figure in this argument at all, because I am simply taking the amounts that are carried in this bill for the support of each school, and it is perfectly easy to figure. Here is Albuquerque, N. Mex., with an appropriation of $68,600 for the support of 400 pupils, which figures out exactly $173 per capita. Now, I figured every school on the same basis precisely, and every school has a larger per capita appropriation than the Genoa School, excepting one, in Arizona.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What was the appropriation for Genoa last year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It was $160 per capita last year. I wish to refer to the chairman of the committee, who made the statement that they followed out the recommendations of the department. In this particular case the committee did not follow the recommendations of the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As to per capita cost?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; as to the per capita, and when you take $60,000 appropriated and divide it by 375, you have $160 per capita. It is as plain as day.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. CARTER. I have the floor, I think. I will yield in a moment. I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] to the fact that the commissioner also states that the average attendance at the Genoa school last year was only 340 pupils.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And the enrollment was 397.

Mr. CARTER. The per capita could not be based on the enrollment. It must have been based on the average attendance.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. So that you should divide the $60,000 by 340 instead of dividing it by 375 or 397. You should divide it by the average attendance of pupils.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Would not the same relative result be reached, when I did the same thing for every school in the United States?

Mr. CARTER. The difficulty with other Indian schools is that at many of them they have agencies and the reservation is looked after along with the school, and those expenses enter into the expenses of the agency; so that when the per capita cost for average attendance is made up it is made up on the actual expenses of the school and not those expenses which are incurred for supervising the reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I know that is true, but it really has nothing to do with the bald, bare fact that you have carried the smallest per capita appropriation in this bill for Genoa of any other school except the one at Phoenix, Ariz.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska) there were—ayes 24, noes 19.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his demand for tellers, will the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. MANN. I made the point to save the vote.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I withdraw the demand for tellers.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of no quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. Sixty-three Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, had come to no resolution thereon.

PROHIBITION.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to object to that request, but I would like to secure the appointment of a conference committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. No other request can be considered until that is disposed of. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, owing to illness in my family I was called away from the House to Philadelphia on the evening of December 22, just prior to the vote on the resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution for national prohibition. I had come to Washington that morning for the express purpose of voting on that amendment, but the call from my family took me away before I could arrange a pair. This is the first opportunity I have had since then to address the House, and I wish to say that had I been present when the vote was taken I would have voted against the proposed amendment.

The President of the United States has stated that the liquor question is a State issue. Secretary Bryan, in the Commoner, has taken a similar stand. Former President Taft recently stated that, after mature reflection, he felt that the present form of government in the United States would be endangered unless this matter were left to the people in the different States. Leading men of all parties have taken this view.

For my own part I feel that the question belongs to the States. The police power to enforce any law that is passed should accompany the law itself. Most of the police powers now invested in the States would have to be transferred to the Government to insure a successful enforcement of the law that it proposed, and inasmuch as the people of the States can decide the question to suit themselves and have the facilities for enforcing their will under home rule there is no reason why the Government should adopt such an expedient as has been proposed. Had I been present, as I had expected and desired to be when the vote was taken, I would have voted against the resolution.

AMERICAN SEAMEN IN THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has sent back to the House what we call the seamen's bill, having disagreed to the amendments made to the House and has appointed a committee of conference. I would ask that the Chair appoint a conference committee on behalf of the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. HARDY, Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, and Mr. CURRY.

THE MANUAL AND DIGEST.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 694.

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 copies of the Digest and Manual of Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the third session of the Sixty-third Congress, the same to be bound and distributed under the direction of the Clerk and Doorkeeper of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

INLAND WATERWAYS ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.

The Speaker laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

SAN FRANCISCO, December 18, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We desire to invite through you the House of Representatives, or such Members of it as may be present in California during President Wilson's visit, to attend the Inland Waterways Congress of California, which will be in session at the Exposition Auditorium in this city March 25, 26, and 27.

This will be the most important convention ever held on the Pacific coast, and we are desirous of dealing with various phases of the subject regarding the national aspect toward the improvement of inland waterways, this being more important now since the opening of the Panama Canal.

We hope to have you present on that occasion, and if you are we hope to have an address from you.

President Wilson and the members of his Cabinet have been invited. The governors of all the States west of the Rocky Mountains will be in attendance. Over 1,000 representative men of California will be in attendance as delegates.

Hoping that there will be a large delegation from the House of Representatives, and appreciating anything you can do to further this movement, we remain,

Yours, very truly,

INLAND WATERWAYS ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA,
By ISIDOR JACOBS,
Chairman Committee on Arrangements.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that will be referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it ought to be referred to the Inland Waterways Commission.

Mr. MOORE. We should be happy to cooperate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts very much whether the document needs a reference; it is simply an invitation to the House; but if it goes anywhere it should go to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, and the Chair will so refer it.

MANUFACTURE OF MUNITIONS OF WAR.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Government manufacture of munitions of war.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, is there anything in the gentleman's extension of remarks in relation to the foreign situation?

Mr. CROSSER. Not at all.

Mr. MADDEN. It is purely domestic?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I think I will object. They now have that matter before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House.

Mr. CROSSER. Oh, no; my remarks refer to the Government manufacture.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 6, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of provision for general deficiency appropriation bill, authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to credit in the accounts of Edwards J. Williams, disbursing officer, the sum of $83.19, disallowed him on the books of the Treasury (H. Doc. No. 1471); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. Letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report and plans prepared by the superintendent of irrigation for district No. 1, in the Indian Service, on provisions for water supply for 40 acres of each Indian allotment on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash. (H. Doc. No. 1472); to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

3. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication of the chairman of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, submitting an urgent estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for the expenses of the commission (H. Doc. No. 1473); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HINDS, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (S. 4725) providing for the establishment of a lobster-rearing station at some suitable point on the Atlantic coast, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1258), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20499) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Metropolis, Ill., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1259), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CARAWAY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13226) prohibiting the interment of the body of any person in the cemetery known as the Cemetery of the White's Tabernacle, No. 39, of the Ancient United Order of the Sons and Daughters, Brethren and Sisters of Moses, in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1260), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 329) to provide for the detail of an officer of the Army for duty with the Panama-California Exposition, San Diego, Cal., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1257), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ADAIR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20562) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1261), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 6, 1915.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for all the spirit of sympathy and helpfulness that has been shown by the people of this great Nation for those who are in the conflict of war. The spirit of brotherhood still abides with us. Down in the depths of the human heart Thou hast kept alive the divine passion. We pray Thee to teach us the way of largest usefulness and of divinest service for all mankind. May we not be content with our own peace or prosperity. May we seek the welfare of universal man. Cleanse us from our national sins that we shall be enabled to teach others the way of God and restore unto them the joy of Thy great salvation. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

ISAAC STEPHENSON, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RENT OF BUILDINGS, RALEIGH, N. C. (S. DOC. NO. 678).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, which will be read.

The communication was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1915.

The President of the Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to request that the following item be included in the urgent deficiency bill:

Raleigh, N. C., rent of buildings.

For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials, and moving expenses incident thereto.. $1,200

This request is made necessary by virtue of the fact that it will be impossible to move into the new quarters until about February 1, 1915, and the balance of the appropriation for "Rent of temporary quarters," now available, is only sufficient to pay the rent up to the middle of November last. The amount asked for above will be necessary to pay for the rent of quarters to February 1, 1915, or a few days thereafter, as the case may be.

The delay incident to the completion of this project is brought about by unforeseen conditions, which have postponed the date on which the new quarters would have been ready for occupation.

Respectfully,

BYRON R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication relates to the urgent deficiency bill, and the same will be referred to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6454) to authorize the Government Exhibit Board for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to install any part or parts of the Government exhibit at the said exposition either in the exhibit palaces of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. or in the Government building at said exposition.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. HARDY, Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, and Mr. CURRY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2824) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6039) for the coinage of certain gold and silver coins in commemoration of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6106) validating locations of deposits of phosphate rock heretofore made in good faith under the placer-mining laws of the United States, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 58) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to present the bell of the late U. S. S. Princeton to the borough of Princeton, N. J., with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 11318. An act authorizing the sale of lands in Lyman County, S. Dak.;

H. R. 16738. An act to provide for the payment of certain moneys to school districts in Oklahoma;

H. R. 17168. An act to authorize the North Alabama Traction Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Decatur, Ala.;

H. R. 17894. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911;

H. R. 17971. An act for securing the uniform grading of grain, preventing deception in transactions in grain, and regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes;

H. R. 18172. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Seymour, Ind.; and

H. R. 19424. An act to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge at St. Louis, Mo.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 13698) for the relief of Charles A. Coulson, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented petitions of sundry citizens of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURTON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented petitions of 120 citizens of Holt County, of 80 citizens of Bennington, of 20 citizens of Naper, and of sundry citizens of Dodge County and of Smithfield and Bertrand, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Typotheta-Franklin Association, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the discontinuance of stamped envelopes by the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BRISTOW presented petitions of sundry citizens of Hanover, Atchison, and Wamego, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lawrence, Kans., praying for national prohibition and also to grant the right of suffrage to women, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Clay Center and Bird City, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the exclusion of anti-Catholic publications from the mail, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SHIVELY presented petitions of Local Division No. 221, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Huntington; of Local Lodge No. 111, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Mattoon; of Inland City Lodge, No. 374, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Indianapolis; and of Local Division No. 537, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Fort Wayne, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the extension of the boiler-inspection laws, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. THOMPSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Marion and McPherson Counties, and of Vassar, Russell, and Atchison, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McLEAN presented memorials of the Business Men's Association of Hartford, of the Manufacturers' Association of Hartford County, and of the Connecticut State Board of Trade, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 7157) granting an increase of pension to Thomas T. Jones (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 7158) granting a pension to Lydia A. Muma (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 7159) granting a pension to Martha J. Tumbleson; and

A bill (S. 7160) granting a pension to Anna E. Babbitt; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 7161) granting an increase of pension to David Cox;

A bill (S. 7162) granting an increase of pension to George W. Shoop; and

A bill (S. 7163) granting an increase of pension to Eliza M. Watkins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 7164) granting a pension to Oliver P. Marsh;

A bill (S. 7165) granting a pension to Fred Lamke;

A bill (S. 7166) granting an increase of pension to Luther D. Whitten;

A bill (S. 7167) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Randolph;

A bill (S. 7168) granting an increase of pension to Charles Updegraff;

A bill (S. 7169) granting an increase of pension to Lee Jenkins;

A bill (S. 7170) granting an increase of pension to Henry Mandler;

A bill (S. 7171) granting an increase of pension to Richard Dobson;

A bill (S. 7172) granting an increase of pension to Robert O. Jones;

A bill (S. 7173) granting an increase of pension to Miles Matthews;

A bill (S. 7174) granting an increase of pension to Eli W. Adams;

A bill (S. 7175) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Dearborn; and

A bill (S. 7176) granting a pension to Sarah L. Hammerton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 7177) granting an increase of pension to Theresa L. Breese (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 7178) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to Bluff City, Sullivan County, Tenn., two brass cannon with carriage; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,200,000 for compensation to assistant postmasters at first and second class post offices, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19906), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. OVERMAN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the omnibus claims bill (H. R. 8846), which I ask may be properly referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina will be printed and lie on the table to be taken up in connection with the bill to which it refers.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill (H. R. 20189), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit sundry proposed amendments to the so-called shipping bill (S. 6856), which I desire shall be read, printed, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such will be the order, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

The amendments were read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

Add a new section to the bill, as follows:

"SEC. —. That the ships purchased, chartered, or leased under the provisions of this act shall be officered by American citizens in conformity with existing laws, and the crew shall be composed of at least one-half citizens of the United States."

Add a new section to the bill, as follows:

"SEC. —. That all ships purchased, chartered, or leased under the provisions of this act, if not constructed with particular reference to prompt and economical conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers, shall be so changed before being put into the service, in accordance with plans and specifications prepared by the Secretary of the Navy, and they shall be made of sufficient strength and stability to carry and sustain the working and operation of at least four effective rifled cannon of a caliber of not less than 6 inches, and shall be made of the highest rating known to maritime commerce. Before being accepted for service they shall be thoroughly inspected by a competent naval officer or constructor detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, and such officer shall report in writing to the Secretary of the Navy who shall transmit said report to the President; and no such vessels not approved by the Secretary of the Navy as suitable for the service required shall be purchased, chartered, or leased by the Government."

Add a new section to the bill, as follows:

"SEC. —. That each said vessel shall take as cadets or apprentices one American-born boy under 21 years of age for each 1,000 tons gross register, and one for each majority fraction thereof, who shall be educated in the duties of seamanship, rank as petty officers, and receive such pay for their services as may be reasonable."

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to pay for ocean mail service, under the act of March 3, 1891, in vessels of the second class on routes to South America south of the Equator to the Philippines, to Japan, to China, and to Australasia at a rate not exceeding $4 per mile on the outward voyage by the shortest practicable routes, and in vessels of the third class on said routes at a rate not exceeding $2 per mile on the outward voyage by the shortest practicable routes: Provided, That, subject to the foregoing provisions, every contract hereunder shall be awarded to that responsible bidder who will contract, under penalties prescribed by the Postmaster General, for the highest running speed between the points named in the contract."

Amend the title of the bill to read as follows:

"A bill to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce.'"

ANNIVERSARY OF BATTLE OF NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution which I ask be ordered printed and go over under the rule until to-morrow morning, at which time I shall ask the permission of the Senate to address the Senate briefly in connection with the resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 35) in relation to the celebration by the State of Louisiana of the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana for the year 1914 provided by act No. 144 for a fitting celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans, intrusting the execution of the provisions of said act to the Louisiana Historical Society; and

Whereas, in accordance with said act, invitations have been extended to the respective presiding officers and the Members of the Congress of the United States to attend these commemorative exercises, to be held in the city of New Orleans on January 8, 9, 10, 1915: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States acknowledges with pleasure the receipt of said invitations and appreciates the courtesy thus extended; be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States commends the patriotic spirit that has prompted the people of Louisiana to celebrate properly the great victory achieved on the field of Chalmette by American arms under the leadership of Andrew Jackson, and rejoices in the heroic valor displayed by friend and foe alike in that memorable conflict; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the governor of Louisiana, the mayor of New Orleans, and the Louisiana Historical Society.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce an appeal to Congress from the steamship companies of Puget Sound and Alaska, asking for aids to navigation in compliance with the recommendations of the Secretary of Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the request of the Senator from Oregon will be complied with. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN APPEAL TO CONGRESS FROM THE STEAMSHIP COMPANIES OF PUGET SOUND AND ALASKA.

[An argument for wire-drag survey of Alaskan waters, suitable steamships for United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, charting Alaskan watercourses, establishment of aids to navigation, and creation of office of supervising inspector for Puget Sound and Alaska.]

SEATTLE, WASH., 1914.

To Senators and Representatives in Congress.

GENTLEMEN: Actuated by the urgency of the case, we, the undersigned, representing the steamship companies engaged in Alaskan trade, herewith respectfully present for your careful reading some brief and pertinent facts relating to the need for aids to navigation on the coast of Alaska and the proper survey of its dangerous channels. We ask that you give this communication that attention which we feel the importance of the subject demands.

It is not our intention to go into detail at this time, for the annual report of the Secretary of Commerce, a thoughtful document covering the situation in full, has but recently been published and no doubt read by Members of Congress generally. We indorse that report for its plain, straightforward statement of facts, and we desire to emphasize the need of certain work being carried out in the resurvey of Alaskan waters and the establishment of aids to navigation from the viewpoint of those engaged in operating steamships along that coast.

Alaska has a rugged, rocky coast line of some 26,000 miles, or relatively a greater length of coast line than the United States proper. Its annual commerce has reached a total of $70,000,000 in one calendar year and will steadily increase from now on, with the prospect of a much greater activity in steamship operations. This is due to the proposed plan of the United States Government to build a 1,000-mile railroad and to develop coal, copper, and other heavy tonnage. It appears to us that now is the time to abide by the judgment of the Government officials in charge of the Department of Commerce and pass such appropriations as may be recommended by that department. It should be thoughtfully considered in this connection that the U. S. S. Tahoma, of the Revenue Service, and the Armeria, of the Lighthouse Board, were wrecked on the unlighted shores and upon unknown rocks in Alaska, and the total valuation of the Government vessels and property lost in those two catastrophes would represent a figure that would accomplish much toward the proper charting of those dangerous channels.

These are but two instances where the Government has suffered loss. But what of the privately owned and operated steamships that for years have pioneered the water routes to Alaska? Hidden rocks are best remembered or named by the unfortunate vessels that have found them. Too often such vessels have gone to the bottom, leaving no record save that of heavy financial loss and deepest sorrow among those whose relatives or friends have been lost. A detailed and absolutely correct list of wrecks, loss of life, and value of hulls and cargoes taking place in Alaska is impossible to obtain, but from the list of the larger vessels and those of which official record is at hand the grand total in vessels lost is 85, representing a valuation of nearly $7,000,000.

There is nothing new about this statement. It has been published in the press of the country and has even found its way into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The total loss of life is not known, but it is very great, some of the ships that have gone to the bottom having lost nearly all on board, while history records that several, with their entire list of passengers and crew, have never been heard from, and their fate can only be conjectured.

It is proverbial that those who go down to the sea in ships must be ready at all times to manfully face the perils of the deep, the perils being largely due to action of the elements. Those who are endeavoring to operate regular steamship service to and from Alaska must at all times meet additional contingencies and face unknown danger due to the devious watercourses, rocky formation of the shore line and sea floor, the absence of beacons and guides to navigation, and the ever-present danger of striking a pinnacle rock.

This caused the wreck of the State of California, with its awful toll of human lives. That steamship, wrecked on August 17, 1913, struck an uncharted rock where the chart showed 12½ fathoms (75 feet), and yet the State of California had made 16 trips in and out of that same harbor during the two years preceding, since a new and important industry had been started at Gambier Bay. The year before, on August 13, 1912, the steamship Mariposa struck an uncharted rock off Port Baker in Sumner Straits, just west of where the chart shows 111 fathoms (666 feet). On January 14, 1909, the steamship Ohio struck an uncharted rock in Tongass Narrows, just north of Ketchikan. The charts showed the soundings where she struck at 30 fathoms (180 feet).

In the case of the Ohio and Mariposa, these vessels were saved and later repaired. Mention is made of these three cases to show how steamships traveling the regular routes to and from Alaska may, under certain conditions of the tide, strike a pinnacle rock at points where they had previously crossed and recrossed without any idea of the menace to navigation lying beneath the surface of the water.

Every great industry that is started in Alaska means an increased steamship service. The only possible avenue of transportation between the United States and its northern territory is the water route, and as the greater portion of its populous towns and mining camps are located along the inside passages, which abound throughout the southern and western coasts, it will always be necessary for any vessel serving Alaska to use those inside routes. This condition extends from the thriving fishing city of Ketchikan, in the southeast portion of the territory, in a great arc, to the extreme end of the Aleutian Islands, and takes in such well-known places as Wrangell, Petersburg, Metlakahtla, Juneau, Douglas, Treadwell, Haines (Fort Seward, U. S. A.), Skagway, Sitka, Yakutat, Cordova, Latouche, Valdez (Fort Liscum, U. S. A.), Ellamar, Seward, Portage Bay, Knik, and all the salmon canneries and other points where industries flourish.

It seems strange indeed that a great catastrophe in which property loss and a heavy death toll is recorded should be the means of bringing these great needs of Alaska before the people; but such has been the case, and with the expected large addition to the number of steamships operating, while not anticipating trouble, it is apparent that unless something is done immediately to better these conditions that the danger of such disasters will greatly increase.

It is not our intention to suggest an especial appropriation covering any particular lighthouse or other aid to navigation, as those are matters which should be left to the department; but we do most earnestly urge upon each of you gentlemen the necessity of giving immediate heed to the seriousness of this situation, and request that you work for such appropriations as may be recommended by the department:

First. For a thorough survey and search of the channels and passages of Alaska for the purpose of locating pinnacle rocks. This work to be accomplished by wire drag.

Second. For suitable steamships and other vessels to be used in such work by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Third. For the proper charting and surveying of the watercourses of Alaska.

Fourth. Such lighthouse establishments and other aids to navigation as may be recommended by the department from time to time.

Fifth. The creation of the office of supervising inspector for Puget Sound and Alaska, headquarters Seattle, to take care of this immense coast line; also, additional assistant inspectors for the Seattle office of the Steamboat Inspection Service.

You have already been informed in detail that the steamships now used by the Coast and Geodetic Survey are entirely inadequate for such service. These vessels are such that if they were being used by any privately operated company in regular commercial traffic their owners would be most severely criticized. The cost of conducting the wire-drag survey and the cost of proper vessels for the survey would represent but a very small sum when compared with the tremendous valuation of the steamships operating in those waters, to say nothing of the more humanitarian view of the case in considering the protection of the thousands of people whose lives are imperiled by traveling through those passages.

Alaska is America's last frontier. Alaska is a land of great industrial promise. At the present time its development seems to be assured by legislation which makes for the opening of its great interior mineral storehouses, but it should be remembered that all that interior development must for all time depend upon the successful operation of the steamships connecting that Territory with the United States proper, and it is in behalf of all of the present companies operating and of those who may later join in that important traffic that this appeal is addressed to each of you gentlemen, representing in Congress the great States of this Union, each one of which has been greatly aided and encouraged in its development by the cooperation at all times of its representatives. We now petition you, in behalf of a great Territory of the United States, feeling sure that when these facts are brought to your personal attention you will refer to the detailed reports covering the subject and grant to that frontier country the protection her growing commerce justifies.

Yours, very truly,

J. C. FORD,
President Pacific Coast Steamship Co.
R. W. BAXTER,
Vice President Alaska Steamship Co.
H. F. ALEXANDER,
President Pacific Alaska Navigation Co.
M. KALISH,
Vice President Humboldt Steamship Co.
H. C. BRADFORD,
Vice President Northland Steamship Co.
JOSHUA GREEN,
President Puget Sound Navigation Co.
W. L. GAZZAM,
President Puget Sound Steamboat Owners' Association.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On January 2, 1915:

S. 6227. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Norfolk-Berkley Bridge Corporation, of Virginia, to construct a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Elizabeth River in Virginia; and

S. 6687. An act to authorize the Chesapeake & Ohio Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River a short distance above the mouth of the Little Scioto River, between Scioto County, Ohio, and Greenup County, Ky., at or near Sciotoville, Ohio.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2824) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, which was, on page 2, line 4, to strike out "claimant" and insert "claim."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPOSITS OF PHOSPHATE ROCK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6106) validating locations of deposits of phosphate rock heretofore made in good faith under the placer-mining laws of the United States, which were, on page 1, line 5, after "United States," to insert "and upon which assessment work has been annually performed"; on page 1, line 7, to strike out "such locations" and insert "patents whether heretofore or hereafter issued thereon"; on page 1, line 7, after "title," to insert "to"; on page 1, line 8, to strike out "to" where it first occurs and insert "of"; and on page 1, line 8, to strike out all after "deposits" down to and including "patented," in line 9.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION COINS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6039) for the coinage of certain gold and silver coins in commemoration of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "two" and insert "three"; on page 2, line 14, to strike out the comma and insert a period; on page 2, line 14, after "him," to insert "the coinage shall be executed as soon as may be and"; on page 2, in lines 15 and 16, to strike out "December 1, 1914," and insert "the day of the opening of the exposition"; and on page 4, line 23, after "designs," to insert ": Provided, That the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. shall reimburse the Treasury Department for the amount thus expended."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LOAN OF BELL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 58) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to loan the bell of the late U. S. S. Princeton to the borough of Princeton, N. J., which were, on line 4, to strike out "loan" and insert "present," and to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to present the bell of the late U. S. S. Princeton to the borough of Princeton, N. J."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 11318. An act authorizing the sale of lands in Lyman County, S. Dak.; and

H. R. 16738. An act to provide for the payment of certain moneys to school districts in Oklahoma.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 17168. An act to authorize the North Alabama Traction Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Decatur, Ala.; and

H. R. 19424. An act to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge at St. Louis, Mo.

H. R. 17894. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

H. R. 17971. An act for securing the uniform grading of grain, preventing deception in transactions in grain, and regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. R. 18172. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Seymour, Ind., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SHIPMENT OF NAVAL STORES ABROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate resolution 512, coming over from a former date. It will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 512, submitted by Mr. HARDWICK on the 4th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate copies of all communications transmitted to or received from the Government of Great Britain touching the recent order of said Government declaring naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products absolute contraband of war; and the previous order of said Government declaring that the products above enumerated were not contraband of war.

Also copies of any other communications transmitted to or received from any foreign Government in reference to the classification of naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products as contraband of war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In connection with the adoption of the resolution, I would be glad to have read a telegram which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., January 4, 1915.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

We have booked considerable rosin for Genoa, Italy, and Gottenberg, Sweden, prior to allies placing rosin on contraband list, and seems to us if goods are shipped to neutral consignees domiciled Italy and Sweden, with accompanying certificate to effect Italy and Swedish consumption, belligerent nations would not have right to seize or seriously detain. Would appreciate your investigation and telegraphic reply at earliest possible moment.

STRACHAN SHIPPING CO.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the resolution ought to be so enlarged as to include any correspondence between our State Department and belligerent nations of Europe relative to all shipments affected by the war. If the Senate is to have information, it ought to be in a comprehensive form so as to bring up to date all the correspondence which is only heard of now through the newspapers. I should like to offer an amendment——

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will support with very great pleasure a proposition of that kind; but this stands in a class by itself, for reasons which I will be glad to explain to the Senate. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not complicate this proposition by insisting on a broader resolution. I will support a resolution of that sort if the Senator will prepare and introduce a proper one. If the Senator will permit me, I will state some reasons why this resolution stands on rather a different footing from the proposition he suggests.

In November of last year, Mr. President, the British Government issued an order or statement declaring that naval stores, rosin, turpentine, and resinous products, were absolute noncontraband of war. Based on that declaration, business of that kind moved ahead very freely from the southern part of this country, where most of this business originates.

Some time in December, five or six weeks after the first order was issued, the British Government issued another order in which it declared that these very identical products were absolute contraband of war. Of course that very seriously affected some shipments that were in process of transit when the order was issued, when the status of this product, according to the second British contention, was changed.

Mr. President, the contention on which the British Government based its final action was this: Years ago naval stores used to be generally considered by all nations as contraband of war. As ships were then built all naval stores were used in some way in shipbuilding and, of course, for the construction of warships. Since the change in naval warfare, calling for a different class and kind of vessels, naval stores were not thought by most nations of the world to be contraband of war until the present war had progressed for some time. Now, however, the British Government, as I understand, contends that certain explosives of the newer kind have rosin wrapped around them so that when they are thrown into trenches filled with water they will not be put out but will explode more certainly, and, also, that the turpentine is put in them to affect the smoke in some way—that it makes the smoke denser.

Undoubtedly, Mr. President, in view of the change in the position of the British Government itself in regard to the shipping and transportation of naval stores, these articles occupy a different status even in their eyes from what they might had not this sudden change in classification occurred.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is liable to inflict a very great hardship on that portion of our country which has suffered most from the European war. For every cent per pound reduction in the price of our cotton, which reduction, in part at least, can be attributed to this war, the South stands to lose eighty or eighty-five million dollars on this year's cotton crop. So you can see that the loss is heavy on the very section of the country where we are already suffering heaviest from the war. This conduct of the British Government as to naval stores seems to put a great additional burden on that section of the country and on one of our great products, of an annual value of about $35,000,000, of which about $19,000,000 are produced in Florida and $9,000,000 in Georgia.

This product is susceptible of two uses, even if the British contention as to its war uses is sound. It is not essentially and necessarily and solely an article of war; it has many peaceful uses and purposes; it may be used for many purposes totally disconnected—indeed, most of the purposes for which it is used are totally disconnected—with warfare of any kind, shape, or form.

It does seem, sir, to us that the Government of this country ought to require, if it is possible to require it—and we hope the British Government will readily concede it—that at least the same status be granted to naval stores which have already been granted us, we understand, in an informal way at least, as to copper. Where naval stores are consigned to neutral countries, to given consignees, and there is no reasonable ground to suppose that their ultimate destination is one of the belligerent powers or that their ultimate use is for the purposes of war, we say that under no view of the law of nations ought such shipments to be interfered with.

Therefore we ask, Mr. President, that this resolution be adopted, so that the Executive may disclose to the Senate such negotiations and representations as have been had or made, if any, with or to the British Government on the subject, and so that our State Department and the President may go to the British Government with the representation that this is a matter of such vital importance to a great portion of our people that the American Congress is interested in knowing whether or not the law of nations is being carried out on this question and whether the rights of our people as to this most important product are being protected.

Of course, I fully realize that my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] can move to amend the resolution if he wants to, and, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to support and urge the passage of a general resolution of this kind, as suggested by him; but I do not think there is any objection to this resolution in this specific case, and I am afraid there might be in the other and more general form. So, if the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, if he had just as soon do it, I had rather he would introduce his proposition separately and let us vote on this resolution, which is in reference to a policy which seems to impose a particular hardship upon a great interest of our country, without involving the matter in other questions which might be raised on the broader and general line suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, unquestionably there ought to be no objection to the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], but I think it is equally true that there can be no reasonable objection to making public in a single document the whole correspondence between the United States and all belligerents in the present war relating to all contraband and conditional contraband articles.

Mr. President, this is not a secret matter; it is not one for which there is any legitimate reason for preserving secrecy. The State Department has from time to time given out, as I understand, most of the declarations which have been made. They have been published widespread in many newspapers, but there is a certain feeling of unreliability in such publications, and I think there ought to be officially laid before the Senate and before the country all the correspondence between the United States and all belligerents showing each one of the various steps by which certain articles were first declared contraband, then certain articles were added to the list, then under which certain other articles were declared conditional contraband, and then also those same articles made absolute contraband.

The Senator from Georgia is undoubtedly correct so far as his special interest is concerned. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] showed here the other day that copper had been treated very much in the same way. I am not advised as to other large interests that are involved, but unquestionably many articles of American commerce have been materially affected. It may be a matter of considerable consequence some time for the Congress to know exactly what treatment has been proposed, and certainly no harm can come from wide publicity.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has not yet offered a formal amendment to this resolution. Before he reaches that stage, I wish to join my colleague [Mr. HARDWICK] in appealing to him not to add it to the pending resolution. We have in this resolution a concrete proposition, applicable to a commodity in which the State which my colleague and I represent and two or three adjoining States are greatly interested. We have an investigation going on with reference to it. We believe that we are in a position to bring substantial results if we are allowed to go on at once with this matter. We would regret exceedingly to see it complicated with the general subject.

If the Senator from Nebraska desires the general subject investigated, if he desires information generally with reference to other commodities, it would be very easy for him to introduce a resolution upon the subject and submit it to the Senate. I take it for granted that there will be no objection to such a resolution. Still we have our resolution in a position where we feel it at least will not be if it be broadened to embrace other subjects. We think we will probably obtain a speedy report upon our resolution, and that we are helping the situation by what we are doing.

We are not engaged simply in an idle presentation of a resolution for information. The telegram which I send to the Secretary's desk, and which was read, is from one of the largest shipping houses in Savannah, Ga., and Savannah, Ga., is the largest shipping port of rosin and turpentine in the United States; indeed, much the largest, although I believe the State of Florida produces more turpentine and rosin.

Mr. BRYAN. And it also exports more, although that is not material.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] says that Florida exports more than Savannah. He may be right, although I think he is wrong; in fact, I am very confident he is wrong, for I have seen but recently the figures covering the exports from Fernandina, Fla., which is the chief place of export of Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is making so many mistakes that I can hardly correct them all at once. The State of Florida produces 56 per cent of the naval stores within its own confines, and Jacksonville, Fernandina, Pensacola, and Tampa are the export cities of naval stores.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Fernandina, Fla., exports more than any other seaport of Florida, and Savannah, Ga., exports more than does Fernandina. If you take all of the ports of Florida they export more than Savannah, but Savannah, as I have said, is the largest export city for these goods in the United States.

Mr. BRYAN. That is to say, that as between Fernandina, a town of about 4,000 people, and Savannah, a town of about 50,000, Savannah exports more than does Fernandina. I agree to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And Fernandina exports more than does any other port of Florida.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska which may perhaps clarify this question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if he has in mind other articles that have been declared contraband, or does he desire simply to get information concerning the halting of our exports abroad? The Senator will observe that I put into the RECORD yesterday a communication from a manufacturing concern in my State complaining bitterly of the disturbance of their business because of the action largely of the British Government; but the articles in which that concern is interested are not articles that are contraband. Has the Senator in mind other articles that have been declared contraband?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In reply to the Senator from New Hampshire I will say that it was not my purpose to so broaden the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia as to bring it into the realm of controversial subjects. I think that the inquiry suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire might be desirable, but I do not propose to go into it, because it might raise other questions. I will at this moment read the substitute which I intend to propose to the resolution of the Senator from Georgia, and I want to say that it includes necessarily all that he seeks. It would simply result in laying before the Senate as a complete whole the record of the correspondence between this country and other countries which has been handed out piecemeal through the newspapers and which would only remain piecemeal in case his resolution is adopted. My substitute——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, my thought was that if the information the Senator from Nebraska desires is along the line that my correspondents would like concerning articles that have not been declared contraband, my judgment would be that we might well pass the resolution now submitted and then adopt a separate resolution covering the other questions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that would be——

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am altogether sympathetic with both of these propositions. I shall support the resolution of the Senator from Georgia, and I am ready to support a resolution to accomplish what the Senator from Nebraska desires; but I think that, under the circumstances, it is hardly kind to complicate the action which the Senator from Georgia desires by a general enlargement of the resolution.

The constituents of the Senator from Georgia are evidently in a good deal of distress because of the interference with their trade. They want relief to which the correspondence called for would be material, and, if there were no other reason, the delay which would ensue upon enlarging this resolution would be a substantial reason for not amending it. It is a pretty large field that the Senator from Nebraska is entering upon, and it would be quite likely to take a long time to obtain all the information he desires. Now, let us pass the resolution of the Senator from Georgia, so that he may obtain the information he wishes in the limited field in which he is specially interested, and then let us pass another resolution covering what the Senator from Nebraska wishes. I think that such a resolution ought to be pretty fully considered and made broad enough to cover the whole field.

I had in mind one subject which I think ought to be covered, and, if the Senator will permit me, by way of suggestion I will send to the desk and ask to have read a Treasury order which I think bears upon the subject and ought to be included in the scope of the inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
October 28, 1914.

To collectors and other officers of customs:

Until further directed you will refrain from making public or giving out to any other than duly authorized officers of the Government information regarding any and all outward cargoes and the destination thereof until 30 days after the date of the clearance of the vessel or vessels carrying such cargoes.

WM. P. MALBURN,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ROOT. Now, Mr. President, I think we ought to know why any such order as that was made and what facts or communications led to it, for upon its face it appears to stamp upon all the honest export business of this country a suspicion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the date of that order.

Mr. ROOT. October 28, 1914.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will not undertake to keep up with the interruptions. The Senator from Nebraska will be the judge of when he will yield and to whom.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, at a time when, under the admitted law of nations, when under the law as it is agreed upon by both the United States and Great Britain, Great Britain was justified in stopping and searching vessels for contraband, this Treasury order imposes secrecy upon the cargoes of vessels sailing from our ports, necessarily creating a suspicion, necessarily involving the honest cargoes in the same interference, delay, inconvenience, and injury which will be visited upon clandestine attempts to introduce contraband. Let us know why that was done, and let us have a resolution, not interfering with the resolution of the Senator from Georgia for the purpose, but adopting that, and then let us have a resolution that will cover this whole ground and find out why all honest American commerce has been blackened by a Treasury order which creates suspicion regarding it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have an impression that that policy as represented by the Treasury order has been changed sometime back, but whether it has or not, and whether there ought to be an inquiry into it, it would be a controversial matter involving national policy. The amendment which I propose to offer as a substitute involves nothing of that kind. It simply sufficiently broadens the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia to include all the correspondence, instead of parts of it, relating to contraband and conditional contraband.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I will say that my attention was called to this subject by listening to the very admirable, temperate, and scholarly presentation of the law of contraband by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] a few days ago. It recalled to my mind having seen something in the newspapers about secrecy of shipments. I sent to the Library and could not find anything about it, and then I sent to the Treasury Department, calling for all the Treasury orders which had been made within the last half dozen months, and this came down; but no modification or repeal of it came from the Treasury Department, so I think it must be still in force. Unless there is some reason which can be given, and which ought to be given, if it exists, it certainly ought not to be in force.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have no purpose to antagonize that suggestion. I only gave it as my impression, that the present attitude of the department was not as represented by that order. The resolution which I offer is a simple enlargement of the scope of the resolution of the Senator from Georgia, and I offer it as a substitute.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator has been very generous in yielding. Will he yield once more?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the case that we present is one where there is a peculiar hardship involved, on account of the changes of orders, and where expedition is necessary in whatever is done in order to secure the best results, the Senator from Nebraska would not wish to delay us in this particular matter, when he can get the same general result he seeks by presenting his resolution disconnected from this, would he?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no idea that it will cause any delay. The communications in question are brief and specific. They consist of documents issued by the belligerents of Europe naming certain articles as contraband and certain articles as conditional contraband. Later on supplemental documents of the same sort were issued, and there may have been, and probably has been, certain correspondence by the United States on the subject.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me just once more, not only that but the substitute calls for certain information relating to the detention of ships. Now, to my certain knowledge there are many cases of that kind. It would take a long time to get up all of that. To get up the information requested by the Senator from Nebraska will very much delay, and therefore very much affect, the usefulness of the proposition we submit. I hope, therefore, the Senator will disconnect his proposition from ours, if he can.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I have not any intention——

Mr. HARDWICK. I know that, and that is the reason why I am pressing my suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no intention of changing the paragraph of the Senator's resolution relating to the detention of ships. I would neither enlarge it nor expand it in any way. My substitute reads as follows:

Resolved, That the President is respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate copies of all of the various communications transmitted to or received from the Government of Great Britain and other belligerents in the present war touching the orders of said Governments declaring contraband and conditional contraband of war various articles of commerce, also copies of any communications transmitted to or received from any foreign Government relating to the detention of ships under American registry carrying cargoes of naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me just a word in this connection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know quite a good deal regarding the matter of naval stores, and I corroborate what the Senator from Georgia has said with reference to the situation in connection with that industry, namely, that some time back the British ambassador informed our State Department that naval stores would not be regarded as contraband of war, and matters proceeded in that direction until it was acquiesced in on all sides that naval stores might accompany cargoes of cotton.

There seems to have been some misunderstanding about the nature of this product, by reason of its name. It consists of rosin, which is solid, shipped in barrels, and spirits of turpentine, which is liquid, shipped likewise in barrels. They can go in the holds of vessels carrying cotton cargoes, as ballast, and accommodate both the shipper and the shipowner, and the markets likewise, because the cotton is going to the same markets in which the naval stores are wanted. The rosin, which is solid, is used largely in the manufacture of soap, while the liquid turpentine is used not only for medicinal purposes but in paints and varnish, and the like.

It was with that understanding that those engaged in the industry—and, as has been stated by my colleague, Florida is very largely concerned, because the product there amounts annually to over $20,000,000—proceeded to find markets and to respond to that demand, and arranged for shipment, and did ship cargoes of naval stores. Some of those vessels have not yet arrived on the other side. There is a question as to what will happen when they do arrive, since the declaration has now come down that they will be regarded as absolute contraband. So it is important that this information shall be obtained as early as possible, not only because of the condition in which the industry is left but by reason of the fact that there are cargoes proceeding across the ocean, and we wish to know something about the fate of those vessels and those shipments.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as to the cargoes en route to the foreign port or market, I saw it stated in the press a day or two since that the ambassador from Great Britain had given out a statement that his Government had instructed him to say to our State Department that the order making naval stores absolute contraband would not apply to cargoes on the way at the time the order was made.

Mr. FLETCHER. I saw a statement of that kind, but I have not been officially informed in any way that that has been ultimately decided upon. I hope it is practically concluded, and that that will follow. There is also an effort being made, while leaving the spirits as contraband, to exempt rosin as contraband. We have some favorable indications in that regard.

What I wish to impress upon the Senator from Nebraska, however, is that this situation is in such shape that it will be very prejudicial to delay the pending resolution or to delay furnishing the information desired in connection with it. I have no doubt it can be readily furnished, because there will be no complications about it. They will simply turn to this one question and furnish that information very easily and very quickly; whereas to comply with the resolution which the Senator from Nebraska offers would involve all of these questions of contraband or conditional contraband cargoes, correspondence in connection with them, the detention of ships and all that sort of thing, which would take weeks and weeks to get up, I have no doubt.

Therefore I join the Senators from Georgia in asking the Senator from Nebraska if he will not offer his resolution as a separate matter and leave this to pass as it is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no reason why we should not take that course, except that the Senators who have made the request feel that these particular articles are of supreme importance because their communities are interested; but there are other communities in the United States interested in other articles.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would take only 24 hours to present it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no reason why we should not have this information presented to the Senate in one volume and at the same time.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? The resolution presented by the junior Senator from Georgia calls for information respecting certain things relating to the shipment of naval stores only. The resolution requests the President to furnish the information if compatible with the public interest. It might be that nothing has occurred with respect to naval stores that would make the President consider it not compatible with the public interest to supply the information. On the other hand, if you widen the field so as to include a variety of subjects and put it all in one resolution, it might be that the President would answer that he could not respond to the resolution without disclosing matters that he thought it incompatible with the public interest to disclose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say to the Senator from Nebraska that there is no amendment pending. If he has prepared a substitute for the resolution, if he will be good enough to send it to the desk it will be stated to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer the substitute which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Nebraska offers, as a substitute, the following:

Resolved, That the President is respectfully requested, in so far as not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate copies of all of the various communications transmitted to or received from the Government of Great Britain and other belligerents in the present war touching the orders of said Governments declaring contraband and conditional contraband of war various articles of commerce.

Also copies of any other communications transmitted to or received from any foreign Government in reference to the classification of articles as contraband and conditional contraband of war.

Also copies of any communications transmitted to or received from any foreign Government relating to the detention of ships under American registry carrying cargoes of naval stores, turpentine, rosin, and resinous products and other contraband and conditional contraband of war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in deference to the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri, he will observe that I have inserted in the substitute offered by me the words "in so far," so that it reads:

In so far as not incompatible with the public interest—

Leaving to the President the privilege of omitting anything he may deem incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. President, I think enough has been said, and I offer that as a substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we do not desire to continue the discussion, but we do wish to say that we hope the Senate will vote down the substitute and let it come up as an original proposition. It can be presented to-morrow and can be acted on the next day as an original proposition. We feel that it does handicap us in what we are trying to do with our special naval-stores resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the original resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business No. 742.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to have the bill identified in some way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania desires to know what bill it is which the Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to consider. The Secretary will please state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20241) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to thank the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] for his kindness in giving way to me to speak briefly on this amendment at this moment. I also appreciate the kindness of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] in being good enough to allow the bill to go over yesterday in order that I might speak this morning upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I shall try to be as brief as possible.

This amendment, which is purely formal, proposes to strike out the clause supplying the deficiency in the appropriations for the War Department caused by the leasing of transports to take troops to Vera Cruz. It is an honest debt, honestly incurred and must of course be paid; but I think, Mr. President, it is not amiss at this time and in this connection to review briefly the circumstances which have led to the necessity for this appropriation, and which will lead to the necessity of other appropriations to cover other deficiencies arising from the same source.

I wish, in as compact a manner as possible, to call attention to the events in Mexico which have led to these appropriations and to the condition of affairs in Mexico at the present moment.

The great war in Europe has obscured that question, as it did many others, in people's minds. The Mexican situation has been largely pushed aside and forgotten. Although one of the most important transactions in which this country has been engaged in the last two or three years, it seemed so unimportant to the President that he did not even allude to it in his annual message. But, Mr. President, although in comparison with what we are witnessing in Europe it may not be serious, I think that in itself it is extremely serious, and especially so to the United States, whose territory adjoins that of Mexico.

If I may go back for a moment, so that we may get simply the order of events, I would remind the Senate that in the autumn of 1910 the Madero revolution, directed against the long-established government of President Diaz, began. President Diaz left Mexico City on May 25, 1911, and Francesco Madero, the leader of the successful revolution, arrived there on June 7 of the same year. He took the oath of office as President November 6, 1911.

When the revolution broke out, as everyone will recall, President Taft sent an army of 20,000 men to the border to maintain peace in that region. After Madero had taken the oath as President and become President de facto of Mexico, the disturbances still continuing, President Taft issued a proclamation of neutrality March 2, 1912.

On March 14, 1912, Congress passed a resolution giving the President power, when he found that in an American country conditions of domestic violence existed which were promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured in the United States, to forbid the export of such arms or munitions of war, and on the same day President Taft exercised this power and laid an embargo on the export of arms to Mexico.

Mr. President, at the time it seemed to me that the action of Congress was reasonable. I made no opposition to it. I think it was generally agreed to on both sides. But subsequent events in Mexico convinced me of the unwisdom of giving such an authority to the President. The Constitution reserves to Congress the sole right to declare war. To put in the hands of the Executive the opportunity to alter at will neutrality laws which have been in existence more than a hundred years is going far toward impairing the authority of Congress in the great function of declaring war or maintaining peace. We can see how it operated in this case. President Taft imposed an embargo on the export of munitions of war and arms, and it was a direct aid to the Madero government, which was then facing an insurrection. Then President Wilson, at a later period, lifted the embargo, and that was a direct aid to the insurgents who were opposing the government of Gen. Huerta.

I think this is a power which should not be in the hands of any one man, and I think, moreover, that it is a mistake to subject the Chief Executive to the pressure which the existence of that power in his hands necessarily causes—pressure from one side or the other and from all sorts of influences, which may be sinister or the reverse. The alteration of the neutrality laws is a grave duty which ought to remain in the hands of Congress, which has the sole authority to declare war.

But Congress gave the President that authority, and President Taft, as I have said, laid the embargo on the export of arms. The Madero Government was recognized by President Taft. On January 23, 1913, a little less than a year later, Felix Diaz headed a revolution against the Madero Government in Mexico City and attacked the palace. Gen. Huerta, who was in command of the Madero forces, went over to Diaz and the Madero Government was overthrown. Madero and the vice president, Suarez, were arrested by Huerta February 18 and were forced to resign. On February 20 Lascurain was sworn in as Provisional President, and about forty-eight hours later Madero and Suarez were killed. The manner of their death has never been made perfectly clear, but that they were unlawfully killed is, I think, beyond doubt.

Gen. Huerta then took over the Government, and in accordance with constitutional forms became Provisional President. This was so near the 4th of March that President Taft took no action in regard to the Huerta Government, feeling that he had not the right to commit his successor on so important a point.

President Wilson came in on the 4th of March, and on the 20th of that month the revolution headed by Carranza broke out in northern Mexico. Nothing, practically, was done in regard to Mexican affairs until the following summer, when the President sent Mr. Lind as his personal agent to Vera Cruz and subsequently delivered a message to Congress upon the Mexican situation. The instructions to Mr. Lind involved a demand in the nature of an ultimatum upon Gen. Huerta that he should abdicate. It is not usual, Mr. President, in entering into negotiations, no matter how informal or through a personal emissary, no matter how informal the emissary's position may be, to demand of the head of the Government, with whom that emissary is to communicate, that he should abdicate. Such a demand crudely stated laid us open to a telling retort, and that is the reason why the then secretary of foreign affairs in Mexico was so successful in his reply. Gen. Huerta refused to abdicate and the correspondence to which I have referred ensued.

Mr. President, I was not one of those who was disposed to find fault with the refusal to recognize Gen. Huerta, although there was much to be said in favor of that course. There were broad international grounds and sound international grounds upon which that refusal could have been based. It was entirely possible to say that Gen. Huerta's government was unable to maintain international relations, for over a large area of Mexico it exercised no authority. It was possible and proper to say that the recognition might entail the validification of the loans which the Huerta government was then attempting in Europe, and which would have pledged certain revenues of Mexico, and thus deprived the United States of the opportunity of securing indemnity for injuries to its citizens.

But those grounds, Mr. President, were not put forward. The ground on which recognition of Huerta was refused was what was called a moral ground; that he was a man of bad character, who had reached the highest position in Mexico by treacherous and murderous methods. I think it highly probable that such were his methods. That is the way supreme power has generally been acquired in Mexico. It has been attained by force and accompanied by acts of violence, which are repellent to every man who believes in the reign of law and in ordered freedom.

But when we put our refusal of recognition on the personal ground that the character of the head of the Mexican Government at that time was unsatisfactory to us, to that extent we intervened. We had an absolute right on international grounds to refuse recognition, but when we say to another nation we object to the man who is at the head of your government or at the head of the only government you have got because he is a person of obnoxious character, we intervene in the affairs of that nation.

However, the refusal to recognize Gen. Huerta was based upon that ground, and while it undoubtedly embarrassed the Huerta government it did not overthrow it. He proved himself contumacious. The President, who disapproved of his methods, as we all disapproved of them, now had added to his feelings a personal resentment because Gen. Huerta had not obeyed the President's demand for his abdication. The President is a man accustomed to obedience, and I can quite understand that he should feel a natural resentment at Gen. Huerta's seeming indifference to his request.

But, Mr. President, an animosity is not a policy. The policy of the United States in regard to Mexico, speaking from the international point of view, was to secure as soon as possible the pacification of the country, the reestablishment of order, the removal of all our many causes of complaint, the security of the lives and property of our own citizens and also of the citizens or subjects of other nations, because other nations, in view of our attitude and of the Monroe Doctrine, declined to intervene and made no suggestion of intervening themselves, and that threw a moral, if not a legal, responsibility upon us. This would have been a worthy national policy, but the business of driving Huerta from power and putting somebody else in his place was not a policy at all. Nevertheless, that was the object to which our Government addressed itself.

Still Huerta continued to hold on. Rumors reached us in the spring of 1914 that he had effected a loan through the Mexican banks of sixty millions and that a large cargo of arms was on its way to him from Germany.

At that time, while the indications that the Huerta government might be established and held in power for at least a year longer were before us, there came what was known as the Tampico Incident. I need not recall it in detail to the Senate. All Senators are familiar with what happened. A boat's crew from one of our warships, flying the American flag, landed perfectly properly for peaceful purposes and were arrested. They were taken to the town hall and released. An apology was offered by the commander and Admiral Mayo demanded a salute to the flag. Our Government took the question from the locality where it had occurred and carried it to the City of Mexico, thus extending its scope and giving it a national character.

The Huerta government declined to give the salute unless they were assured that it would be returned. In those cases which have happened in our own history, where a salute has been given it sometimes has been returned and sometimes not. It was on that precise point we came to blows with the Huerta government. The President appeared before Congress and delivered his message, and there was submitted from the White House a resolution for Congress to pass which declared that we should give the President power to take proper steps against Victoriano Huerta, naming him, which shows, as I have said, that the whole purpose was the removal of Huerta.

That resolution was passed by a genial and compliant House, but the Senate was unwilling to put the United States in the attitude of taking a step, which might very well mean a general war with Mexico, by declaring against an individual by name. The United States in war with Victoriano Huerta did not commend itself to the Senate as a title for our action. So the name of Gen. Huerta disappeared from the resolution. This side of the Chamber thought that, if we were to take this very serious step, it was proper to put it on the broad international ground of protection to American citizens, to their rights, to their lives, to their property, rather than on the narrow ground of the actions of one man who happened to be at the moment President de facto of Mexico. Our proposition of amendment in this sense was voted down. All efforts to get any recognition of the wrongs to American citizens were voted down. An amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] pledging this Government against the acquisition of Mexican territory was voted down, and the resolution which in fact, though not actually by name, put the United States into war with Victoriano Huerta was passed.

While it was passing our forces had gone to Vera Cruz, where there was no American property in danger, where nothing had occurred, in order to secure reparation for something that had happened at Tampico. The resolution passed to the sound of the guns. We lost 19 men killed, and, I think, altogether there were 120 killed and wounded. Several hundred Mexicans were also killed and wounded.

There apparently was an idea in the President's mind that there would be no resistance to our taking Vera Cruz. I said in speaking that day, not knowing at the time what information the President had received, that we might look for resistance as a matter of course at Vera Cruz, and it came even while I was speaking. He had been told, I afterwards heard, that there would be no resistance and that we would peacefully take Vera Cruz. That is only a sample of the manner in which his agents subtracted from the sum of human information when they reported to him. But after the bloodshed in the taking of Vera Cruz it seemed to the onlooker that the administration were very much disturbed. They did not seem to have much stomach for the unexpected fight which had arisen, and took shelter under the Niagara conference, a conference which never could have had any result, because, although the United States and Huerta sent representatives to it, the other party in Mexico sent none, and were not compelled by our Government to send any. However, the conference enabled us to escape further fighting, and for that we may be duly grateful.

Mr. President, the object for which we sent those ships and troops to Vera Cruz was to get reparation for the insult to the flag, and the reason for the great celerity demanded in dealing with the resolution was to stop the landing of a cargo of arms. I do not know what has become of the reparation for the insult to the flag; if it has been made, I have never heard of it. My own impression is that it has been forgotten. The ship that brought the cargo of arms from Germany, which was then selling arms to belligerents, was named the Ypiranga. She arrived, I think, the day after our occupation of Vera Cruz. We could not exclude her by a peaceful blockade; if we had made a general blockade, it would have been an act of war; and we were not to be at war. Therefore, the Ypiranga having come there, the only way she could land her cargo was by getting permission from us as the possessors of the port to do so. That permission, naturally, we did not give. Admiral Badger—I think he was in command at the time—telegraphed to Washington to ask if he should give clearance—the vessel was obliged to get clearance from us—to the Ypiranga. The clearance was given. She went to some American port—Mobile, I think, though I am not perfectly certain; but it does not matter—stayed there a few days, sailed again, and landed her entire cargo of arms at Puerto Mexico, which was in control of the Huerta forces. The arms were taken up on the Tehuantepec Railroad to the City of Mexico and delivered. So we did not stop the landing of that cargo by our expedition to Vera Cruz. We neither got reparation to the flag, nor did we stop the delivery of arms to Huerta. In its avowed purposes the Vera Cruz adventure was not very successful. But President Wilson, just about that time, took off the embargo on arms. That, of course, was a real help to the insurgents, with whom we were more or less involved as allies. The insurgents had no port; they could not import arms; but they could bring them over the border when the embargo was raised, because at that time we were selling arms to belligerents without objection from anybody. The Secretary of War, however, with a wisdom and a courage which can not be too highly commended, insisted, for military reasons, that no arms should be carried across the border. A military order to that effect was made. That left Villa and Carranza in an awkward position, without a port, and it became of very great importance to the administration that they should have a port.

Then ensued the second Tampico incident. Our ships were withdrawn and placed 9 miles away, on the ground that if they were there it might cause trouble. My own impression is that they would have saved us from trouble. We have freely caused trouble and bloodshed at Vera Cruz, but we seemed strangely unwilling even to run the risk of trouble at Tampico. So the ships were withdrawn. At Tampico there were American citizens in the immediate neighborhood to be protected, and also American property, especially in the oil fields. The people employed in the oil fields after the withdrawal of our ships, alarmed by the advance of the insurgents, hurried to Tampico, to find themselves without any protection and in danger of a massacre from the Huerta troops and the population still in the city. That massacre and assault were prevented was due to the action of the commanders of the German and British ships which were lying there. Those refugees, to the number of 2,100, as I recall, 1,300 of whom were Americans and 800 the citizens or subjects of other powers, were taken on board the British and German cruisers. Our ships were lying 9 miles away. That method of saving American lives did not, I think, gratify the feelings of the American people. The admiral in command, when he received the order to withdraw, was so astounded by it that he declined to act unless the order was repeated; and the order of withdrawal was thereupon repeated. Our action at Tampico in withdrawing our ships was due to the fact that unless the insurgents secured Tampico they could not get arms, and lifting the embargo would have been of no advantage to them. It was, therefore, of great importance to the movement against Huerta that the insurgents should be able to procure arms and munitions of war. They took Tampico, and they did it to secure the arms.

Mr. President, having got thus far, although we had failed in our alleged objects at Vera Cruz, the interposition at that point and our help to the insurgents in securing Tampico were sufficient to bring about the fall of the Huerta government. The object of the President had been accomplished, but the policy of the United States had not been advanced one step.

It seemed impossible to induce anyone connected with the administration to consider what was to happen after Huerta had been driven from power. When he was driven from power it became painfully obvious that no consideration whatever had been given to that point. The whole course of the administration was owing to the fact that they absolutely declined from the beginning to recognize the character of the Mexican population. It was not our business, however desirable it might be, to undertake to give Mexico new land laws or to choose a President for her. We had no protectorate over Mexico, and to regulate her internal affairs would have been intervening in the affairs of another country; but it was of the utmost importance that in our policy toward that country we should not forget of what the population consisted—50 per cent and more pure-blood Indians, some of them in a wild state; 30 per cent of half-breeds, and perhaps 20 per cent of pure Spanish blood, the descendants of the old Spanish conquerors. To suppose, with a population like that, with the history of Mexico, which apparently nobody in the administration took the trouble to read, that you could build up a government there, at a moment's notice, such as we have, let us say, in the State of Nebraska, that with those foundations you could erect an American Government on American principles, was a dream. When Huerta fell from power the result of this refusal to face facts was seen.

What has been the condition of Mexico since? As everybody who has taken the trouble to study Mexican history and to inform himself knew, the first thing was that our two allies, Villa and Carranza, fell to fighting each other. It required no great intelligence to predict that such would have been the case. We did not hear so much of Carranza when we were his ally, but we can all remember how popular Villa was in certain quarters. When I ventured to have read into the RECORD a sketch of that eminent person's life it was resented, and a defense, said to have been prepared in the State Department, was made of Villa's character. It was currently rumored that it was felt in the highest quarters that he must be a good man because he neither drank nor smoked. It is not apparent that these premises were correct, for I am told by other persons competent to know, such as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], that he is guilty of both drinking and smoking; but even assuming that he does not indulge in those particular vices, was it not a hasty inference that he was therefore a good man in the international sense and devoid of murderous tendencies? A mad dog neither drinks nor smokes, but it would be rash to conclude that he was therefore a safe and pleasant companion. At all events, it may be admitted that Villa seems to have been the one man in Mexico who has distinct military capacity.

As I have said, after we got Huerta out Villa and Carranza fell to fighting with each other, and look at Mexico to-day. It is a chaos of fighting factions, the prey of banditti, with predatory bands riding through the country. The social organization has collapsed, and anarchy is a polite word to apply to the condition of things.

Mr. President, I fear that it is now too late to adopt any policy which would be effective there except a complete military occupation of the country at great cost, which all of us wish to avoid, but it is certain that when the Mexican question was first presented to us there were but two possible policies. I am speaking now of policies and not of personal animosities. One policy was to begin by exerting all the power and influence we had under international law and under treaties and in accordance with the comity of nations to prevent outrages, to prevent wrongs, and to try to bring about pacification. This was never effectively attempted, but that is the way we should have begun, and then, in line with the policy of avoiding war at all hazards, we should have refrained from any intervention beyond the efforts warranted by international law.

The other course was to enter Mexico in sufficient force to take possession of and pacify the country and try to bring back a government there which would have the capacity of fulfilling its international obligations and at least establish order. To that course the United States was opposed, and quite naturally and rightly; but the course we did pursue was neither one or the other. It combined with singular dexterity the evils of both and the advantages of neither. We did not stay out and we did not go in effectively. I should be sorry to shed the blood of a single American soldier or sailor for the sake of restoring order in Mexico, but nothing, it seems to me, can possibly justify shedding the blood of a single American soldier or sailor for the sake of putting one blood-stained Mexican in the place occupied by another. We have our reward for what we have done in the condition of Mexico to-day.

There was American property in Mexico to an enormous amount. I am told there was a billion dollars of American money and capital invested in Mexico—certainly many hundreds of millions. It is practically all gone. More capital, which is nothing but the savings of the American people, has been lost in Mexico in the last few years, many times over, than has been lost by the unfortunate interferences with our foreign trade which have occurred in the last few months. I was informed by gentlemen with property interests in Mexico, who came here representing many Americans employed and large American capital invested, that they were told substantially at the State Department, "We are not concerned about American property in Mexico; Americans who invest in property in foreign countries must not look to this Government to protect them." That was a new doctrine in international law to me, and I think it is a novel one to everybody. I am glad to see, Mr. President, that the indifference to American property in Mexico has not extended to American property on the high seas. I cling to the old notion that American property on the high seas and in foreign countries, when the owners of that property live in accordance with the laws of the countries in which the property is placed, is entitled to our regard and to the active protection of this Government. That protection has not been given in Mexico, and, what is far worse, between 150 and 200 American lives have been lost in Mexico. If there has been any redress secured, or even demanded, I do not know it, for a veil of secrecy has been drawn over our Mexican proceedings, and the inquiries of the Senate in regard to it have thus far been in vain.

Americans have been killed there within a short time. I understand that 52 people have been killed and wounded by Mexican bullets across the line at Naco. It is said that Gen. Bliss announced that if there was any more shooting across the line he would stop it. There was more shooting, and I am sorry to say that he did not stop it. Knowing of him as I do, I think that he may have been prevented from stopping it. There before us is that dismal record of American lives lost, and now, with irresponsible bands roaming over the country, with no government, look at the City of Mexico. One of the presidents has set up a guillotine there, and has been executing the supporters of Huerta, reminding one of the scenes of the French Revolution, but unfortunately without that which was behind the French Revolution, a strong population, with traditions and institutions which were certain to reassert their power, as they did. Those securities for the future have perished in Mexico, and bloodshed goes on unchecked in the capital of the country.

It has gone further than that. These bandits have been turned loose and have thrown themselves upon the most helpless class—upon the women, upon the priests, and upon the nuns. It is a revolting story, unfortunately only too well authenticated. Father Tierney, of New York City, one of the best known and most distinguished of his order, when he went to the State Department to ask for our good offices to prevent these outrages upon his coreligionists, has stated publicly that it was said to him, in the presence of two friends, that the followers of Huerta had committed similar outrages on two American women from Iowa.

What a reply to make! Certainly every dictate of humanity would lead us to do what we could to save those unfortunate men and women who have been the helpless victims of these half-wild Indian soldiers; and the reply is that Huerta's troops were guilty of two cases of similar outrages on American women! What has been done about that? There was an affront, indeed. In the reasons for the excursion to Vera Cruz it did not appear.

I shall ask, Mr. President, to print, at the end of my remarks, the article of Col. Roosevelt, from which I have taken the statement of Father Tierney that I have just quoted, and there I shall leave the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

Mr. LODGE. I have no intention of doing otherwise than vote for this deficiency and the others that are to follow. The Secretary of War has done his duty; but I can not let the matter go by, Mr. President, without thus calling attention to what has happened in Mexico; without saying that, in my opinion, even in the midst of the dreadful disasters to humanity and civilization which are now filling Europe and the world, we should not forget what has taken place and is now going on in Mexico—a situation so bad that when the President of the United States delivered his annual message to Congress the best way in which he could deal with it was by complete silence.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, December 6, 1914.]

OUR RESPONSIBILITY IN MEXICO.

(By Theodore Roosevelt.)

RECITING A LONG LIST OF CHARGES, BACKED BY AFFIDAVITS, AGAINST THE SOLDIERS OF CARRANZA AND VILLA, MR. ROOSEVELT FLATLY DECLARES THAT THE UNITED STATES IS "PARTIALLY (AND GUILTILY) RESPONSIBLE FOR SOME OF THE WORST ACTS EVER COMMITTED EVEN IN THE CIVIL WARS OF MEXICO."

An astonishing proof of the readiness of many persons to pay heed exclusively to words and not at all to deeds is supplied by the statement of the defenders of this administration that President Wilson has "kept us out of war with Mexico" and has "avoided interference in Mexico." These are the words.

The deeds have been: First, an unbroken course of more or less furtive meddling in the internal affairs of Mexico carried to a pitch which imposes on this Nation a grave responsibility for the wrongdoing of the victorious factions; and, second, the plunging of this country into what was really a futile and inglorious little war with Mexico, a war entered into with no adequate object, and abandoned without the achievement of any object whatever, adequate or inadequate.

To say that we did not go to war with Mexico is a mere play upon words. A quarter of the wars of history have been entered into and carried through without any preliminary declaration of war and often without any declaration of war at all.

The seizure of the leading seaport city of another country, the engagement and defeat of the troops of that country, and the retention of the territory thus occupied for a number of months constitute war, and denial that it is war can only serve to amuse the type of intellect which would assert that Germany has not been at war with Belgium because Germany never declared war on Belgium. President Wilson's war only resulted in the sacrifice of a score of American lives and a hundred or two of the lives of Mexicans; it was entirely purposeless, has served no good object, has achieved nothing, and has been abandoned by President Wilson without obtaining the object because of which it was nominally entered into; it can therefore rightly be stigmatized as a peculiarly unwise, ignoble, and inefficient war; but it is war nevertheless.

This has been bad enough. But the general course of the administration toward Mexico has been worse and even more productive of wide and far-reaching harm. Here again word splitters may, if they desire, endeavor to show that the President did not "interfere" in Mexico; but if so they would be obliged to make a fine discrimination between interference, and officious and mischievous intermeddling.

Whether it is said that President Wilson interfered in Mexico or merely that he meddled in Mexican affairs so as to produce much evil and no good and to make us responsible for the actions of a peculiarly lawless, ignorant, and bloodthirsty faction is of small importance. The distinction is one merely of words. The simple fact is that, thanks to President Wilson's action—and at times his inaction has been the most effective and vicious form of action—this country has become partially (and guiltily) responsible for some of the worst acts ever committed even in the civil wars of Mexico.

When Mr. Wilson became President of the United States, Huerta was President of Mexico. On any theory of noninterference with the affairs of our neighbors, or any theory of avoiding war and of refusing to take sides with or become responsible for the deeds of blood-stained contending factions, it was the clear duty of President Wilson to accept Mr. Huerta as being President of Mexico.

Unless President Wilson was prepared actively to interfere in Mexico and to establish some sort of protectorate over it, he had no more business to pass judgment upon the methods of Mr. Huerta's selection—which had occurred prior to Mr. Wilson's advent to power—than Mexico would have had to refuse to recognize Mr. Hayes as President on the ground that it was not satisfied with his economic policy and, moreover, sympathized with Mr. Tilden's side of the controversy. And if President Wilson made up his mind to interfere in Mexico—for, of course, the most trenchant type of interference was refusal to recognize the Mexican President—he should have notified foreign powers of his proposed action, in order to prevent, so far as possible, Huerta's recognition by them. President Wilson interfered in such feeble fashion as to accomplish the maximum of evil to us and to other foreigners and the Mexicans and the minimum of good to anybody. He hit; but he hit softly. Now, no one should ever hit if it can be avoided, but never should anyone "hit soft."

WILSON'S DEFINITE ACT OF INTERFERENCE.

When President Wilson refused to recognize Huerta he committed a definite act of interference of the most pronounced type. At the same time he and Mr. Bryan looked on with folded arms and without a protest of any kind while American citizens were murdered or robbed or shamefully maltreated in all parts of Mexico by the different sets of banditti who masqueraded as soldiers of the different factions. He maintained for a long time a friendly intercourse with one set of political adventurers through irregularly appointed diplomatic agents, and he adopted an openly offensive attitude toward the chief of another set, although he was then the de facto head of whatever Government Mexico had.

By his action in permitting the transmission of arms over the border, President Wilson not only actively aided the insurrection but undoubtedly furnished it with the means essential to its triumph, while at the same time his active interference prevented Huerta from organizing an effective resistance. His defenders allege that he could not properly have forbidden the transmission of arms to the revolutionaries across the border. The answer is that he did forbid it at intervals. He thereby showed that he was taking an active interest in the arming of the revolutionaries; that he permitted it when he chose to do so and stopped it intermittently whenever he thought it best to stop it, and was therefore entirely responsible for it.

The nominal rights which the contending factions championed and the actual and hideous wrongs done by all of them were in no sense our affair save in so far as Americans and other foreigners were maltreated.

UNITED STATES RESPONSIBLE FOR VICTORS' MISDEEDS.

We may individually sympathize—as, for instance, I personally do—with the general purpose of the program for division of the lands among the Mexican cultivators, announced by Carranza, Villa, and other revolutionary leaders; but this no more justified interference on our part than belief in the wisdom of the single tax for the United States by some foreign ruler would warrant his interference in the internal affairs of the United States. Moreover, nothing in the career of Carranza and Villa or in the conduct of the Mexican people at present justifies us in any certainty that this program will in any real sense be put into effect.

However, the interference took place. By the course President Wilson pursued toward Huerta and by the course he pursued toward Villa and Carranza he actively interfered in the internal affairs of Mexico. He actively sided with the factions which ultimately triumphed, and which immediately split into other factions which are now no less actively engaged in fighting one another.

Personally I do not think that the administration should have interfered in this manner. But one thing is certain, when the administration did interfere, it was bound to accept the responsibility for its acts. It could not give any aid to the revolutionaries without accepting a corresponding share of responsibility for their deeds and misdeeds. It could not aid them because of their attitude on the land question without also assuming a corresponding share of responsibility for their attitude toward religion and toward the professors of religion.

The United States would have had no responsibility whatever for what was done to the church by any faction which did not owe its triumph to action by the United States. But when the United States takes part in civil war in Mexico, as Messrs. Wilson and Bryan forced our Government to take part, this country has thereby made itself responsible for the frightful wrongdoing, for the terrible outrages committed by the victorious revolutionists on hundreds of the religious people of both sexes.

To avoid the chance of anything but willful misrepresentation, let me emphasize my position. I hold that it was not our affair to interfere one way or the other in the purely internal affairs of Mexico, so far as they affected only Mexican citizens, because if the time came when such interference was absolutely required it could only be justified if it was thoroughgoing and effective.

Moreover, I hold that it was our clear duty to have interfered promptly and effectively on behalf of American citizens who were wronged, instead of behaving as President Wilson and Secretary Bryan actually did behave. To our disgrace as a nation, they forced American citizens to claim and accept from British and German officials and officers the protection which our own Government failed to give.

When we did interfere in Mexican internal affairs to aid one faction, we thereby made ourselves responsible for the deeds of that faction, and we have no right to try to shirk that responsibility. Messrs. Wilson and Bryan have declined to interfere to protect the rights of American or of other foreigners in Mexico; but they have interfered as between the Mexicans themselves in the interest of one faction and with the result of placing that faction in power. They have therefore bound themselves to accept responsibility for the deeds and misdeeds of that faction.

Not long ago President Wilson, in a speech at Swarthmore, Pa., declared that "nowhere in this hemisphere can any Government endure which is stained by blood," and at Mobile that "we will never condone iniquity because it is most convenient to do so."

At the very time he uttered those lofty words the leaders and lieutenants of the faction which he was actively supporting were shooting their prisoners in cold blood by scores after each engagement, were torturing men reputed to be rich, were driving hundreds of peaceful people from their homes, were looting and defiling churches, and treating ecclesiastics and religious women with every species of abominable infamy, from murder and rape down.

In other words, at the very time that the President was stating that "nowhere on this hemisphere can any government endure which is stained by blood," he was actively engaged in helping install in power a government which was not only stained by blood but stained by much worse than blood. At the very time that he was announcing that he would "never condone inquity because it was convenient to do so" he was not merely condoning but openly assisting inquity and installing into power a set of men whose actions were those of ferocious barbarians.

Remember that I am not engaged in defending the factional opponents of these victorious wrongdoers. There is not evidence sufficient to decide which of the many factions behaved worst. But there is ample material to decide that they all behaved atrociously. Apparently the administration took the ground that inasmuch as Mr. Huerta and his followers were bad men, it was our duty to condone the evil committed by their opponents.

Father R. H. Tierney, of New York City, an entirely responsible man, informs me that when (in company with two other gentlemen whose names he gives me) he called upon Mr. Bryan to bring to his attention the abominable outrages committed on certain nuns by the followers of Carranza and Villa, Mr. Bryan informed Father Tierney that he had information that "the followers of Huerta had committed similar outrages on two American women from Iowa." (This sentence has been read to Father Tierney, who states that it describes the interview with exactness. The original of the affidavits herein quoted are in the possession of Father Tierney, 59 East Eighty-third Street, New York City, and Father Kelley, and will be shown by them to any reputable person.)

Apparently Mr. Bryan believed this disposed of the situation and relieved the revolutionaries of blame.

Surely, it ought not to be necessary to say that if the facts as thus stated to Mr. Bryan were true (and if there was any doubt immediate investigation as to their truth by the Government was demanded), then the way to get justice was not by treating one infamy as wiping out the other, but by exacting the sternest retribution for both and effectively providing against the repetition of either.

Even assuming for the moment that the attitude of the administration had not so committed the Government that it was its duty to interfere on behalf of the nuns thus outraged, Mr. Bryan's statement to Father Tierney shows almost incredible callousness on his part to the most dreadful type of suffering, to acts far worse than the mere murder of any man.

It seems literally impossible that any representative of the American Government in high office could fail to be stirred to his depths by such wrong or could have failed to insist on the immediate and condign punishment of the wrongdoers and on the amplest safeguarding against all possible repetition of the wrong. Apparently the only way in which it occurred to Mr. Bryan to take any action against the factions whose adherents had perpetrated these hideous wrongs on the two American women was by encouraging another faction which he must have known in advance, and certainly did know after the event, would commit and had committed wrongs equally hideous.

I have before me a copy of El Heraldo de Toluca of September 13 last. It contains a manifesto on behalf of the victorious revolutionaries of the party of Messrs. Carranza and Villa, dealing with the "conditions under which the Roman worship will have to be practiced." (I translate into English.) Among the preambles are the following:

"1. That the ministers of the Catholic Worship circulate doctrines which are not in accordance with the principles of the true Christ; 2, That on account of the learning that these ministers have acquired they can not, in the minds of those who possess equal or greater learning (but who differ from them in opinion), pass as sincere believers in the doctrines they preach, and that they thereby exploit the ignorance of the ignorant masses; 3, That inasmuch as this conduct harms people by frightening them with the fear of eternal punishment, and thereby tends to make them subservient to the priesthood, and that inasmuch as all kinds of people, from workmen to capitalists, give too much money to the churches and because of various other similar facts, the decree in question is promulgated."

WE SHOULD PROTEST AGAINST ANTICLERICAL OPPRESSION.

This decree includes the forbidding "of any sermons which will encourage fanaticism"; the proscribing of any fasts or similar practices; the prohibition of any money being paid for christenings, marriages, or other matters; the prohibition of the soliciting of contributions—that is, the passing of the plate; the prohibition of celebration of masses for the dead or the celebration of more than two masses a week; the prohibition of confession, and with this object in view the closing of the churches except once a week at the hour of the masses; and, finally, the prohibition of more than one priest living in Toluca and the requirement that he, when he walks in the streets, shall be dressed absolutely as a civilian without anything in his costume revealing the fact that he is a minister. In order to be permitted to exercise the functions thus limited the priest is required to affix his signature of acceptance to the foregoing regulations.

Now, in various South American countries there have been bitter contests between the Clericals and the anti-Clericals, and again and again the extremists of each side have taken positions which in the eyes of sensible Americans of all religious creeds are intolerable. There are in our own country individuals who sincerely believe that the Masons, or the Knights of Columbus, or the members of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, or the Catholic Church, or the Methodist Church, or the Ethical Culture Society represent what is all wrong.

There are sincere men in the United States who by argument desire to convince their fellows belonging to any one of the bodies above mentioned—and to any one of many others—that they are mistaken, either when they go to church or when they do not go to church, when they "preach sermons of a fanatical type" or inveigh against "sermons of a fanatical type," when they put money in the plate to help support a church or when they refuse to support a church, when they join secret societies or sit on the mourners' bench or practice confession. According to our ideas, all men have an absolute right to favor or oppose any of these practices. But, according to our ideas, no men have any right to endeavor to make the Government either favor or oppose them. According to our ideas, we should emphatically disapprove of any action in any Spanish-American country which is designed to oppress either Catholics or Protestants, either Masons or anti-Masons, either Liberals or Clericals, or to interfere with religious liberty, whether by intolerance exercised for or against any religious creed or by people who do or do not believe in any religious creed.

AFFIDAVITS OF ATROCITIES COMMITTED BY SOLDIERS.

I hold that these should be our sympathies. But I emphatically hold that it is not the duty of this Government to try to make other countries act in accordance with these sypmathies, and, above all, not the duty of the Government to help some other Government which acts against these great principles with which we sympathize. Messrs. Wilson and Bryan by their actions have assumed a certain undoubted responsibility for the behavior of the victorious faction in Mexico which has just taken the kind of stand indicated in the proclamation above quoted; a stand, of course, hostile to every principle of real religious liberty, a stand which if applied logically would mean that no minister of any church could in public wear a high-cut waistcoat or perhaps even a black frock coat, and which would put a stop even to such commonplace actions as the passing of the plate in any church to encourage home missions.

But this attitude is only one of the offenses committed. Catholic schools almost everywhere in Mexico have been closed, institutions of learning sacked, and libraries and astronomical and other machinery destroyed, the priests and nuns expelled by hundreds, and some of the priests killed and some of the nuns outraged.

Archbishop Blenk, of New Orleans; Father Tierney, editor of America; Father Kelley, president of the Catholic Church Extension Society; Mr. Petry, one of the directors of the Catholic Church Extension Society; and a Mexican bishop, whose name I do not give, because it might involve him in trouble, came to see me at my house; and in Chicago I saw other priests and refugees from Mexico, both priests, nuns, and lay brothers. The statements and affidavits submitted to me in the original and copies of which I have before me as I write set forth conditions which are literally appalling and for which, be it remembered, the actions of Messrs. Wilson and Bryan have made this country partly responsible.

For example, Archbishop Blenk submitted to me an affidavit by the prioress of the Barefooted Carmelite Nuns of the Convent of Queretaro. This sets forth, from the personal knowledge of the prioress, how the churches have been profaned by soldiers entering them on horseback, breaking statues, trampling on relics, and scattering on the floor the sacred hosts, and even throwing them into the horses' feed; how in some churches the revolutionaries have offered mock masses and have in other ways, some of them too repulsive and loathsome to mention, behaved precisely as the red terrorists of the French Revolution behaved in the churches of Paris; how, for example, St. Anthony's Church at Aguascallentes has been made into a legislative hall and the Church of St. Joseph at Queretaro and the great convent of the Carmelites and the lyceum of the Christian Brothers all have been confiscated; how the church property has been sequestered and the archives burned and the men and women in the cloistered communities expelled without being allowed to take even an extra suit of clothes or a book of prayer.

The prioress states that she has herself seen in Mexico City nuns who have been "victims of the passions of the revolutionary soldiers," and some whom she found in their own homes, others in hospitals and in maternity houses who in consequence are about to be delivered of children. She deposes:

"I have seen soldiers dressed up in chausables, stoles, maniples, and cinctures, with copes and altar linen, and their women dressed up in albs, surplices, and corporals used as handkerchiefs."

She has seen the sacred vessels profaned in a thousand ways. She describes meeting seven nuns who had been outraged, who she directed to a maternity house, and who had abandoned themselves to utter despair, saying "that they were already damned and abandoned by God, and they cursed the hour of their religious profession." She describes how she escaped from Queretaro with nuns who had been obliged to hide in private houses in order to escape being taken to the barracks by the soldiers. She describes how she had daily to beg the food necessary to sustain the 24 sisters with whom she escaped.

In Chicago I saw a French priest, Father Dominic Fournier, of the Congregation of the Passion, who had just escaped from Mexico with two young Spanish students for the priesthood. He had escaped from the city of Toluca with nothing whatever, not even a rosary. He and the two novices described to me their experience in Toluca. The churches and religious houses were sacked and confiscated and the soldiers and their women indulged in orgies before and around the altars.

One of the lay brothers named Mariano Gonzales tried to save some of the things from the church. The revolutionists seized him and accused him of robbing the State. He was shot by a file of soldiers on August 22 last and his dead body was left all day long in the court in which Father Fournier and the other priests and the two novices who spoke to me and their associates were confined. They were kept in prison 16 days and then allowed to go with nothing but what they had on.

I have seen the original of and have in my possession a translation of a letter written on October 24 by a young girl of Toluca to her pastor who had been exiled. She described how the bishop had been heavily fined and exiled. She describes how the clubs of boys and girls for whom she had been working had been broken up, but how some of the boys to whom they used to give breakfast on Sunday mornings still occasionally come to see them; and she asks advice how to keep these clubs of the poor together. But the dreadful and pathetic part of the letter is contained in the following sentence:

"Now I will ask you a question. Suppose some one falls into the power of the Zapatistas. Would it be better for her to take her own life rather than allow them to do their will and what they are accustomed to do? As I never thought such a thing could happen, I did not ask you before about it, but now I see it quite possible. If we had not our good God in whom we trust, I think we would give way to despair."

In other words, this girl who had been engaged in charitable work in connection with the church asks her pastor whether she is permitted to commit suicide in order to avoid the outrages to which so many hundreds of Mexican women, so many scores of nuns, have been exposed in the last few months. I can not imagine any man, of whatever creed, or of no creed, reading this letter without his blood tingling with horror and anger; and we Americans should bear in mind the fact that the actions of President Wilson and Secretary Bryan in supporting the Villaistas have made us partly responsible for such outrages.

I have been given and shown letters from refugees in Galveston, in Corpus Christi, in San Antonio, and Habana. These refugees include 7 archbishops, 6 bishops, some hundreds of priests, and at least 300 nuns. Most of these bishops and priests have been put in jail or in the penitentiary or otherwise confined and maltreated. Two-thirds of the institutions of higher learning in Mexico have been confiscated and more or less completely destroyed, and a large part of the ordinary educational institutions have been treated in similar fashion.

Many of the affidavits before me recite tortures so dreadful that I am unwilling to put them in print. It would be tedious to recite all the facts set forth in these affidavits. For instance, there is one, by Daniel R. Loweree, a priest of the diocese of Guadalajara, the son of an American father and librarian of the seminary and professor of chemistry. He describes what took place in Guadalajara. On July 21 about 100 priests from the city and country round about were put in the jail, while the cathedral was used as a barracks.

MURDER AND TORTURE BY MEXICAN REBELS.

In the affidavit of Canon José Maria Vela, of the Cathedral of Zacatecas, he sets forth how the constitutionalists shot a priest named Velarde, how 23 priests were gathered together and under the orders of Gen. Villa required to produce $1,000,000 within 24 hours under penalty of being shot. A committee of the priests went out through the city begging from house to house and accepting even pennies from the children. A girl was forcibly violated by one of the soldiers in the room adjoining that in which these priests were kept. Finally the citizens raised a couple of hundred thousand pesos, and the priests were released and allowed to flee without any of their belongings. Seventeen of the fleeing priests are now in El Paso, and their names are given in the document, and those of some of them signed to an accompanying document.

In an affidavit by the Rev. Michael Kubicza, of the Society of Jesus, whose father was a Hungarian physician, he describes how he was tortured in order to make him give up money. A soldier nicknamed Baca, in the presence of Col. Fierro, put a horsehair rope around his neck and choked him until he became unconscious. When he came to Baca fired a revolver near his head and commanded him to give up and tell him where the Jesuit treasures were buried. On answering that there were none he was again choked until he was unconscious, and this was repeated a third time. The affidavit describes at length some of the sufferings of the priests in fleeing.

All kinds of other affidavits have been submitted to me, dealing with torture and murder, as, for example, the killing of Father Alba, the parish priest of Cabra, the killing of the parish priest and vicar at Tula, the killing of the chaplain and rector and vice president of the Christian Brothers' College, etc.

The one feature in the events narrated to me and set forth in the affidavits to me which can give any American the least satisfaction is the statement of the kindness with which the unfortunate refugees had been treated in Vera Cruz by the officers and men of the Army and Navy, particular mention being made of Gen. Funston.

What I have above stated is but a small part of the immense mass of facts available to the President and Mr. Bryan, had they cared to examine them. They relate to outrages on Catholics. This is merely because the enormous majority of the religious people of Mexico are Catholics. I should set them forth just as minutely if they had been inflicted by Catholics on Freethinkers or Protestants or Masons—I am myself both a Protestant and a Mason. Even if we had no responsibility for them, I nevertheless fail to see how any American could read the account of them without a feeling of burning indignation. As things actually are, shame must be mingled with our indignation, for the action of the President and Mr. Bryan has been such as to make this country partly responsible for the frightful wrongs that have been committed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I was glad to give way to the Senator from Massachusetts in order that he might give us this interesting statement of our relations with the Republic of Mexico. Having done so, I now desire to resume the remarks which I began on yesterday.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. STONE. I desire to say to the Senator that I do not wish to interrupt the very able and learned discussion which he began on yesterday, but I do desire, when he has completed such part of his speech as he wishes to deliver to-day, to make some observations growing out of the speech just delivered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I will ask the Senator from California if he can indicate about how much time he will likely occupy to-day?

Mr. WORKS. I expect to conclude what I have to say within an hour.

Mr. STONE. Very well. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I am sorry to interrupt the course of the discussion that has been opened by the Senator from Massachusetts, but I had given notice yesterday that I would conclude to-day what I have to say, and gave way at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, with the consent of the Senator from North Carolina who is in charge of the bill which is the unfinished business.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. WORKS resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. The speech entire is as follows:

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it has come to be regarded as a sacred duty of the National Government to maintain and preserve the public health. In the performance of this duty we have established a bureau of the Treasury Department known as the Public Health Service. We have been making lavish appropriations for this service. The annual expenditures for the Health Service in its various branches, including the Army and Navy, now exceed $20,000,000 a year. We have a Surgeon General at the head of the Public Health Service proper, a Surgeon General of the Army and a Surgeon General of the Navy, and under them an army of surgeons, assistant surgeons, and subordinates of various and sundry kinds running up into the thousands. In a statement issued nearly two years ago by the Secretary of the Treasury, under a resolution offered by me calling for information, a detailed enumeration of expenditures in the interest of the public health was given and a summary of the information thus furnished and also a brief recapitulation by departments, as follows:

Departments and bureaus.	Expenses of operation and maintenance.	Salaries and other compensation.	Total expenses.	Number of officers and employees.
State Department	$36,084.09		$36,084.09
Treasury Department	668,289.55	$1,236,413.49	1,904,703.04	1,507
War Department	2,875,574.56	2,838,516.13	5,714,090.69	4,521
Panama Canal	628,641.44	991,749.68	1,620,391.12	1,634
Soldiers' Home, Washington, D. C.	65,469.01	23,415.56	88,884.57	89
National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers	755,022.61	291,719.21	1,046,741.82	1,244
Navy Department	1,911,522.88	1,819,000.00	3,730,522.88	2,074
Interior Department	892,422.70	684,691.40	1,577,114.10	1,278
Department of Agriculture	347,225.60	3,551,977.28	3,899,202.88	3,159
Department of Commerce and Labor	44,739.83	95,060.03	139,799.86	98
Department of Justice	32,598.18	9,953.00	42,551.18	28
Total	8,257,590.45	11,542,495.78	19,800,086.23	15,632

This shows an expenditure for the health service of the Government for the fiscal year 1912 of $19,800,086.23, considerably more than half of which was paid for the salaries and other compensation of 15,632 employees, all of whom were of one school of medicine or under its control. No other school of medicine or mode of healing is recognized or considered. The number of employees and expenses have been largely increased since then. In the endeavor to preserve the public health we have given the Surgeon General and his subordinates almost unlimited powers. We have usurped the constitutional rights and liberties of the individual. If contagion is feared, or an epidemic of disease, the Surgeon General is clothed with or assumes despotic and autocratic power. His authority is not exceeded by that of the general of the Army in time of martial law. He represents, for the time being, the enormous and unrestrained police power of the Government. He may restrain and imprison a citizen and prescribe and enforce the habits of the people, what they shall eat and what they shall wear, and where and how they may live. Even in ordinary times his power is little less despotic and unrestrained. When we travel he may determine for us what we shall drink and how we shall drink it. The useless and unnecessary precautions taken to keep us in good health are often burdensome and humiliating in the extreme.

Mr. President, we have given over this vast power over the lives and habits of our people to one public official, and the people are compelled to submit to his domination and dictation whether they will it or not. But, unfortunately, most of our citizens are willing and submissive slaves to the doctor whether he appears in the uniform of a public official or serves in a private capacity. The extent to which intelligent people submit to the ministrations of the physician or surgeon, take his obnoxious drugs, and submit to be carved, mutilated, and maimed by the surgeon's knife is one of the wonders of the age. The country is filled with hospitals, many of them veritable slaughterhouses, as reputable surgeons themselves bear witness. The incompetency and recklessness of some physicians and surgeons have filled more graves and mutilated and maimed for life more of their unfortunate victims, made more drunkards, and drug fiends, and more helpless and suffering invalids than probably any other cause. And, sir, it is in the hands of a profession composed to a large extent of such as these that the health and happiness of a suffering and deluded people now mainly rest, and that in large measure by force of laws enacted by Congress and State legislatures. And this is not the worst. Our Public Health Service has been given over without question to just one school of medical men to the absolute exclusion of all other modes of healing. The allopathic or old school of medicine, called by themselves the "regular" school, is made the standard mode of healing and is supreme. No different method is recognized or even considered. No citizen, in time of existing or threatened contagion or epidemic of disease, is allowed to exercise his individual belief or conscience as to the manner or mode of preserving or restoring his health. He must submit to the rules and regulations of the Health Department, eat and drink what it dictates, swallow the vile drugs it prescribes, and live where and as it commands. The service maintains a press bureau and sends broadcast over the country, at public expense, literature, mostly doctors' opinions about microbes and causes of disease and how to circumvent them, that breeds fear, which in turn produces and fosters disease and cures or saves none who are unwise enough to read it, which, fortunately, very few people do.

At this very moment we have before us bills of various kinds intended to enlarge and extend the powers of this service. We have them and pass them every session. The demands of the force for greater power and larger pay are continuous and insatiable. We grant their requests and submit to their continuous demands because of our childlike confidence in the infallibility of the doctors in the matter of health. If they say it is necessary for the public good, who is there with wisdom enough to question their actual or assumed technical knowledge on the subject? We have other bills before us, and they are being introduced at nearly every session of every legislature, intended to perpetuate the old school of medicine and to exclude from consideration every other school of medicine or method of healing. Among other bills that have been pressed for consideration and passage is what is known as the radium bill. Like many other bills of the present time, it is fathered and urged for passage by one of the departments of the Government, moved thereto by the doctors. Its purpose is to preserve in the National Government the title to all radium-bearing public lands. What for and on what theory? Because some doctors have said and some people believe that radium is a cure for the dread disease of cancer. This claim is stoutly denied by other physicians of high character and standing; but no matter, Congress is asked, in effect, to indorse and become sponsor for the radium cure for cancer. It now indorses with all its great power and backs with its unlimited influence, resources, and wealth one school of medicine, and in practice condemns every other so far as governmental health activities are concerned, and compels the people to receive into their bodies vile and loathsome serums and other remedies. But that is not enough. We are asked now to step in and monopolize in the Government the radium trade, and at the same time advertise this mineral as a specific for cancer, and hold out what is certain to prove a false and delusive hope to the poor unfortunates who are suffering from this disease, rob them of their money to the advantage of speculators in human lives, and add to the discomfort and suffering of those so afflicted.

Mr. President, the consideration of these conditions and many others that might be mentioned has strongly influenced me to lay before the Senate some reasons why the Government should no longer cling to one mode of healing to the exclusion of every other and lend its powerful aid to the building up of one school of medicine. I have come to this conclusion with no little reluctance. To me the administration of the Public Health Service is a sacred duty. It affects the comfort, the health, the liberty, and the lives of millions of our people. We have constituted ourselves the guardians of the public health. It is a guardianship that we can not delegate, without reason or intelligent inquiry, to any school of medicine. This great Nation, through its Congress and other agencies, should be broad enough to seek and try, without prejudice or bias, to find the most effective means of preserving the public health, and have courage enough to apply it to the needs of the people, but always leaving every citizen perfectly free to resort to such means of preserving his health as he desires and believes in. If one wants the doctor, whether allopathic, homeopathic, or of any other school, he has just as much right to choose his physical remedy as he has to choose his church. So, if he believes in Christian Science as a means of preventing and healing disease, his right to resort to that remedy is just as sacred in this free country as is the right of the other man to resort to the doctor and his material remedies.

The Government may properly investigate and educate and advise, but it has no right to coerce any citizen to resort to or use any remedy against his own will, judgment, or conscience. I have strong convictions on this subject of physical healing, the result of long suffering and an abundant personal experience. I hope and believe that these bitter experiences and my final relief from my physical ailments and great sufferings for many years by means other than those now fostered and maintained by the Government have not made me a fanatic or unreasonable or unjust toward people who do not believe as I do and have no sympathy with my views or convictions. I recognize the fact, and here acknowledge it with pleasure, that there are many high-minded and conscientious men engaged in the medical profession who are doing very much to alleviate human suffering. They are loyally and faithfully devoting their lives to this great purpose. To such as these I accord great honor. They are entitled to and deserve and have my entire sympathy in their efforts. Many of them are devoted and self-sacrificing humanitarians. But the difference between us is that some of them have not discovered a better remedy for disease than the one they employ, and others are not yet willing to acknowledge that there is a better mode of healing than their own, in the face of the most convincing evidence to that effect, while I, in my own experience and by later observations, have been convinced that drugs and other material alleged remedies do not heal and that there is a remedy that, if rightly applied, will heal all our diseases. I have been the more reluctant to enter upon this discussion because it necessarily leads in an indirect way into a discussion of religion, because of the conscientious belief on my own part, and of thousands of others, that the healing of disease is as much a religious rite as redemption from sin, and that the same principle that regenerates the sinner, applied in precisely the same way, heals the sick. So, in presenting my views on this subject, I come directly in opposition to two powerful forces—contrary religious convictions as sincere as my own and the medical profession, that sees its teachings of centuries put in peril and about to be overthrown and its material interests invaded. The one defends his calling upon which he depends for a livelihood, and holds stubbornly to his position that all knowledge and understanding of disease and its cure is confined to the medical profession, especially his own school of medicine, and that all who believe in or practice any other mode of healing are therefore fakirs and quacks. He assumes at once that the practice of any mode of healing except his own is a menace to health and life and should be suppressed by law. Some of these are honest and conscientious in their views, while others are themselves frauds and fakirs and are looking alone to their own selfish interests. The other class, often intelligent and conscientious, fear, or profess to fear, that the only safe plan of salvation is put in peril, and denounce those who believe that the only true source of healing is divine as un-Christian and unbelievers who are contributing to the loss of men's souls as well as their bodies. Men, and especially women, change their religious views with the greatest reluctance, and only upon convincing and, to them, unanswerable evidence of the error of their beliefs.

The world has been taught for centuries to believe that religion pertains only to the spiritual; that man is a material being and can only be healed when he is sick by material means; and that the only resort in case of disease is the doctor and his drugs. Consequently, their faith in the doctor has become a fixed fact. They see no other means of relief. To such as these, to assail the methods of the doctor in whom they put their trust is to attack their household god, their sole and only source of relief in sickness, their shield and buckler in the battle of life. Not only so, but the great masses of the people believe that God, in his wisdom, sends sickness and disease upon his children to punish and chasten them in their course through life. But, strange as it may seem, they at once question the divine decree and resort to the doctor for relief from its effects. Thus they array the doctor against God, the supposed cause of disease, with the hope that he may frustrate the divine purpose. So the doctors and the All Wise Father of us all, whom we worship as divinely and wholly good, are made to appear as enemies striving against each other, with God on the wrong side. How inconsistent and unreasonable it all seems when we come to think about it.

Mr. President, I have no animosities against either the doctor or the preacher. So long as people believe as the majority of them now do, they are both necessary—the one to minister to the prevailing belief about sickness and disease, their cause and their cure, and the other to meet the necessities of erroneous but conscientious beliefs about man and his relation to his Maker. I have no criticism to pass upon the good faith and worthy purposes of the one or the other. My purpose is to consider principles and not men, and to show, if I can, that the prevailing beliefs about God and his relation to sickness, disease, and suffering here on earth are mistaken, and that through those mistaken beliefs and the practices growing out of them sickness and suffering are increased and not diminished, and that it is the solemn duty of the Government to abandon its position of accepting one school of doctors as the only reliable school and the remedies they recommend and use as the only ones to be depended upon, and to investigate, through broad-minded, unbiased, disinterested men, all sources of healing, with the common good always in view and with the fundamental doctrine of freedom and liberty of conscience to the citizen always in mind.

Of course the reliability of different methods of healing must, in part at least, be tested by comparison one with another. All human methods are necessarily imperfect, as is every method that must be exercised and applied through human agencies. History has disclosed but one perfect healer of both sin and disease, and even in his case it is said that under certain adverse circumstances and conditions good and perfect work could not be done. But, sir, I maintain and think I shall show before I have concluded that there is a perfect principle and system of healing which, if rightly and understandingly applied, will prevent or cure any and every disease of whatever kind or nature, and that the failure to heal any disease in a given case is not the fault of the healing principle but results from the erroneous attempted application of it. Before I have done I will produce my witnesses, proving to the satisfaction of any unbiased and reasoning mind the truth of the claim I am making. Some of the witnesses I know personally and can vouch for their integrity and reliability. Others I can vouch for from the recommendations of others, who are known by me personally as reliable and trustworthy. I shall not knowingly bring to the attention of the Senate any evidence that is not worthy of entire confidence. This is a solemn subject, that no man can afford to trifle with, and one about which it would be cruel and unjust, yea, inhuman, to mislead or deceive. So, Mr. President, I shall deal with the subject with entire freedom and frankness. It will be my endeavor to show, in the first instance, the unreliability of the methods of healing and preventing disease now resorted to in the public service and promoted and maintained at the public expense and the cruel injustice of excluding from consideration or practical application other methods that have brought health, comfort, and happiness to millions of people, who are rejoicing and praising God for their deliverance from sorrow and suffering. I can not remain silent while the Government, which in part I represent, is a party to such injustice.

In dealing with this question and criticizing methods and measures I exclude from consideration the work that has been done in the way of sanitation. This work, on the part of the Public Health Service, is to be commended. I do not question its efficacy or value as a means of preventing disease.

Mr. President, I hope Senators will understand that in what I am about to say it is not my purpose or my desire to criticize or attack any individual profession or class. My sole object is to show the injustice and inconsistency of the National Government looking to one school or kind of healing to the exclusion of all others, and of laws intended to exalt that one school and suppress and destroy every other. To do this I must perform the unpleasant duty of showing not only that this school is unreliable and unworthy of the confidence and support of the Government but that there are other remedies, and remedies that the Government is refusing to consider, that are more reliable and trustworthy. Not only so, but the right of individuals to resort to the remedies of their choice is constantly being violated and the application of those remedies forbidden by law and made a penal offense. It is a most serious question, involving the liberties of the people in a matter of life and death and, to some of them, of liberty of religion and conscience.

I am not pleading for legislation in favor of any class or any mode of healing. What I insist upon is that no class shall be oppressed or prevented from doing their work by adverse and restrictive legislation. In short, I stand for liberty of thought and conscience, for justice to all classes and all people.

INEFFICIENCY AND DANGER OF MEDICAL HEALING.

In the preface to a pamphlet entitled "The Fallacy of the Prevailing Practice of Medicine," by Alexander K. Calhoun, it is very well said:

When the people see medical men so persistent, as they now are, in their attempts to establish a medical oligarchy in this State, and see millions of dollars of their money going into health boards, it is but natural for them to conclude that the time has arrived to thoroughly investigate the prevailing practice of medicine in order to determine whether or not the doctors give value received for their money.

In this same pamphlet are given the opinions and conclusions of many leading doctors reflecting more severely than I should want to do on their own profession. I give these quotations here, omitting the comments made upon them by the author:

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, who was a past master in the practice of medicine, said: "Mankind has been drugged to death, and the world would be better off if the contents of every apothecary shop were emptied into the sea, though the consequences to the fishes would be lamentable."

The celebrated John Abernathy, professor of anatomy and surgery, Royal College of Surgeons, author of Surgical Observations on the Constitutional Origin and Treatment of Local Diseases, said: "There has been a great increase of medical men of late years; but, upon my life, diseases have increased in proportion."

Prof. Hermann Boerhaave, M. D., a celebrated German physician, said: "If we weigh the good that has been done to mankind by a handful of true disciples of Æsculapius against the evil wrought to the human race by a great number of doctors since the origin of the art of medicine to our own time, we shall doubtless come to think that it would have been better had there never been any doctor in the world."

Prof. C. A. Gilman, M. D., says: "A mild mercurial course and mildly cutting a man's throat are synonymous terms."

Prof. François Magendie, M. D., Paris member of the French Institute of Medicine, celebrated physiologist and teacher, wrote and lectured as follows: "Let us no longer wonder at the lamentable want of success which marks our practice when there is scarcely a sound physiological principle among us. I hesitate not to declare, no matter how sorely I should wound our vanity, that so gross is our ignorance of the real nature of the physiological disorder called disease that it would perhaps be better to do nothing and resign the complaint into the hands of nature than to act as we are frequently compelled to do, without knowing the why and wherefore of our conduct, at the obvious risk of hastening the end of our patients."

In addressing his medical class, he said: "Gentlemen, medicine is a great humbug. I know it is called science. It is nothing like science. Doctors are merely empirics when they are not charlatans. Gentlemen, you have done me the honor to come here to attend my lectures, and I must tell you frankly now, in the beginning, that I know nothing in the world about medicine, and I don't know anybody who does know anything about it. Who can tell me how to cure the headache, or the gout, or diseases of the heart? Nobody. Oh, you tell me doctors cure people. I grant you people are cured, but how are they cured? Gentlemen, nature does a great deal; imagination a great deal; doctors—devilish little, when they don't do any harm. Let me tell you, gentlemen, what I did when I was physician at the Hotel Dieu: Some three or four thousand patients passed through my hands every year. I divided the patients into two classes; with one I followed the dispensary and gave the usual medicine, without having the least idea why or wherefore; to the others I gave bread pills and colored water, without, of course, letting them know anything about it; and occasionally, gentlemen, I would create a third division, to whom I would give nothing whatever. These last would feel that they were neglected, but nature invariably came to the rescue, and all the third class got well. There was but little mortality among those who received the bread pills and colored water, but the mortality was greatest among those who were carefully drugged according to the dispensary."

Prof. William Cullen, M. D., famous teacher, lecturer, and author of the world-renowned Treatise on Materia Medica, published the following: "Our Materia Medicas are filled with innumerable false deductions, which are nevertheless said to be derived from experience."

Prof. Martin Payne, M. D., said: "Drugs do but cure one disease by producing another."

In the Philadelphia Record, April 9, 1905, Dr. S. Solis Cohen said: "Until quite recently one of the most efficacious remedies for tuberculosis in its milder forms was raw meat, which was given the patient at least once a day, but after a time we discovered that this had a tendency to generate tapeworms, and as a result the treatment is now practically obsolete."

John Mason Good, M. D., F. R. S., author of The Study of Medicine, in that work says: "The science of medicine is a barbarous jargon, and the effects of our medicines on the human system are in the highest degree uncertain, except, indeed, that they have destroyed more lives than war, pestilence, and famine combined."

Dr. Reid said: "More infantile subjects are perhaps destroyed by the mortar and pestle than in the ancient Bethlehem fell victims in one day to the Herodian massacre."

The celebrated Dr. Ramage said: "It can not be denied that the present system of medicine is a burning shame to its professors, if, indeed, a series of vague and uncertain incongruities deserves to be called by that name. How rarely do our medicines do good! How often do they make our patients really worse! I fearlessly assert that in most cases the sufferer would be safer without a physician than with one. I have seen enough of the malpractice of my own professional brethren to warrant the strong language I employ."

The venerable Prof. Alex. H. Stephens, M. D., of the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, said: "The older physicians grow the more skeptical they become of the virtues of medicine, and the more they are disposed to trust to the powers of nature."

Francis Adams, A. M., M. D., LL. D., M. R. C. S., said: "We can not think of the changes in professional opinions since the days of John Hunter without the most painful feelings of distrust in all modes of treatment."

John Stileman Bostock, M. R. C. S., L. S. A., in his history of medicine, says: "And in the space of less than 40 years we have gone through three revolutions of opinion with respect to our treatment of typhoid, a disease of very frequent occurrence and of the most decisive and urgent symptoms."

Dr. Adam Smith said: "The chief cause of quackery outside the profession is the real quackery in the profession."

Prof. Reil said: "Our knowledge of the effects of medicine is empirical."

Thomas Smith, F. R. C. S., the great surgeon, wrote: "Medicine as a whole, as it comes to us, has none of the exact laws of science, nor are its doctrines capable of demonstration."

Deitrick George Kieser, a great physician and a highly esteemed authority in medicine, said: "In many cases the old saying holds good, that the remedy is worse than the disease, and the doctor does more mischief than the malady."

From a medical journal of April, 1904, we clip the following: "Drug treatment is useless in cases of pneumonia. The medical profession, so far as medicines are concerned, can be of no assistance in the fight against this disease. The sooner the profession will acknowledge this to the public, and set to work to discover some specific to save pneumonia patients, the better for all concerned."

This startling statement by Dr. Arthur D. Bevan, who stands high in the profession, has stirred up the members of the Chicago Medical Society at their meeting. Several physicians sprang to their feet to protest against this arraignment. All had to admit, however, that there is no definite remedy known, and they based their protests solely on the fact that they might influence the patient favorably and cure him solely by the moral effect of their presence.

From a paper by Dr. J. H. Kellogg: "Dr. Billings, president of the American Medical Association, in his address in 1903, at New Orleans, made the assertion, almost without qualification: 'Drugs do not cure.' Yet many thousands of medical men still plod on in the old beaten paths of artificial therapeutics, dosing their patients with varied drugs and combinations of drugs, regardless of the irrational character of such a course, and contend that they have abundant authority and precedent for what they do."

From the Philadelphia Record, May 5, 1905: "Dr. Oliver T. Osborn, of Yale University and president of the American Therapeutic Society, in his address on 'The Therapeutic Art,' delivered at the meeting of the society held yesterday in the pink room of the Bellevue-Stratford, said: 'The educated physician of to-day rarely speaks of curing, but constantly of managing a disease. He leaves the word "cure" for practitioners of a dogma, for quacks and nostrum venders. The management of a disease means the diet, hygiene, climate, water, electricity if indicated, and the necessary drugs.'"

Dr. James Gregory, who admittedly added as much reputation to the medical department of the University of Edinburgh as any other of her professors, said: "Ninety-nine in the hundred medical 'facts' are medical lies, and the most medical theories are stark, startling nonsense."

Prof. Marie François Cavier Bichat, M. D., French anatomist, biologist, physiologist, physician, and author, wrote: "Medical practice is said to be contradictory. I say more—it is not in any respect a profession worthy to be followed by sensible men."

Herbert A. Parkyn, M. D., said: "The laymen are familiarizing themselves with suggestive therapeutics and are healing and being healed by it in various guises, and they will soon be called upon to pronounce for or against it. Physicians are not in the class that will be permitted to pass final judgment on the practice of the healing art."

Charles Kidd, M. D., M. R. C. S., author of various treatises, wrote: "It is a sad and humiliating confession that at present our chiefest hopes of medical reform exist in the outer educated public."

Dr. J. Wylie Anderson said: "The doctors are desirous of medical legislation to protect the dear public—in fact, to save themselves. This country was sought for and founded by people of foreign lands, who fled from persecutions because of their beliefs, and the express constitutional provision was made that they were not to be interfered with in their pursuits of life, liberty, and happiness. All medical legislation is of itself in the nature of class legislation, asked for by the few and not by the masses. When the latter are happy and are not seeking redress, why should the former force upon them medical restrictions, unless from selfish motives? While believing in the highest education and qualification, I, for one, do not wish to stand for such methods; and until the demand is made by the people I am an advocate of liberty in things medical and of giving to every adult the right to pursue in his own way any method of healing that appeals to him, proving to himself the good or bad of each dogma.

"Our lawmakers should remember that the Indian tribes, with their limited amount of learning and intelligence, successfully healed themselves for ages past, as was demonstrated by their ability to endure fatigue, exposure, and hardship. Then surely the whites at this day, with their far more learning and intelligence, are capable of selecting the safest and best methods of healing, and therefore should not be prevented from exercising this privilege by State medical laws created for the sole benefit of a class of physicians who follow the dispensary as aforesaid and attempt to cure one disease by producing another. Why should these doctors be entitled to receive any recognition or protection from the State? Why should a vast army of these men have the right, as they now have, to give to sick people anything they please, even though it be patent medicine from the drug store, without the least idea why or wherefore, kill or cure? Why are State laws made to encourage and protect such practices? Is it any wonder that Oliver Wendell Holmes said mankind has been drugged to death? And does not the fact of there being about four times as many doctors in this country as are needed explain why the Americans are the shortest-lived people on the earth, the average being but 24.9 years? This marks the difference between the present condition of the whites and that of the old Indian tribes.

"As the doctors now want a national health bill passed, it will be well for us to seriously consider the question, Shall the American Medical Association or the people control this country in the future?"

Mr. President, this is melancholy reading to people who have been taught to rely upon the doctors and their medicines for relief in case of sickness and disease and who are dependent upon them for help. To thousands of us who have ceased to be dependent upon such remedies for the healing of disease it is only the revelation of the great truth that disease can not be healed by material means.

It is admitted on all sides that there are many well-known diseases that, from the standpoint of the medical doctor, are incurable. Before these the doctor stands entirely helpless and is forced to admit it. And these are the diseases that need to be cured. The others will get well of themselves. So where the doctor or some other healing influence is needed he and his remedies are useless, and in the others he is a needless expense and his drugs often create diseases and deadly habits that did not exist before. The only need of the doctor—and in this respect he is useful and does much good—is to allay the fear that engenders disease and often prevents recovery. Faith in the doctor allays fear and promotes and often brings about recovery from functional or curable diseases; but bread pills flavored with the faith and confidence of the patient are just as effective and much less dangerous than all the drugs he may administer. This is well known and acknowledged by nearly all of the doctors themselves, and is coming to be well understood by others.

Perhaps the worst feature of the doctors' mistakes is their wrong diagnosis of cases. The inability to properly diagnose a case is not necessarily an evidence of either incompetency or negligence. There are certain diseases that can be discerned by the layman, the symptoms are so evident. There are others that baffle and deceive the most skillful physician or surgeon. So I am not holding the doctor as always culpable in making such mistakes. But many of them are culpable, and their diagnoses are the result of either incompetence or carelessness. But whatever the cause of them, the large percentage of such mistakes has resulted in the most disastrous consequences and untold suffering. They show also what I am trying to demonstrate, namely, the uncertainty of medical and surgical practice. They not only fail to heal, but they kill untold numbers, how many no one can tell. Dr. Richard C. Cabot, holding a chair of medicine in Harvard University, author of a standard textbook on physical diagnosis, and probably one of the ablest physicians in the country, delivered an address before the American Medical Association at its annual session of 1910 entitled "A study of mistaken diagnosis." It is an exceedingly interesting paper that has been very favorably commented upon, and the doctor very justly commended for his courage and frankness in disclosing his own mistakes in diagnosis. I take the following extract from an editorial of the National Druggist as giving a brief statement of the result of the showing made:

The analysis, as may be supposed, is a very comprehensive one, embracing almost every type of disease in various stages and manifestations, and represents a careful and systematic investigation of every case, both before and after death. Its net result shows that the diagnosis was correct in only about 50 per cent of the entire aggregation of cases. In the other 50 per cent the post-mortem demonstrated that he was mistaken in his diagnosis, either by commission or omission; i. e., he had either diagnosed conditions which were not present or had overlooked those that were there; and it must be borne in mind that in this 50 per cent of correct diagnoses there were a large number of cases of diseases whose manifestations are so plain that the merest tyro in medicine would recognize them almost at a glance, such, for instance, as typhoid fever, diabetes, pneumonia, meningitis, valvular disease of the heart, and others which present a well-marked and easily recognized group of symptoms.

It is therefore plain that if all these simple cases had been eliminated the proportion of mistakes would have been much greater, for, according to Dr. Cabot's statements, the percentage of correct diagnoses reached the low figures of 16 per cent in acute nephritis, 20 per cent in acute pericarditis, 22 per cent in chronic myocarditis, 33 per cent in broncho-pneumonia, and so on.

Now, if a man of Dr. Cabot's recognized supremacy in the field of diagnosis, with the courage and candor to face the real facts, confesses that he is only able to make a correct diagnosis in something like 50 per cent of all the cases that he undertakes, and considerably less than that in those diseases which make anything like a tax upon expert skill, what is the irresistible conclusion concerning the thousands of practicing physicians whose skill in this direction is admittedly far below that of Dr. Cabot, who have not the facilities that lie at his command and whose opportunities for verification or disproof are practically nil?

The following brief statement along the same line is taken from the London Daily Mail of June 24, 1907:

MISTAKEN DIAGNOSES.

In the annual report on the work of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, published to-day, it is noted that the cases of mistaken diagnosis admitted number 2,151. The percentage of error amongst cases certified as scarlet fever was 5.2 and amongst diphtheria cases 18.3.

The mistakes amongst cases certified as enteric fever were very numerous, being 33.7 per cent for all hospitals, and attaining the extraordinarily high figure of 52.1 per cent amongst the admissions at the South-Western Hospital.

An investigation by the hospital investigating committee showed that autopsies upon patients that died in Bellevue Hospital showed that 47.7 per cent of the diagnoses of diseases in that hospital were mistaken. The superintendent of that hospital is reported to have said that that was a very good showing, and that in the Massachusetts hospitals the average of erroneous diagnoses ran higher than 50 per cent.

As the doctors believe that different diseases call for different remedies, that each disease is caused by a different germ and can be healed only by a microbe whose business in the economy of things is to destroy that particular disease producer, the disastrous consequences of missing the disease and its germ in half the cases and prescribing the wrong microbe in the form of a serum or in some other preparation may well be imagined. It is not to be wondered at that the patients became the subjects of an autopsy, to find that their death more than likely resulted from the mistaken diagnosis of some doctor, whose good intentions may be conceded after the death of his patient and a revealing autopsy.

MISTAKES AND TERRORS OF SURGERY.

Surgery has become one of the most common remedies for disease as well as injuries. It is more scientific in its operation than the practice of medicine. Some surgeons have become wonderfully skillful in the use of the knife. They apparently vie with each other in the effort to show how far the human body can be carved and mutilated and the patient still live. The desire to use the knife has become a mania with many surgeons. No one who has noticed the extent to which surgery is resorted to in these modern times can fail to know that thousands of lives are needlessly sacrificed and thousands of persons made invalids and cripples for life by this means. This occurs sometimes from the eagerness to operate but more frequently from ignorance and incompetency, but more commonly still from wrong diagnosis of disease. A conspicuous case of the latter was called to my attention a short time ago, where a bright young boy was saved from an operation by which he would have been made a cripple for life and which was declared by expert surgeons to be necessary to save the child's life. The facts, briefly stated, are these, as I had them from the lips of the boy's father: He was taken violently ill and was suffering agonies of pain. Specialists in surgery were called in, who, after examination and consultation, pronounced the case one of spinal meningitis. They informed the parents of their conclusion and that the only remedy was an operation that would mean curvature of the spine and make the boy a cripple for life. I knew the child, and his parents have been my friends for many years. He was a boy of fine promise and until then strong, hearty, and vigorous. The agonized parents, in this extremity, asked leave to call in their family physician, who was not an expert surgeon. The surgeons consented. The physician came and, after a careful examination in the presence of the others, said to them: "This boy hasn't a single symptom of spinal meningitis. There is nothing the matter with him but a stoppage of the bowels." He gave him a simple remedy for that trouble, and the next day the boy was playing out in the yard. The father, who is a man of high character and a prominent banker in my home city, said to me that he trembled yet when he thought how near his boy Jack, who was the apple of his eye, came to being made a lifelong cripple by the surgeon's knife.

Another case that came under my personal observation, and of which I shall speak in more detail before I have concluded, was that of a young child 3 or 4 years old. She had serious trouble with one of her eyes. As in the other case, specialists were called in. They reached the conclusion that there was a malignant growth behind the eye, presumably cancerous, that could be cured only by an operation. They informed the parents that the operation would be so delicate and dangerous that no one in Los Angeles would undertake it, and advised the parents to take the child to eastern surgeons as the only means of saving her life. The parents did not take the advice, and the child was soon after healed by other means, as I shall explain later on.

These are two striking cases; one of wrong diagnosis, that would, but for the forethought of the parents, have resulted in a tragedy, the other from the mistake of the doctors in believing that there is no means of healing but their own. These two young lives were saved from the knife in spite of the mistakes of the doctors; but how many lives, young and old, have been sacrificed by such mistakes followed to their ghastly conclusions none of us can tell. There is no means of knowing. But surgeons and physicians, many of them conscientious and humane, deplore this condition more even than the laymen. They realize it more and probably sympathize with it less than we do, because they can comprehend its fearful consequences better than we can. Such as these have protested against and pointed out the frequency and the dreadful consequences of mistaken diagnosis and too frequent operations.

This is shown by the following account of the proceedings of the American Medical Association at the session of June, 1912, taken from the Philadelphia North American:

SURGEON ROUNDLY FLAYS HOSPITAL INCOMPETENCE—DR. JOHN B. MURPHY SAYS CLUMSY MEN AND UNSKILLED ANESTHETIZERS CAUSE MANY DEATHS AND OPERATIVE FAILURES.

[By J. Solis-Cohen, jr.]

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 5.

A bomb was exploded in the camp of the hospitals late this afternoon when Dr. John B. Murphy, of Chicago, one of the most distinguished surgeons in America, declared at a meeting of the hospital section of the American Medical Association that these institutions suppress the number of deaths and infections occurring after operations in order that the medical profession generally and the public shall not learn of the surgeon's failure and carelessness in operating.

He also declared that a halt should be called in the use of vaccines, which he terms most dangerous and wicked playthings; that the greatest mortality in a hospital is caused by incompetent men administering anesthetics; and concluded his remarks by stating that things occur in a hospital that would not stand the light of day, and unless the institutions themselves forbid the use of their operating rooms to clumsy and unskilled surgeons there is a danger of the legislators stepping in.

Dr. Murphy's remarkable paper was a complete surprise to the members of the section, which is chiefly composed of medical directors of hospitals and sanitariums and members of the medical staff. In view of the recent investigation of certain Philadelphia hospitals, as well as municipal institutions in Atlantic City and other places, it is evident that Dr. Murphy's address will be given careful consideration and his recommendation that the American Medical Association, through State committees, collect mortality statistics about every hospital in the country, carried out at once.

Mr. President, take, for example, the recent craze for removing the tonsils by surgery. This generally useless and cruel torture of young children has come largely from the modern medical idea that the public health calls for the enforced examination of all school children.

Dr. John M. Mackenzie, professor of laryngology and rhinology in Johns Hopkins University, has discussed this phase of the subject quite freely and frankly, condemning in strong terms the craze for the indiscriminate and useless removal of the tonsils. I take some extracts from an article of his on "The massacre of the tonsils":

During the past years I have been repeatedly urged by medical friends to give some public utterance by way of formal protest against the indiscriminate and wholesale destruction and removal of the tonsils, which, far above all others, is the chief and most glaring abuse in the laryngology of the present day. They have been good enough to say that a word might not be amiss from one who has been through the dust and heat of the conflict that has raged around this and other fancies in surgical laryngology which have arisen and fallen during the quarter of a century that has just passed away.

One of these friends, a distinguished general surgeon of wide experience, large practice, and exceptionally high professional skill, in insisting that I say something on the subject, gave me as his deliberate opinion that of all the surgical insanities within his recollection this onslaught on the tonsils was the worst, not excepting the operation on the appendix. And, indeed, when I look back through an experience of over 30 years, in which I have seen theory after theory, for some of which I have been partially, if not wholly, responsible myself, come and go, materialize and dissolve, I feel that, notwithstanding the fact that I approach the subject with reluctance, with diffidence, with hesitancy—with even timidity—and fully mindful of the truth that we are all liable to error, even the youngest of us, and that nowadays in some quarters apparently age and experience count for nothing, I feel I may be pardoned for saying a few words in what I consider to be the interest of the public health and therefore of the public safety.

Let me at the outset be not misunderstood. It is not my object to stir up strife, to impute unworthy motives to anyone, or to arrogate to myself any superior wisdom in the surgical management of tonsil disease.

Nor do I wish to shift to other shoulders all the blame. I, too, in my earlier days have fallen by the way. Indeed, it was once facetiously said that the street in front of my office was paved with the turbinated bones of my victims.

* * * * * * *

Many years ago Austin Flint was conducting an examination in physiology at the Bellevue Hospital Medical School in New York. Among the students who came up for graduation was a bright young fellow to whom Flint propounded the following conundrum: "What is the function of the spleen?" And the lad replied that the function of the spleen was to enlarge in malarial fever. To the next question, "What is the function of the tonsil?" the boy declared that the function of the tonsil was to swell and suppurate in quinsy. "That will do," said Flint, "you have passed a perfect examination, for you know as much about the subject as I do myself." * * * I remember a long time ago in a discussion on hemorrhage after tonsillotomy before a New York society a distinguished laryngologist made the statement that he had removed without accident many thousands (I have forgotten the exact number) of tonsils, to which declaration an inquisitive, incredulous individual present, with a mathematical turn of mind, said he had made a calculation which showed that in order to have removed that many tonsils within the limit of an ordinary lifetime the operator would have to average a bushel a day.

* * * * * * *

But never in the history of medicine has the lust for operation on the tonsils been as passionate as it is at the present time. It is not simply the surgical thirst from which we have all suffered in our earlier days, just as at a still earlier period we suffered from the measles; it is a mania, a madness, an obsession. It has infected not only the general profession but also the laity.

* * * * * * *

In the annual reports of nearly all the special hospitals for diseases of the nose and throat, the number of tonsils removed, as compared with all other operations on the upper air tract and its appendages, is simply appalling. In conspicuous and refreshing contrast to the usual narratives of these productions, let me quote from the last report of a well-known children's hospital in this city these words of sanity and wisdom:

"The recent universal inspection of the throats of school children has revealed the fact that nearly all children at some time of life have more or less enlarged tonsils.

"That most of these are harmless if not actually physiological, and that their removal in these cases is not only unnecessary but injurious to the proper development of the child is our conviction.

* * * * * * *

"Much wild and incontinent talk, for which their teachers are sometimes largely to blame, has poisoned the minds of the younger generation of operators and thrown the public into hysteria. Tonsillectomy, for example, is held out to them not only as sure cure for but as an absolute prophylactic against rheumatism and heart disease. They are told with the disappearance of the tonsil in man these diseases will cease to exist. Parents bring nowadays their perfectly sound children to the laryngologist for tonsil removal in order to head off these affections. Tonsillectomy is recommended as a curative during the agony of acute articular rheumatism.

"But the origin of the latter disease has recently been traced to an infection of the nasal mucosa following operation. To-morrow it will come from somewhere else. Those of us who are old enough to remember will recall the story of chorea. Years ago we found the cause of this affection in the nasal passages. When this view, after the usual struggle, had to be abandoned, it was suddenly discovered that the eye was the portal of entrance. To-day it has been caught in the tonsil. If we exercise a little patience, it will turn up soon in some other organ.

"In considering the question of operation on the tonsils, and especially complete removal, we must face the following facts:

"1. The functions of the tonsils are, in the present state of our knowledge, unknown. * * *

"2. Whatever its functions may be, and the production of leucocytes is undoubtedly one of them, the tonsil is not, as is generally believed and taught, a lymphatic gland.

"The general ignorance of this fact has led to the useless sacrifice of thousands of tonsils, on the fallacious assumption that their functional activity may easily be replaced by the myriads of other lymphatic glands in the body. The physiological integrity of the tonsil is of the utmost importance in infant and child life."

Dr. Mackenzie is one of the ablest of his profession, and we owe him a debt of gratitude for his fearless exposure and condemnation of this tendency to use the knife unnecessarily and to the injury of the health of its unfortunate and unprotected victims.

Dr. R. K. Smith, in a health talk at the Sunday Commons in Huntington Chambers, Boston, February 1 last, is reported to have praised Dr. Cabot for having exposed the appalling facts relating to the mistakes of the doctors in their hospital work. As reported in the Boston Post, "he showed how fashion instead of actual sickness might play a great part in the treatment of patients by telling that recent investigations indicated astonishing numbers of unnecessary operations in those two fashionable diseases, enlarged tonsils and appendicitis, and that 17 per cent of the appendixes removed at a Boston hospital were shown by autopsies to be normal," and told of a professor at the Johns Hopkins Medical School who declared in a recent treatise that the street before his office was "paved with tonsils that should never have been removed." The pathetic story is told of little Leroy Atkinson, 8 years old, who drew straws with his sister, aged 6, to determine which should undergo an operation for adenoids first. He lost the cut, went bravely to the operating table, and in a few moments was dead. William C. Johnson, 37 years old, died on the operating table in a hospital in Indianapolis, reported to be from the anesthetic. He was undergoing a slight operation on his toe. Complaint was made that Mary E. Mitchell was forced, against her will, to undergo an operation at the Bayview Asylum, Baltimore, Md., from which she died soon after leaving the operating table. Minnie Light, after a sickness of three days, died in Berlin, N. H., alleged to be from a delayed operation for appendicitis after being treated for some other disease through mistaken diagnosis. John Mehrer died in the General Hospital at Spokane, Wash., from an operation on the tonsils. Verne Alexander, aged 8 years, died from the same cause in the office of the surgeon who performed the operation, in the same city, November 22, 1911. At the same hospital in that city, August Mengelkemp, 16 years of age, died from an operation on November 24, 1911. The cause was not learned, because, as reported, the doctors "refused to discuss the case." The 4-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Fred R. Wood, Hammond, Ind., September 26, 1914, died from an operation. Oliver Cramer, aged 15, August 18, 1914, at Gloversville, N. Y., died from lockjaw, resulting from vaccination. Twin children of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Ulmer, Bloomingdale, Ind., aged 5 years, died August 28, 1914, from an operation removing their tonsils. Mena Smith, aged 15 years, daughter of Mrs. O. G. Smith, Salem, Oreg., died August 14, 1914, from the effects of an anesthetic given for operation for tonsillitis. Thousands of such deaths have occurred in this country. The few I have mentioned have been gathered from the local newspapers and reported at the time of their occurrence.

The custom of splitting fees for performing operations has become a common source of revenue for family physicians. This will explain to some extent the enormous number of operations that are being performed. It pays. This scandal was lately exposed by the Chicago News. The following article from the Kansas City Star, reproduced in the Humboldt Union, quoting from a paper read by Dr. Child before the Jackson County Medical Society, will explain the situation:

TOO FREE WITH THE KNIFE—GRAFT AMONG PHYSICIANS SAID TO CAUSE MANY DEATHS.

Fee splitting between family doctors and surgeons who perform operations has been taken up by the Jackson County Medical Society. It has been openly charged in a meeting of the society that "Commercialism, with its parasites, speculation and graft, has a strong hold in the medical profession in Kansas City." Those were the words of Dr. Scott P. Child, chairman of the board of censors of the society, at its last meeting.

It is charged that so universal has become the practice of fee splitting between the physician who gets a case and the surgeon who performs the operation, not only in Kansas City, but throughout Missouri and Kansas, that many physicians get their principal income from their half of the surgeon's fee, and that patients who are in need of operations are hawked around by the family doctors among different surgeons to see which one will give the biggest per cent of his fee to the physician.

But more startling than all is the charge that the family physicians, being enriched by their share of big surgical fees, are straining a point and urge operations where no operation is necessary, and that many have died from this manhandling of patients for big fees.

In the paper which he read before the Jackson County Medical Society Dr. Child made the following statement:

"That such fee splitting is a fact is common history the country over, most flagrantly practiced in our neighboring State of Kansas, and, to our regret, the custom prevails among the profession in this city. To the uninformed, to the doubters, or to those who may believe that proof is wanting, or who, as guilty, may demand evidence to prove their guilt, permit me to say that plenty of proof is in hand and more proof is within easy reach if our society acts upon it as it should."

In his paper Dr. Child made the following specific charges:

"During the last month a physician, a graduate of one of our local medical schools, stated that he had referred operative cases from his town, about 100 miles from Kansas City, to a surgeon and former teacher of his, and that after the operation the surgeon had mailed him a check.

"Recently, on request of the chairman of the board of censors of this society, a member of this society confessed that he had mailed several letters to members of the profession in general practice in which he stated that he was now practicing surgery and was prepared to attend to any work they might refer to him, and concluded by saying: 'The business consideration will be satisfactory.'

"A local physician only recently committed himself in speaking of the number of surgical cases he was referring to a surgeon in this city, of the fees charged, and the fact that he, the physician, received one-half of the money paid by the patients.

"A member of this society, upon graduating a few years ago, and having eye cases to refer to an ophthalmologist, went to a local man of practice and ability and solicited a fee on cases he might refer for special eye treatment. The oculist very honorably refused to buy cases or to pay percentages; and the physician has not referred any cases to him since. Within the past two weeks this same physician referred a special case of another type to a certain specialist in this city and again demanded a division of the fee.

"A very busy surgeon of this society went into a country town to perform an operation upon a boy for appendicitis. The boy was the only child of a family of moderate circumstances. The family physician in the case mailed a check for $500 to the surgeon through a local bank. The surgeon immediately remitted a draft for $200 directly to the family physician. I could give many other instances."

I also call attention to the following item in the Chicago News of January 11, 1911, cabled from Paris, showing that this despicable practice is widespread:

"The scandals of commercialized medicine exposed by the Chicago Daily News," said Dr. Doyen, one of the world's most noted surgeons, "exist not only in America but throughout the world, and are most disgraceful where civilization is supposed to be the highest."

In an interview to-day Dr. Doyen described to the correspondent of the Daily News his experiences and suggested what he believes to be the only remedy. Dr. Doyen was found in a Paris hospital, where he had just completed an operation. He was still wearing his white coat and apron and rubber gloves when the correspondent told him of the articles in the Daily News.

HE PRAISES PUBLICITY WORK.

"That is the best work done by a newspaper in the last decade," he said heartily. "Certainly the horrible situation described exists in France, Germany, and England. It is everywhere, and publicity given it by newspapers is the best remedy. I hope that publications throughout the world will take up the work begun by the Daily News. While undoubtedly there are many honest physicians, civilization to-day is plagued by hordes of men who are worse than the charlatans of the Middle Ages. The evils existing in the days of Molière still flourish. Read the Malade Imaginaire and other plays of Molière and you will find everything, including the doctor who impresses the patient by spouting a string of almost meaningless Latin medical terms."

"What are some of the instances of quackery that you have observed?"

SAYS MURDER IS DAILY EVENT.

"Fee splitting is the commonest. Operations by incompetent surgeons are being performed continually and actual murder is committed in this way almost daily. Other physicians form a ring to exploit a patient, passing him from one to the other, saying, 'Go to Dr. Jones for the eyes, to Dr. Brown for the ears, and to Dr. Smith for the stomach,' etc. One of the commonest witticisms of doctors is: 'A millionaire always has a little piece of cartilage in his nose which can be removed for a large sum of money.' Only last week I overheard one surgeon ask another, 'Why did you operate on So-and-so for cataract before it was ripe?' 'If I had done otherwise, my patient would have gone to another doctor,' was the reply.

"The truth is that medical science has advanced with such rapidity recently that not a few physicians are lost. Intelligent laymen understand modern medical discoveries as well as many professional men, and often better. There is no excuse for a doctor's not explaining a patient's condition in simple language if he knows what the matter is and can explain so the patient can understand. When a doctor does not know he always spouts Latin.

HAS TO KICK OUT LEECHES.

"Physicians telephone to me daily, saying that they have patients requiring operations and asking what commission I will give. When I ask leave to examine the patients they decline to allow it before I have fixed my commission. Sometimes I have to kick such leeches to the door. I also know of several cases of alleged operations in laparotomy when the surgeon merely cut the skin and resewed it.

"Other charlatans, when they hear the name of a man who is about to undergo an operation, search for the name of the surgeon in the case, and sometimes they come three or four at a time demanding commissions, pretending that they are the family physicians of the patient."

"Is it possible for an ordinary physician in Paris to live without such practices?"

"Assuredly, if he is honest."

CHARGE ACCORDING TO WEALTH.

"Do you believe that a doctor should charge in proportion to the wealth of the patient?"

"Yes; because all physicians make no charge to the poor. Also, I believe that a family physician should have a commission when he is forced to advise a patient to go to a specialist. However, instead of the specialist giving the commission secretly, the patient should pay each openly."

"How do you determine the financial status of a patient?"

"The fee should always be discussed and decided before the treatment is begun. People should learn to buy a doctor's services just as they buy clothing."

"Do you believe that such a business arrangement would tend to eliminate the evils mentioned?"

"The evils are due largely to the stupidity of the public, which does not take pains to discriminate between good and bad doctors. The daily press, through leading medical men, should educate the people to use the same common sense regarding the treatment of illness that they use in business."

The following statement of B. F. Goldman, of his experience with the operating doctors, as given in the Boise (Idaho) Capital News of February 23, 1913, is interesting in this connection:

"Several years ago," said Mr. Goldman, "I came to Boise with a swelling in my throat, and, becoming anxious as to what it was, I visited a half dozen of the most prominent physicians and surgeons of the city. Without exception these experts all informed me that I was suffering from goiter and advised me that an immediate operation was necessary. Naturally I did not relish the idea of being cut any more than the average citizen, so I hesitated. I even visited a Chinese doctor, who, to his credit, was the only one among the number visited who advised me against an operation.

"Believing that if I was suffering from such a serious ailment, and must be operated upon, I felt loath to intrust my life to the hands of any but the best surgeons I could find. Accordingly I visited Dr. Housner, of Salt Lake City; Dr. Hamilton, of Topeka, Kans., and others. Without exception the doctors whom I visited outside of Idaho informed me than an operation was not necessary, laughed at my fears, and told me to 'go home and forget it.'

CURE WITHOUT OPERATION.

"With fear and trembling I took their advice, because the idea of being operated upon was repugnant to me. To-day I have no trace of a goiter or any other swelling visible on my throat, and have not been treated in any way for the ailment.

"A number of weeks ago I was lifting a huge bowlder in the mine and suffered a hernia. The local doctor told me that an operation would be necessary, and I hastened to Boise. Here I was told by several physicians and surgeons of high standing that I was suffering from an irreducible hernia and that an immediate operation, costing some hundreds of dollars, would be necessary. I was likewise advised to eat nothing, as eating food, I was told, would kill me. Again I visited a number of physicians and surgeons and finally heard of one who had prevented an operation upon a prominent citizen.

"As a last despairing hope I visited him. After an examination he told me that he would show me in five minutes that my hernia was 'reducible.' In a few moments this physician, with his bare hands, reduced the hernia and to-day I am as sound as ever I was, and that without the use of the scalpel.

"If I had been operated upon I would more than likely be in my grave by this time, or at least would have been injured for life. The instances I have cited are merely my own experiences. I know of many more similar cases and of others in which it is very apparent that surgeons have either operated upon sound persons through ignorance or else for the monetary consideration.

"The only protection for an abused public is legislation which will make the surgeons and physicians legally as well as morally responsible for errors in diagnosis, as well as in deliberate cases where the knife is resorted to in order to collect the big fees usually charged in such cases."

The following comments of Dr. George R. Cruickshank on the work of his profession are interesting and encouraging. They are taken from the Detroit Times, of November 23, 1910:

Dr. George R. Cruickshank, of Windsor, member of the Ontario Medical Council for the counties of Essex, Kent, and Lambton, and one of the leading members of the medical profession in the Dominion, is the author of the foregoing statements. He made them to the Times in his office in Windsor Wednesday morning while commenting on the book Medical Chaos and Crime, recently written by Dr. Norman Barnesby, of Chicago. A review of Dr. Barnesby's book appeared last week in the Times, and caused no end of comment among the doctors of the city and vicinity. Dr. Barnesby, among other things, charges that ignorance, commercialism, and criminal indifference on the part of many doctors are responsible for much human suffering, and that many young physicians obtain experience at the cost of patients' lives.

"I have seen a number of reports on Dr. Barnesby's book," said Dr. Cruickshank, "and I have come to the conclusion that it is really my book. Dr. Barnesby has said just what I planned to say myself when I got the time to write it. But Dr. Barnesby has got ahead of me in regard to having his views placed in book form. For years I have been voicing the sentiments expressed in Dr. Barnesby's book. I have made known my views in papers before medical societies, and taken advantage of every other opportunity to let the medical profession and public know just how I feel about operations. Certain doctors in Detroit and elsewhere have been performing unnecessary operations for years. Abdominal operations have been performed on men and women for no just cause at all. For these operations the patients have paid fabulous sums. Then you may ask, 'Is there graft in medicine?' I am afraid so, and the grafting is made easy by the high standing of the profession. But the worst offenders are not the young doctors; the leaders of the profession are guilty. Thousands of operations are performed which were better left undone. Perhaps the grafters were enthusiasts, not thieves. If that be not the case, then the offending doctors are worse than the man who robs you with a dark lantern and a 'billy.'

"Young doctors operate better than the older ones, but they don't know when to do so. When a man is sick the great question should be, 'What should be done?' The patient should be glad to give his automobile for the answer. He gives too little for advice and too much for the operation. When a man knows he should give $100 for advice before he gives $10 for an operation he will avoid some graft. Meanwhile the grand old profession is at heart self-sacrificing and noble.

"I have seen hundreds of operations which were not necessary, and I will venture to say that no Detroit physician will deny that thousands of operations performed in Detroit are unnecessary."

Dr. Cruickshank deplores the surgical excesses to which the profession has gone in regard to appendicitis, for one thing. In addition to declaring that 75 per cent of the operations for the disease are not necessary, the doctor proudly points to the fact that no patient of his is ever unnecessarily operated on for the ailment. He believes in medical treatment for the cure of the disease.

"No patient suffering from appendicitis should be operated on until it is seen that an operation is absolutely necessary," said the doctor. "Most cases can be cured by proper diet and the administration of medicines and hot or cold applications to the affected portion of the body. Not one of my patients is among those operated on in Detroit, I am glad to say. The appendix is in the body for a purpose, and is not a useless appendage, as claimed by some operators."

Speaking on the practice of removing tonsils, Dr. Cruickshank said: "The fad just now is to remove tonsils. They should not be removed at all. Tonsils are necessary in the throat, otherwise they would not be there. They stand in the throat like two sentinels, ready to take care of any germs which may gather there.

"Some doctors remove them because they get enlarged, but I don't think that is any reasonable excuse. If they become enlarged, it must be for some purpose, probably so they can take care of more than an ordinary amount of germs in the throat. I would remove a tonsil only in case of its being diseased.

"But, happily, customs are changing. While operative excesses are the rule just now, 10 years from now the operators of to-day will be looked on as barbarians. There will be but little unnecessary operating in the future."

But, unfortunately, the criticisms and advice of such members of the profession as Dr. Cruickshank have been of little, if any, avail. The dangerous and life-destroying operations in great and unnecessary numbers still go on. Some time reason and justice may overcome cupidity and greed as the result of wise counsels such as these.

EFFICACY OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HEALING.

Mr. President, I can not speak with authority or from actual knowledge of the healing influences of the various schools of medicine and other means of healing except Christian Science. I have had personal experience in abundance with the so-called regular school of medical practitioners and with homeopathic physicians and a limited experience with osteopathy, none of which were satisfactory. I know nothing of the others except from hearsay. I have no doubt all of them have done much good and some have done less harm than others. The schools of medicine, called irregulars by the allopathic school, have each been compelled to fight their way against the regular school. They came into existence as a protest against the inefficiency of the regulars. The old-school doctors, with their powerful political organizations, have persecuted them with a shocking degree of bigotry and intolerance. They have persecuted them through unjust restrictive laws procured by them from altogether too trusting legislative bodies, but in spite of this persecution these new schools of medicine have been established with more or less success and have gained a greater or less degree of public confidence and favor. All of them have their followers who believe them to be the best means of healing their diseases and ameliorating their sufferings, and the stronger their faith in them the more benefit they derive from their ministrations, but much of this faith and confidence has been misplaced, and as a result many lives have been needlessly sacrificed, many people have unnecessarily been made suffering invalids for life, and many more have been made the hopeless victims of degrading and degenerate habits, caused by the dispensation of habit-forming drugs, that are worse than death. So it is a grave question whether medical practitioners have not done the human race more harm than good. My own experience and observation leads me to believe they have. But some other people do not agree with me. They believe in the different schools of medicine, some in one and some in another. So long as they believe in these remedies they should be protected in their right to resort to them for relief. Naturally practitioners of the various schools of medicine each believe that his school and his medicines are the best and most efficacious of all. But it is a well-known and now an almost uniform belief that there are no healing qualities in drugs. Some of them deaden and destroy the feeling of pain and suffering and give temporary relief, but they do not heal disease. Their effect is temporary and fleeting. As they lose their power over consciousness or feeling the pain and suffering return often with redoubled fury. The anæsthetic destroys consciousness and feeling while the surgeon wields the knife. This is a blessing if the operation is necessary, but it has resulted in many unnecessary operations with deadly consequences.

Mr. President, there is one remedy about which I can speak with confidence and certainty from my own personal experience, confirmed by like experiences that have come under my own observation. I was healed in Christian Science when death was near and after all hope of relief through medical practitioners had been abandoned after long and faithful trial of such remedies. I have seen and known of other cases of healing, many of them of organic and so-called incurable diseases, and after medical practitioners had given up the patient as hopelessly incurable. I am going to call some of these cases of healing to the attention of the Senate, not to advertise Christian Science or to induce anyone to accept or resort to it for relief. Its adherents do not proselyte or advertise it or persuade anyone to accept it. My sole purpose now is to show the cruel injustice and folly of legislating against it in favor of any other means of healing. If it saves lives and ameliorates and mitigates sorrow and suffering and regenerates humanity morally and physically where no other relief is to be had, as I shall show it does, it is not only cruel, it is criminal, to forbid or hinder those from doing so who administer its benefits or who resort to it for relief. I would not have anyone infer from the showing I am about to make that it is, as it is now administered, an infallible remedy and always heals. It does fail to heal sometimes, altogether too often, as all remedies must of necessity do when administered through human imperfect instruments. Some of its patients are disappointed and return to the doctors. They have so long been accustomed to be thumped and pounded and dosed and carved that the quiet and silent Christian Science treatment is too tame for them. They think nothing adequate is being done. Doctors often boast of this return to them of those who have taken up Christian Science as convincing proof that the treatment of disease in that way is a failure. But the fact that thousands of patients have left them for Christian Science never to return, or the fact that those who do return get no relief and are doubly disappointed, makes no impression on their minds, but leaves them strong in the faith that nothing but their method is scientific, regular, or effective. But I am prepared to show that while it fails in individual cases, for reasons that can not always be known or understood, it has healed thousands of cases that under materia-medica treatment would have been incurable. I think I can say with perfect truth that there is no disease not subject to its healing influence, including all of the diseases that are given up by the medical fraternity to be incurable. I am going to give you a few of these cases, many of them coming under my own personal knowledge and observation, the others known to me, through those who have furnished them to me at my request to use as I am now about to use them, to be undoubtedly true and reliable accounts of cases of healing thoroughly authenticated. To mislead anyone by false or unfounded claims in a matter so grave and so important would be cruel and inhuman.

If I have myself been misled as to any of them, I should never cease to regret it. I have for these reasons taken the greatest care in procuring the statements I am about to submit for the candid consideration of the Senate. I shall take the liberty as I go along to state the source of my information and the character and standing of the persons from whom I have received it. None of it has been volunteered. In every instance it has been furnished at my request, with an understanding of the use I intended to make of it. I have called for information from those only upon whose word I felt I could implicitly rely.

Mr. President, I first call attention to a case that came under my own observation, and of which I had personal knowledge. I have mentioned the case in calling attention to the uncertainties and perils of surgery. With as little repetition as possible, I review the facts here. The case is that of a young child 3 or 4 years old, the only daughter of a prominent young business man of Los Angeles, Cal. When I first saw her, she was a beautiful child, with the exception I am about to state. One of her eyes was diseased from infancy; it was believed from birth. The eye and the surrounding parts were badly inflamed, and the eye protruded and seemed almost ready to escape from the socket. This condition gave the side of the face a distorted and distressing appearance. Looked at from one side, the child had beautiful and regularly formed features. From the other side her appearance was repulsive. She was first attended by the family physician, a very worthy and competent member of the profession, whom I know personally. He was unable to give relief. A consultation of specialists in diseases of the kind was called. They concluded that there was a malignant growth, presumably cancerous, behind the eye, and that an operation was necessary to save the child's life. They informed the parents that the operation was so delicate that no one in Los Angeles would undertake it, and advised that the child be taken to the celebrated surgeons, Mayo brothers. The parents had the wisdom in this dreadful emergency to apply to Christian Science for help. I saw the little one at this time and on frequent occasions afterwards. The alarming conditions subsided gradually under the treatment by the Christian Science practitioner and in a few months the child was entirely healed of the trouble. This was five or six years ago, and now the eye is perfectly well and that side of the face is as beautiful as the other.

I submit now for the consideration of the Senate a statement by himself of the healing of Dr. E. F. Burton, now a resident of New York City, but formerly of Los Angeles and Pasadena, Cal. His statement of his experience, in the form of a letter, was furnished at my special request for the use I am now making of it. I have known Dr. Burton since very soon after his marvelous healing. He is a man of superior intelligence and of integrity and high character.

The following is his letter, which states his experience as a physician and surgeon before his healing and his work since that time:

30 EAST FORTY-SECOND STREET,
New York, N. Y., August 21, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your letter of the 10th instant, in which you ask as to my healing and experience through and with Christian Science, I am glad to tell you of the following history.

I am an alumnus of Rush Medical College, Chicago. After graduation I received an appointment, through competitive examination, as interne in Cook County Hospital, of Chicago, one of the largest hospitals in the country, and served an internship of 18 months, after which I was appointed on the surgical staff of the same hospital, and at the same time an instructor in Rush Medical College. I held these positions until forced by ill health to leave the North. In Arizona I was afterwards appointed acting assistant surgeon of the United States Marine Hospital Service for Arizona. I was a member of the American Medical Association until I left medical for Christian Science work.

About 12 years ago I was advised by Drs. Frank Billings and John B. Murphy, whose names are widely known, that I must go to Arizona if I would take my one chance for life, as I would soon die with consumption otherwise. For a year prior to this time I had been taking a preparation of opium, which was then considered to be nonhabit forming, to subdue the symptoms of consumption. When I went to Arizona I tried to stop the drug, but found that I had a well-founded opium habit, and that when I attempted to break it, which I did several times, the lung trouble became too serious to be borne. Thus the habit increased, as it always does. I had been a moderate drinker, but became less moderate in the use of alcohol, and also soon began to use cocaine to alleviate both the effects of the morphine and for throat symptoms. To make a long and miserable story as short as possible, these three things—alcohol, morphine, and cocaine—became my food and drink.

After some time in Arizona I went to southern California—to Pasadena. Here I sought the aid of a hypnotist to enable me to free myself from these habits, but found this method ineffectual. After this experience the quantities of the three things that I was taking was enormously increased, until toward the end I was taking such quantities of morphine and cocaine as no one has ever recovered from, so far as I know. For weeks I took on an average of more than 100 grains each of these two drugs daily hypodermically, and consumed between 1 and 2 quarts of whisky daily. I became entirely demented and a menace to those about me.

At this point, and when I had been entirely unconscious for 48 hours, my wife was obliged to call for a consultation of physicians, and five of my fellow physicians, four of whom had been seeing me for some time, told her that I could not live more than three or four weeks, and that this time must be spent under the strictest restraint. It was arranged that I should be sent to the State asylum the following day if possible. At the request of a friend whose husband had been benefited by Christian Science, Mrs. Burton was induced to allow a Christian Science practitioner to call to see me. Again to make a long story short, he came and spent three hours with me. I have no memory of his coming or of his going, but he left me asleep, and I woke on the following morning free from all of these habits, normal in brain and nerve, hungry, energetic, clear-headed, and happy. I knew the moment that I awoke that something had happened to me, and that, whatever had done it, I was free from the awful things that had bound me. But I did not know what it was that had done it until I was told.

That was nine years ago the 20th of April of this year. From that moment I have never felt the slightest appetite for any opiate, cocaine, or alcohol in any form, have never felt any symptom of lung trouble, and have been mentally sound and clear. Nor was there a moment of convalescence. My bowel condition was normal, whereas these organs are in such dreadful conditions even where a moderate quantity of opium has been habitually taken that there are weeks of keenest suffering attendant upon withdrawal of the drug. My nerves were steady and quiet. I read quietly and with understanding, for the greater part of the morning, a book which took a great deal of mental concentration to understand, the like of which I had not been able to do for months. I drove my automobile half the afternoon, also a thing I had not been able to do for some time. I gained 30 pounds in weight the subsequent month, and within 10 days from this memorable morning I undertook and carried to a successful issue the most strenuous piece of work, from both mental and physical standpoints, that I have ever done. A year from the day of this healing I was asked to assist in the surgical work in the Emergency Hospital at San Francisco following the earthquake and fire of 1906, and for three weeks I stood on my feet and operated for about 16 hours a day. This was my last surgery, and coming after a year of study of Christian Science, decided me as to my future course.

I have spent over nine years in constant study of Christian Science and seven years in its practice. I was most enthusiastic in the practice of surgery and was a Pharisee of the Pharisees as to its virtues. I gave it up only after being most thoroughly convinced that there was something better. I have learned to my entire satisfaction, knowing both sides of the question, that Christian Science is a science, and not only that, but also that it is an advance step—and a long one—beyond medicine and surgery, and that time will prove this to the whole world. I have seen many cases of disease healed by it after they had been pronounced hopeless and dying by the best physicians. I have seen disease healed through it in a few minutes where it would have run days or weeks, according to medical prognosis. And although it is not the practice of Christian Science practitioners to attempt the healing of broken bones without the aid of surgery, I have seen dislocated joint and broken bone healed within a few days without the use of splint or bandage. This only promises what will be done in the future.

As to contagious diseases, my experience teaches me that Christian Science practitioners and other Christian Scientists are more scrupulously careful to shield others from danger of contagion and in obedience to the law than are physicians. This I say without equivocation or qualification.

Most sincerely yours, E. F. BURTON.

Mr. President, what must a man who has passed through such an experience think of laws, which actually exist in some of the States, making the man who rendered him this great service a criminal, subject to fine and imprisonment for saving his life and restoring him to a healthy body and a sound mind? What must he think of the members of his own profession who on that fateful night, with him lying there unconscious, gave up his case as hopeless and consigned him to an asylum as hopelessly insane and sentenced him to an early death, and who would consign the man who took their place and saved both the life and the reason of one of their profession to prison for presuming to save the man whose case they had given up as past all help by a means of healing that they denounce as irregular and unscientific?

Mr. President, this must not be taken as an unusual or extraordinary case of healing in Christian Science. Relief came quickly in this case. So it has in many other cases. But in most cases it comes more slowly. I could cite the Senate to hundreds of cases of healing by this means just as remarkable, some even more remarkable than this one, thoroughly authenticated and beyond dispute. If I had asked publicly for such and like experiences, I could furnish you authentic proof of thousands of cases of healing of diseases pronounced by medical doctors to be incurable. But I could not take up the time of the Senate in reciting any great number of cases however important I regard this question. I have asked for and will submit only a few of them.

Here is another of a like kind that should challenge the attention of lawmakers, social workers, and humanitarians the world over:

2111 WEST THIRTY-FIRST STREET,
Los Angeles, Cal., August 27, 1914.

DEAR MR. WORKS: So great a change has been brought about in my life by Christian Science that I am most desirous and anxious that others may know of the experience and profit by it if they wish.

I was born in Hastings, Mich., in 1865; attended the local schools until 1880, when I entered Olivet College. I hold the degree of Bachelor of Arts from that institution, of which I am at the present time a trustee. I was admitted to practice law in 1889, and later went to Saginaw where I associated myself with the Hon. Ferdinand Brucker, then judge of probate and afterward Member of Congress from the eighth congressional district, now represented by the Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY. I had youth, health, education, friends; I belonged to the leading fraternal organizations and was on the highway to success, but I was said to have been born with a hereditary taint in my blood, the appetite for intoxicating liquor, and as my law practice grew larger my appetite for drink grew stronger. Friends warned me, but I laughed at their fears, and told them that drinking would never overpower me; that I could take it or leave it, just as I wanted to do. By sheer force of will I held the appetite in check for a while, but little by little it crawled upon me until it held me within its grasp. Friends advised, relatives reasoned, and my dear mother begged me to take Christian Science treatments and free myself from the bondage; but I laughed at her and told her that while Christian Science might do for nervous old ladies, it would hardly answer for a strong, rugged man like myself. I struggled a little longer, and then my associate, Mr. Brucker, advised me to take the gold cure. I did so, but its effect was only temporary. Then I did everything I could.

Friends, relatives, physicians, and fraternal brothers did all they could, but it was too late for any human help. I lost everything—law practice, money, home, friends, mother—all. I was lost. I went away. My relatives did not know where I was for years. They had given me up as lost. I was a helpless slave to liquor, a hopeless wanderer on the face of the earth, a nameless derelict on the ocean of failure. In addition to the appetite for drink, I was suffering from kidney and liver troubles and was merely waiting for death to come and end me of my misery. It was in January, 1901, that I left Saginaw. I wandered away West, doing anything I could find to do to make a living, working with my hands at any work that offered. I had given up completely. One day in October, 1907, up in the foothills of the Sierras, I met a courageous woman who told me that I could be healed in Christian Science. She gave me some of the literature and loaned me the textbook of Science, but I believed I was too far gone to be saved and wandered on. After a few more months of suffering and misery I found myself in direst extremity. I was hopeless, friendless, and alone. As I stood there watching the sun rise over the Sierras the thought came to me, as it did to another prodigal long ago, "I will arise and go to my Father." I had kept the page of a Christian Science Journal with the address of a Los Angeles attorney who had been saved from the very bondage that then held me. I determined to go to this man, tell him my story, ask his aid, give Christian Science a fair trial; and if that failed, I would then end it all. I started for Los Angeles immediately. I was at Monterey at the time. I had no money, but I lost no time. I rode on freight trains, engines, blind baggage cars, farmers' wagons, and walked when I had to—anyway to get there—but I kept on and on. One day I arrived in Los Angeles and found the man I was looking for. * * * He listened to my story, took me to his heart in kindness, introduced me to a Christian Science practitioner, and—that is all. I awoke from my nightmare and found I was not a drunkard at all. This was in March, 1908. From that day to this I have never had the slightest desire to drink intoxicating liquor. The kidney and liver trouble went with the appetite for drink. I also lost a smoking habit of 25 years' standing. I was later healed in less than a day of an acute attack of diphtheria. I was healed in 1910 of a chronic condition of sciatic rheumatism, to cure which I had spent many hundreds of dollars in materia medica without any cure being effected. I have had many other healings I need not mention, but I am not ill any more as I used to be. In these years I have known Christian Science I have learned to live a clean and a pure life. I now have a wife and home and a dear little baby 17 months old. I am learning to be more patient, more kind, more considerate of others in my daily life. Hatred and anger and criticism and resentment are being driven out of my life, and in their place is being established love and kindness and good will to all mankind. Years ago I agreed with Burns that "Man was made to mourn"; but now I know that there is no condition of disease, misery, or sin so bad that it can not be wiped out forever by the power of Truth. I have learned that it is normal for man to be happy, peaceful, and prosperous, and I am happier to-day as I am writing this letter than I have ever been in all my life. Every statement in this testimony is capable of legal proof. I will furnish full list of names, dates, and other information to any that may desire further information.

Cordially yours, FREDERICK ALLEN.

Like Dr. Burton, I did not know Mr. Allen until after his healing. His letter shows what he was before he contracted the fearful habit of drink and the depths of poverty and degradation to which he was reduced. He is now fully restored to himself, is engaged in successful literary work in Los Angeles, has a happy home and family, and is, as he says, happier and better contented than he has ever been in all his life. His condition when he applied for Christian Science help has been graphically described to me by the friend upon whom he first called on coming to Los Angeles. He was unshorn and unkempt; his clothing was soiled and worn; in stealing his way on the train he had lost his hat and was wearing an old discarded cap that some one had thrown away. In short, when he stepped into the office, seeking information that might free him from the habit that had so nearly destroyed his life and wrecked his future prospects, he was a veritable tramp. He had no money and no prospects. This was the only hope left to him, and he had sought it eagerly as his last chance. He was taken to a practitioner, who ministered to him without present reward or hope thereof except the inestimable consolation of serving such a human derelict and making of him a free man and useful citizen. He was healed as he says. I know well and intimately the practitioner who rendered this man this great service. I have spent weeks in her home. She was in her earlier womanhood a trained nurse and knew the ways and the practices of the physician and surgeon by actual hospital service. Later her husband was healed by the same means that this man was restored. As a result she became a Christian Science practitioner. She has saved many unfortunates afflicted as this man was and healed many of diseases of almost every kind. Her husband holds a high and important public office. She has a home of culture and refinement, but she finds her greatest and highest enjoyment in her work. She devotes her days and nights to this beneficent service and is subject to call at all hours. She was, amongst many others, called to minister to a woman whom the doctors had determined to be afflicted with an abdominal tumor. An operation was decided to be immediately necessary. The woman had heard something of Christian Science. Her husband had been healed of a broken-down instep. In her great fear of the operation she called for this practitioner's help. She did not go to the operating table. Under treatment, the tumor came away in pieces and the woman was healed.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to one more case of healing of the many performed by this one practitioner, as she has given it to me in a written statement:

A woman of about 45 was taken to a hospital and operated on for cancer of the breast and tissues of the side. Some two weeks after the operation the patient, feeling that her condition was not satisfactory, as she was suffering and being kept constantly under heavy doses of morphine, asked to have a Christian Science practitioner attend her.

During the second visit made by the practitioner the attending surgeon arrived to dress the wound. He asked the practitioner to look at the wound, and then he pointed out some places upon it where the tissue was breaking down and in a bad condition. Asking the practitioner to go into another room where the patient might not hear what he had to say, he assured the practitioner that he was very glad to have the help of Christian Science, as he believed the religion would be a great help in making her happy in the last few months of her life. He further explained that he and some well-known surgeons had operated on the case two weeks previous to this time; that they had found it one of the worst and most malignant cases of cancer they had ever seen; that the woman's system was full of it; that the tissues had already begun to break down again with the disease; that there was no possible way in which her life could be saved; and that there was nothing to be done but to keep her under heavy doses of morphine until such time as she would die, which he insisted would probably be six months, though there was a slight possibility of her life being prolonged to a year, but under no conditions could she get well. In less than a week after treatment in Christian Science the doctor reported great improvement in the wound. In two weeks the patient was taken from the hospital, driving in an open automobile. After a few days at home and away from the hospital care she refused to take any more morphine, the wound healed completely, and since that time, which is two years or more, she is a perfectly well woman.

Mr. President, the best and most competent physicians declare that the only remedy for deep-seated cancer is the surgeon's knife. They are perfectly sincere in this declaration, because they know of no better remedy. They know and freely acknowledge that this remedy is effective only when the diseased parts are completely removed, which in many cases is impossible to the most skillful surgeon. That many lives have been saved in cancer cases by the knife no intelligent man would presume to deny. But here was a case where the surgeon was helpless to save. He was honest and sincere enough to say so. He was not envious of Christian Science interference, as many doctors are, but like most of them he believed that it could do no more than afford religious consolation until death came within a very brief space.

Mr. President, I have spoken specifically about the work of this one practitioner not because her work is more successful or her devotion to it greater than that of hundreds of others who are rendering like service, but only because I was more familiar with her life and her work.

I submit also the very interesting and remarkable case of healing of Mrs. Elizabeth Downey, wife of Harry S. Downey, of Shelbyville, Ind. Mrs. Downey is a woman of superior education, intelligence, and refinement. Her husband is a prominent lawyer in Shelbyville. His father was a judge in that State for more than a quarter of a century—six years of which was as judge of the supreme court of the State. His last service was as judge of the circuit court, his term of office terminating when he was 80 years of age. One of his sons followed in his footsteps and was for a number of years judge of the same circuit court, a position which he resigned to accept an important office here in Washington, which office he now holds.

I have known the family well and intimately all my life and can assure the Senate of the reliability and truthfulness of Mrs. Downey's statement.

She says:

SHELBYVILLE, IND., December 11, 1914.

When a child of 11 years, in piercing the ears, the lobe of the right ear was injured, the wound refused to heal and remained in an irritated condition until we were obliged to remove the earrings. A small growth about the size of a pea made its appearance on the lobe of the ear, but was removed without serious trouble for the surgeon and little discomfort to myself.

Two years later I again had the ears pierced; the same trouble followed, attended with severe stabbing pains, and the ear became angry in inflammation, which was subdued, but the growth grew to be as large as a medium-sized hickory nut, and the pains increased, when it was again removed. Then the physicians pronounced it a recurrent fibrous tumor.

After six or seven such operations, at intervals from 18 months to 2 years, each time the size increasing, the entire lobe of the ear was deformed and fibers extended down and the pain was almost unbearable at times.

Next a burning process was resorted to, medicines given, and applications used locally, but it was only adding fuel to the flames. After 14 applications of this burning process, in which I suffered tortures only to be compared to the fiery furnace, the tumor was lifted out and was about the size of a hen's egg. The entire lower part of the ear was gone and a surface of diseased tissue extended about 4½ inches down the neck, making it necessary to close the wound by skin grafting, using 9 silver pins and 14 stitches, which was a beautiful piece of surgical work. I was in the hospital nearly three months.

Nine months later trouble commenced again, and I had another experience, though slight in comparison to the others.

Two years later the growth appeared again, when it was operated upon with the knife, but almost at once began spreading its fibers over the face, the pain growing, spasmodically, more and more severe. When the growth below the ear had increased again to the size of a walnut and was purple in color I began to think that death would be preferable to such suffering. Again the burning process was used, chloride of calcium, followed by a powder and poulticing was kept up with suffering untold for six months, when it appeared to be healed. Many kinds of medical springs and drugs were used in an effort to subdue the trouble which was on the increase on the cheek, but finally I was compelled to again go to the operating table. This time the surgeons laid the wound open to the bone and found that the fibers had grown and entwined themselves back of the eyeball, and to save deformity of the eye the skin was drawn up in a puff under the hair. The surgeons had again performed a most skillful and delicate operation, and I thought I was restored and had a chance to claim my birthright of freedom from pain, but the trouble came up again on the same side, in the throat, and grew more serious, if possible, than before. The surgeons then removed five growths in the throat and mouth. The irritation had become so severe, the throat so inflamed, and the tonsils so diseased that the surgeons thought best to remove the tonsils, which was done, and there were found two growths back of them, and in the process of removing them two severe hemorrhages followed, and the situation was most serious. After my seeming recovery and sojourn in Denver for five months, the physician's advice to me was to never again have any cutting done in the throat, and if he had known how much had been done he would not have operated; that I was now all right, but to avoid a repetition.

I came home in November, and in December I found, after a case of pneumonia, that the throat and lungs were in diseased conditions, two growths almost as large as peas, causing constant coughing, and the roof of the mouth was in a badly ulcerated condition, with my voice and entire body in an exhausted condition, and one lung very imperfect. For the first time in my many years of suffering I grew rebellious and discouraged, but finally yielded to the importunities of relatives and friends and consented to go South again, but I felt that it would be a fruitless trip. The physician and my family felt that it was my only hope to regain health in a warmer climate, if life was to be spared to prepare for another surgical operation, so we again turned our faces toward San Antonio, Tex.

After being there five weeks, instead of improving I grew worse, coughing and expectorating such poison that each day I would think I could not endure another. Then developed a case of acute kidney trouble, and, to add to the suffering, a pus formation appeared over the left lung. I then realized that the only material hope was in another surgical operation. By this time my courage had failed and I felt that death would prove a friend rather than an enemy; but God's ways are higher than man's ways, so that, in my extremity and in my desire to live until my husband could reach me and to escape the operating table (selfish motives, I grant), at the earnest solicitation of friends who realized the situation better than I did, I turned to Christian Science. The saying that it is a dangerous thing to be ignorant of your own ignorance reflected my attitude at that time, for such was my condition. I thought I knew God, but I found that I did not know and understand His power, His willingness, and His might; but in that dark hour I was left alone with Him to guide and protect, and I found that His love did not fail me. All drugs were discarded and, not without some doubts, I turned to a Christian Science practitioner for help; nor was I disappointed. The kidney trouble was met in three days; breathing was improved so that I could lie down in bed; the coughing grew less day by day, and I have never had a hemorrhage since; the roof of the mouth healed, and the pus formation disappeared at the place where the surgeons had blistered to nerve exposure and drained off the pus. Four months later the tumors came off, one after the other, filled with fibers and pus, but with scarcely any flow of blood. From a weight of 110 pounds I have increased to 156.

The first Christian Science treatment was in January, 1905, almost 10 years ago. I have had little or no trouble in the old scars that formerly gave so much trouble in damp or hot weather or when overheated; indeed, all is fast fading from sight or consciousness except the deformity resulting from the cutting, but no longer are they red and angry looking, but are gradually fading away, and the past nine years have been most blessed ones. As I look back and recall the fact that six of these medical men who rendered me the most faithful service of which they were capable have passed on, I can not refrain from expressing my gratitude for their faithful, loyal services, but my heart overflows with gratitude to God for what this truth, Christian Science, has revealed to me, lifting me out of suffering untold, which one would scarcely believe unless witnessing and in the presence of which more than one brave heart has grown faint.

I could not do otherwise than to stand where I do, with absolute belief in the power of truth as learned from the Bible and Science and Health, with an honest effort daily to let my feeble light shine as a true Christian Scientist, for I have had all proof of its healing power and its spiritual uplift.

All of this is absolute truth.

ELIZABETH HARSHMAN DOWNEY
(MRS. HARRY S. DOWNEY).

Mr. President, many lives are sacrificed and others ruined by the habitual use of intoxicating liquors and deadly habit-forming drugs. For these unfortunates the medical doctor can afford no relief and the surgeon's knife is unavailing. It is here that Christian Science has shown its efficiency in a marked degree. It has saved hundreds of lives and made happy many desolated homes. I have already given one case of healing from the drink habit and another from morphine and cocaine. Here is another striking case of such healing:

AUGUST 29, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR WORKS: In response to your request it gives me pleasure to testify to the immeasurable benefits I have enjoyed as a result of the study and application of the teachings of Christian Science.

Since a child I had been accustomed to associating with those who indulged in liquor in a social way, and, quite naturally, was one with them. After reaching young manhood the habit grew, and it was not long before I often reached home in varying stages of intoxication. This continued with increasing frequency until it was the exception rather than the rule for me to leave my companions and go home before midnight or until I had become so helpless that I had to be cared for.

For many years during this time I held a responsible position with one of the largest financial institutions in the West. My employers realized somewhat the condition into which I had fallen, but through consideration for my family and appreciation of my clerical ability I was allowed to remain with them. Finally my appearance and habits had reached a stage where they were reflecting discredit upon the institution for retaining me and I was asked to leave. Twice this request was made, and on each occasion I begged for another chance, but it only meant a chance to earn more money to spend for drink. I had forfeited nearly everything a man holds dear—home, friends, reputation, credit, and the confidence of my employers. I had not lost all, for a faithful, loving wife stood nobly by me through these dark days. In her desperation over our unhappy home she suffered a severe attack of nervous prostration. In this condition and after our family physician had done all he could and failed she turned to Christian Science and experienced such relief that it gave her renewed hope for me.

Each morning as I left the house it was with the firm determination to return home immediately at the close of the day's work, but this resolve was shattered as often as it was made. Will power in my case availed nothing. Matters went on from bad to worse. My life was a veritable hell. The future was a blank and my few sober moments were filled with remorse over my wasted life.

At this point, in response to the solicitation of my wife, I agreed to attend a Wednesday evening testimonial meeting. I was not only late in reaching the church but was far from sober. My wife and a friend were waiting for me, and this friend asked if I wanted to be helped out of the condition against which I had struggled so long. My response was in the affirmative, and while I promised to call on him the next day it was the following Sunday before I felt the desire to go to him and talk matters over. The three intervening days have always been more or less of a blank, for during that time I indulged in the wildest dissipation of the years I had drank. I questioned the propriety of this friend's receiving me on Sunday, but a kind invitation came for me to come to his home, where I was lovingly received, and, after talking with me gently and I asked for help, he gave me a treatment, and from that moment to this day I have not taken a drink of liquor nor have I had the slightest desire to do so.

Following the destruction of this false appetite, the tobacco habit left me, the use of profanity was eliminated, many physical ills have been met and conquered, and, in short, a complete mental, moral, and physical regeneration has taken place in my life.

Sincerely yours, CHAS. E. JARVIS.

I know Mr. Jarvis well. He is a man of superior qualifications and ability, and in every way trustworthy and reliable. Like so many others who have benefited by its ministrations, he has become an earnest and effective worker in Christian Science.

I submit now a testimonial of healing of double curvature of the spine, uniformly agreed, I believe, by medical practitioners and surgeons, to be incurable, and other serious troubles. Mrs. Kleinberger is known to me to be a woman of high character and entirely worthy of belief. This healing is one well known about by many people in Los Angeles and is thoroughly authenticated. Knowing of it, I requested that the statement be furnished me for my use. She says:

In the year 1908 I took my first Christian Science treatment, the principal desire being that I receive relief from the disease commonly known as gallstones, stomach and intestinal troubles, and paralysis of the bowels. I was instantly helped and quickly healed of these diseases.

When I was 3 years old it was discovered that I had spinal trouble; as time went on many physicians agreed that I would continue all my life to suffer from double curvature of the spine. Because of this trouble I was inactive and a burden to myself and those about me.

While treating for the diseases mentioned above I noticed a great relief from the pain in the back, and gradually, with treatment and study, the spine grew straight and strong, allowing me to gain flesh and become a useful member of society.

Accompanying the physical change came an understanding of the true relationship of God and man, and as a result of this understanding a happier outlook upon life and a greater patience and love for mankind.

For this change in disposition I am indeed grateful.

GLADYS KLEINBERGER,
No. 2302 West Twenty-second Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Mrs. R. L. Craig, whom I have known for a number of years, is a woman of unusual ability, education, and refinement. Her husband died leaving a wholesale grocery business to be cared for by some one. She took charge of and has managed it for several years, and made it one of the largest, best-managed, and prosperous wholesale establishments in Los Angeles. Besides, she is a public-spirited woman and takes a deep and intelligent interest in public affairs. She is now a member of the board of education of the city. She was healed in Christian Science of tumor that threatened her life, and asthma, from which dreadful disease she had suffered from her childhood. At my request she has furnished me a statement of her experience. She says:

From early childhood I suffered greatly from asthma, with all its attendant complications, such as bronchitis, pleurisy, pneumonia, tonsillitis, and quinsy. At one time, when in a very congested condition, a reputable physician pronounced my case tubercular, and strongly advised an immediate change to a warmer climate. My parents were broken hearted at this decision, and were seized with fear for my future. I was not allowed to go out at night, and was dressed in flannels from head to foot, constantly in dread of taking cold, to which I was most susceptible.

I was told by a number of physicians that there was no cure for asthma, and that I would be obliged to endure it. I was so resigned to this verdict that I did not at first accept Christian Science for asthmatic trouble, but for another affection, which developed about 12 years ago. This was pronounced by physicians to be a tumor, and threatened a quick termination of my life. At this time I asked for and received Christian Science treatment, and was soon relieved and healed. From the first treatment I began to make a consecrated study of Mrs. Eddy's works on Christian Science. I found through this healing that I was also much relieved from asthma, but about a year later I suffered a very acute attack. A few treatments in Christian Science quickly relieved me. This was the last of this trouble, which had been so persistent and painful through many years. Christian Science is my daily study, the source of my happiness and peace of mind.

Mrs. R. L. CRAIG.

I also submit the statement by Mrs. Josephine A. Hebbard of her healing of the drug habit. I know Mrs. Hebbard well. She is a woman of high character and strict integrity, who is now devoting her time and her efforts to the healing of others by the means that saved her from a lingering and horrible death:

Most gratefully do I testify to the healing efficacy of Christian Science. I came to Christian Science to be healed of the morphine habit, having become addicted to the use of that drug through a most severe form of neuralgia which had been superinduced by albuminuria. At the time I was also taking strychnia, digitalis, quinine, and nitroglycerin. I mention these stimulants because it was considered impossible to drop the use of these drugs without severe reaction, causing heart failure; but with Christian Science help I was able to give up all, including morphine. I weighed 97 pounds and was a physical and mental wreck, and turned to Christian Science only as a last resort for and in overcoming this terrible habit.

After receiving one treatment all desire for morphine left me and I gained rapidly in strength and health. During 28 days after taking my first treatment I gained 28 pounds, and in less than three months I had gained 43 pounds.

I was also cured of kidney trouble, nervous prostration, and neuralgia. I did not suffer from the results which always follow the use of this drug.

I am a strong, healthy woman, rejoicing in the freedom Christian Science has given me. I had been a trained nurse before my marriage, and had helped to care for patients who had been afflicted with the morphine habit, and I can not but compare the wide difference in treatment and results when undertaken in materia medica. In materia medica the gradual diminishing of the drug, a substitution, and prolonged suffering, with no encouraging results, and sometimes failure, is pitiful to recall. And if the drug is given up the intense craving and after results leave one in a wretched state physically. This contrast has impressed me deeply when I think of the peace, hope, and encouragement and instantaneous relief which Christian Science brings to one.

MRS. JOSEPHINE A. HEBBARD,
509 Story Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

Mrs. Hebbard is now a strong, vigorous, and healthy woman.

I submit for the consideration of the Senate a further statement from Mrs. Mattie De L. Macready, whom I have also known for a number of years. She, too, is entitled to entire confidence. Her statement of her experience in Christian Science speaks for itself in simple and eloquent language:

When Christian Science was suggested to me as a remedy for my ills, even though I knew nothing of it as a means of healing, I consented to try it, for I was in a thoroughly unhappy and discouraged state.

Many of the best physicians in the East and in this city had been employed by my family in an endeavor to find relief for me, but I was pronounced incurable, having organic heart disease and rheumatic gout, the latter disease causing me much suffering for 29 years previous to my turning to Christian Science for help.

As a child I was very frail, and I can not ever recollect feeling well or not being under treatment of some sort. In fact everything possible seemed to have been tried to lift from me the sentence that I was incurable.

It is now nearly nine years since I was healed of these diseases and other distressing conditions, and since the first treatment I have used no material means whatever, for Christian Science alone has been relied upon at all times.

I am most grateful to the many physicians who were doing their best for me, but because of my experience with Christian Science I conscientiously believe that it heals where every other remedy known to humanity has failed.

MRS. MATTIE DE L. MACREADY.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 1, 1914.

I furnish you also, for your candid and fair consideration, the statement of another good woman, an acquaintance of mine, Mrs. Edna A. Bauer, which tells its own story of health and peace of mind, the result of the same treatment:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 9, 1914.

About the year 1897 I was operated on by our family physician for what he called cancerous growth, and after the first operation the doctor said the cancerous condition had eaten the stitches all out, so that he was forced to operate again with practically no favorable results, since my condition became almost unbearable, and until 1901 I suffered on, confined to my bed a great deal of the time. I was fast becoming a chronic invalid, and after exhausting all material means for relief I turned only as a last resort to Christian Science, as it promised me relief. I started the treatment and in a short time I was completely healed of this trouble, so that I became well, strong, and useful.

My healing in Christian Science took place in 1901 and I have never had the slightest return of this trouble since. I am still in perfect health, and I know I owe my all—of health, peace of mind, success, and happiness—to Christian Science absolutely.

I would be glad to furnish any further information regarding my healing. I have two sisters living in Los Angeles who witnessed the operations and heard the doctor's statements. My husband can also verify my statements, as he was there also. We had three doctors and a trained nurse.

Most sincerely yours, EDNA A. BAUER,
437 Savoy Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

I have another statement of healing from F. D. Holman. I do not know him personally but know of him, and he is highly recommended to me as entirely worthy of confidence. He is a dentist now practicing his profession in Los Angeles:

LOS ANGELES, September 12, 1914.

It is with pleasure I testify to the efficacy of Christian Science, for I am fully convinced that had it not been for Christian Science treatment I would not be here to-day.

Several prominent physicians of Los Angeles diagnosed my case as chronic ulceration of the stomach, that there was a stoppage in the passage known as the duodenum, and that unless an operation was performed at once there was slight chance of saving my life. Through the work of Christian Science this operation proved unnecessary, and in three months' time I gained 50 pounds in weight and am now in perfect health.

From a materia medica point of view, I had "just one chance in a hundred," to use the doctors' own words, and an operation seemed inevitable.

I am deeply grateful for this wonderful healing, and am always pleased to so express myself, trusting it may help others.

Respectfully,

F. D. HOLMAN.

I present also for your consideration the case of Harry C. Carr. I have known Mr. Carr for a number of years. He is the assistant managing editor of the Los Angeles Times, one of the great newspapers of the country, and a capable and successful newspaper and magazine writer. I saw him when he returned to Los Angeles from Washington, as mentioned in his letter to me. He was in a deplorable condition. I saw him frequently after that time and knew of his tribulations and his gradual improvement under Christian Science treatment. I have no doubt that under medical treatment he would have died long before this. As it is, he is a strong, healthy, useful man, in the full vigor of young manhood. His own account of his experiences will speak for itself:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 10, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You can well imagine the pleasure that it gives me to comply with your request for the facts about my healing.

The year that Taft was nominated as President I attended both national conventions, and the following December I was sent to Washington, to remain there until the following March to witness the inauguration. Since the previous August I had been afflicted with a nervous twitching of my head and neck so dreadful that it almost amounted to St. Vitus's dance. While in Washington one of my friends sent me to Dr. Fowler—I don't remember his first name. He told me I had tuberculosis of the left kidney. He said I must have the kidney cut out within 30 days. I left at once for home, losing 15 pounds during the short trip. On the train I thought it all over and decided to try Christian Science instead of an operation. I went to see a practitioner, arriving at his office in a condition bordering on hysteria. He gave me several treatments, which corrected my nervous twitching, and I thought the trouble had passed. Suddenly, the following April or May, I had a severe hemorrhage from the kidneys. Dr. Claire Murphy was called in. He had a chemical examination made of the urine by the city chemist. The verdict was that I had a tubercular kidney. Dr. Murphy's associate, Dr. R. V. Day, told me that I ought to have an immediate operation. I decided to stick to Christian Science. The real battle then began. I had terrible night sweats nearly every night, a fever every afternoon, and became very weak. For months afterwards I passed a little blood every time I went to the toilet. Some time after that—during the summer that followed—I had a rash that broke out all over the upper part of my body. My face and shoulders were covered with a scarlet cape. My right hand and forearm were so covered with blisters you could not have placed the point of a pin upon unaffected skin. This continued for two or three days, then passed away as suddenly as though erased from a blackboard. My symptoms did not immediately cease, and I went on having treatment from two practitioners for some months. The tide had turned, however. Finally, all symptoms absolutely passed away. I am now blessed with perfect health. My weight has increased from 135 pounds to 165.

During the latter part of my treatments Dr. Charles McCleery, an optician, in fitting me with glasses, told me that I had a cataract coming on one of my eyes. I took one treatment (Christian Science) and then visited Dr. H. Burt Ellis. He made a careful examination of the eye and said it was not affected in any way.

I would like to add that before taking my treatments I was almost a neurasthenic, and that my family had anything but a happy existence. Christian Science seemed to take the tensity out of my work and has changed our family conditions. Incidentally, the twitching of my neck has long since gone.

Yours very truly,

HARRY C. CARR.

Dr. Fowler practices his profession in Washington, D. C. I understand he is a man of high character and an able and skillful physician and surgeon. His diagnosis of Mr. Carr's case as one of tuberculosis of the kidneys was confirmed by Dr. Murphy, of Los Angeles, and was no doubt correct. They agreed that the only remedy was an operation, removing one of the kidneys. It was as to the best means of healing that they were mistaken.

Healings from accidents, even in cases of broken bones, have often occurred in Christian Science, although it is customary with Scientists to have the bone set by a surgeon while the Science practitioner protects the patient from pain, infection, and other complications. I give here one case of this kind of healing where the surgeon was called as usual, but failed to accomplish what he desired, and the mother, who was a practitioner, with other help, saved her son from the life of a cripple. I have known the mother for a long time and vouch for her sincerity and reliability:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 16, 1914.

DEAR SIR: Two years ago last February my son, then 20 years of age, met with a dreadful accident and received a compound fracture of his left leg. The little bone was badly broken, and the large bone was broken in such a way that a piece of it had to be taken out before attempting to set it, and the physician we employed said he would have to put a silver plate on the bone to hold it together, as he could not set it in any other way, and in order to do this he had to notch the bone, which he said would make the limb shorter, even if it healed. He put on the plate, but the bone cracked on both sides where the plate was attached, and the plate had to be taken out, and two pieces of bone, one on each side where the plate had been screwed on, came out of the wound, and when the doctor took out the piece of notched bone he said, "As far as I am concerned that notched bone is the only thing that could save the leg and that is out." He also said the leg was full of infection and gave me very little hope. I am a Christian Science practitioner; I had been for several years; and of course I used all my understanding of Christian Science to save my boy, as I had been healed myself when there as nothing else left to try. When we took an X-ray picture of the bone we found to our great joy new bone formed where the notched bone had been pushed out, and of course this made the leg the proper length, dropping it down in its natural place, so that my boy walks as good as he did before the accident, without a limp. The small bone was not set, but it adjusted itself. He is 22 years old now and he has perfect use of his leg.

One can imagine what a frightful wound he had in his leg from this terrible operation that was almost as serious as the broken bones, but that also was healed. I worked day and night on this case and employed another Christian Science practitioner to help me for something over a week while the boy was in the hospital. He is my only child, and it meant much to me to have him restored to me and not be a cripple.

I am grateful to the physician for all his efforts to help us, even if it did fail. He told me to give him no credit for the healing, but I give him all the credit due him for doing all he could to help us; but it was certainly Christian Science that restored my boy's limb, and I really think the doctor is as grateful for it as I am. I don't see how he could help but be. Many people here know of this healing, and I have the X-ray pictures in my possession and should be glad to show them to anyone who would like to see them. They were taken here in Los Angeles, Cal.

This is one of the greatest proofs of Christian Science healing we have ever seen. I send this testimonial with the one thought of benefiting suffering humanity.

EDNA A. BAUER,
420 Herman W. Hellman Building, Los Angeles.
LOS ANGELES, CAL., September 16, 1914.

I have read this testimonial and so, being the one who had the accident, can verify the healing herein mentioned. I am ready to give any information on this healing that may be called for.

Yours truly,

EDWARD M. GRANT.

I submit another testimonial of healing of tuberculosis and of diseases of the spine which is vouched for as reliable and trustworthy:

May 15, 1911, I entered an orthopedic sanitarium in this city. In doing this I was following the advice of our family physician. I had been ill for three years and had had various treatments under different physicians. I was an intense sufferer from spinal trouble and was practically an invalid, being on the bed most of the time and unable to do my work.

The family physician said there was no help unless it was to be found in this sanitarium; that the spine was tubercular, the cushions between the vertebrae diseased and in some instances practically gone, and that the spine had an ankleosed double curvature. This was also the diagnosis given by the physician in charge of the sanitarium.

The treatments in this institution were given by the head nurse because of my serious condition and consisted of massage, light, and traction. A certain part of each day was spent in a jury. I wore a heavy canvas brace, reinforced with eight 1-inch steels across the back, and it was necessary to have a new one made about every six weeks.

I improved slowly under this treatment and at the end of 19 months was dismissed as well. I still wore the brace, but was told that I could take it off when I chose.

About three months before leaving the sanitarium I became interested in Christian Science from a scientific standpoint and did a great deal of studying. I thought that should the days come that I did not feel so well I might be able to lean on Christian Science for help.

I left the sanitarium in January, 1913, and in about six weeks it became necessary to either leave off the brace or get a new one. After a day's trial I found the pain too intense to be without it, but rather than go back and get a new one I decided to apply what little I knew of Christian Science. The greater part of the next four days was spent in bed, but at the end of that time I was able to do without it. I am absolutely sure that I could not have done this without the help of Christian Science.

However, in April of the same year I suffered a decided relapse. I was as ill as when I first entered the sanitarium. It was evident that all the help I had received was temporary. I talked over the matter with the physician and was advised to return to the sanitarium for an indefinite length of time—in fact, I was given to understand that I had better never leave. It was because of this discouraging outlook that I made my stand for Christian Science treatments against the wishes of my family. A practitioner was called, and for two weeks I had treatments every day. At the end of that time I was as well as when I left the sanitarium. Treatments were continued for about three months, then I took up the work for myself. While the healing has been slow, there has never been any relapse, and I feel that the trouble has been fully overcome.

MRS. NELL FLASH,
3904 Theo. Villa Court, Los Angeles.
SEPTEMBER, 18, 1914.

Locomotor ataxia is classed as one of the incurable diseases from the standpoint of the physician or surgeon. It is not so regarded by Christian Scientists. Many cases of this kind have been healed in Science. I submit now an interesting case of that kind:

In July, 1909, after having been treated for six years by medical physicians, five in number, in various parts of the United States for the cure of a disease that developed to be locomotor ataxia and pronounced generally by them, and particularly by two in Milwaukee, to be incurable, I found that I was rapidly advancing to the point of greater evidence of incurability, as predicted by these physicians.

During these years I had visited my physician and taken medicine continuously; visited Hot Springs, Ark., as advised by my physician in St. Paul, who was supposed to be a specialist on this particular disease, and did everything possible to regain health, but to no avail.

At this stage of development the study of Christian Science was recommended to me, and while I looked upon it as next to nothing I began the study and visited a Christian Science practitioner. At this time I had been away from business for many months, my physical condition compelling me to do so; but after one month's treatment and study of Christian Science I began to see good signs of improvement. In five months' time I returned to my business, and since then, which is five years, I have not lost a day from business on account of this trouble nor visited a physician for treatment. I attribute my healing positively and absolutely to Christian Science.

When I paid a friendly visit to my good old doctor, whom I dearly esteem, he said, "If Christian Science is doing this for you, it is surely commendable, and I recommend your continuing, as we in medicine have no further hope to offer."

HORACE H. MULLIN,
103 South Alexandria Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1914.

I also submit a statement by Hon. Leslie R. Hewitt, judge of the Superior Court of Los Angeles, Cal., of the healing of his little daughter of a malformation of the mouth, which tends strongly to show that no deformity is beyond the healing influence of Christian Science. I have known Judge Hewitt for 20 years or more. He has filled a number of places of trust as a public official, and is justly regarded as one of our best citizens in every sense:

When our young child was 20 months old she was taken to the dentist with the two older children, all of whom were to be looked to by the dentist to determine whether teeth were coming in and out properly.

All was well excepting with this baby, the dentist discovering a fault in the jaws. The lower jaw protruded so that when the teeth were closed together the lower teeth were forward or outside the upper teeth. The mouth was then examined by another dentist, a specialist on this particular trouble, the technical name of which has been forgotten, and the diagnosis of the first dentist confirmed. What could be done for the child's mouth? Nothing until she was 4 or 5 years old, when she would have to submit to the jaw being harnessed with bands to force the lower jaw back into its proper place in the sockets, a tedious, painful operation. The mother studied over the condition, and having been interested in Christian Science since the child was 6 months old, suggested that this trouble could be handled as successfully as others that had been met for different members of the family.

So the case was the next day put before the practitioner. A week or so after the mother and children went over 500 miles from home for a long visit with relatives and the baby's case was left with the practitioner to be handled absently.

At the end of nine months upon the return of the family the dentist asked to see the child again. With glad heart the mother took the child to the office, for she had seen the wonderful work done and the teeth now closing, upper jaw forward or outside the lower as it should.

The dentist placed the child on a seat, bent before her, and asked her to open the mouth, then close it, and when the teeth closed properly, turned to the mother, explaining that the trouble had disappeared, and asked what had been done, as such a thing had never been noted in dentistry before.

Indeed, we were and are still grateful to Christian Science for this wonderful relief to ourselves and to the little daughter.

LESLIE R. HEWITT,
Judge of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Cal.

I submit also the testimonial of Hon. W. S. Metz, a prominent lawyer and former judge of Sheridan, Wyo. I first met Judge Metz in Los Angeles, where he was trying to get relief from his sufferings at a sanitarium. He applied to me to know something about Christian Science, saying that he had heard that I had been healed by that means. I had never met him before. He informed me that he knew nothing about Christian Science, and explained to me the nature of his troubles and the extent of his suffering, much as he recounts them in his letter furnished at my request. I told him of my own condition and healing, and advised him to try Christian Science. He at once commenced to take the treatment. I saw him very frequently and witnessed his improvement and final recovery. His letter is as follows:

SHERIDAN, WYO., October 2, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your inquiry as to the beneficial effect of Christian Science treatment in my personal case, I wish to say that for five or six years I was considered among my friends and neighbors as an invalid. I had been suffering during those years with nervous exhaustion and very severe bowel and liver trouble, also persistent indigestion. During the five or six years mentioned I was treated by a number of physicians and also spent several months in what was known as the best sanitarium in the country. I also, under the advice of physicians, endeavored to secure some relief; visited the warm climates and low altitudes, taking a trip to Cuba; also spent some time on the Gulf coast and in southern California, but secured no relief from my distressing physical ailments until I secured the aid of a Christian Science practitioner. For five years before receiving treatment in Christian Science there was no activity of the bowels without the use of drugs, which were administered almost daily during that length of time. Under a few treatments of Christian Science the bowels resumed their normal activity, and though it has been several years since receiving my first Christian Science treatment there has been no occasion in the meantime for the use of drugs, and the distressing bowel condition has been entirely removed and fully healed. Likewise the indigestion was completely healed by a few treatments in Science. The extreme nervous exhaustion disappeared almost entirely after the first treatment in Science.

My recovery from the long-continued illness was a great surprise to my neighbors and friends. My physical strength was restored within a few weeks after the commencement of treatment by my practitioner, and I have been able to do more continuous hard work in my profession since my recovery than I had ever been able to perform before.

One of the most distressing ailments under which I suffered for years was persistent insomnia. During the five or six years of my illness I was unable to sleep at any time over three or four hours in the night. This continued during the years that I have mentioned, but this condition of sleeplessness was wholly removed by Christian Science treatment and in a very short time.

Yours very truly,

W. S. METZ.

I submit for your further consideration the case of Dorothy S. Chelson, a child two and a half years of age, who was afflicted with diabetes. The following is a statement of her case furnished me by her father:

1436 MALVERN AVENUE,
Los Angeles, Cal., October 15, 1914.

The opportunity of again telling of the restoration of my little daughter is a highly esteemed privilege, and I am herewith giving you a brief résumé of her healing:

In August, 1904, our little girl, aged 2½ years, was pronounced to be dying of diabetes. There was a very great amount of sediment in the urine and her heart action ranged from 140 to 170 beats per minute. This I know to be a fact, as the physician kindly allowed me to use his stethoscope to verify the count. At this time my wife and I were members of the Swedish Lutheran Church of this city, and I was serving as secretary and treasurer, and also as one of the trustees of the church. We knew absolutely nothing of Christian Science and did not want to know, as we were told it was the work of evil.

I knew of two Christian Scientists at this time, and in talking to one of them I was told that Christian Science would cure my little girl. Love for our daughter being stronger than our religious scruples a Christian Science practitioner was called, and with the first treatment all sediment in the urine disappeared, and in a short time her heart action became normal and she was entirely healed. She is to-day as healthy a child as one can wish to see. Needless to state, Christian Science has been our only remedy for the past 10 years, and this means much in the bringing up of three children. Our home has been transformed from one of want, woe, and inharmony to one of peace, happiness, and contentment, and we are indeed deeply grateful to God and to our dear leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for all benefits received.

Yours respectfully,

THEO. A. CHELSON.

I know Mr. Chelson personally. As a result of the rescue from death of his little daughter he has become an earnest Christian Science worker. His reliability can not be questioned. But I have the following confirmation of the condition of the child and the fact that she was healed. Very naturally the doctor does not commit himself as to the cause of her restoration to health, which was entirely proper, as he had no direct evidence of the fact. He intimates, however, that a child unconscious from the effect of her diabetic condition could have recovered without further help after he had given her up to die. This will hardly be accepted as within the possibilities. He says:

I am, and at all times herein mentioned have been, a duly registered practicing physician in the city of Los Angeles, Cal.

In August, 1904, I attended in a professional capacity Miss Dorothy S. Chelson, who at that time was suffering from a diabetic condition, showing a heavy percentage of sugar; who was quite anemic, and whose heart beats were from 140 to 170. Her condition was such that she was practically in a stage of collapse, and was given up. Her age was 2½ years, as I am informed and believe. One will readily appreciate that a patient with diabetes, if the sugar is persistent, is beyond the control of the physician, and death results. Yet sometimes the sugar will disappear as rapidly as it occurs; consequently it is impossible for me to say the exact conditions that existed, although when I last saw the child she was practically in a comatose condition.

She passed out of my hands and has had no medical attention since then, as I am informed and believe.

She was examined by me on February 12, 1910, and I found absolutely no sugar, perfect health, heart beating at 82, and a perfectly bright and normal child.

R. NICHOL SMITH, M. D.

There are Members of this body who know by experience, either in their own person or that of some member or members of their family of the curative effects of Christian Science. The daughter of a distinguished Senator has given her time, unselfishly, to the great work of healing, and that in a State where it is made a criminal offense to take fees or other compensation for such services. The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], honored and respected by all who know him, was healed by this means. He has been good enough to furnish me a statement of his healing, as follows:

For many years I was a sufferer from rheumatism. This became complicated with heart trouble, and this became so acute that at times I did not dare to sleep in a reclining position, and often slept in a sitting posture, fearing a fatal attack if I went to sleep lying down. I used various remedies for rheumatism that seemed to temporarily relieve the pain, but all remedies in time seemed to lose their efficacy and the relief was only temporary. Finally, in a spirit more of hope than of any real expectation of getting relief, I took treatment in Christian Science, with the result that I obtained immediate and complete relief from rheumatism, and after a time all symptoms of heart trouble disappeared. This was some years ago, and I have never suffered from either since. Subsequent study, experience, and observation have satisfied me that the only limitation upon the healing in Christian Science is our knowledge of the subject.

MOSES E. CLAPP.

Mr. President, I have selected the above cases, 21 in number, from the experience of people of my own acquaintance upon whom I knew I could place implicit trust. All of the cases I have given except two are the fruits of Christian Science work in one city, and that an infinitesimal part of the work done in the city of Los Angeles alone. I could have given you hundreds of other cases of healing, many of so-called incurable diseases, but I can not in justice to the Senate consume time by including the many cases, convincing in their character, that I could easily furnish. If I had made public request for such statements I would have been overwhelmed with attested cases of healing from thousands of people who are filled with gratitude for their deliverance from the bonds of sin, sickness, sorrow, and disease. I have therefore in my own city asked privately for a few of the many cases that had come to my own knowledge and for which I could vouch as either within my own personal knowledge or from people known by me to be worthy of implicit confidence.

In addition to this I have asked a good and reliable friend of my own to secure for me a few reliable and trustworthy testimonials of healing from other parts of the country. I have some of them here. They are so convincing of the efficacy of Christian Science healing that I can not see how any fair and candid mind can continue to doubt it. I submit these additional statements of healing without comment. I could not, if I would, make them stronger or more convincing by any word of mine. It should be noticed that all of the cases that I am giving are of so-called incurable diseases. The thousands of healings of minor diseases in this way would fill volumes. At the head of each testimonial I have given the name of the person and the disease of which he was healed.

(1) B. F. SHERROUSE—CANCER.

NEW ORLEANS, August 20, 1914.

This is to state that after making an incision for an exploratory examination the eminent surgeons operating pronounced my case absolutely hopeless, as my stomach seemed practically eaten up with a malignant type of cancer, and to cut it out was certain death and to leave it was certain death, and, preferring nature to take its course, they simply closed the incision and turned me over to my family to die, and told them they did not see how I could possibly live over three or four weeks. This was on March 20, 1912, and on May 30, 1912, I discharged my physicians and called in a Christian Science healer. For seven days thereafter my condition remained about as formerly, but during the four days following I was an extremely sick man, and it looked like I would die in spite of all, but on the morning of the eleventh day I rallied, and from that day on I gradually improved, and, so far as I can possibly know, I am entirely cured, having no symptoms whatever of past troubles.

B. F. SHERROUSE, New Orleans, La.

(2) GEORGE W. REMBERT—CONFIRMING MR. SHERROUSE'S HEALING AND GIVING HIS OWN OF SIMILAR TROUBLE.

To whom it may concern:

For nearly 10 years I have enjoyed the personal acquaintance and friendship of Mr. B. F. Sherrouse, of this city. Mr. Sherrouse is a man of high integrity and purpose, he is widely known, and his veracity is beyond question with all who know him.

On or about May 30, 1912, I met Mr. Sherrouse in the rooms of the New Orleans Chess, Checkers, and Whist Club, of 1,000 membership. Observing his most extreme condition of health, I sought an interview with him, and he then stated to me that nine of our New Orleans physicians and surgeons had diagnosed his case as being "wholly incurable." His trouble was malignant cancer of the stomach, and these nine medical men were wholly agreed both as to diagnosis and prognosis; they held out to him not one ray of hope, but told him death was inevitable, and in a very short while; he himself was reconciled to this end and was only awaiting the final summons.

It was at this distressing moment of the conversation that I gave him the cup of cold water in the suggestion of Christian Science, of which he knew nothing then and knows but little more now. However, this, he at once dismissed his physicians and immediately sought help in Christian Science. I was in a position to observe him frequently thereafter, and his improvement, which was constant from almost the day he began Christian Science until a few months later, when he became a well man, was a source of much rejoicing to me. I see Mr. Sherrouse now almost daily and he shows no evidence of his former trouble.

Nearly all of the nine medical men who passed on this case are personally known to me, and they are the peer of any medical men in New Orleans, and some of them the peer of any in the United States.

At the time I suggested Christian Science to Mr. Sherrouse I was not a Christian Scientist, but was a member of the Presbyterian church. My reason for offering Christian Science to Mr. Sherrouse was because of the help I had derived through Christian Science. My own case, seen by some 17 medical men in different cities in this country and by certain specialists of experience and ability, had been diagnosed by them as malignant and all of them declaring an operation as imperative, but very likely I had deferred too long to get relief. It has been nearly three years since. I did not have the operation; I am 25 pounds heavier and in the best health of my life, all through Christian Science truth. I am now a member of the Mother Church in Boston, Mass., and a member of First Church of Christ Scientist of New Orleans, La.

GEORGE W. REMBERT.

(3) LAURA MORRIS—TUBERCULOSIS.

BUFFALO, N. Y., August 28, 1914.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Three years ago I resigned my position as tuberculosis nurse for Chautauqua County, this State, on account of sickness, which Dr. Floyd Benjamin, of Cherry Creek, N. Y., thought was typhoid fever. Dr. Ellis W. Storms, of Falconer, N. Y., was also of the same opinion.

After six weeks, growing worse all the time, Dr. Thomas E. Soules, of Buffalo, was called in, and he diagnosed the case as tubercular peritonitis, with an affection of the lungs, taking a small quantity of fluid from the pleural cavity and having it examined by a bacteriologist, who confirmed his opinion. Dr. Soules also said I would not live three weeks. At this time I decided to try Christian Science and discontinued all medication. I immediately began to improve, and in a short time was up and about the house. I was entirely healed by Christian Science and have remained well and able to go about my work ever since.

Very truly yours,

LAURA MORRIS,
Graduate nurse, 2017 Bailey Avenue.

We, the undersigned, hereby certify that we are familiar with the facts of the illness and healing of Miss Laura Morris by Christian Science, and that the statement above made by her is true and correct.

BESSIE MORRIS.

(4) CHARLES RINKER—PEMPHIGUS.

DUBUQUE, IOWA, August 26, 1914.

Senator J. D. WORKS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: About 10 years ago I was taken sick with a very severe skin disease, which my doctor, F. H. Holland, pronounced pemphigus. After treating with him for about three months he sent me to the clinic of the Rush Medical College in Chicago, under the care of Drs. Hyde and Ormsby, who also said I was suffering from pemphigus. I remained at the clinic for three months, after which I was dismissed, not healed, but was informed to go to my home and continue treatments, which I did for about two years without any good results.

At this time Christian Science was presented to me, and in a few months I was healed, without a return of the disease since.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES RINKER,
2271 Washington Street, Dubuque, Iowa.

(5) ED. C. VOLKERT—LEAD POISONING AND CONSUMPTION.

More than 20 years ago, while following the occupation of printing and while under the care of Dr. Ralph Jackson, a recognized homeopathic physician of Dubuque, Iowa, my condition of health became so serious that he assured me I had only a few months to live. I was at that time a printing pressman in the office of the Dubuque Times. I requested a change to outdoor work, being unable to stand on my feet and often losing a cupful of blood at stool. My employers demanded an examination by some physician of another school, and at their request I was examined by Dr. Greene, also of Dubuque, an allopath, and he frankly informed me I might live a year if I left the business. I was suffering from insomnia, piles, my system was "leaded" with type poisoning, and consumption would soon end my life. I had been in the care of Dr. Jackson for several years continuously, and he then informed me that medicine could do nothing further for me. I gave up my employment and retired to a home in the country to die. Before the expiration of three months a lady handed me a copy of Science and Health, Mary Baker Eddy's textbook, and as the result of the application of her teachings I soon regained perfect health and am alive to-day. I was also enabled to return to and follow the printing business for some years previous to my voluntary retirement from it to follow the occupation of farming.

Since that time I have found Christian science the most reliable and effective curative agent on earth when employed by those who understand it. The facts herein stated can all be easily corroborated.

Respectfully yours,

ED. C. VOLKERT,
R. R. 2, Bagley, Wis.

(6) GLADYS HOPE MILDRANE—VALVULAR HEART DISEASE.

Six years ago, when I was a very young girl, Dr. Herman Vichery and Dr. Jackson, both heart specialists of this city, pronounced my case incurable valvular heart disease, caused by rheumatic fever. I was never to have any exercise that other children had, never to be allowed any freedom along physical lines. Finally, when the physicians told my family I would have one year at the most to live, my mother becoming desperate tried Christian Science. All drugs were thrown aside, and within two weeks I was up and out, playing baseball with the little boys and girls who were my playmates. From that day my heart has been the same as my eyes and ears to me. I have never even thought of it. For all this I am extremely grateful and happy.

GLADYS HOPE MILDRANE,
South Mallen Street, Dorchester, Mass.

FEBRUARY 9, 1914.

I am grateful for the opportunity to attest the truth of my daughter's testimony as stated above, and hope that through it others may be led out of darkness into the light of Christian Science.

MRS. T. H. MILDRANE.

(7) BERTHA H. WOODS—TUBERCULOSIS OF THE GLANDS.

Christian Science treatment cured me of tuberculosis of the glands in the early fall of the year 1895. I was then living in West Newton, Mass. My mother and sister had died of tuberculosis under medical treatment. In both these cases Dr. Frederic Knight, a well-known throat and lung specialist of Boston, had been called in consultation during the last stages of the disease; therefore it was thought best for me to go to him in the early stages of the trouble while there was yet hope of recovery. I did so, and Dr. Knight used the arsenic treatment. If there was any gain it was not noticeable to me.

We moved to West Newton, and there Dr. Frederick Thayer, of West Newton, was called. He continued the arsenic treatment and also treated me for kidney trouble and constipation, both ailments dating back to my childhood. Dr. Thayer told my husband that my kidneys were so badly affected that unless I was watched carefully a cold settling on the kidneys might end my life very suddenly, consequently he made examination of conditions at regular intervals of a few weeks apart. When my boy was born I had four convulsions, and after that all the bad symptoms were greatly aggravated. I can not give this testimony without a just acknowledgment of Dr. Thayer's wonderful surgery, which saved my baby's life, and the loving devotion he gave us during all those hard months. In Dr. Thayer's absence Dr. Henry Perkins, of West Newton, was called, and he suggested removing, by surgery, the most diseased glands, which were those in the neck, the right breast, and under the right arm. It was then that I turned to Christian Science.

After five days' treatment in Christian Science natural action of the bowels was permanently restored. The feverish sensation and pain in the back from kidney trouble ceased, and in six weeks' time the swollen glands had so diminished in size as not to be noticeable. With the exception of slight ailments, which Christian Science treatment has always cured, I have been a perfectly well woman for the past 18 years. This blessing I owe to Christian Science.

BERTHA H. WOODS.

I hereby testify to the truth of the foregoing statements.

AGNES C. YOUNG.

BROOKLINE, MASS.

(8) A. W. NICHOLAS—TUBERCULOSIS.

AUGUST 15, 1914.

I am 64 years of age. On August 28, 1913, I was afflicted with an abscess on my right wrist, which developed into bone tuberculosis, rotting the bone from the wrist nearly to the elbow.

On the 18th of November it was found necessary to amputate the arm. Two weeks after the amputation inflammation spread over my right side, causing intense agony. I wasted away to a mere skeleton. Dr. W. S. Turner, of this city, who was my physician, said he could do nothing more for me, and he told the neighbors that I had but a few weeks to live.

As a last resort, a Christian Science practitioner was called, and I was entirely healed in a few weeks. At the same time I was healed of chronic rheumatism and stomach trouble that had been the bane of my life for many years.

I have perfect health and weigh 10 pounds more than I ever did.

A. W. NICHOLAS,
17 Vine Street, Newark, Ohio.

(9) ADELE M. FOURNIER—CANCER.

In June, 1911, I had been operated on for a growth in my back. The doctors pronounced it a cancer, and incurable. They went on to say that it would return in six months or a year, and that being so near my spine it would be impossible to remove it. In June, 1912, the condition having returned and causing me much trouble, I decided to turn to Christian Science. For a year I struggled on not seeming to get any better. The summer of 1913 found me in what my friends and relatives called a dying condition. The growth was enormous, causing me much suffering. I had grown very weak. I now weighed less than 90 pounds, my usual weight being about 120 pounds.

I had had treatment from two different practitioners, but another was called. In a few weeks I began to improve and grow stronger. The pain left me entirely, but the manifestation was the same.

One morning in August I awakened with a clear sense of being healed. It was so vivid that I placed my hand to my back to see if the growth had disappeared. Although it was still there, I had a feeling of relief; it seemed as if a burden had been lifted from me. A few days later, when my mother was helping me to dress, she noticed that the growth was smaller. Every day it softened and diminished. About three weeks from that time it had entirely disappeared. I am now in perfect health.

(10) ALICE C. BAIRD—FIBROID TUMOR.

Nine years previous to my healing I had been operated upon for the removal of a fibroid tumor at St. Joseph's Hospital, Chicago, Ill. Dr. Nicholas Senn, one of the world's most famous surgeons, performed the operation. At that time it seemed best not to disturb the smaller tumor, hoping it might cause no further trouble. Its removal meant the taking out of all the female organs and would include a slight operation on the spine, to which the tumor was attached.

Immediately this tumor became extremely painful, and after weeks of suffering I was allowed to go home. I could sleep only on one side with a pillow under one knee; I could walk but a few blocks after a year's time, and could perform no household duties.

I was persuaded that I must submit to another operation, and had all arrangements made when I was healed in Christian Science.

I have since resorted to no material means and am a perfectly normal woman. I have gained in weight 27 pounds in the nine years since I was healed, and through the understanding of the law of life I am learning how to live in health and happiness.

Sincerely yours,

ALICE C. (Mrs. SELDEN N.) BAIRD,
1116 Locust Street, Dubuque, Iowa.

P. S.—Drs. Sarah Kendall, Seattle, Wash., and Charles B. Reed, of Chicago, agreed upon the necessity of an operation.

I hereby certify that the within statement of my wife, Alice C. Baird, is correct in every detail.

S. N. BAIRD.

(11) MRS. LILLIAN L. VARRELL—TUMOR.

Over 27 years ago my attention was called to Christian Science by the wonderful healing of a friend. Later, when in great need of physical help, after different methods of treatment failed, I turned to Christian Science and received the help sought.

Several years later I had a tumor form in my left breast, which grew in size very rapidly. It was examined by two physicians, and both recommended its removal by a surgical operation. I entered a hospital, and after its removal I was assured I would have no further trouble. In a little more than a year I had five growths—three in one breast and two in the other—and the physician who had treated and removed the first one again treated these, and failed as before to check the growth or help them, and he finally recommended the removal of both breasts. I had treatment from a Christian Science practitioner, however, and these growths were entirely wiped out.

Not understanding Christian Science sufficient to apply it to my needs, and living where there was no one at all interested, I turned to material remedies for the little needs. But when four years later a polypus growth of the womb appeared, and the same physician recommended its removal, and said the womb, because of its badly congested condition, must be drawn down and scraped, I turned in my extremity as before to Christian Science and was healed. The positive proofs of these healings was the birth of two sons, one now in his nineteenth year and the other seventeenth, who have had no material remedies. Christian Science has met their every need.

A daughter of 12 years had appendicitis and requested a physician. One was called, and the next day in consultation with another physician decided she had only a few hours to live. She was instantaneously healed when she seemed near passing away, through her own declaration of the Truth, as she had been taught in Christian Science.

(12) MISS FAITH R. EMERY—TUBERCULOSIS OF THE BOWELS.

In the year 1900, in my second year of training as a nurse in the Homeopathic Hospital, in Boston, I was taken ill. After a serious operation, the trouble was diagnosed as tuberculosis of the bowels.

After four months' treatment there I was taken to a private sanitarium in Rutland, Mass. But the treatment there was considered too harsh for me in my condition, and I was taken back to the hospital for a few weeks and then was sent away to die, as I afterwards learned.

From the hospital I was taken to Hebron, Me., where I seemed to get some better, so that I began to walk a little. For the four months that I was in the hospital I was not even bolstered up in bed, and for nine months I did not step my feet on the floor. In June of the next year I was so much better that I was taken to my home at the seashore. In the fall, however, the serious condition returned, and application was made for me to enter the hospital again, but they would not take me back. They did not want an incurable on their hands. I seemed to be in the depths of despair, suffering mentally and physically.

"Man's extremity is God's opportunity." I turned to Christian Science for help. Now after 13 years I can testify that I have spent only one day in bed from illness, and that every illness that has come to me has been healed by Christian Science. To-day I am a well, strong woman, doing my work—hard work—and carrying on a business, free and happy.

(13) ELIZABETH J. GRIFFIN—CANCER.

2040 SEVENTH AVENUE,
New York City, August 24, 1914.

In 1901 I visited Dr. William J. Kingsley, of the Cancer Hospital, Rome, N. Y., for advice about growths in both my right and left breasts. Dr. Kingsley pronounced the growth to be scirrhus or hard cancer. I was operated upon in 1901 and again in 1902 by Dr. Will Kingsley, son of Dr. William J. Kingsley. In all there were seven developments in the right and nine in the left breast. It was in 1904, when the condition made its appearance for the third time under the wounds of the previous operations, that I called for Christian Science treatment. After five weeks treatment by Christian Science all trace of cancer disappeared, and I am now entirely free.

Sincerely yours,

ELIZABETH J. GRIFFIN.

AUGUST 26, 1914.

This is to verify the statement made by my sister Elizabeth J. Griffin, in a letter dated August 24, 1914, addressed to the Hon. JOHN D. WORKS, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C. I was with my sister at Dr. Kingsley's hospital in Rome, N. Y., during the time of the first operation, and remained with her until the doctor felt that the operation had been successful. I also accompanied her to the train when she went to Rome for the second operation. I know that the condition had made its appearance for the third time, and that it disappeared under Christian Science treatment.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. E. GRIFFIN.

(14) JOHN H. CUSHING—DIABETES.

VINTON, IOWA, August 26, 1914.

I was examined several times and my case diagnosed by Drs. J. P. Whitney and L. Chadburn, practicing physicians of Vinton, Iowa, and my condition was pronounced by them to be "sugar diabetes," and they said it was incurable and medicine could not cure it, and that I might prolong existence by a strict diet, but that I would never be well.

I spent the most of one winter at Mineral Wells, Tex., drinking the water in hope of relief. Before this condition came upon me I weighed 210 pounds, and on returning from the "Wells" I was in a worse condition, only weighing 165 pounds. A few weeks after my return a friend who had been healed of the same trouble by Christian Science advised me to try it, which I did, and in one treatment in Christian Science I was healed, and within an hour ate a hearty meal, and have not missed a meal since. This healing took place in March, 1912, and I have continued well ever since and now weigh 187 pounds, and I am able to do all kinds of heavy work, which I could not do for three years previous to my healing in Christian Science.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN H. CUSHING.

(15) FRANK HALE—DRINK HABIT.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, August 30, 1914.

My affliction was the whisky and cigarette habits, having constantly used whisky and cigarettes to excess from 15 to 20 years. Previous to my complete breakdown I was consuming fully a quart of whisky each day and night and smoking 40 to 50 cigarettes daily until July, 1913, when I was awakened to the fact that I was a physical and mental wreck, when I decided to take the whisky cure at the Keeley Institute, at Des Moines, Iowa. I remained there five weeks under the care of this institution, at the end of which time Dr. Culver, the physician in charge, pronounced my case incurable under their treatment, and indicated to my sister, who was a Christian Scientist, that I might possibly be helped through this means of healing. I was sent away from this institute with an attendant, as I was demented and almost blind, not able to in any way care for myself. My first stop was at Marshalltown, where my sister lived, and when I arrived there I took my first treatment in Christian Science, commencing to improve immediately. After three weeks I was able to return to my home in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in a much improved condition and continued the treatments for some little time, and through the healing power of Christian Science I am now in my right mind and physically well and morally strong, and never felt better in my life. I am convinced that if it had not been for Christian Science I would not be here to tell the story. I am not only restored to health, but to my wife and family and to my former work, as traveling salesman, and my gratitude to God and Christian Science is unbounded.

Very respectfully,

FRANK HALE,
818 South Second Street W.

(16) FLORENCE A. LOPEZ—TUBERCULOSIS OF KNEE JOINT.

I had been in poor health for a number of years and was constantly under the doctor's care, until finally, about the spring of 1901, I think it was, I was obliged to give up my work altogether. I suffered continually with my head and back and had gradually lost the use of my right leg. The pain seemed to center in my knee and was intense. I went from doctor to doctor, but grew constantly worse. Finally I was taken to Dr. Lillienthal, a prominent surgeon connected with Mount Sinai Hospital; he diagnosed the condition as tuberculosis of the knee joint, and ordered me to wear on orthopedic brace. This I did for several months, but it only seemed to make matters worse. By this time the leg had shriveled considerably and I was constantly in great pain.

In December, 1902, I was removed to St. John's Hospital, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and was operated on by Dr. Beekman H. Delatour, who removed several pieces of cartilage which had broken loose from the knee joint. I had been promised by the doctors that if I would consent to this operation I would experience immediate relief, and, though my knee would be permanently stiff, I would otherwise be well and able to walk without difficulty. This, however, did not happen. I continued to suffer intensely, and shortly after this operation I developed a mastoid abscess and six weeks later was operated on for that trouble. I remained in St. John's Hospital for three months, until the spring of 1903. As the result of these operations my knee was entirely stiff and the leg had shortened over an inch. I continued to suffer almost as much as previously, and was unable to walk without crutches.

During the next year I had treatment from an osteopath, who tried in vain to restore motion to the knee and who finally gave up the case as hopeless. In March of 1904 I was again taken to the hospital and operated on for appendicitis, returning home at the end of a month weaker and more miserable than ever. The following winter, at the advice of the doctors, I went south and remained for six months, returning much better and even able to walk a little without crutches, but in a few months I was much worse again and had to return to the doctors. In October, 1905, I went a third time to the hospital and was again operated on, further pieces of the cartilage being removed. This resulted in a still further shortening of the leg, but was otherwise without result.

In February, 1906, after a winter of great suffering and hopelessness, I was persuaded to try Christian Science. I knew nothing of it and had no faith in it, but simply tried it as a last resort, as I was almost in despair. Six weeks after I started treatment I was walking on the street without crutches, and in another six weeks the leg had grown back to its natural length. On the 17th of June, 1906, I went to work, and have been constantly employed ever since. A month or two later I was examined by Dr. W. L. Duffield, who had been my attending physician for years, and, to quote his own words, he said, "Your knee is in absolutely perfect condition." I have continued to grow stronger during the last eight years, until I can say gratefully that I am absolutely well.

The truth of the foregoing statement can be vouched for by the following: Mrs. Fred Riley, 5 Kenmore Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. Clarence Steere (formerly of Brooklyn), Wickford, R. I.

(17) MISS JULIA C. MEEK—CHRONIC MYELITIS.

About eight years ago, at the age of 13, I was taken with what physicians called chronic myelitis, which gradually developed in intensity until it extended over the entire length of the spinal column, in consequence of which my entire body except the right arm became absolutely useless. My head and knees were drawn so closely together that the only way I could take food was by having my knees forced apart and being fed by means of a tube. Every physician who was employed pronounced my case incurable, and in consultation they agreed that it was impossible for me to live, and positively would never be well. After failing to receive any help or get any encouragement from the several physicians, I turned to Christian Science, and through its efficacy was completely healed. The following doctors were employed: Dr. C. O. Bernhardt, sr., No. 506 Eighteenth Street, Rock Island, Ill.; Dr. George Eyster, No. 1109 Second Avenue, Rock Island, Ill.; Dr. J. F. Meyers, No. 2926 Fifth Avenue, Moline, Ill.; Dr. V. A. Berland, No. 1721½ Second Avenue, Rock Island, Ill.

Respectfully yours,

MISS JULIA C. MEEK,
No. 912 Seventeenth Street, Rock Island, Ill.

(18) MISS NELLIE B. TINKHAM—CANCER.

Nine years ago I first began to notice a disease manifesting itself in my left breast. This increased gradually until it began to give me considerable pain and swelling. I consulted Dr. C. E. Longlaux, Dubuque, Iowa, who stated, upon examination, that an immediate operation was absolutely necessary; that it was a tumorous cancer; that it was so far developed as to make an immediate operation a positive necessity in order to save my life, as well as threatening paralysis of the left arm. At this stage of my disease the pains became very severe and lasting. The mental condition following such a diagnosis and the physical evidence to support it made human existence to me most unendurable. This first doctor said that the left breast had to be entirely removed, part of the right one also; that the operation had to be performed within 10 days; that the growth of this cancer had extended to this positive necessity.

I then consulted Dr. Reuter, of Waterloo, Iowa. He corroborated what the first doctor said. This last-named doctor was an allopathic doctor. At this time my left arm could not be raised to my head. It was at this extreme period, in March, 1913, that I tried Christian Science upon the advice of a friend. The first treatment brought relief, although severe pains followed three days later during the night, but the following morning I realized that I was greatly improved, and in the first week's Christian Science work the growth became smaller, pains disappeared, fear destroyed, my general condition greatly improved. At the end of three months the cancerous growth had entirely disappeared, my breasts were in perfect normal condition, my left arm well, my general condition of health most excellent. I relied absolutely upon Christian Science during this time. My condition as to health and happiness has been normal and permanent to this date, September 7, 1914.

I am willing to verify under oath the correctness of this testimony.

MISS NELLIE B. TINKHAM,
Dubuque, Iowa.

(19) MRS. REBA G. PECK—FIBROID TUMOR.

Sixteen years ago I suffered greatly from nervous headaches and great depression. This continued for a number of years, with attacks of acute pain so great that at times I thought I would die in them. My husband, being a physician, treated me without any permanent relief, frequently calling in other physicians to suggest treatment, without any permanent results. After several years' suffering the trouble was diagnosed fibroid tumor of the uterus. An eminent surgeon and a specialist of women's diseases suggested the knife as the only remedy, but I would not submit to a surgical operation and continued to suffer almost unendurable pain and depression, with impaired digestion and inability to properly attend my household duties. The tumor gradually grew until it was the size of one's head. Finding no relief from medicine, electricity, osteopathy, or psychology, I turned to Christian Science and found in this treatment great relief. First the headaches were relieved, digestion improved, and the tumor reduced and disappeared. Since then I have turned to Science for different diseases in my family and have seen some wonderful healings. My gratitude is unbounded.

Respectfully,

MRS. REBA G. PECK,
235 West Peachtree Street, Atlanta, Ga.

SEPTEMBER 6, 1914.

The very brief statement of the suffering of my wife, Mrs. R. G. Peck, only partly states her condition and suffering. I certify that the statement is correct and only details a very small part of her suffering. She was perfectly relieved by Christian Science treatment, as stated, after failure of all known medical treatment.

(20) FRED J. STEVENS—LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA.

501 SOUTH LA SALLE STREET.
Chicago, September 16, 1914.

For a period of 12 years I was in very poor health, almost constantly under the care of a physician. I was then taken with a disease diagnosed by the doctor as locomotor ataxia and pronounced incurable. He also advised very strongly against the employment of specialists or any system of medical treatment, saying there was absolutely nothing known in medical science that would heal this disease. As he was also an old friend of the family, he knew that we had no money to waste, and he was very willing to do all the doctoring we needed.

This ailment, owing to my very weakened physical condition, made very rapid headway, and at the end of three years I was helpless, bedridden, unable to walk or to stand upright on my feet. A specialist was then called, and after three months' treatment I was so much worse that he told my wife that he could do nothing more, that my end was near—a matter of six weeks at most. I decided then and there that I would discontinue all medicine and medical treatment and live the balance of my days in peace. A copy of the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy, was brought to me at this time by a Christian Science friend, and after a few weeks of thorough study and an honest desire for understanding I was once more enabled to use my limbs, which had been useless for so long. After reaching the point where I could walk out on the street without assistance a Christian Science practitioner was consulted for the purpose of obtaining a better understanding of the truth. One month from the day that I called on the practitioner I returned to my place of employment thoroughly and completely healed. It is now more than 11 years since this healing was effected, and there has never been the least symptom of the old complaint returning. To-day I can walk as good as any man and am enjoying perfect health.

The physician who diagnosed this case is Dr. Wells Andrews, whose last address that I have been able to get was at 2259 West Madison Street, Chicago. The specialist who treated this case was a Dr. Gilbert White, who at that time was the head of a goat lymph sanitarium, located in the Auditorium Building, Chicago, but whose present whereabouts are unknown to me.

Very sincerely, yours,

FRED J. STEVENS.

The events narrated in the foregoing testimony of my husband are true and exact in every particular.

MRS. NELLIE E. STEVENS.

(21) C. DUDLEY GEDDES—CRIPPLED FROM BIRTH.

1415 SECOND AVENUE,
Detroit, Mich., September 2, 1914.

I wish to testify to the efficacy of Christian Science as a healing agency.

My son, now 17 years of age, from his birth to his twelfth year was a cripple, delicate, and puny.

Christian Science has changed him to a rugged, healthy, normal boy. It has both straightened and lengthened the curved and shortened limb, restored the carious bone to soundness and the stiffened joints to their normal action.

This condition was prenatal, consequently looked upon by the medical profession as incurable. Manipulation, massage, electricity were each given a trial, without result. Nothing remained to be done from a material standpoint but an operation. Friends and doctors advised it as the only remedy, but even this held no assurance of a complete healing. The only committal given was that it would help the condition.

No less a distinguished physician than Dr. Royal Copeland, of New York City, dean of New York Homeopathic Medical College and Flower Hospital, 58 Central Park West, formerly the head of the homeopathic department of the University of Michigan, and a man of great breadth and generosity of mind, willing to give justice where justice is due, made the statement that it was beyond the realm of reason to expect Christian Science to heal this particular case; that the only thing to be done was an operation.

An operation did heal the boy, but it was the operation of Divine mind, not of matter. It was the operation of the Divine law of harmony replacing that of inharmony—suffering; the law of freedom replacing that of bondage. Furthermore, the healing was painless, thorough, and complete.

That this testimony may give hope to others who are in need and that Christian Science may be given the credit of the healing is the reason for giving it.

Very sincerely yours,

LULU Y. GEDDES.

I hereby certify that the above testimony as given by my mother in regard to my healing is true in every particular.

C. DUDLEY GEDDES.

I personally know C. Dudley Geddes and the mother, Mrs. Lulu Y. Geddes, hence I can vouch for the verity of the above statement.

Sincerely yours,

CHAS. V. WINN.

In a personal note accompanying the above testimonial Mrs. Geddes says:

"I am sending you a testimony of my son's healing through Christian Science. It has been slow in going forward to you for the reason that I had first to find the address of Dr. Copeland, to whom reference is made, and then wait for a reply—wishing to make sure that the use of his name would not be objectionable to him. In writing him I inclosed a copy of the testimonial I am sending you, and this is what he said in answer to it:

"'Your letter is certainly truthful, and I have no desire to have it changed in the least. I have always said that as a system of ethics, as a way of everyday living, Christian Science has in it all the good in the world. You know I have never been quite willing to admit that organic disease could respond to the methods of Christian Science, but I would be a poor Christian, indeed, if I doubted God's ability to do anything.'

"Dr. Copeland is dean of the New York Homeopathic Medical College and Flower Hospital, New York City.

"Very sincerely yours,

"LULU Y. GEDDES."

(22) R. H. PENTECOST—BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

MEMPHIS, TENN., September 12, 1914.

In the year 1905 my health failed to such an extent that I was practically incapacitated for work. Dr. W. T. Watson, of Lexington, Tenn., where I was living at that time, diagnosed my case, and, being a friend of my family, evidently feared to acquaint me with his finding. However, subsequent events proved that his diagnosis confirmed my opinion of the case.

Failing to receive any benefit from materia medica, as a last resort I turned to Christian Science and was shortly healed. Some two years after my healing I was again in Lexington, and seeing Dr. Watson I urged him to tell me what his diagnosis had revealed, whereupon he stated that it was undoubtedly Bright's disease, and that he feared to tell me the real condition at the time of his diagnosis. My healing was permanent, and I am now in excellent health.

Yours truly,

R. H. PENTECOST.

I am familiar with this case and know it to be absolutely true.

Truthfully,

MARY BEATRICE GARRISON.

(23) MRS. MAME LUND—TUMOR.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., September 11, 1914.

I was healed of an ovarian cyst tumor through Christian Science treatment 16 years ago. My family physician, Dr. O. L. Dales, of Grand Rapids, took me to the U. B. A. Hospital, of this city, where Dr. Herrick performed the operation. I had become very thin and emaciated, and then filled up with water until, from the waist line down to my feet, I was very large. The tumor and what water they caught filled a large pail and weighed 40 pounds. Another tumor grew in its place, which at the end of a year had become very large. The same family physican, Dr. Dales, urged me to have it removed again, and with it the organ from which it grew.

While dreading the operation I heard of Christian Science. I asked for Christian Science treatment and at the end of a week I was free from all pain and discomfort. I continued taking treatment in Christian Science for about three weeks. Not long after Dr. Dales made an examination and found no trace of the tumor. About six months after my healing I passed examination for life insurance.

During all these years there has never been any return of the trouble.

Very truly yours,

MRS. MAME LUND.

We gladly indorse Mrs. Lund's testimony of healing.

(24) FRIEND WEST—CANCER.

CEDAR SPRINGS, MICH., September 11, 1914.

In September, 1908, my physician, Dr. A. C. Auren, then of Cedar Springs, took me to a hospital in Grand Rapids to be operated on for appendicitis. Dr. Graves started to perform an operation, and instead of appendicitis he found a cancer of the bowels of so serious a nature as to make an operation useless. The incision was sewed up without performing any operation, and I was informed by Dr. Graves that I might possibly live six weeks.

My cousin, who is a Christian Scientist, asked me to try Christian Science. The incision for an operation took place Tuesday. On the following day—Wednesday—I had my first Christian Science treatment. Saturday of the same week I walked down town, a distance of several blocks. Sunday I took a ride of about 12 miles in a carriage and in 10 days I was working on the farm picking up potatoes.

I am pleased to say that I have remained in good health ever since, having had no return of the cancer.

Very truly yours, FRIEND WEST.

We indorse the above testimony of the healing of Friend West through Christian Science treatment.

CHAS. R. ALLMAND.
MRS. FRIEND WEST.

(25) HARRY FISHER—MULTIPLE NEURITIS, KIDNEY TROUBLE, AND TOBACCO HEART.

BUFFALO, N. Y., September 25, 1914.

While attending a convention of the National Association of Merchant Tailors of America, held in Washington, D. C., in February, 1911, I was seized with a severe attack of tonsilitis. Upon my return home I sought my physician, Dr. George M. Lewis, 2567 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. He did what he could to relieve me, but without success. A few days later I was stricken down with what the doctors term multiple neuritis, kidney trouble, and tobacco heart, and for a period of several weeks I suffered untold agony, and half of that time was in a semi-conscious condition. During the earlier part of my sickness my wife called in Dr. George Mosley, of Delaware Avenue, Buffalo, in consultation with Dr. Lewis, and they agreed that the diagnosis was a correct one and the remedies satisfactory. I was given hot-air baths up to a temperature of three and four hundred degrees, together with various medicines, but I gradually became weaker, until the doctor informed my family that I would not live longer than 48 hours at the longest. My family then asked me to try Christian Science, and I gave my consent to call a practitioner. When he came to my room I was in such a condition that I was unable to sit up or stand, unable to feed myself, and my nurse carried me in his arms just like a baby. After he had given me a treatment he told me that I would be able to leave my bed on the next day, and could do so at once if I wished to. I looked at the practitioner and felt very sorry for him, but to my surprise I did get up about three-quarters of an hour after he had left, for I was completely healed of all my complaints. A desire for tobacco was taken away and a few days later I discovered that my eyesight was healed, for I had worn glasses for about 12 years.

From the day of my healing to the present time I have had splendid health and have not take any medicine internally or externally.

I remain, yours, very truly,

HARRY FISHER.

I have personally known Mr. Harry Fisher for the period of 20 years and known the awful sickness through which he passed in February, 1911, and can testify to the wonderful healing which he had under Christian Science treatment.

Yours very truly,

LOUIS SAPERSTON,
146 East Utica Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

SEPTEMBER 25, 1914.

One of the most wonderful cases of healing that has come to my notice occurred here in Washington. It is the casé of a child born crippled and deformed and declared by the doctors to be idiotic. It was practically made over by Christian Science treatment. And yet people in their ignorance say that this remedy can not heal organic disease, but is good only for nervous or imaginary ailments. I submit the account of the father and mother of this healing:

(26) CHILD OF MR. AND MRS. A. K. WINE—CRIPPLED AND DEFORMED FROM BIRTH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 19, 1914.

Our youngest daughter, born July 15, 1912, was misshapen at birth, having curvature of the spine and both arms and legs constantly remained in an unnatural position, one arm being drawn down to the side and back in a twisted position, the other arm being drawn up back of the head; both legs were drawn up in an unnatural position. The child had convulsions from the day of her birth, sometimes as many as 18 in a day and night. Every particle of food she attempted to eat would bring on convulsions. She never had a natural movement of the bowels. We tried every means that we could, but her condition never improved.

On August 1, 1913, we took her to Johns Hopkins Hospital, in Baltimore. The surgeons told us that the child had been injured at birth and had a clot of blood on the brain; that she was an idiot and could not live; that if it were possible for her to live she would never be able to walk, because her legs were drawn out of shape. They also said that one shoulder was dislocated. She was in such a misshapen condition that this had never been discovered. We brought the child home and the end seemed to be at hand. The local physician, Dr. William P. Wood, said that she was nearly gone, and we began to make arrangements for the funeral. She revived, however, and continued to live. Some friends then called our attention to Christian Science and advised us to give it a trial. We did so, and as soon as the treatment in Christian Science commenced the convulsions stopped and the bowels began to act normally, and have done so ever since. One day when bathing her and moving as carefully as possible the dislocated arm it suddenly snapped into place with considerable noise. It has remained in place ever since. She is now able to stand on her feet, her legs are straight, and she is learning to walk and talk, and is not an idiot.

Before being healed in Christian Science she had cut several teeth. They were all without enamel, so soft and chalky that they could be flaked off with the finger nail. Since her healing the teeth that she has cut have been covered with enamel, and enamel is forming at the roots of the teeth that came before she was healed.

The surgeons at the Johns Hopkins Hospital stated, among other things, that a rib had been broken and grown together. There was a disagreeable-looking lump where the break had occurred. The lump has entirely disappeared. Her back is also perfectly straight.

MRS. MAUDE A. WINE,
A. K. WINE,
116 Third Street NE.

This is to certify that I have this day seen the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Wine, referred to in the accompanying statement. The appearance of the child bears out the statement of the parents. The child appears bright, active, and happy.

WM. S. CAMPBELL,

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 19, 1914.

(27) MRS. G. H. HAMILTON—DISEASE OF KIDNEYS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 23, 1914.

DEAR SIR: In February of 1902 I was confined to my bed for two weeks with abscess and hemorrhage of the kidneys. At that time I was chief night nurse at the Grant Hospital, Columbus, Ohio. Dr. J. F. Baldwin suggested operating. Dr. E. J. Wilson was called in consultation, and they decided not to operate.

For six years after that time, and after leaving the hospital, I had frequent attacks, having employed different physicians—Dr. C. D. McCoy, now of Kenton, Ohio; Dr. E. J. Emerick, of Columbus; and Dr. J. F. Baldwin being in consultation with each one.

The attacks growing more severe and my general health in a more weakened condition until February, 1908, which was the last and most severe, I in a short time after that had an X-ray examination by Dr. C. J. Bowen, which showed the left kidney to be about three times its normal size, with light spots, which, he said, they thought might be tubercular. The right kidney showed the light spots, but could not get distinct outline.

Next, Dr. Starling Wilcox catheterized the ureters, by request of Dr. Baldwin, to determine whether the right one could stand the removal of the left one. But after none of them would tell me what was the trouble, but said the right one was as bad as the left, and they could not operate, but said I must give up all my work. They prescribed a treatment which I tried to carry out, but grew worse and could not stand the medicine, as it injured the stomach.

In May I was advised to try Christian Science. After sarcastically refusing for some time, I finally consulted a practitioner and in four weeks was healed, the poison passing off in the form of a diarrhea, lasting four days.

I have had no return of the trouble and am able to do anything I have to do, for which I am very grateful, indeed.

MRS. G. H. HAMILTON,
9132 Summit Street.

(28) MRS. MARY S. STEWART—CANCER.

MCCONNELSVILLE, OHIO, September 22, 1910.

It gives me pleasure to give my testimony as to what Christian Science has done for me.

After being operated upon twice for the removal of a cancerous growth in the breast, and after the growth had appeared again for the third time and in two places, I was induced to try Christian Science.

I was healed. I have had perfect health and there has been no return of the disease since. That was seven years ago.

Very respectfully,

Mrs. MARY S. STEWART.

P. S.—The physician who diagnosed the case and who performed the operation were one and the same, Dr. Henry McLaughlin, of Marietta, Ohio.

M. S. S.

(29) MRS. ADELAIDE M. GILMAN—DISEASE OF KIDNEYS.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 22, 1914.

After suffering for three years with sinking and fainting spells, as well as having considerable pain, I went to Dr. C. F. Hoover, 700 Rose Building, Cleveland, Ohio, for an examination. As a result of this examination he stated that there was a large growth on the right kidney and that the left kidney was so badly affected that there were continuous hemorrhages from it. He said that it would not be advisable to operate, as both kidneys were seriously affected, and advised that I remain as quiet as possible, explaining that any sudden jar might cause a hemorrhage which might result fatally. He even advised me not to go home in my machine, fearing the jolting of the car would produce a serious hemorrhage.

At the request of Dr. Hoover, Dr. William Lower, Osborn Building, Cleveland, also made an examination, as well as a test of the urine, which test corroborated the diagnosis of Dr. Hoover. He also advised against riding in an automobile or street car and recommended perfect quiet.

After consulting with these specialists I was advised by friends to try Christian Science treatment, which I did. The change was apparent from the first treatment. In three months I took an automobile trip of over 1,000 miles, and while on that trip my complete healing was manifested. After the healing a sample of the urine was analyzed by Dr. Tanner, of Willoughby, Ohio, who pronounced it free from any foreign matter.

During the past seven years I have been absolutely free from any discordant condition of this kind and have annually taken trips ranging from 1,000 to 3,000 miles by automobile without experiencing any inconvenience.

Mrs. ADELAIDE M. GILMAN,
Beauwood, Euclid, Ohio.

(30) MAJ. LORENZO P. DAVISON—PARALYSIS, RHEUMATISM, AND OTHER DISEASES.

The STATE OF TEXAS, County of Tarrant:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Maj. Lorenzo P. Davison, United States Army, retired, known to me to be a credible person, who, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is at present detailed by the War Department as instructor of military science and tactics at a military school near Fort Worth, Tex.; that he is an alumnus of Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y.; a graduate of the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., class 1885; that he took the post graduate course at the United States Engineer School of Application, Willets Point, N. Y., 1888–1890; and that at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War he was pursuing special work in the Ryerson Physical Laboratory at the University of Chicago under the direction of Prof. Michallson, the celebrated physicist; that he is now sound, mentally and physically, and able to do more work and better work than ever before in his life; that his present physical condition is due to the healing power of Christian Science; that he was healed by reading Science and Health, With Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy, of the following diseases: Rheumatism of 12 years' standing, diagnosed as chronic; malaria of about 8 years' standing, developed into its most pernicious form, due to continued tropic service; and of the after effects of a violent attack of tropical—Shanghai—dysentery; constipation in its most stubborn form, said to be due to a stricture of the sigmoid flexure which the surgeons claimed could only be completely remedied by an operation.

At the close of the Spanish-American War he found himself completely prostrated physically and mentally, suffering from the above-mentioned complications combined with what the doctors diagnosed as chronic neurasthenia, and that he was invalided home from the Tropics, with little or no expectation of ever being able to do active service again. That in July, 1900, his command was ordered abroad as part of an expedition for the relief of the legations at Peking, China, and while but little improved in health, he went with his company in a vain attempt to flee from what seemed a worse state of affairs at home—desperately sick in soul and in body, a soldier's grave in a far-off land seemed to be the highest hope both for himself and his family; that his service in the Philippines was practically a repetition of that in the American Tropics, resulting in frequent collapses and a final complete breakdown, culminating with malignant ear trouble and mastoiditis; that his mental and physical condition was such as to render it unsafe to operate for the latter trouble, which apparently developed into what was finally clearly diagnosed by expert physicians and surgeons as pachymeningitis, affecting the part of the brain supposed to be the center of sight, speech, and hearing; that he was sent from one military hospital to another for observation and treatment, until between Christmas and New Year's, 1902, at the Army and Navy General Hospital in Hot Springs, Ark., he was stricken with paralysis affecting the right side; 11 days later a second stroke included the entire right side and affected the left; some 14 days later a third stroke of paralysis completed the work and left him apparently helpless, sightless, and speechless. That these strokes were well defined, and on account of his age, 44, the surgeons held out no possible hope of recovery. While in this state, much of the time in a state of coma, given up by the kind, competent, and sympathetic surgeons as hopeless, waiting as patiently as possible for death which seemed inevitable, some words of the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy, came to him with new meaning, a meaning not understood when read years before in mere technical investigation; that he began to realize their healing effect, and turned to God for the first time with an honest desire to live, to be good, and to do good; that more and more of this truth came to him as he continued to ponder it, and to the amazement and confusion of the surgeons in charge he began to recover the use of faculties and limbs; that from that time on, especially after being able to again procure a copy of Science and Health, depending entirely on Christian Science for healing and reformation, he was freed from those various diseases slowly but surely, and is to-day a well, strong, active, and happy and contented man; that for many years preceding his final breakdown he was what is called a steady drinker—never actually drunk, but requiring more and more frequent indulgence in stimulants to do his work, and fond of gaming, often carrying it to excess; profane and otherwise not over choice in the use of words or ideas; a confirmed tobacco user in all its worst forms, and without fear of God or respect to man, and without a hope of a hereafter; that these habits fell away from him one by one while reading and studying the Bible in connection with and as interpreted by Science and Health until now he rejoices in freedom from all the above degrading conditions; that in 1904, when he came up regularly for examination for promotion to his present rank, the examining board, in performance of their sworn duty, called in expert medical testimony and found that, although rapidly improving, he was entirely unfit for active service, and that there was no reasonable hope that he would be able to do duty again, and thereupon he was retired from the active list of the Army; that in 1906 he was examined for a policy of $5,000 in a well-known life insurance company and passed the medical examination successfully and highly satisfactorily, and that with a full and detailed knowledge of the medical history of the applicant the proper authority (the vice president of the company in this case) waived the facts of said medical history and officially considered him and recommended him as an "excellent risk"; that said policy was thereupon issued, and that a year and a half later, when deponent allowed said policy to lapse because he considered it an unnecessary expense, the said insurance company urged him strongly to maintain said policy; that he at this time hardly knew what a "healer" or "practitioner" meant in Christian Science, and had no treatment or other ouside help until later; that the medical history of the deponent is a matter of record in the War Department, Washington, D. C., and at the various hospitals and posts where he was afflicted—records made on the spot by unbiased and competent surgeons; that in the interest of truth the deponent will facilitate the examination of such records and will gladly answer in detail any questions as to his previous or present condition; and deponent further states that he knows by indubitable evidence which is too sacred to be made public that his healing and reformation are due to the complete change of thought concerning God and concerning man in His image and likeness, brought about by reading and studying and attempting to apply the discovery by Mary Baker Eddy known as Christian Science.

(31) MRS. NINA ECKSTEIN—BLINDNESS.

When about 4 years old I fell into a pond of water which was covered with scum, my eyes becoming infected with same. For some weeks I could not see at all, and when the doctor did not help me my mother took me to an old man who healed by prayer. After my third visit I was able to see. When the trouble returned and I was taken there again we found that the man had died, and I was obliged to resort to material means again. When I reached my sixteenth year I went to Prague, Austria, and entered a hospital, where I remained about four weeks and was discharged as healed. Two years later I went to New York, and after being there one week my eyes again became very much inflamed and I was taken to an eye specialist, whose name I have forgotten. He said that my trouble was incurable, and his fee being more than I could pay, I was obliged to go to Dr. Knapp's free clinic; and I continued to go there for 12 years, sometimes three and four times a week. Dr. Born attended me most of the time, and although everything was done for me, I grew worse. Hearing then of a new clinic that had been opened on One hundred and twenty-sixth Street and Fifth Avenue, known as the Sherwood Memorial Eye Infirmary, Dr. A. Scott being the head physician, I went there. I can honestly say that everything known to the medical profession was tried by Dr. Scott. After one year and a half of faithful service he came to the conclusion that he could do no more, and said that unless God performed a miracle I would become blind.

Shortly after this I heard of Christian Science, and remembering Dr. Scott's statement, I investigated it to see if there was any help for me. I was also told by the above-named physician that the sight of one eye was gone and it was only a question of time with the other. Indeed, my whole head was so affected that for eight months previous to my coming into Christian Science I was attended by two physicians daily, Dr. Scott for my eyes and Dr. A. Kuntz for my head. Fearing that I might lose my mind, the latter often put leeches on my temples to draw off the blood. I was warned by Dr. Scott never to neglect my eyes even for one day, as it might prove fatal. With this thought I took up Christian Science, and three weeks later, not having sufficient understanding of the Truth, as taught in Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy, to overcome the fear produced by the doctor's verdict, I became totally blind. I remained in this condition for three months, when the light began to dawn upon me and gradually I was able to go alone. About a year later I called on Dr. Scott and told him what I had done. I shall never forget the tears of joy he shed when I explained to him that I was no longer discouraged nor despondent and that I wanted to live. Although he was sure, according to the condition of the eyes while under his care, that if the vision were ever destroyed nothing could possibly restore it, when he was told that after being blind for three months I was able to see he was honest and good enough to acknowledge the power of God as taught in Christian Science.

In conclusion, will say that for over 16 years I have relied wholly on Christian Science for every discordant condition that has presented itself, and can honestly say that I am younger, healthier, and happier than I had ever hoped to be.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. NINA ECKSTEIN,
70 Lenox Street, Hartford, Conn.

Although I am not a Christian Scientist, I know the above statement of my sister-in-law's healing to be absolutely true.

(32) MRS. LILLIE D. ATKINSON—DEAFNESS.

When about 18 years of age my parents discovered that I was becoming deaf, and at once placed me in the hands of a specialist. For a period of about nine years I was treated by almost as many physicians, but without relief; in fact, I became almost totally deaf. Eight years ago last May I went to Dr. Frank Crouch, one of the most noted specialists of Baltimore, Md. After a thorough examination he told me that the deafness was caused by a gradual weakening of the auditory nerves, and that in a very short time I would be totally deaf.

I immediately took up the study of Christian Science, and my hearing has been restored so that I can hear ordinary conversation without the least difficulty. Along with this healing came healing of my eyes, and I was able to dispense with glasses, which I had worn for 10 years, besides being healed of an affection of the kidneys, for which an operation had been advised, and a supposedly incurable skin disease of lifelong standing.

Very truly yours, Mrs. LILLIE D. ATKINSON,

(33) WILLIAM H. SEYFRIED—NECROSIS OF BONES OF THE CHEST.

NEW LONDON, CONN., October 15, 1914.

By this letter I desire to testify to my personal experience and to the efficacy of Christian Science as a healing agency when at death's door.

In June, 1903, I was taken down with typhoid fever while playing an engagement at the Atlantic Highlands Casino as musical director. During my illness that season the board of governors did everything possible to make me comfortable and furnished me with the best medical aid obtainable. My local physician being Dr. Van Mater, of Atlantic Highlands. When my condition permitted, I was removed to my home in New York City with the hope of being able to take my usual winter engagement, but my convalescence was very slow. In November of the same year I had severe pains in my chest, and finally after our family physician's examination (Dr. Gilday, of the Polyclinic Hospital staff, East Thirty-fourth Street, New York City), it was said that there was a growth on my chest which must be removed by an operation. When this was over, I was informed that the operation, which took place in Dr. Gilday's office, had disclosed a serious affection of the bone.

I kept putting off the question, however, until after another examination in April, 1904, when I went to the Polyclinic Hospital for my second operation. This time the surgeons removed not only part of the center sternum, or breastbone, but also one rib. The wound not healing, I became very much disheartened, and in November of the same year I went to a specialist, Dr. William Tillinghast Bull, who said after an examination that another operation was the only thing.

A few days before Thanksgiving Day found me in Dr. Bull's sanitarium for my third operation, and this time a second and third rib were removed, leaving me weaker than ever. This operation was performed by Drs. Bull, Walker, and Denton. Now came the time for me to go about with a cane, with one of my family as an escort, and I often prayed to be taken out of such misery.

January, 1905, found me back in the same sanitarium for the fourth operation within less than a year. In this last experience two more ribs were removed, and left me in a dreadful condition; and about the 1st of March my dear friend Dr. Bull gave me up, saying twice to me while dressing my wounds: "Can't you think of something else you might try, or some other doctor?" When I returned home I pondered over this question, but concluded I had had about all the cruel steel I could endure; in fact, my surgeon told me once I had better arrange my personal affairs, as bone necrosis was incurable when in such an advanced stage as mine.

Shortly after this a friend called and asked my good wife to have me try Christian Science. I was approached on the subject, and, thinking it over, it came to me that if Christian Science did me no good it certainly could do me no harm, and the more I thought of it the more I felt like trying it. Very rarely was I permitted to go from home to the surgeon's office, unless one of my family accompanied me; but one day something happened that I went alone, and when I came out of the surgeon's office I stood at Herald Square with tears streaming down my cheeks, confronted with the prospect before me of trying surgery again, and this time still another rib was to be removed. But remembering my firm resolution not to have any more operations, my heart filled to the brim with discouragement, these thoughts presented themselves to me: Will you try Christian Science, or will you submit to another operation? As I could not take any chances in a crowded Broadway car, I walked with great difficulty to a Christian Science practitioner's office in Forty-second Street.

It was on a Saturday that I had my first Christian Science treatment, and every day I went to my practitioner's office, and on the following Thursday I had left off the corset-fashioned bandage which I had worn over six months. It was cold weather in March, and I questioned whether I should leave it off or undress and put it on; however, I did not put it on. On Friday of that same week I had no cane to carry, and the week following the exposed rib which was to have been next operated upon was entirely covered.

The next thing that happened came as a surprise to my friends. It was well known that I had worn glasses for 12 years. It is now over 9 years since my healing in Christian Science, in which time I have felt no need of glasses, nor has my health ever failed me once in that time. I know no fatigue or weakness, which I attribute to the healing preventive as taught me in the Science of Christ.

Here it is but just to say that all the physicians and surgeons who attended me through many years of sickness were working diligently to make me a well man—for some were very dear, personal friends—and I wish to express my love for and appreciation of these gentlemen. I know that they and the nurses did the best they knew; but, notwithstanding, they could give me no assurance of restored health.

It is in gratitude for my splendid recovery and with the hope that this testimony may help others to understand the healing efficacy of prayer as taught in Christian Science that I submit these statements to you.

Very sincerely, WM. H. SEYFRIED.

I hereby wish to indorse all the statements made by my husband in the accompanying testimony. From my own personal knowledge and observation I realize "the half has not been told" of this wonderful recovery from what seemed to be certain death.

ANNA M. SEYFRIED.

(34) CHILD OF MR. AND MRS. WALTER T. TRITTIPOE—EPILEPSY.

September 15, 1912, our little girl came home from a three months' visit to Virginia very nervous, and grew much worse daily. We called a physician (Dr. Chadwick, the Burlington), and he in turn ordered us to get our family physician, who was sick himself when we first sought medical treatment for the little one, namely, Dr. E. L. Mason, the Portner, and the two of them consulted a third physician. After several weeks' treatment, the medicine being changed three to four times a week, they agreed that it was a very pronounced case of epilepsy and assured us that there was no hope for the child, who, by the 15th of December, was having from 20 to 30 spasms in 24 hours, in some of which we could scarcely detect any signs of life whatever, the doctor remarking that the only relief for us or the child would be in its death. About December 20, 1912, on the advice of some friends and acquaintances who were not Christian Scientists, we sought a Christian Science practitioner. Within the space of two weeks the little girl was sleeping fine of nights and before the 15th of January, 1913, she was absolutely well. Nearly two years have passed, the little one is well, is enrolled in the Christian Science Sunday School, and attending the public school every school day.

(35) MARY S. COOK—LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA.

In October, 1907, I was taken very seriously ill with peritonitis, and while still laboring under this claim I was attacked with a severe nervous affliction, one of the manifestations of which was very severe pains in my lower limbs. The diagnosis of my trouble by the physicians of the health resort at which I was staying was rheumatism. The pain was so intense that it became necessary to keep me under the influence of morphine most of the time. Upon my return to my home my family physician pronounced my trouble to be neuralgia, and still continued the morphine treatment. Later our local physicians determined that I was suffering from neuritis, which they thought was superinduced by eye strain, and they recommended that I consult a noted eye specialist in Philadelphia, which was done without any relief, although glasses were prescribed and I was assured that they would give the desired relief.

While in the East another physician was consulted, who diagnosed my trouble to be multiple-neuritis, and upon my return home our local physicians agreed with this diagnosis. I was confined to my bed and conditions grew constantly worse, and specialists were called in from many different parts of the country. This was the condition for about four or five months, during all of which time I was almost constantly under the influence of morphine. Finally at a consultation of physicians it was announced that I had locomotor ataxia and that my chances of getting well were very slight indeed, and that if I should get well I would never be able to walk again. About this time morphine ceased to affect me, and it became necessary to chloroform me several times a day. Things went on like this for several months until I became insane and almost totally paralyzed, and was given up to die by a consultation of physicians.

After the physicians gave up and it was thought to be only a question of hours before I would pass on, it was decided to try Christian Science. A practitioner was called on the 15th day of April, 1908, and about three days later my mind was entirely clear, and in less than a month I was out riding. Being unable to walk, I was carried every place for about six weeks; then I learned to walk, like a child taking his first steps. I finally walked and enjoyed perfect health, and have done so ever since that time.

(36) MARY E. BOHRER—DEAFNESS.

As a result of brain fever when a small child, abscesses formed in both ears, perforating the drums and in a few years causing deafness. This condition existed about 20 years, and at the time that I first heard of Christian Science I had never used a telephone, conversation at my own dining table was almost an impossibility, and for nine years I sat before a Presbyterian minister and never heard a single sermon he preached. The first time I attended a Christian Science service the only sound I was able to hear was that of the congregational singing.

I began treatment in Christian Science about eight years ago, and now through Christian Science I am able to hear not only all of the Sunday service, but also most of the testimonials given at our Wednesday evening meetings. About two years ago some wax hardened in the interior of the ears, which I could not remove, and I was advised to go to a physician and have it removed. I did so, and when the physician looked into my ears he said that the scars on the ear drums showed where the perforations had been, but that the drums were perfectly healed and there was no reason from a medical standpoint why I should not hear perfectly. He expressed himself as regarding the healing as a most remarkable one.

MARY E. BOHRER,
326 Virginia Avenue SE., Washington, D. C.

DECEMBER 18, 1914.

Mr. President, to summarize the cases of healing I have presented to the Senate and the number of each of the mentioned diseases, they include 57 cases, covering 36 distinct diseases, and the number of each kind shown to have been healed are almost, if not all of them, regarded as incurable by medicine or surgery, and diagnosed as such by competent physicians. They are as follows:

Tuberculosis	7	Insomnia	1
Drink habit	3	Diabetes	2
Drug habit	2	Pemphigus	1
Kidney disease	6	Lead poisoning	1
Cancer	10	Valvular heart disease	1
Tumor	7	Paralysis	1
Double curvature of spine	2	Chronic myelitis	1
Asthma	1	Gallstones	1
Nervous prostration	1	Lung trouble	1
Neuralgia	1	Bright's disease	1
Organic heart disease	1	Multiple neuritis	1
Rheumatic gout	1	Tobacco heart	1
Ulceration of stomach	1	Rheumatism	3
Accidental injuries	1	Blindness	1
Locomotor ataxia	3	Deafness	2
Malformation of children	3	Necrosis of chest bones	1
Chronic constipation	2	Epilepsy	1
Indigestion	1	Appendicitis	1

Many good people who do not believe in Christian Science concede willingly that it is doing great good in bringing consolation and good cheer to the bereaved and disconsolate, allaying fear, and healing functional or imaginary diseases, but deny its power to heal organic diseases. For these they still believe resort to the medical practitioner is necessary. In the cases I have given not one is of the kind to which it is thus conceded Christian Science may successfully minister. Of such as these cases by the thousands might be cited. But they can be healed by the medical doctor with his drugs or his bread pills. The great work of Christian Science, as I have shown, is in the healing of organic diseases given up by the doctors as incurable.

Mr. President, it is this kind of beneficent and humane work that the doctors and others are trying by every means within their power to suppress by law and by regulations of the Public Health Service. And incomprehensible as it may seem, the Government in its various departments is aiding and abetting this unjust persecution of people who are endeavoring to ameliorate the suffering and sorrows of their fellow men, redeem them from their sins, and heal them of their diseases. The work of Christian Science is too well known now for any intelligent man to say that he does not know of its good work. If anyone does not, it is his own fault. Its beneficial ministrations have extended all over the civilized world. Its workers can be found everywhere. Through bias and prejudice men may go blindly on and deny its efficacy. But if they do, it is either through willful prejudice and intolerance or ignorance, for which there is no valid excuse. Men continue to denounce and ridicule not what Christian Science is but what they think or have been told it is. But the opposition to it no longer comes from broad-minded, tolerant, and intelligent people who are informed of its methods and its fruits, but from those who are not informed or those who are wilfully blind to its beneficent work or those who are interested in preventing the continuance of its activities for selfish reasons of their own.

There can be no better place to discuss its merits and expose the sources from which this opposition comes than in the Senate of the United States, where broad-minded, tolerant men sit in judgment on the rights and privileges of American citizens and make laws to protect and preserve those rights inviolate. It is this fact and the fact that proposed laws restrictive of the rights of Christian Science are now pending before this body that have emboldened me to speak freely and candidly in defense of those rights and the rights of common humanity.

HEALINGS RECORDED IN THE BIBLE.

Mr. President, such healings as I have been relating and by the means indicated are not new. Christian Scientists have no monopoly on divine healing. It is a remedy open to all men who in the right spirit seek or give relief. It may be administered by anyone possessed of sufficient understanding, consecration to the work, and faith in the healing power. Jesus of Nazareth practiced it centuries ago. He commanded his twelve disciples:

> Heal the sick, cleanse the leper, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give.

After appointing the additional 70, He imposed upon them the same duty to mankind and his commands were faithfully observed. He said:

> He that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do because I go unto my Father.

I am not going to detain the Senate by any extended comments on the healings performed by the Nazarene. I assume that every Member of this body is familiar enough with the Bible to know of His healing work. I refer briefly to the fact that it is recorded that He healed the following diseases specifically mentioned: Leprosy, palsy, fever, insanity, issue of blood for 12 years, blindness, dumbness, withered hand, paralysis, both blindness and dumbness in the same person, great multitudes of the lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, impediment of speech, epilepsy, and dropsy; and that He healed all manner of diseases and raised some from the dead.

In His great work of healing He resorted to neither drugs nor the surgeon's knife, neither did He recommend or recognize any such remedies.

Before and after His crucifixion this same work of healing was done not only by His disciples but by others. At the gate of the temple beautiful, Peter healed the man lame from his mother's womb, and the people "brought forth the sick into the streets and laid them on beds and couches that at least the shadow of Peter, passing by, might overshadow some of them. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about Jerusalem bringing sick folk, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits, and they were healed everyone."

And for this the high priests were filled with indignation and laid hands on him and his companion, John, and put them in the common jail. But they continued their work, saying: "We ought to obey God rather than men," and "they beat them and let them go." For like work Stephen was stoned to death. Philip, in the city of Samaria, "cast out unclean spirits and healed many, and there was great joy in that city." At Lydda Peter healed the man Æneas, who had kept his bed for eight years and was sick of the palsy, and raised Dorcas from the dead.

For this and his teachings Peter was thrown into jail, but escaped, and James for like reason was slain by the sword. In Lys-tra Paul healed the man, impotent in his feet, from his mother's womb. For his work Paul was stoned and left for dead, and later he and Barnabas were imprisoned and put in the stocks.

Mr. President, these devout and consecrated men were persecuted, imprisoned, and some of them put to death because of their teachings and their beneficent work for mankind. Jesus, who taught and practiced this method of healing, was persecuted, imprisoned, and finally crucified. His followers, following in His footsteps and endeavoring to fulfill His commands, met a like fate. This was centuries ago. But the spirit of intolerance and persecution survives the years. The men and women of to-day, who are conscientiously trying to carry out His injunction, laid upon all men, to heal the sick, are persecuted and imprisoned as He and His disciples were persecuted and imprisoned. If they were here to-day doing the work of healing that they did then, they would be subject to fine and imprisonment under the laws of some of the States. They would have been held criminals under the laws of still other States if they had healed the sick without first procuring a license from an examining board of doctors. How absurd this appears when applied to the original Teacher of this mode of healing and His disciples. But, sir, it would have been no more absurd, no more cruel, no more unjust than it is to-day as applied to those who are conscientiously endeavoring to do this same work of healing and with such results as I have been presenting to the Senate.

I have given but few of the cases of healing recorded in the Bible, as I have of those of this later time. There were multitudes healed then, and of all manner of diseases, just as at the present time. I might follow up this work of healing for at least 300 years after the crucifixion. In Gibbon's History of Rome it is recorded that such healings occurred long after the crucifixion and long after all of the disciples of Jesus had passed away. The work of healing that is now going on is only a renewal of the methods then practiced. It is not new. It is as old as the Christian religion.

WHAT THE DOCTORS ARE DOING TO MAINTAIN THEIR MONOPOLY.

Mr. President, on a previous occasion I called the attention of the Senate to the extent to which doctors are going to secure monopolistic control of all medical and healing activities. But the efforts of certain doctors have increased of late rather than diminished. They are not content to follow their profession, to which no one would object. The most of the people of this country still desire the services of the medical practitioner, though the number is steadily growing less as people learn how little help they can get from that source in time of sickness and disease. But so long as anyone believes in medicine or surgery as a means of healing disease he is entitled to have it, and neither the Government nor anyone else has any right to deny him what he wants. And no one will deny, not even those who have no faith in drug healing, that the medical doctors are doing great good and alleviating much human suffering.

Therefore the right of the doctor to practice his profession, and of those who desire his services to go to him for help, should be jealously preserved and protected. Not only that, but the efforts of the American Medical Association to educate the members of their profession, elevate the standard of medical practice, and render the work of its members more intelligent and effective are to be highly commended. I presume nobody would complain of that. Certainly I do not. It is the constant and often unwarranted efforts made by some, not all, of the members of that association who control its policies and methods, to secure legislation beneficial to themselves at the expense of others, in violation of the constitutional rights of other people, and detrimental to their interests that has aroused deep-seated and determined opposition to their methods. By such methods they have materially injured the reputation of the whole medical profession of their school, and the association has been falling off in its membership. In the report made by the president of the association at its meeting at Atlantic City June 15, 1912, it was said on this subject of membership, among other things:

> The number of members May 1, 1911, was 33,960; 299 members have died, 1,301 members have resigned, 500 members have been dropped as noneligible, and 1,987 have been dropped for nonpayment of dues, and 64 reported not found, making a total of 3,151 names to be deducted from the membership list. There have been added 3,474 to the membership roll, of which 2,253 were transferred from the subscription list. The membership of the American Medical Association May 1, 1912, is 34,283. There have resigned from the association in the past four years 4,899; there have been dropped for the nonpayment of dues 2,726, making a total of 7,635 members taken out of the association. Why? This means an annual loss to the association in dues alone of $38,175, and a still greater loss in prestige and education. No business house would permit such a loss of patronage without the closest scrutiny and the most careful analysis.

Mr. President, much of the opposition to legislation favoring and extending the power of the regular school of medicine has been aroused by the proposal in the Owen bill to establish a department of health, with its head a member of the President's Cabinet, and some of the matter I shall submit will relate specifically to that bill. But it is only a part of a general scheme on the part of the American Medical Association to intrench its school of medicine in power in both State and National affairs. It has worked through various channels to manufacture sentiment in favor of its legislation. The teachers in the various schools, public and private, and the woman's clubs throughout the country have been the victims of its selfish efforts in this direction. In some instances they have had the good sense to refuse to be made parties to the scheme, as I shall presently show. But a good many others, including the National Bureau of Education, have succumbed to its influence and become the advocates of unjust and undesirable legislation.

As an evidence of the activity of the doctors in their efforts to secure the passage of the Owen bill, let me quote an account furnished me of a meeting of the Chicago Woman's Club, at which the bill was considered:

For the third time within a year the Chicago Woman's Club discussed the Owen bill Wednesday, January 22. The advocates of the measure brought all of their influence and their strong forces to obtain an indorsement. Dr. Charles A. L. Reed was brought from Cincinnati to speak. Dr. John B. Murphy, ex-president of the American Medical Association, who has been the leader of the campaign to obtain a national department of health, with Dr. C. A. L. Reed as his principal lieutenant, was there. Dr. W. A. Evans, of the Chicago Tribune, was on hand. All spoke.

Dr. Mary McEwen, chairman of the legislative committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and also of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, was present and told the Chicago Woman's Club that as the two great central organizations had investigated and indorsed a national health department there was nothing for the Chicago Woman's Club to do but to pass resolutions favoring a national department of health. Dr. Anna Blount, chairman of the legislative committee of the Chicago Woman's Club, approved what Dr. McEwen had said, and pointed to the indorsement of the Owen bill by her committee by a vote of 4 to 3. Dr. Rachel Yarros also spoke as a member of the Chicago Woman's Club for the bill.

The opposition was participated in by Mrs. Grace Wilber Trout, Mrs. Linda Prussing Azemar, Mrs. Sarah P. Cane, Mrs. Florence Potter Seaton, Dr. Frances D. Bloomington, Dr. Mary Elizabeth Manks, Mrs. Bernadotte K. Sodon, and Mrs. Katherine Knowles Robbins. Dr. A. C. Tenney was the only outside speaker, and as a guest he was allotted five minutes. Mrs. Charles W. Wright, member of the legislative committee, presented the minority report against the indorsement of the Owen bill.

Mrs. Trout made the hit of the day by declaring that "we have been fighting to rid ourselves of the political boss and the commercial boss, but now you propose to saddle upon us a medical boss."

After the conclusion of the discussion the guests were requested to withdraw and the voting began. The motion to adopt the report of the legislative committee indorsing the Owen bill was defeated by a vote of 2 to 1. The motion to adopt resolutions similar to those passed by the General Federation of Women's Clubs and the Illinois Federation was then made by Dr. Yarros, but the club adjourned before they were acted upon.

In view of the great pressure brought to bear upon the members of the club by the speakers of the day, the women who opposed the steam roller of the American Medical Association certainly are to be congratulated upon the success they achieved. The Illinois branch of the National League for Medical Freedom contributed toward that success by advice and literature, which were supplied to various members of the Chicago Woman's Club upon request.

Mr. President, the efforts being made to control all health activities extend to the management of the schools as well as the homes of the people. Sex hygiene, compulsory physical examination of school children, vaccination, the use of various serums, eugenic marriages, and many other fads and fancies intended to increase the power and the emoluments of the medical doctors, are being forced upon unwilling victims by the enactment of unjust and unnecessary laws and by rules and regulations of the National Public Health Service and State and county boards of health. It is an intolerable condition that is meeting with earnest and determined opposition on the part of people who believe in personal liberty.

The strictures upon the so-called political doctors are fully justified by some of their methods and the means to which they have resorted to satisfy their selfish desire to maintain and strengthen their hold on deluded people who depend on medical doctors for the healing of sickness and disease. They have sought to obtain laws and make health regulations that would place the school and the home, as well as private practice, completely under their control and domination. They make the false cry that others are seeking vicious legislation, and maintain that all physicians of their school should unite to prevent the making of such laws, when they are the only people who are seeking such laws as will give them a monopoly of healing and at the same time make it unlawful for anyone else to engage in any such practice. Their object is not to serve the public good but to preserve their hold on the people and maintain their profits. They have seen other means of healing extending to a degree that is destined to ruin their practice and destroy the influence and power of the "regular doctors." They are striving by every possible means to hold their people together, and thus destroy all others who seek, by other means than their own, to heal disease. Above all things they want the help of the lawmaking departments of State and Nation. To obtain it they bring to bear wherever possible the influence of teachers and educational bodies, civic organizations, women's clubs, and any others they can reach. In this they have sometimes failed, but too often they have succeeded. Legislative bodies have been subservient to their schemes altogether too often. The National Government with all its power and influence is supporting their efforts and supplying over $20,000,000 a year to these same "regular doctors" to spend as they see fit. In some of the States the practice of other methods of healing is made a criminal offense through the machinations of these same doctors. In others it is made a criminal offense for a Christian Scientist to charge a fee for healing disease in his way. Of course, the doctors, who alone have secured the enactment of these prohibitory laws, care nothing about whether these practitioners charge or accept a fee or not. The sole object of such laws is to prevent them from practicing at all.

The two great States of New York and Ohio, where hundreds of healings by this means—many of them of diseases pronounced incurable by these same doctors—have been effected, are to-day disgraced by laws of this kind. Just lately, in New York, a Christian Science practitioner, regularly engaged in Christian Science healing, has been convicted of accepting fees from his patients who were glad to pay for his services, and sentenced to be punished as a criminal. Such laws are so manifestly unjust that juries have almost universally refused to convict for violation of them. This was so subversive of liberty and justice that the legislature of the State passed a law in effect repealing it, but at the instance of the doctors the governor vetoed the bill.

Now, Mr. President, let us consider for a moment how such pernicious and unjust laws are obtained. The situation is pretty clearly shown by the following letter bearing date of June 28, 1912, sent out presumably to all "regular" doctors in the State of Illinois. It is prefaced by the appeal, "Please read every word":

DEAR DOCTOR: Do you realize that the great number of the benefit societies in England, together with the new Lloyd-George benefit bill, have so cheapened medical services that there are now only half a million of the population of England who need pay more than $1.50 each per year for such services? This means ruin to a large number of physicians.

Do you realize that in Austria, Germany, and France, as well as in England, pauperization of the medical profession has become a veritable curse; that it has become necessary for the doctors to organize into medical protective leagues in sheer defense of their means of existence?

Do you realize that all over Europe the rising tide of State socialism, the blighting hand of fraternalism, the innumerable hospitals and clinics for free care of the sick, the multiplication of friendly societies all help serve to keep down the natural increase of the profession and keep those in it poor?

Do you realize that the spread and popularity of quackish medical fads is more prevalent than ever; that in America 50 new cults have arisen in the last 10 years, many of them practicing the healing art in some form, and many of them having grown at tremendous speed at the expense of the regular schools of medicine?

Do you realize the importance of the above? In Germany laws against quackery were stringent and effective in the early part of the nineteenth century. In 1869, at the instance of the Medical Society of Berlin, the laws were very much relaxed. The result was a tremendous development of quackery in Germany. In Berlin the number of quacks increased from 28 in 1869 to over 1,000 in 1893. The whole number practicing in Prussia was over 5,000. In 1896 it was estimated the number of quacks in Prussia was 10,000, and the scope of their practice had become unlimited. In certain districts the number of quacks outnumbered the qualified practitioners two to one. The unqualified practitioners are regularly organized and have schools and institutions providing for a four months' course for quacks: there are over 800 societies for study of "natural healing," with a total membership of 112,000; there are over 50 periodicals with millions of circulation.

Do you realize that the average income of the doctor in America has been placed by many competent authorities at about $700 per year, or $2 per day; that economic conditions here are not as favorable to-day as they were 20, 10, and even 5 years ago; that the earnings of a large proportion of the profession are less than that of organized labor; that the abuse of medical charity, as practiced in our hospitals and dispensaries, is a powerful factor operating to reduce the physician's income; that competition is becoming rife; that sanitation and preventive medicine is reducing disease materially; that hygiene, not medicine, is the slogan of the day; last, but not least, the work of the doctor is to be finally eliminated by being absorbed as a function of the State, as evidenced by the fact that the State is continually encroaching upon the work of the profession? It no longer confines itself to its legitimate and original sphere of enforcing the laws of sanitation and hygiene or of assisting physicians in the diagnosis by laboratory tests, etc. It has become in more than one way a privileged competitor of the physician in private practice. It has practically, if not legally, taken from him nearly all cases of vaccination. It not only opens up dispensaries, but even sends out physicians and nurses to the bedside of patients without taking any more trouble to eliminate (sic) the bestowal of such public charity on the really poor than do hospitals or dispensaries.

We realize, of course, after digesting the above that medicine as a livelihood has arrived at the most critical period of its existence. The economical status and outlook of the profession is nothing if not pitiful. The very existence of the doctor is at stake; survival of the fittest is the issue of the day.

Do you not realize that it is time for physicians to be up and doing; that by cooperation and cohesion the profession should enter an earnest and vigorous protest against all unwarrantable encroachments affecting economic conditions and circumstances under which physicians have to make a livelihood?

The needs and advantages of cooperation are obvious. The abuses herein enumerated will grow in importance and the profession will continue to be underpaid unless we organize and cooperate our efforts for mutual protection. In correcting abuses which confront the profession we must learn a lesson from the captains of industry, as well as from laborers and other fields of endeavor, who have learned that it is necessary to combine and cooperate.

Only physicians, it seems, are foolish enough to expect that they can fight the battle as individuals. The sooner the better for the profession when all are brought to a realization that the day of purely individual self-help against the many unfavorable conditions under which they are compelled to practice their profession is over.

(I may say in parentheses that these worthy doctors seem to have overlooked the American Medical Association, one of the strongest organizations in the country, and the hundreds of State, county, and city organizations of doctors.)

This point is well illustrated in England, where the national insurance bill has done one thing which seemed previously impossible—that is, completely united the medical profession, the union being to resist the obnoxious portions of the national insurance act. When the bill was first promulgated nothing was done. Now that it is seen that the system of contract practice is not only an evil but a weak point in the profession's organized resistance against the act, the British Medical Association has made a bold move and attacked the whole contract system. A defense fund is being established for the purpose of compensating physicians who may lose by resigning from their society appointments. Contributions of $50 are being solicited from each member of the profession.

By way of illustrating the difficulties encountered in trying to prevent the passage of vicious medical legislation, the lawmakers tell us that the medical profession is unorganized; that as a voting unit it is of little or any value, for the reason that the average doctor takes no interest in public affairs; that he will not go to the primaries; that the majority don't even take the trouble to vote on election day.

At every session of the legislature an attempt is made to pass special medical legislation sectarian in nature, the object of which is to secure the right for certain cults to break into the medical profession by a cheap and short-cut route, and at a standard of medical education lower than those already in the field. Powerful and financial influences are always operating to enact these measures into law.

In order to overcome the impression that the profession is unorganized, and in order to overcome the disrespect in which we are held by the lawmakers, it becomes at once apparent that in order to do effective work in preventing vicious legislation there should be an organization representing the whole profession, and that this organization should have the earnest cooperation and support of every licensed physician.

Such an organization would quickly bring every physician to a thorough realization of his rights, privileges, and power for safeguarding his own vital interests as well as the interests of the community. The medical profession in Illinois, comprising 11,000 members, could, if organized, put any just law it wanted on the statute books, as well as defeat any attempt to pass vicious medical legislation.

The public relations committee of the Chicago Medical Society is trying to familiarize the profession with the true status of affairs and help correct the apathy of individuals toward their own interests. This can best be brought about by reputable physicians like you joining the organization and working in harmony for one common end. The enormity of the task of safeguarding the interests of the individual member necessitates the heartiest cooperation of every physician in Chicago with the public relations committee, and we ask you to join us in our effort.

We are inclosing you a blank, which you will please fill out with the indorsement of two members of the Chicago Medical Society; or if you do not know who are members of the society, send a blank to the public relations committee, and we will get indorsers for you from your branch.

Make the check payable to the Chicago Medical Society. We will immediately forward it to the committee on membership and have your name passed upon at the next meeting of the council.

Now is the day and the hour. Fill out the application blank and return it by next mail. Otherwise you may mislay the blank or forget to attend to it.

Very truly,

J. V. FOWLER, M. D.,
E. M. WEBSTER, M. D.,
CHAS. J. WHALEN, Chairman,
Public Relations Committee, Chicago Medical Society.

P. S.—Fee for membership $5 the year; 50 cents per month after July 1 to January 1; or, if you prefer, $6.50 will give you a membership to January 1, 1914, together with the advantages given in the inclosed circular. Remember the legislature convenes in a few months. Your assistance will help prevent the enactment of vicious legislation which will be introduced when the forty-eighth general assembly opens.

Appended to the above letter is a lengthy statement setting forth the advantages to be derived from membership in the Chicago Medical Society. From this I extract one of the nine reasons given for joining:

MEDICAL DEFENSE.

Out of each $5 of annual dues paid the trustees of the Chicago Medical Society are requested to turn $1 over to the "medical defense committee" for the protection and defense of members of the society against whom suits for malpractice or damages may be brought. Any member of the Chicago Medical Society against whom suits for damages may be instituted is entitled to the services and assistance of the Chicago medical attorneys up to the time of actual appearance in court without any cost whatever to him. This practically means that every member of the Chicago Medical Society is protected against suits for malpractice and damages in the most effective manner. The history of the work of this committee is that up to the present time, under this stand-together arrangement, very few of the many threatened suits have actually been brought. This one feature alone is worth to the practicing physician many times the entire cost of membership. Private defensive companies are charging many times the above fee for this feature alone.

Mr. President, it will be seen that the appeal made in the letter is not for the protection of the public or the sick and afflicted against vicious laws. It is directed wholly to the object of protecting the doctors. The claim that their object is to prevent the passage of vicious laws is a false pretense. It is they who have brought about all medical laws, many of them of the most vicious kind. The only effort made by other schools of medicine and modes of healing has been to prevent the enactment of such vicious laws, intended only for the benefit of the doctors themselves, and to bring about their repeal when these gentlemen have once procured their passage. As I have shown on a previous occasion, their passage has sometimes been prevented by the veto of wise, broad-minded, and liberty-loving governors of States.

A word should be said about the assault made in the letter on quacks. By "quacks" these gentlemen mean all people who do not practice as the so-called "regulars" practice. They do not discriminate. It sounds impressive and creates sympathy for them to denounce the quacks and place their reason for combined effort upon the ground of exterminating the quacks and protecting the regular old-school allopathic practice in all its purity. It sounds good to people who do not know and makes their effort appear laudable and praiseworthy.

The efforts that are directed toward Congress by the American Medical Association to bring about the enactment of the Owen bill to establish a department of health are clearly shown by the following extract from a report made to the house of delegates of that body at its annual convention at Atlantic City June 3, 1912:

The progress of the campaign for a national department of health is doubtless familiar to all the members of the house of delegates. As the efforts of the association for the passage of the Owen bill have been placed in the hands of an independent committee, which will report to you direct, it is not necessary to discuss the details of this campaign in this report.

Beginning the last week in February, a letter was sent to a selected correspondent in the home town of each Member of Congress, asking for the name of the family physician of the Congressman. A second letter was then sent to the family physician of each Congressman, so far as obtainable, asking him to write or call personally on the Congressman in question, explaining the purpose of the Owen bill and asking for his support.

On April 29 a circular letter was sent to each member of the national auxiliary legislative committee, numbering about 2,000, asking them to support the Owen bill for the sake of public health; to have as many physicians as possible in each county to do the same thing; to have a resolution indorsing the bill and asking the Senators to support it passed at once by the county society and a certified copy sent to both of the Senators; to secure the indorsement of as many prominent citizens in the county as possible; to secure indorsements of women's clubs, local health organizations, civic and commercial organizations, and other bodies; and to get the indorsement of any newspapers in the county, with favorable editorial comments, if possible. With this letter was sent a copy of the report of the Senate committee and a reprint from the Journal, giving an extract from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, showing the debate on the floor of the Senate.

In addition to these two series of letters, a large amount of printed matter has been distributed. The Bulletin for November 15, containing the text of the Owen bill, editorials, and extracts from the Journal and many newspapers, biographical reports regarding the promoters of the National League for Medical Freedom, cartoons, and other material, has been widely distributed. Four editions of this Bulletin were printed, amounting to about 20,000 copies. A large number of copies of Senator OWEN'S speech, of the report of the Senate committee on the Owen bill, and of various reprints from the Journal have also been distributed, being sent to medical societies, women's clubs, and individuals asking for literature.

The Bulletin for November 15, 1911, was devoted entirely to the campaign for a national department of health. It consisted of cartoons, editorials, extracts from the Journal, a summary of the Owen bill, as well as the full text of the bill, numerous editorial extracts from newspapers, and biographical and other matter regarding the officers of the National League for Medical Freedom. This Bulletin has proved of the utmost value in educating the public and the profession on this subject, between twenty and twenty-five thousand copies of it having been distributed in January, February, and March.

I commend this account of the activities of the American Medical Association to the attention of the committee on insidious lobbying.

But the doctors were not satisfied with their strenuous efforts to influence legislative action from the outside. They conceived the idea of sending members of their own profession to legislative bodies to protect their interests. Of course such a man, when selected, was there for just one purpose, and that a selfish one affecting his own personal interests and that of his profession. The way this was worked in Kansas is shown by the following article, taken from the Journal of the American Medical Association of February 15, 1913:

GETTING TOGETHER IN KANSAS—AN EXAMPLE TO EMULATE.

To the EDITOR: At the spring meeting of the medical society of a certain county in southwest Kansas suggestion was made that one of the members of the society should be candidate for the legislature in order that the interests of physicians might be safeguarded by representatives from among the profession. This was determined because the interests of physicians were menaced by the last legislature and were also seriously threatened through the activities of the chiropractors and the League for Medical Freedom in the legislature which was to be chosen and is now in session.

After considerable discussion it was decided that Dr. R. T. Nichols, of Liberal (the county seat), should be the person to make the race. Dr. Nichols's popularity among the people had been attested by the fact of his election as mayor, and he had shown marked executive ability as well as much forcefulness of character in the conduct of the city's business.

Notwithstanding that the physician-candidate was a Democrat, while most of the members of the society were Republicans (Seward County is strongly Republican), they stood together "as one man" and succeeded in electing him. But the story does not end here. The doctors agreed not only that they would work for his election, which they did most heartily, but also that they would turn back all of his patients on his return from the legislature and pay him a per diem bonus as well while he was in attendance at the capital.

Dr. Nichols made his maiden speech the other day in the house, defeating the schemes of the enemies of the Kansas food and drugs law by causing the untimely death of house bill 76. This bill called for the reorganization of the State board of health, replacing the majority of the physicians on the board with laymen who are interested in the manufacture and sale of food and drugs. Incidentally it might be remarked that the present Democratic governor—who won his election by a majority of 26 votes—was elected by the physicians of Kansas, 85 per cent of whom voted for him as against the Republican candidate, the publisher of the Topeka Capital and a large number of other publications which carry nostrum advertisements. Dr. Nichols is ably assisted by two other physicians, one of whom ran on a platform of public-health education, disregarding the platform of his own political party. Is it not about time that the physicians of the country should emulate the example set by the Seward County Medical Society and "get together"?

S. J. CRUMBINE, M. D., Topeka, Kans.

This step was taken not in the public interest. The reason for it is clearly stated in the article written by one of the doctors. It was "in order that the interests of physicians might be safeguarded by representatives from among the profession," and "this was determined because the interests of physicians were menaced by the last legislature, and were also seriously threatened" at the one coming on.

So they, the doctors, generously agreed to take care of the patients of the member of the profession who was chosen to sacrifice himself in their interest and pay him a per diem for his services, not to his State but to the doctors. They seemed filled with pride that they elected their fellow member, whose interests and theirs were in jeopardy, and also elected a governor with whom they were well pleased, and they were rejoiced that through the influence of their doctor friend, whom they were supporting financially, certain legislation was defeated. I do not know how meritorious the defeated legislation was or to what extent the interests of the doctors were protected by its defeat. I am only concerned to show the methods resorted to by these worthy representatives of the regular school of medicine to protect their own material interests. In my native State of Indiana the doctors seem to have gone the limit in this direction. The following extracts from Medical Freedom for December, 1912, show what they are seeking to accomplish:

Burke on one occasion said, "The people never give up their liberties but under some delusion," and a few years ago one of the most distinguished members of the American Medical Association, when denouncing the reorganized association after the political doctors had gained control of it, as "a medico-political and commercial trust," said: "The more speciously fair the mask self-interest wears, the more dangerous it becomes."

These thoughts were brought vividly to our mind recently on reading an extended article which appeared in the Indianapolis Star under the heading "State doctors to combat vice. Bill drafted for legislature making all Indiana physicians health officers." The article describes at length the latest and most amazing proposal on the part of the political doctors, which is nothing less than the establishment of a State-wide medical inquisition, with every licensed physician acting as a spy or inquisitor of state for the board of health. In this article Dr. J. H. Hurty, secretary of the Indiana State Board of Health and probably the most active political doctor in the State, and also Dr. Harvey Adams Moore, another militant worker for increased power for the medical hierarchy, express at length their views in regard to the proposed measure.

The pretexts advanced by the leaders of the proposed new inquisition are very similar to those which have been advanced in past ages in defense of despotic arrogation of power on the part of religious hierarchies. In both instances the good of the people is advanced as a warrant for the arbitrary power demanded—power which ruthlessly tramples upon the just rights and would disregard the intelligent and conscientious convictions of a large proportion of the people.

In the present instance the doctors are seeking this special legislation, which would deliver the people into their hands, under the pretext of lessening vice and physical disease. Should the proposed legislation be enacted, every licensed physician would be forced to become an inquisitor for the State medical authorities, under penalty of losing his license to practice, while the rights of the citizens would be entirely subordinated to the autocratic power of a body of men whose fallibility is only equaled by their dogmatism—a body of men whose eminent diagnosticians are constantly making the most amazing blunders, and of whose practice one of their most distinguished medical educators declared: "The whole face of medicine changes unexpectedly from one generation to another."

In his sympathetic presentation of this latest move on the part of the political doctors, the writer in the Indianapolis Star said:

The present move aims to solidify the medical profession into a single purpose, to place the responsibility for the effectiveness of the plan upon Dr. Hurty, and to call every physician in the State into service as an officer of the board of health, to serve without compensation and upon penalty of forfeiture of the license to practice.

* * * * * * *

"Publicity is not essential to the work which we propose to do," said Dr. Moore. "We must lay our foundations securely before we endeavor to do the great work which we hope to accomplish. To do this we must proceed quietly and overcome any legal difficulties which may stand in the way."

To accomplish this end the medical men have employed attorneys, and an act has been drawn up, for presentation to the legislature, by J. Walter Pritchard, of the legal firm of Pritchard & Pritchard, embodying the power to carry out the plans of the physicians.

"We have already pledged a number of candidates to the legislature to support our measure," said Dr. Moore, "and before election day we expect to have every candidate pledged."

Something of the nature and scope of the proposed measure may be gleaned from the following extract from the Star article:

The primary duty of the physician in his district is the inspection of all that it contains at intervals specified in the statute. Individuals, especially children, are to be inspected regularly as to the state of health when their condition warrants it and proper provision is made for the care of any that may be afflicted with any disease or abnormality, the treatment to be at the public expense in all cases where the individuals afflicted are not able to pay for it.

This would, of course, furnish fat positions for an army of State doctors, whose meager practice leads them to seek State aid, and it would enormously increase the burden of taxation, force upon many people physicians representing a school of practice in which they had no faith, and have a distinctly pauperizing effect upon the people.

The sweeping character of the proposed legislation may be inferred from the following:

The inspection extends into the private homes, into all public places, all places of abode, and all places where labor of any sort is performed. * * *

A complete and detailed report will be made by each physician after each inspection.

Diseases of all sorts must be reported and classified, and the district physician will be held responsible and compelled to see that proper treatment is administered.

In closing the article the writer in the Star states that—

The Indianapolis Medical Society, as an organization, had indicated its acceptance of the measure, and the approval of the State medical organization is assured. The American Medical Association will be asked to sanction the work and give it prominence in other States, the eventual purpose being to make the movement world-wide in its scope.

But for a full disclosure of this conspiracy against the liberties of the people of Indiana, we must look to an article by Dr. Harvey Adams Moore, published in the Indianapolis Medical Journal of December, 1912. I can not use all of this remarkable article. It is too long. Its title is "The real solution of the social problems and the way to accomplish it." The doctor says, in the beginning:

The dreams of Edward Seguin, fantastic and ignored in his day, are near to realization under the line of work proposed for the medical profession in Indiana with the cooperation of the public along educational lines.

"But, alas," he says: "Seguin was not appreciated. He was scoffed at in Europe and found little better success in America. His last effort, the publication of his works in New York in 1866, was a failure. Seguin died forgotten."

But since then, according to the doctor, one Maria Montessori, an Italian woman, has made practical application of his theories and proved their efficacy. But the doctor asserts, with becoming modesty, that "Success depends wholly upon the cooperation of the medical profession."

Now, let us see by the following extracts from the article just how the medical profession is going to make Seguin's theories successful. He says:

And in order that the educational system shall forever have a fair opportunity to work its results, the medical profession must watch every child that is permitted to be born unto the day of its death, determining the causes of its every act, remedying its deficiencies, and developing its possibilities.

This is the principle underlying the bill which the physicians of this State are asked to urge the Indiana Legislature to pass at its next session.

That is taking a pretty big contract for the medical profession. Watch every child from its birth to its death! The parents of some children, and some people after they arrive at maturity, might object.

But let us see, by quoting a few more extracts, what they are going to do with everybody while watching over them from the cradle to the grave. I quote a few choice bits:

The clauses relating to education are intended to cooperate perfectly with the advanced systems of teaching and to take the normal child at the earliest practicable age, developing and utilizing its entire energy. The plan comprehends the abnormal child and offers it the opportunity for the fullest development of its powers, but it also emphatically specifies that the abnormal child shall in every case be sterilized in order that it shall not become simply an instrument for the propagation and maintenance of abnormality.

* * * * * * *

The new movement is intended to place all contagious diseases upon the same plane, thus eliminating the terrible secrecy of the venereal evil. It also proposes to make the existence of disease in any form an automatic warrant for the making of the diseased individual a legal ward of the State during the term of the disease.

* * * * * * *

The bill makes every physician an officer of the State board of health. It is provided that the State shall be divided into districts of equal population, with a physician assigned to each of these districts and giving him the authority of personal inspection of all that the district contains.

* * * * * * *

Marriage, as the legal basis of population, is made a public institution under the supervision of the medical officers.

* * * * * * *

No doubt there will be considerable protest among members of the profession at the apparent volume of work entailed. That is an element yet to be settled. It is true that the proposed method places the responsibility for the entire social welfare upon the medical profession, or rather, since that responsibility has actually rested there anyway in the past, the new method simply puts the responsibility on a legal footing, extending authority with obligation.

* * * * * * *

The section of the tentative draft of the bill relating to the licensing of physicians provides:

"That any person who holds a license from the State of Indiana, or who shall procure such a license in the future, to practice medicine, surgery, or obstetrics in the State of Indiana, is hereby made a health officer in the State of Indiana, to serve and faithfully perform the duties hereinafter defined."

* * * * * * *

The division of districts is provided in the following terms:

"That the board of health of each county of the State shall, under the direction and subject to the orders of the State board of health, divide the county into districts and assign a health officer or health officers to each district; it shall be the duty of such health officers in each district to promulgate and enforce all rules and regulations of the State board of health in their respective districts; to report any infractions thereof to the county board of health, the number of physicians assigned to each district to be proportionate to the work of the district and the number of physicians in the county."

* * * * * * *

The educational feature, as tentatively provided, says:

"That each public school or institution for education of children shall supply to children from the age of 10 years until the age of 16 years a course of instruction in anatomy and hygiene, including the organs of procreation, and dealing specifically with the common diseases or afflictions of these organs of procreation, such course of instruction to be designed and superintended by the State board of health through the county board of health."

Mr. President, the bill as described by the doctor, besides granting the powers above set out, gives the doctors complete control of the physically or mentally defective whose offspring may prove to be undesirable, and a health officer is required to examine everybody in his district suspected by him to be so defective and report the facts to the State board of health, and the board is authorized to remove all such from the place where they are to places where the board thinks they should be. So the incompetents, or people believed to be incompetent, are pretty effectually disposed of. This is about the most comprehensive effort to place the whole country, old and young, rich and poor, competent and incompetent, in the hands of the medical practitioners that I have run across. I have always regarded Indiana as a progressive State, but this goes beyond anything yet conceived of. The constitutional rights of the people of the State, who were about to be put under the control of the doctors, seem not to have been considered at the time this article was written. One would naturally infer from the scope of this proposed legislation that they were not regarded as having any constitutional rights or any rights at all not granted to them by the health officers. I do not know what the legislature did about it, but I can hardly believe that this beautiful scheme to make Seguin's theories effective ever became a law. But, while the claims here made seem absurd and extravagant, they are in direct line with efforts persistently made by organized bodies of the medical profession, and the Government, by upholding their pretensions to being the "regular" and only method of healing, is encouraging them in their efforts.

Mr. President, the doctors in North Carolina have not been behind in this effort to dominate and control the management and healing of everybody in the State to the exclusion of all other methods of healing. The people of that State seem to have given themselves over body and soul to the medical profession, if one may judge by the claims made by their boards of health. My information is that the North Carolina State Board of Medical Examiners consists of seven members, appointed by the State medical society, to hold office for six years. Therefore the activities and proceedings of the public health of the State is safely placed in the hands of the medical profession, which, of course, is "regular." The county boards are likewise brought under the same control by a provision that any appointment by the board of commissioners must be approved by the county medical society. When we consider that the county medical society is a branch of the State medical association, which is a branch of the American Medical Association, we have a combination quite satisfactory to the old or regular or allopathic school of medicine.

Dr. W. S. Rankin was, and may be yet, the secretary of the State board of health. In the bulletin of the State board of health for October, 1910, he defined the physician's duty to boards of health. Among other things, he says:

Since boards of health represent the Government in all matters pertaining to health, the relation of physicians to boards of health are identical with their professional relations to the Government.

To boards of health, as representatives of Government, the physician is bound by reciprocity and by common purpose.

To boards of health the physician becomes bound by reciprocal ties when he is licensed, for by this act the Government imposes in him great confidence and confers upon him important rights and privileges. For example, consider the confidence bestowed and the privilege granted in confiding the medical license law to the administration of our profession. By this trust we become to a large extent the guardians of the most precious possession of our Government—the county, State, and national health.

The State has a drastic law compelling teaching in the public schools of the "modes by which each of the dangerous communicable diseases are spread and the best methods for the restriction and prevention of each such disease." Listen to a reading of two of the sections of this law:

SECTION 1. There shall be taught in every year in every public school in North Carolina the principal modes by which each of the dangerous communicable diseases are spread and the best methods for the restriction and prevention of each such disease. Such instruction shall be given by the aid of textbooks on physiology, supplemented by oral and blackboard instruction. From and after July 1, 1910, no textbook on physiology shall be adopted for use in the public schools of the State, unless it shall give at least one-eighth of its space to the causes and prevention of dangerous communicable diseases. Textbooks used in giving the foregoing instruction shall, before being adopted for use in the public schools, have that portion given to the instruction in communicable diseases approved by the State board of health to the State board of education.

SEC. 2. Neglect or refusal on the part of any superintendent or teacher to comply with the provision of this law shall be considered a sufficient cause for dismissal from the school by the school board. Any school board willfully neglecting or refusing to comply with any of the provisions of this act shall be subject to fine, the same as for neglect of any other duty pertaining to their office. This act shall apply to all schools in this State, including schools in cities or villages whether incorporated under special charter or under the general laws.

The doctors have made themselves safe by having this law provide that the textbook used in the schools shall be approved by the State board of health. Think of giving the doctors of one school of medicine, for that is what it means, absolute control over the education of the children of the State in the important matter of preventing and healing disease, a matter of life and death. And think of the poison daily instilled into the innocent minds of the children by such teaching. No; do not think about it. It is too horrible. By this law the children of thousands of parents who do not believe in but abhor such teachings must be submitted to its evil and dangerous influences or be denied the benefits of the schools. Could there be any worse tyranny than this in a civilized country? Such laws come about by combinations, and sometimes conspiracies, of members of the medical profession. They appreciate the power of combination in their work. Thus Dr. Richard H. Lewis, member of the North Carolina Board of Health, through the bulletin issued by that board, says:

"In union there is strength," "In the multitude of counselors there is wisdom," are recognized as axiomatic truths. The advantage of organization, therefore, is such a self-evident proposition that discussion of the general subject would be a work of supererogation. I will consequently confine myself to a consideration of the special need for and the advantages to be derived from an organization of the health officers of our State.

* * * * * * *

Finally, it will promote an esprit de corps, a spirit of cooperation not only among local health officers themselves, but between them and the State board of health. In union there is strength, and if we all get together something will have to give and we will advance the cause of the public health, which means the greatest good to all the people.

The enterprising health officials of the State point out how the county medical societies can educate the school children and their parents by disseminating disease-breeding informaton that children should be protected from as from deadly poisons. The secretary of the health board, in an article in the June, 1914, bulletin before mentioned, entitled "Public Health Opportunities of County Medical Societies," has this to say:

An acetylene stereopticon lantern that can be used in almost any building, and that anyone can operate, can be purchased for $60; an abundance of lantern slides illustrating tuberculosis, typhoid fever, malaria, hookworm disease, flies, etc., can be obtained for about $40. The entire outfit will cost about $100. With this outfit the county society could appoint a committee to prepare a standard lecture or lectures to be used with the lantern illustrations; and, at a subsequent meeting of the society, to submit the lecture or lectures for the approval of the society as a body, and at the same meeting demonstrate the use of the lantern. This committee should then be authorized to assign the different public schools to various members of the society and to request such members to use the lantern and slides on two successive Friday nights in an illustrated lecture to the children and parents interested in that particular school. Handbills announcing the lecture, supplied the teacher by the county superintendent of health, could be distributed a week in advance to the people of the community. After the lectures the outfit would be sent to the next school on the schedule arranged by the committee of the county society. Nothing would go so far in arousing popular interest in the most important and fundamental problem that concerns the people of any county.

The construction of the law by the doctors as giving legislative and practically unlimited power in the health officers is shown by the following letter by this same Dr. Rankin:

RALEIGH, N. C., September 23, 1911.

MY DEAR SIR: As a member of your county board of health you are by this time doubtless familiar with the health machinery of your county. You realize the wide margin of power legislative enactment has provided—and very wisely provided, too—for the safeguarding of the public health of counties against unforeseen conditions and emergencies that may arise from time to time. The section of the law clothing the county board of health with this power is to be found in section 9, chapter 62, Public Health Laws, 1911. Among other things it says: "They shall make such rules and regulations * * * and impose such penalties as, in their judgment, may be necessary to protect and advance the public health." You observe, therefore, that you are clothed with a legislative authority in health matters in your county almost as great as that which the general assembly is clothed in passing health laws for the State. And it is hardly necessary for me to remind you that, with such power, opportunities are extensive and responsibility heavy.

You should also be aware of the fact that your executive officer, your county superintendent of health, bears to your board the same relation that the secretary of the State board of health bears to the State board of health and to the general assembly. His duty is to see that health laws are properly executed, but the right kind of an officer will not be content simply to do what he is specifically commanded to do but will suggest new laws or health regulations. By this constructive work will be measured, to a considerable extent, the wisdom of your choice of a county superintendent of health.

How many propositions has your county superintendent of health asked your board to consider?

How many rules and regulations initiated by your county superintendent of health have you passed?

What work has been done by your board in your county in addition to the specific requirements, the minimum amount of health work required of you by the General Assembly of North Carolina?

These are questions that bear upon the efficiency of your work.

This good doctor, who, I have no doubt, believes he is saving lives and preserving the public health of his State, is a most alarming individual and spreads disease thoughts and fears, and breeds disease, I have no doubt, to an alarming extent in his honest efforts to serve humanity.

Mr. President, I have selected North Carolina and its health officers more because of the fearless way Dr. Rankin has seized upon the poor people of that State, especially the innocent and defenseless school children, and made them the victims of the dangerous propaganda of medical practitioners that has caused so much misery and suffering and cost so many lives, than for any other reason. Other States are equally culpable in this respect. This is intended only as a sample. When will the people of this country awaken to the fact that such methods and such publications are creating instead of preventing or curing disease! Many people know it, but remain silent. Lawmakers know it, but the pressure for laws that only perpetuate and give greater strength to the deadly evil, on the part of a powerful body of professional men, is strong, and lawmakers are indifferent. They leave the responsibility with the doctors, content to say that "They are specialists in the healing of disease, I am willing to trust them." Consequently this profession dictates and administers all so-called health laws.

Mr. President, is it fair, is it wise, is it just to the people who must suffer from bad laws to leave it to the doctors who are interested parties and far from infallible?

OBJECTIONS TO THE EFFORTS OF THE DOCTORS.

Congress has by a law lately passed authorized the Public Health Service to publish and send out information about diseases and their cures. No doubt this is intended to prevent disease. At the same time the fears engendered in others by these same doctors, by their own fears of microbes, germs, and other alleged causes of disease that exist only in their wrong way of thinking, cause more diseases and destroy more lives than all their medicines and the faith in their ability to heal can save. Mostly through the fears they have created people are afraid of what they eat, what they drink, what they breathe, and the pure air that blows upon them.

It is the refinement of cruelty that has added immensely to the weight of human sorrow, suffering, and misery. Information that is sent broadcast all over the country through publications printed and sent out at public expense by the Public Health Service would be amusing if it were not so frightfully serious in its consequences. The one saving feature of it is that very few, besides the doctors, read the deadly stuff, and they are so full of it that they can not well be made worse. But to instill it into a free and innocent mind is no less than a crime. I have examined a number of the reports sent out by the Public Health Service, and I wonder how an intelligent Government, if it is intelligent on this subject, can tolerate this systematic slow poisoning of the minds of the people, much less pay for its printing and publication. It is appalling to think of the indifference that exists in the face of this deadly practice of filling the public mind with the belief in and fear of disease. This mass of hurtful and disease-breeding information is supplemented by various State and county boards of health throughout the country. I have had occasion heretofore to call attention to certain health almanacs issued by the State Board of Health of Kansas, by which its readers were made to expect and fear certain diseases at given periods of the year. This bad example has been followed by other State boards. The original Health Almanac of Virginia is a fair sample of this death-dealing literature. It has for its motto "Good health for every day of every month." It then proceeds to enumerate the diseases that we may look forward to each month of the year, as follows:

January for smallpox.
February for pneumonia.
March for measles.
April for good wells and good water.
May for infants' complaints.
June for flies and mosquitoes.
July for typhoid fever.
August for hookworm disease.
September for diphtheria.
October for scarlet fever.
November for colds and influenza.
December for consumption.

This is a cheering prospect for the readers of such stuff. One may look forward with pleasing anticipation to the danger of at least 12 separate diseases each year, with a multitude of others not enumerated. And ignorant people who rely upon the supposed superior wisdom of the doctors meet each month with the dread and fear of at least one disease alleged to be prevalent that month, and the man who is strong enough to meet and overcome this false suggestion of disease and the common fear that it engenders should feel himself fortunate indeed.

But, sir, this so-called health almanac is only a sample of hundreds of fearful disease-breeding, death-dealing publications that are being distributed throughout the country, publications that teach the people to think and believe in disease when their minds should be filled with the hope and belief in life and good health, publications that are constantly suggesting sickness and death and inspiring the fear that all competent medical men, as well as others, know to be one of the most prolific and powerful causes of disease and death. And the good, innocent, and deluded people, forced thereto by acts of Congress and State legislatures, support this unhealthy propaganda with their money and at the same time suffer the consequences. And now it is proposed to use the great Panama Exposition at San Francisco as a means of spreading this infection of the public mind with just such deleterious and disease-breeding information, and the National Government is to be made its sponsor and advocate.

On this subject I can not refrain from quoting from a letter written by Rev. James Mulligan, priest of St. Mary's Catholic Church, of Waverly, Iowa, to the senior Senator from that State [Mr. CUMMINS]. This letter was written as a protest against the so-called Owen bill, now pending in the Senate, providing for a department of health. I may quote it in full later on, but a part of the letter is so pertinent to the evil influence of the kind of publications I am now considering that I quote it here. He says:

It is deplorable, if true, that 600,000 of our people come to an untimely end each year through disease, but in the distribution of these fatalities it is found that the States maintaining the most elaborate health departments quite uniformly bear a larger share of the number than do the States that maintain small and inconsequential ones. In the light of such an anomaly, therefore, it requires more credulity than I possess to concede that the establishment provided for by the Owen bill would be capable of reducing the ravages of disease in the smallest degree. Quite the contrary, I should fear that the adoption of this measure would have the effect of increasing illness, especially if it is contemplated, as I believe it is, that the bureau of publications provided for therein shall engage in the popular distribution of health (disease) bulletins. I am firmly of the belief that thoughts freighted with the fear of illness are more potent of evil as disease carriers than the types of God's humble creatures that we are persistently urged to "swat." Science has long recognized the value of suggestion as a curative agency, and our most advanced thinkers recognize that the same agency can produce, if not disease itself, at least the morbid condition of mind and body that invites it.

I am not a scientific man in any sense, but in the course of a busy life I have had under my observation a number of cases of illness produced by suggestion, and at the risk of wearying you I will refer to one of them. One morning, a few years ago, I boarded a train at West Union, Iowa, where I was then established, en route for Turkey River. It was a route I frequently traveled, and I was acquainted with the trainmen. When the conductor approached he told me confidentially that they were having some sport with Jimmy, the new brakeman, by persuading him that he looked very ill, and he asked me to aid in carrying the joke along. I declined to do so, but other passengers were more accommodating, and Jimmy was not only persuaded that he looked ill, but he actually became ill, and at Turkey River I saw him carried from the train on a stretcher, as sick a lad as I ever looked upon that made a subsequent recovery.

Authentic cases such as I have cited here could, I believe, be multiplied almost without number; but if we recognize that influences on the mind are even small factors in the causation of disease, should we not hesitate ere we sanction the popular distribution of bulletins under the seal of the Government that deal with the subject of disease?

As a sample of the feeling of opposition that has been aroused by these proposed innovations, I quote from some remarks of Rev. Bernard C. Ruggles, of the First Universalist Church of Denver, on the subject of medical inspection of school children, as quoted in the Denver Republican. He says:

Not only economically, but also educationally, we must conserve the welfare of the child. Therefore there is both a danger and a menace in the present move for the compulsory medical inspection of school children. On first thought we would not credit this statement. On its surface it appears as a most beneficial and health-conserving movement, but when seen in the light of its intentions it proves to be political in character, tyrannical in its nature, and baneful and harmful rather than beneficial in its effects.

When this movement was inaugurated it appeared simply as a preventive measure in time of contagion to protect healthy children. Next came the demand from the doctors for compulsory vaccination. To this has now been added a program which contemplates the creation of a regular staff of salaried doctors to be connected with the schools of the country for the purpose of examining the school children for physical defects. It adds that nurses be attached, to go into the homes and see that the political doctor's instructions be carried out.

This is a political move, which is being backed and promoted by the political doctors of the American Medical Association. It has its final expression in the Owen bill, now pending in Congress, and its intent is to establish a medical control, through a department of health, which shall not be amenable even to the President, but can enter homes and supersede the authority or wisdom of parents in caring for their children. This is nothing short of a medical tyranny, letting the Government say what kind of doctor or school of medicine or system of healing shall be employed.

It is tyrannical to bring about compulsory medical inspection. There is an increasing number of children whose parents are adherents of drugless forms of healing, mostly religious in character. With such the forms of medical diagnosis contemplated are highly distasteful. They comply with all sanitary measures which look to checking contagions. But the compulsory submitting of their children to examinations for physical defects of which these little ones are ignorant is an outrage on their rights. It means that their right to believe that their right-thinking can correct their physical defect is denied them. Our forefathers periled all to establish man's religious rights, and it is tyranny for political doctors who have rejected their systems of healing to force on a people that which their hearts and souls cry out against.

The whole matter works finally the greatest injustice and harm to the children from the most approved psychological standpoint. Modern psychology has demonstrated beyond a doubt that fear is one of the greatest promoters of disease. It creates a depleted vitality and a negative condition. The Medical Journal of January 6 cautions doctors against suggesting symptoms. If this is true, think of the lasting effects of the fears which compulsory examinations will produce on the plastic and imaginative minds of children. Let us not be guilty of a step which will make children the victims of a political and mercenary procedure.

Hon. Edgar M. Cullen, former chief judge of the Court of Appeals of New York, in the annual address before the New York State Bar Association, entitled "The Decline of Personal Liberty in America," had this to say on the subject I am now considering:

Nor are the professions free from the same spirit. Surely there is no nobler, none so charitable and unselfish a profession as that of the physician. Yet the persecution which some of the physicians seek to inflict on the Christian Scientists is discreditable. Personally, when ill, if compelled to make a choice, I prefer the attendance of the physician to that of the minister, but others may entertain a different view. It took centuries of time and untold human suffering to establish the right of a man to be saved or damned in the next world in his own way. And the right of an adult sane person to be cured or killed in this world in his own way seems to me to be equally as great unless his disease, being contagious, endangers others, and even in that case it is difficult to see how the attendance of the Christian Scientists can increase the danger. Doubtless, the requirements of technical education and skill prescribed as conditions for a license to practice as a physician are proper. In default of such requirements we would be subject to be imposed upon by imposters and charlatans. But no one, however, can be deceived by the Christian Science reader except as to the extent of the special intervention of the Deity in human affairs. As to that, a man has a right to believe what he chooses, and the further right to act on his belief. In all Christian churches prayers are offered for the recovery of the sick, and all decent Christians, Friends possibly excepted, believe in supporting their clergymen. The Christian Scientist has exactly the same right to be paid for his service.

There are many other protests from various sources that have been made public. I can cite only a few of them. The demand of the doctors for compulsory physical examination of school children has aroused the most indignant protest and opposition. I have on previous occasions called the attention of the Senate to this condition. The efforts of the doctors to bring about such objectionable examinations have not abated, but, if any thing, have become more persistent and determined, and the demand has been extended to examinations of all citizens. In an editorial in the New York Evening Post of May 11, 1914, entitled, "The Price of Health Worship," after praising Dr. Goldwater for his services as commissioner of health, it is said among other things:

Whether Dr. Goldwater, or Dr. Biggs before him, or the estimable and distinguished gentlemen who are the backers of the life extension institute movement look upon compulsory medical examination of all persons as their goal, we can not positively state. It looks very much as though they did. Dr. Biggs has been quoted as advocating medical examination of all "citizens," which points very strongly that way. No unmistakable statement of such an object has yet been made, so far as we have observed; but we are as yet only in the first beginnings of the movement. Dr. Goldwater's article closes as follows:

"The next great task of preventive medicine is, therefore, the inauguration of universal periodic medical examinations as an indispensable means for the control of all diseases, whether arising from injurious habits, from congenital or constitutional weakness, or from social and vocational conditions."

If we see this in the green tree, what may we expect to find in the dry? Will it be much of a step from "universal" examination to compulsory examination? Will it be much of a step from that to compulsory heeding of the results of that examination? Is there any limit that can safely be set to the extension not of life but of the meddling with life, which this whole movement promises?

But it is by no means on the score of legal compulsion alone that the proposal of "universal periodic medical examination" is open to objection. Whether brought about by legal requirement or by the pressure of general opinion, the benefits to health and the prolongation of life which it might bring about would be purchased at a tremendous price. What that price would be requires some power of imagination, perhaps, to realize, but some idea of it may be obtained from the very facts which Dr. Goldwater adduces. Take but a single one of them. "In a recent examination of the employees of a New York City bank," he says, "100 per cent of the employees were found to be abnormal and on the sure road to diseases of heart, lungs, kidneys, or blood vessels." Very likely this examination will have been the means of stopping the progress of disease in the case of some of these men; but if the fact is as stated, the whole body of them were suddenly converted from a group of normal men, nearly all of whom were doubtless going about their work and their play with no thought of sickness, into a solid body of semi-invalids. Who shall say that the addition of two or three years to the average duration of their existence will outweigh, in the scales which measure real human values, the freedom, the elasticity, the unconsciousness of the trammels of the body, which have been impaired or destroyed by this intrusion?

And even from the standpoint of medical results in the narrowest sense there is room for grave misgivings. Not all diagnoses are correct; not all alarms given by medical men are well founded. * * * "The task before us," says Dr. Goldwater, "is to discover the first sign of departure from the normal physiological path, and promptly and effectually to apply the brake." With this as the ideal before them, will not the false alarms of the physicians outnumber those of to-day 10 to 1 or 50 to 1? Will not thousands of persons who might have lived happily and comfortably to threescore and ten before that "first sign of departure" had developed into anything serious be called upon to exercise care, to be solicitous about their bodies instead of ignoring them, and in no one knows how many cases have their lives not only dulled, but actually shortened by hypochondria?

"Those to whom the care of delicate mechanical apparatus is intrusted," says Dr. Goldwater, "do not wait until a breakdown occurs, but inspect and examine the apparatus minutely at regular intervals, and thus detect the first sign of damage." This is the favorite simile of the health enthusiasts. But in it are embedded two fatal fallacies. In the first place, the working of a machine is not affected by our concern over it, while our body may be; and, secondly, the only interest we have in the machine is that it shall function well as a mechanism, while in the case of our bodies we may deliberately choose to sacrifice perfection of the mechanism to other objects which we prize more highly; indeed, we must do so at some point or other if we wish to keep out of bedlam.

The demand for forced examination and inspection is not confined to school children. It is proposed to extend it to the industrial workers in the country. In an article in the November, 1914, Public Health Report by Dr. Schereschewsky, surgeon, Public Health Service, entitled "Physical Examination of Workers," such examinations are strongly insisted upon. As to the extent to which this interference with personal rights and individual liberty should go the doctor says:

Whatever is worth doing is worth doing well. The importance of making physical examinations thorough can not be overemphasized. A reliable record of the physical condition can not be obtained by a hasty and superficial examination; the data so collected are of no especial value, nor can incipient disease be detected by such methods. What is especially needed is a standard form of physical examination, so that the data obtained in this manner for various industries may be comparable.

Workers found suffering from physical defects and diseases should be held under observation and requested to report back for reexamination, so that advice as to their condition may be given, as well as a watch kept upon their progress to recovery. It is also earnestly recommended that periodic reexaminations be made of all workers, as this is the best way of insuring a continuous state of health on their part.

This continuous examination and reexamination would open a wide and lucrative field of labor for the medical practitioner which would do infinitely more harm than good.

From an article by the League for Medical Freedom, entitled "The struggle for freedom," I take this short extract:

WILL PERSONAL RIGHTS BE INVADED?

But back of all the debate as to whether the plan results in good or evil it is the question of how far the Government can safely go in forcing legislation of limitations, prohibitions, and penalties upon the citizen respecting health matters. The argument is made that there will be no attempt to invade the rights of the citizen. Can we rely on this? Are not our school children already stripped, examined, treated, inoculated, and otherwise controlled without our consent and mainly without even statutory authority?

We do not ask that measure of freedom that disregards the rights of others, and needful rules and regulations concerning spread of disease among helpless persons will be received and readily obeyed. But we can not give up our right to house, home, treat, love, protect, shelter, and save our children and ourselves and consign ourselves and our children to the doctrine of a school of healing with which we have no sympathy. Sanitation, cleanliness, quarantine, and similar regulations may be administered when administered properly, to the end that those who do not obey and those who do not know how to live may be shown the proper way. But we know when power is left to discretion of a class it is usually administered with autocratic and despotic hand.

Early in 1913 the President was reported to have said to a gathering of social workers in Hoboken, N. J.:

Most of the things you have spoken of are without political embarrassment. One that does have political embarrassment is the health-department project. There is a fear in many minds that we are about to set up what has been called a "medical trust." It is very desirable to remove that idea.

It is not my intention to embarrass the President or to do him any injustice. Therefore, I may say to the Senate that the President disclaims the language attributed to him, and I have no doubt that he was misquoted. Therefore, the editorials I am about to submit are not produced to reflect upon or criticize the President, but to show the prevalent feeling against any effort to interfere with the liberty of the citizen in the matter of medicine or of resorting to the remedy of his choice in case of sickness.

The supposed statement of the President was very generally commented on by the press. I submit a few editorials bearing on the question:

[From the Chicago Inter Ocean of January 28, 1913.]

NO "MEDICAL TRUST" WANTED.

President-elect Wilson, in the course of an address to a gathering of social workers at the private house in Hoboken, where he was a week-end guest, is reported to have said of the proposal for national supervision of health and sanitation:

"Most of the things you have spoken of are without political embarrassment. One that does have political embarrassment is the health department project. There is a fear in many minds that we are about to set up what has been called a 'medical trust.' It is very desirable to remove that idea."

It is very desirable. There is nothing, except his religious convictions, with which the average citizen so deeply resents governmental interference as in matters affecting his health and the health of his family. Any sort of dictation about what measures he shall take to preserve or restore health the average man regards as an unbearable outrage.

Although Mr. Wilson went on to say that he had "never seen any serious proposal to put any particular school of medicine in charge of the national health," precisely such an intention was widely imputed to the measure most earnestly urged in the last Congress. Whether justified or not, these imputations were confirmed in the minds of thousands by the apparent unanimity with which medical societies of a particular school urged the passage of the Owen bill.

It is probably true that desirable measures of sanitation and disease prevention could be more effectively administered under national authority. But so long as doctors disagree so widely and violently among themselves it is impossible to expect the laity to accept any method of treatment of disease as right to the exclusion of all other methods.

Anything that even looked like a "medical trust" would be widely and deeply resented by all sorts and conditions of citizens. The political party that makes itself responsible for any legislation which can be so construed will have only its own folly to blame for its subsequent troubles. And it will have plenty of troubles.

[From the Boston Post of January 28, 1913.]

NO MEDICAL TRUST.

President elect Wilson is reported to have told a private meeting of social workers in Hoboken the other day that, in so far as he could have anything to say about the matter, there would be no placing of any possible bureau of health in control of a particular school of medicine. It is to be hoped that the report is true.

While allopathy is still the dominant medical practice in this country, there are millions of people who are adherents of homeopathy and are convinced of the good it has done them. So of other lesser schools. To give the so-called "regulars" sole power over a Federal health bureau would be an outrageous injustice to a large class of American citizens.

[From the Christian Science Monitor of January 29, 1913.]

PRESIDENT ELECT AND MEDICAL TRUST.

A private gathering of persons described as "prominent social workers," held at the home of Mrs. Caroline B. Alexander, Hoboken, N. J., on Sunday, was addressed by President elect Wilson. Representatives of the press were not admitted, but at the conclusion of the meeting the hostess gave out a statement attributed to Mr. Wilson, from which the following excerpts are taken:

"Every subject treated here to-day engaged my deep interest and enthusiasm. My enthusiasm is in proportion generally to the practicability of a scheme. * * * Most of the things that you have spoken are without political embarrassment. One that does have political embarrassment is the health-department project. * * * There is a fear in many minds that we are about to set up what has been called a medical trust, and it is very desirable to remove that idea. I have never seen any serious proposal to put any particular school of medicine in charge of the national health."

Mr. Wilson exhibits keen discernment in discovering that "there is a fear in many minds that we are about to set up what has been called a medical trust," and in recognizing the desirability of removing this idea. The possibility of its removal in existing circumstances is, however, another matter. If the President elect has not "seen any serious proposal to put any particular school of medicine in charge of the national health," it is because no such proposal is necessary. A particular school of medicine is now, and has been for years, in charge of the "national health," so far as it is and has been within the power of the Government to confer such authority. The allopathic school dominates the Federal medical service. It exercises, and has exercised for years, a close monopoly in this respect. No other school of medicine has recognition or opportunity worth mentioning in any of the departments of the National Government, civil or military. It is all but stamped as the state school of medicine; it is all but empowered to drive out all other schools of medicine. What is necessary to impose allopathy upon the Nation to the exclusion of every other method of healing, so far as law can regulate the popular conscience and direct and control the popular will, is not to "put any particular school of medicine in charge of the national health," but simply to create a department of health, of which the allopathic school, already dominant in every other respect, may take possession.

Mr. Wilson is right in the view that there is political embarrassment in any proposal of this kind. His party at Baltimore saw this, and in an effort to be noncommittal became vague by reaffirming "previous declarations advocating the union and strengthening of the various governmental agencies relating to pure foods, quarantine, vital statistics, and human health * * * without partiality to or discrimination against any school of medicine or system of healing." But the issue, we think, is one that will have to be frankly put and squarely met, no matter how embarrassing it may be to political parties or to statesmen. The proposition involved is so simple that those who run may grasp it in all its fulness and seriousness. It is whether the allopathic school of medicine—the school of political doctors—shall be granted absolute power in all matters relating to sanitation and health in the United States of America, this power carrying with it the right to say how every man, woman, and child shall be treated, regardless of the personal and religious freedom guaranteed by the Constitution.

We can not now believe that as President Woodrow Wilson's exceptionally clear perception of the inherent rights of the individual citizen will be dulled by any degree of enthusiasm for any misdirected efforts of social workers or others.

The following extracts from some remarks of Dr. John M. Hodge, published in Health Culture for January, 1913, are interesting:

In many of our American cities and villages the medico-political schemer has already succeeded through false promises in having the pupils in the public schools placed under the care of political drug doctors, whose privilege it is to experiment upon the children at the taxpayers' expense.

To a logical and unbiased mind it is incomprehensible why healthy school pupils should be placed at the mercy of political doctors. * * * The truth of the matter is that compulsory medical inspection of school children is not needed, is not desired, and has never been asked for by the parents of school children nor by the public.

The demand for compulsory medical inspection of pupils comes from political doctors, who desire to create places and revenue for themselves and their confederates. Compulsory medical inspection of school children is a lucrative branch of State medicine, in which political doctors alone are the beneficiaries.

The present demand for medical inspection of school children, which is so prevalent, is due chiefly to a systematic campaign diligently pushed by the American Medical Association. The placing of school children in the hands of monopoly-seeking doctors without the consent of the parent or guardian will result in burdening the taxpayers with an ever-increasing army of State-paid political doctors.

The majority of doctors appointed as medical inspectors are incompetents who are unable to establish a practice for themselves. They receive the appointment through political influence without inquiry as to fitness for the place. The main qualification required of them is that they have political "pull." This is the class of doctors who go into our public schools and experiment upon children at the taxpayers' expense and without the consent of the children's parents.

Compulsory medical inspection of school children is intended by its self-seeking promotors to secure places for an ever-increasing army of State-supported doctors, who are seeking to establish by legislative enactment a monopoly of medical practice. Compulsory medical inspection of schools, if attained, will be toward the establishment of State medicine, which would be a greater evil than State religion.

The American Medical Association aims to establish a medical hierarchy which shall control the people from birth to death.

The bureaucratic rule which it hopes to secure in the National Government is un-American in principle and despotic in spirit. It is monopolistic and tyrannical in the most offensive sense of those terms.

The conscience-guided American citizen is resolutely opposed to the encroachment of the privilege-seeking advocate of State medicine. The American people are opposed to both State medicine and State religion; also to the policy of extending special privilege to any sect in religion, medicine, or philosophy.

Mr. President, the strenuous efforts that are being made to establish a monopoly in the healing of disease are attributed almost entirely to a certain class of doctors belonging to the American Medical Association, often referred to as "political doctors." It is understood by everybody that there is no public demand for any of the legislation having for its purpose the exaltation and continuance in power of one school of medicine and the exclusion of all other modes of healing, and that it is a selfish effort on the part of some, not nearly all, of that school to benefit themselves without regard to the needs of the general public.

Objection to the monopolistic methods of the association has not been confined to outsiders. Some of its members have protested loudly against the unjust and suicidal course it has taken. One of the most persistent of these is Dr. G. Frank Lydston, of Chicago. I am convinced from the information I have obtained that Dr. Lydston is a physician of ability and standing and a man of high character and strict integrity. I understand that he is personally known to more than one Member of this body, who will vouch for his standing as a man and a physician. I am about to quote from a pamphlet of which Dr. Lydston is the author. It was published in February, 1913. It is entitled, "A Privileged Medical Class—The Latest Move of Medical Trust Monopoly—A Warning to the Profession, the Public, and Especially to State Legislatures and Medical Examining Boards."

As this pamphlet relates mainly to the manipulations of the American Medical Association to obtain control of the Medical Reserve Corps, the doctor's warning should have beer extended to Congress. I now call the contents of this pamphlet to the particular attention of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. It should move that committee to investigate conditions in the War Department relating to the Medical Reserve Corps.

He says:

The attempt by certain medical monopolists to "corner" everything pertaining to medicine and surgery in the United States is so flagrant that it is marvelous that the rank and file of the profession does not wake up. Medical schools, health boards, medical journalism, medical publishing, medical advertising, medical appointments of all kinds—the medical octopus is after them all, and is likely to get them all while the profession sleeps.

One might suppose that the Medical Department, United States Army, could not be made the playground of the medical octopus. Not so, however. In the near future I shall prove to the citizens of this country that the Medical Department of the Army is dominated by and subverted to the base uses of the dominant American ring of medical politicians. I ask the profession to read and carefully weigh the proof which I shall later submit.

I shall herein limit myself to the presentation of as pretty a little scheme of professional graft as ever has been sprung upon an unsuspecting public and long-suffering profession. I refer to the establishment of a privileged class from the Army, Navy, and Marine Hospital medical services and the proposed attempt to add to this class the Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army, and to further extend the privileges of all of these branches of the Government medical services.

The Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army, was a scheme of the medical octopus, by which it proposed—

1. To get its tentacles onto the Army, and thereby creep close to the throne in Washington.

2. To get more political influence through the large numbers and wide ramifications of the corps and more power by having more bribes to dispense wherewith to win satellites and prestige. As I will prove in a paper now in preparation, it has done these things most effectually.

The first batch of appointees to the Medical Reserve Corps of Chicago comprised the editor-manager-boss of the American Medical Association and 12 of his official family, only 1 of whom had ever worn any uniform save the "collar" of the American Medical Association. Every local official of the American Medical Association is now in the Medical Reserve Corps Association of Chicago, which numbers 112 members, to say nothing of members at large who have not joined the association. The first president of the Illinois division of the reserve corps was an ex-president and ex-treasurer of the American Medical Association. Its present vice president is a paid employee of the American Medical Association. What prevails here is duplicated in every State in the Union.

As to the personnel of the Illinois Reserve Corps Association, its roster contains the names of the following: The editor-manager-boss of the American Medical Association, two ex-presidents of the American Medical Association (one a former treasurer of the American Medical Association), the assistant secretary of the American Medical Association, the local trustee of the American Medical Association, two associate editors of the American Medical Association, a former trustee of the American Medical Association, two editors of subsidiary journals of the American Medical Association, the chairman of the committee of public health of the American Medical Association, the chairman of the committee on education of the American Medical Association, and ex-chairmen galore, a member of the council of chemistry and pharmacy, American Medical Association, three secretaries of sections, American Medical Association. In brief, every Chicago member of the oligarchic ring, and practically every one of its satellites is in the Illinois Reserve Corps Association.

Commissions in the reserve corps are supposed to be issued after a rigid examination. The majority of the Chicago contingent were not examined at all—not even physically. Any examination which may have been given in most cases was a farce. So far as I can ascertain, only two were examined as is pretended to be prescribed by law, and these gentlemen were not examined in Chicago. The "examining board" in most cases was a single Army medical officer, and the examination essentially consisted of "How do you do? What is your name? Good day."

N. B.—Part 14, Manual for the Medical Department, United States Army, provides for an examination for the Medical Reserve Corps, as follows:

"MEDICAL RESERVE CORPS.

"(b) The statement and certificate having been given and the diploma submitted, the board will then make a thorough physical examination of the applicant, which must conform in all respects to that required of candidates for commission in the Medical Corps. (Par. 5a.)

"If any physical disqualification for the service is found the examination will be discontinued. The findings and action of the board will be reported on Form 145a, modified to suit the case.

"(c) The applicant having been found physically qualified the board will next proceed with his professional examination in the following subjects:

"Practice of medicine, surgery, obstetrics and gynecology, and hygiene This examination will be oral and sufficiently comprehensive to determine whether, in the opinion of the board, the applicant is qualified to practice his profession under the usual conditions of the military service. Should the oral examination in any subject be unsatisfactory, the applicant may be required to take a written examination therein."

The profession will kindly notice the "jokers" in sections (b) and (c). Most astounding. A report "modified to suit the case." An examination for an Army commission which, it is claimed, should give a man the right to obtain without examination a license to practice in any State in the Union.

What has all this to do with the establishment of a privileged class? Read the following letter from Dr. Lewis and the official reply to an inquiry which he made of the Surgeon General, United States Army:

CHICAGO, ILL., January 10, 1913.

DEAR DR. LYDSTON: In answer to your letter of December 15, asking me for information relative to the "license" status of the members of the Medical Reserve Corps, I beg leave to submit the answer of the Surgeon General to my query. Relative to your questions as to the examinations for the Medical Reserve Corps I will state that I, and many others within my knowledge, were not required to pass an examination of any kind

Very truly,

HENRY F. LEWIS, M. D.,
First Lieutenant Medical Reserve Corps,
United States Army.

Upon what meat do our military medical Cæsars feed that they have grown so great that they should be exempt from medical-practice laws to which even gray-haired professors must submit?

The American Medical Association medical reserve corps can not "put anything over" in Illinois under the present State board of health, for a very peculiar reason—the president of the board, Dr. George W. Webster, understands the situation, as the following correspondence shows:

CHICAGO, ILL., December 14, 1912.

Dr. GEORGE W. WEBSTER,
32 North State Street, Chicago.

MY DEAR DR. WEBSTER: I am interested in the method of formation of the Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army. As you are a member of said corps, I take the liberty of asking you the following questions, which I trust you may do me the courtesy of answering:

1. Who constituted the board which examined you for the Reserve Corps?
2. Were you submitted to a physical examination; and if so, what was the nature of said examination?
3. If a physical examination was made, was same made a matter of record?
4. Were you examined in medicine and surgery? If so, what was the nature of said examination and in what subjects were you examined?
5. Was the examination oral or written?
6. Was a record made of your examination and markings?

Trusting that you may see fit to give me an early reply to the foregoing query, I am,

Very fraternally,

G. FRANK LYDSTON.

Answer:

DEAR DR. LYDSTON: I was not required to take either a medical or a physical examination.

Very sincerely,

GEO. W. WEBSTER.

My associate, Dr. B. S. Rogers, major and surgeon, Second Infantry Illinois National Guard, informs me that he also was not submitted to examination. I wrote to a number of others who had informed me that they were not submitted to any examination, but received no reply. One gentleman who had already told me the facts called me up by phone and said that he did not care to go on record, as he was "afraid the bunch would get him" if he did. Two others, who had already told me the facts, also begged off on the ground that if they went on record it "might hurt their business." Is it not about time that the evil system which is sapping the manhood of the American doctor was overthrown?

The following rule bears upon the method of applying for admission to the Reserve Corps, United States Army:

"Permission to appear before the board is obtained by letter to The Adjutant General of the Army, which must be in the handwriting of the applicant, giving the date and place of his birth and the place and State of which he is a permanent resident. He must also furnish certificates based on personal acquaintanceship, character, and habit."

This is a huge joke. The method followed in Chicago was the selection by the A. M. A. ring of names "acceptable" to themselves. No one who was persona non grata to the oligarchy ever had an opportunity to submit an application in writing. Applications were made and acted on where the alleged "applicant" was ignorant of both the application and the action taken upon it.

One of the requirements for admission to the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army pertains to the applicant's age, as follows: "An applicant for appointment in the Medical Reserve Corps must be between 22 and 45 years of age."

N. B.—Nearly 70 of the 112 members of the Chicago association are above the age limit.

The Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army, as at present constituted is a farce and merely a kitchen for the medicopolitical trust monopoly—a kitchen in which to prepare its scheme of graft, power, revenge, and politics. Graft is the acquirement of money, honors, property, or any emolument without giving the quid pro quo. That the Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army, is used for political purposes I will prove later. When the Medical Department of the Army is used by medical politicians for their own private ends it is time for the great American citizen and the apathetic American doctor to "sit up and take notice." That this has been done, and that the Medical Department of the Army is at present under the control of the octopus, I will shortly demonstrate beyond peradventure of doubt. I am curious to see whether the rank and file of the profession believe in the methods of the men who are trying to dominate and monopolize American medicine. I am still more curious to learn whether or not the rank and file really like to have their rights as American citizens trampled on.

If there are to be any special privileges, why not have a competitive examination and give everybody a chance? Is the Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army, to be the only department of the medical service to which only the politically chosen few can be appointed, and after a fake examination or without any examination? And why not give the preference to men of military experience rather than to obstetricians, neurologists, pedistricians, ophthalmologists, and gynecologists? Military experience and a knowledge of military surgery are not mentioned in the examination requirements.

It remains to be seen whether the new administration will approve of the Medical Department of the Army being made a kitchen for medical politics.

What about the woman doctor? What provisions has the medicopolitical gang that is running the Medical Department of the Army made for her? What special privilege is to be provided for her? She can not join the Army, Navy, or Marine Hospital Service, nor even the Medical Reserve Corps. Possibly the medical Cabinet officer whom we are to have when the gang acquires complete control of medical matters in the United States is to be a woman. Let us hope so. The situation will require some features of redemption. I would suggest that the female suffragists give this matter due consideration.

Then there is the homeopath—he and his clientele vote, own property, and pay taxes. His school is recognized as legal. What special privileges is the homeopath to have? How many homeopaths are there in the medical service of the Government, particularly in the Medical Reserve Corps? If the homeopath is not eligible to the Government medical service or to the Medical Reserve Corps, he can not become one of the specially privileged licensed to practice without examination class; but something should be done for him. Possibly positions on the proposed Federal bureau of health will be reserved for him. The all-hog A. M. A. ring is noted for its fair play.

N. B.—There are about 1,200 Medical Reserve Corps men already appointed. The number is not limited by law. There are some 150 in Chicago and 250 in New York alone. As these men are all bound to the

A. M. A. ring by political hooks of steel, the gang has an organization in each State which gives the A. M. A. a powerful grip in Washington.

Do the privileged medical class and medical monopoly accord with the principles of democracy and the spirit of true American citizenship?

In conclusion, I would ask the medical officers of the Army how they like the placing of the farcical Medical Reserve Corps on the same plane with themselves? Do they approve of the Surgeon General's A. M. A. political scheme? Do they really believe that even they themselves should enjoy special privileges—privileges denied to other medical men? If so, why?

Of this much Washington may be assured, viz: Behind the protest which I have made herewith will stand several million fair-minded American citizens and every physician in this country, in or outside the A. M. A., who is not a beneficiary of medical trust politics. The new administration would do well to count these men before passing on what I have herewith submitted.

Let the profession remember what I have said over and over again, viz, the octopus is trying to monopolize health boards, including a Federal bureau of health, medical schools, medical journals, and medical publishing and advertising, hospitals, all public offices, the medical department of the Army—and now comes the proposed monopoly of operative surgery. Who are at the head of the trust? Read Munsey's Magazine for February, 1913.

Mr. President, the view taken by some of the leading women of the country of the efforts of the American Medical Association to secure the kind of legislation I am considering will be shown by the following extracts from the clear, logical, and forceful letter written by Mrs. Lydia Avery Coonley-Ward to the first division of the Federation of Women's Clubs of Illinois:

In saying what I think of this bill I shall make assertions that only duty could compel, but I shall say nothing that can not be substantiated.

The movement for new medical legislation was instigated and is maintained by the American Medical Association, a powerful trust. Many excellent people have interested themselves in it, but its motive was political. So dangerous were the plans, so specious the claims, so insidious the action that the National League for Medical Freedom was formed in opposition to this and kindred efforts, and its rapidly growing ranks have been recruited from every State until it has over 300,000 members, 21,000 of those being in Illinois. This league has been bitterly opposed and grossly maligned, but its members are devoted to public welfare and untrammeled by commercial interests. They do not in the least oppose laws for public health and sanitation, but they do oppose the efforts to force class legislation and the subjection of the people to a medical system.

I do not question the honesty of many who favor the Owen bill, but I do assert that its instigation and maintenance by a powerful trust are not to its credit, and should prevent acceptance of its statements without careful examination.

When Senator OWEN disclaims the intention of fortifying one school of medicine, we submit that evidence of close relations with the American Medical Association invalidates the claim. From the first Marine Hospital report issued 40 years ago, only the allopathic school has been recognized. Nor has the charge been denied, made on the floor of the Senate more than a year ago, that of the 7,000 doctors in Government employ every one is an allopath. The Government has no more right to be sectarian in medicine than in religion.

But for interested support this propaganda would never have gained prominence. The demand for a national bureau of health has been artificially created. Women's clubs have been besieged by humanitarian arguments and pleas for home and child conservation—interests dear to every woman's heart—and many have been won by specious arguments that will not bear the light of truth.

The bill was so obnoxious in the beginning that its friends amended it, and even then it failed. As it now stands it has no real use, but is designed as an entering wedge. "It will be followed up until we get what we want" has been frankly said. Let us try to find what "we" want. The bill contemplates the absorption of many bureaus, but excludes the medical departments of Army and Navy. The first bill would have included them, but they absolutely refused to be merged and were too strong politically to be antagonized. When asked why bureaus that would naturally be first to join the national bureau are not molested, Senator OWEN said that it would probably be impossible to pass the bill with the hostility of the medical service of the Army and Navy. But why should there be hostility to a bill essential to the well-being of the Nation? Their opposition is suggestive, to say the least.

I ask if we as women dare to further these unworthy ambitions? Our definite aim is to promote purity of motive as well as of action. Let us beware of the disguises in which the Owen bill is wrapped.

Great weight is laid on the impression that the medical profession at large considers this bill in the interest of the public health, whereas it is only one school that so considers it. The national associations of every other prominent school are on record against it. Are all other schools without concern in public welfare, excepting only the one that is to benefit by this legislation? Those who believe that under this bill power would not be concentrated in the old school should consider the experience of President Taft. An order for the Canal Zone, drawn by the interests that push the Owen bill, was presented for his signature. Believing it as harmless as it seemed, he signed it, thereby prohibiting the practice of medicine in the zone without a license from the allopathic board of health on pain of fine or imprisonment. The President was forced to the mortifying necessity of modifying the bill, but even now all other schools are at the mercy of "the regulars."

We are all glad to admit that excellent work has been done in the Canal Zone, but we believe that its value is of a purely practical and sanitary kind—good housekeeping rather than the use of serums and drugs, regarding which there is fundamental difference of opinion among the several schools of medicine. There is no difference of opinion regarding the efficacy of the laws of sanitation. What they have done in the zone they can do in the United States just as well, and no further legislation is needed to this end.

In the beginning Prof. Fisher wrote to a physician asking for a generous contribution to push the new bureau, saying that it is a project that "will surely expand within a decade so that millions upon millions of Government money" will be at its service. This alone should make women pause before risking their reputation for economical management. With vast expenditures this bill would bring politics into medicine and medicine into politics. Only last year an unwary member of a western legislature presented a bill proposing a tax of 50 cents a month on every family in the State for the services of a government-appointed doctor, and it came very near passing. Perhaps if it had had the indorsement of the women's clubs of the State it might have passed. Yet it was simply a bolder effort in the direction of the Owen bill. Why should women advocate centralization at Washington when an effort at this moment is being made to prevent the exploitation of taxpayers by keeping things in local hands?

Shall we not hesitate before trying to add to burdens already oppressive the "millions upon millions" the passage of the Owen bill predicts? We should make sure that the present comparatively economical management is ineffective before putting enormous financial power into unknown hands at Washington.

In a matter as tremendously important as this each woman should inform herself personally before voting, and if each makes examination of the facts I am sure indorsement will never follow.

I know of a committee appointed by a club to examine and report upon this bill. The acceptance of a place on an investigating committee presupposes impartiality—an open mind—without opinions formed in advance. By request three eminent health authorities appeared before this committee, and yet, although two of them opposed the bill, the committee advised the club to indorse it. There should be assurance in advance that a case like this is not prejudged. Its members ought to be as impartial as jurors are required to be.

Because I believe from my heart these things that I have written I beg that our clubs will not indorse the Owen bill or any similar measure creating a national department of health or extending the present health powers of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, this is only one of the many cases where the doctors have endeavored to secure the powerful influence of women's clubs to bring about the passage of laws in their own interests. In many cases indorsements have been obtained from such clubs by unwarranted statements and appeals to women's natural sympathies for any effort that is understood to be for the public good, especially where they are made to believe that the health of the children is to be preserved by that means.

But an inquiry into the motives that impel action on the part of the doctors and the objects they have in view will prevent all good women from supporting such proposed legislation. Most of the effort is to procure legislation that will put the "regular" doctors in control of all medical and other healing activities.

SERUM REMEDIES.

The doctors have conceived the idea that every disease is caused by some disease germ or microbe, and that there is some remedial health germ that will destroy it and thereby restore the patient to health. So they have been hunting about, first, to find the particular disease germ that produces each ailment. They have vivisected animals and prospected the bodies of dead human and animal beings for enlightenment along these microbe lines. They have not stopped there. Live children who are unfortunate enough to be without protection from their inhuman explorations have been made the victims of their search for information about disease germs and the means of their destruction. Their endeavors have led to the most fantastic theories and the most loathsome remedies for disease germs. The vile concoctions that have been and are being injected and poured into human bodies, often causing disease and suffering even unto death, is appalling. No one knows whether any of the serums and other like remedies devised by the doctors as a result of their theories about disease germs have ever healed a single disease or prevented it. But it is known beyond the possibility of doubt that thousands of people, many of them innocent and helpless children, have been killed and thousands of others inoculated with loathsome diseases by their use. Whether they heal or prevent disease or not is a matter of sheer speculation, not knowledge. A serum is administered and a patient gets well. Whether it was because of the serum or in spite of it no one can tell. But if the patient dies suddenly after the administration of the drug, with all the symptoms of poisoning, the cause and the result is too apparent to be doubted. Then, all kinds of excuses are made for the fearful consequences of a doctor's fatal blunder. Serums are forced on whole armies and navies and on school children, from which fearful deaths occur. The epidemic of disease that is feared does not occur. But who knows whether its failure to occur was the result of the administration of the drug?

Sometimes the serum is administered, and the much-feared epidemic of disease does come, and the people who were inoculated sicken and die like all the rest. And, then, what? Oh, there was something wrong with the virus or serum. But who knows? We go on experimenting and risking our lives and our health at the dictation of the doctors, the command of the military and naval officers, and in obedience to cruel and inhuman laws upon the mere theories and speculations of the doctors. We surrender the lives of our children to the experimentations of these men who have utterly failed to heal disease by the methods they have resorted to for centuries and are trying out other remedies equally futile and none the less destructive to health and life. And the people are compelled by law and health regulations to submit to be slaughtered by these loathsome alleged remedies, whether they will or not. The most ruthless enforcement of these remedies will be found in the Army and Navy. Officers of these departments have been made to believe that such remedies are necessary to prevent the spread of diseases supposed to be infectious. To prevent this they require every soldier and sailor to submit to be inoculated with the various serums that are supposed to prevent certain diseases. Their bodies are made receptacles of these foul and unhealthy concoctions. A conspicuous case of the kind came to my knowledge a short time ago that will serve to lay before the Senate the practice which prevails in the Army and Navy in the enforced administration of such remedies:

Joseph Kapsa was a gunner's mate on one of our war ships. He was a Christian Scientist, and conscientiously opposed to taking drugs. The Navy Department promulgated an order that all men in the naval service must be inoculated with a serum supposed to prevent typhoid fever. Kapsa explained what his beliefs and convictions were, and asked to be relieved from complying with the order. His request was refused. He then refused to submit to the treatment. He was tried and convicted of disobedience to orders and sentenced to two years' imprisonment and a dishonorable discharge. He was sent to prison, and there, again, the rules of the prison required him to take the treatment. His attorney at his trial appealed to me to intercede for him when he was first convicted. His punishment was reduced by order of the then Secretary of the Navy to one year's imprisonment and a dishonorable discharge. There is no better way to lay the Kapsa case before the Senate than to submit the naval order and the correspondence that took place between the Secretary of the Navy and me, and others, on the subject. It is as follows:

[General Order No. 133.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 1, 1911.

First. As soon as practicable after the receipt of this order typhoid prophylactic will be administered to all officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps under the age of 45 years who have not already received it or who have not already had a well-defined case of typhoid fever. Officers and enlisted men on leave or on duty where no medical officer is available will receive the typhoid prophylactic upon their arrival at the first station where this measure is practicable.

Second. Typhoid prophylactic will be administered to all recruits under 45 years of age immediately upon their arrival at a training station, receiving ship, or marine recruit depot. This applies to all men reenlisting who have not received the prophylactic treatment within two years previously or had a well-defined case of typhoid fever; in case of doubt the prophylactic will be administered. Every applicant for enlistment in the Navy or Marine Corps will be informed that he must submit to typhoid prophylaxis and unless he agrees to acquiesce in this procedure he will not be considered eligible for enlistment.

Third. Typhoid prophylaxis must be regarded as a supplemental safeguard and under no circumstances will the usual sanitary precautions be modified or set aside.

Fourth. The antityphoid serum should be obtained from the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery by telegraphic or written request.

MAY 28, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am inclosing you a letter from Mr. Ralph K. Jacobs, relating to the court-martial of John Joseph Kapsa, gunner's mate, first class, United States Navy, May 20, 1912.

The letter explains clearly the conditions under which this young man was convicted. I can not refrain from expressing my utter astonishment that a court-martial composed of American naval officers should have imposed such a punishment under the circumstances. The question may soon have to be tested whether the Navy Department can violate the conscientious religious convictions of its enlisted men by such order as was made in this instance.

But I am not writing to you now to raise any question of that kind, although I may be impelled to do so later. The judge advocate has magnanimously reduced the imprisonment of this young man one year, which leaves standing the order depriving him of pay and discharging him dishonorably from the service at the end of his imprisonment. That is to say, he is to be dishonorably discharged a year earlier than under the original sentence.

I think this man acted unwisely. If he were an officer, having the right to resign, he could have satisfied his conscience by resigning his position; but in his case this could not be done. He must either submit or take the punishment. In one case that has come to my knowledge and about which I wrote you earlier an enlisted seaman, under exactly the same conditions, was not imprisoned but was given an undesirable discharge. Such a sentence might be justified, but the one rendered against this man is utterly unjustifiable from any point of view. If his conscientious scruples prevented him from accepting the treatment, he should have expected that he would be discharged from the service. I have so advised a number of Christian Scientists who were likely to be placed in the same situation. The result of it will be that Christian Scientists, who, I imagine, make as good seamen as you have in the Navy, will be deprived of their right to enlist because of the orders requiring the kind of treatment that was proposed in this case and which is obnoxious, not only to Christian Scientists but to thousands of other good people in this country, and all of those now in the service will be compelled to waive their conscientious religious scruples and accept the treatment or undergo such punishment as was inflicted in this case or some greater or less punishment, according to the views of the particular officials composing the court-martial in a given case.

I submit to you, with all due respect, whether some conclusion should not be arrived at by which cases of this kind could be disposed of and Christian Scientists who prefer that course should be allowed to accept an undesirable discharge, which is certainly bad enough and unjust enough, rather than undergo imprisonment where the refusal is not willful, but grounded upon their conscientious convictions? In this instance I understand Kapsa prefers to receive an undesirable discharge or a dishonorable one rather than waive his convictions, although he has made a good seaman and is anxious to remain in the service.

Under these circumstances I appeal to you for such degree of clemency in his case as you may feel to be just in the interest of the public service. I think it must be seen by any just-minded man that the service can not be benefited by the infliction of such punishment as has been imposed in this case. Religious persecution has never yet aided in accomplishing results. It will simply bring about the feeling of resentment which will do much more harm than good. For myself I do not desire to see this condition of mind brought about. I should prefer to see Christian Scientists denied the right to participate in the public service because of their religious convictions—the injustice of which must be apparent to anyone—rather than have them punished as this man was punished, which must arouse the strongest indignation and protest not only from Christian Scientists but from all just-minded people.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator.

Hon. G. VON L. MEYER,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, June 24, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, together with the letter from Mr. Ralph K. Jacobs, relating to the general court-martial of Joseph J. Kapsa, seaman, United States Navy.

Mr. Jacobs acted as counsel for Kapsa at his trial and there urged as a defense that the department's General Order No. 133 of December 1, 1911, is illegal in that it violated the constitutional rights of the accused, and that the direct order of Kapsa's commanding officer was also illegal. Mr. Jacobs, however, quoted no authorities or precedents in support of his contention. In his letter to you Mr. Jacobs does not insist upon his previous contention, but requests that you intervene for the purpose of securing clemency, stating in his letter: "My own belief is that since the department asks him to submit his body to treatment the case should stand on a par with those cases in which an enlisted man refused to undergo an operation which the naval surgeons say is necessary, in which case the man is discharged as undesirable." This statement of Mr. Jacobs is erroneous in that it fails to take notice of the distinction that is made between major and minor operations. The policy of the department is not to insist upon a major operation against the man's wishes, but the case is different in minor operations. The following is quoted from circular No. 11, Adjutant General's office, War Department, of December 10, 1885, and shows that the policy of that department with respect to surgical operations is the same as that of the Navy Department:

"Except in the case of a capital operation involving risk of life, a soldier can not refuse to submit to medical treatment or surgical operation without subjecting himself to trial by court-martial for willfully avoiding treatment the purpose of which is to enable him to perform the duties for which he enlisted."

With regard to the severity of Kapsa's punishment I beg to invite your attention to the fact that the department has reduced Kapsa's sentence of imprisonment to one year's detention at the United States Naval Disciplinary Barracks, Port Royal, S. C. Detentioners are not considered as prisoners in the ordinary sense of the word, are not required to wear prison garb, and are not required to perform hard labor, being given such drills and instructions as will fit them for return to the service should they show a proper disposition to submit to discipline and so conduct themselves as to warrant special clemency being exercised in their behalf. Moreover, the department exercises clemency toward all detentioners by remitting one-third of the term of detention, provided their conduct while under detention is excellent. This in Kapsa's case would reduce his period of detention to eight months. It will therefore be seen that the punishment in his case is not a severe one, considering the very serious nature of his offense.

Referring to those matters which you urge in justification of Kapsa's offense, it may be remarked that a man's religious convictions can not legally justify his refusal to obey the law, or the regulations or orders, which are just as binding upon any person in the service. As stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Allgeyer v. Louisiana (165 U. S., 578), a citizen "may be compelled, by force if need be, against his will and without regard to his personal wishes or his pecuniary interests, or even his religious convictions, to take his place in the ranks of the Army of his country and risk the chance of being shot down in its defense." It certainly would appear that when a man has voluntarily enlisted and bound himself by oath to obey the lawful orders of his superior officers he would have less justification in violating his oath and refusing to obey orders than would a man who is compelled by force to join the ranks of his country's forces, yet the Supreme Court, as above noted, states that religious convictions would not justify a man in disobedience in the latter case.

The question in this case, as in all others, which the department must bear in mind is the question of discipline. In considering the punishment this man is to receive, the department was not influenced by any desire to conduct a religious persecution, as you suggest, but solely to maintain discipline in the Navy. The department can not permit any officer or enlisted man of the Navy to repudiate his oath of office or enlistment on the grounds that he can not conscientiously comply with it in some one or more particular. Were the department to accept such a doctrine, there would be no more discipline in the Navy, for every man could then disobey orders with impunity, relying upon his alleged religious convictions as a justification for the violation of his oath of enlistment, and demanding a discharge whenever it might suit his convenience, on the grounds that his conscientious scruples would not permit of his submission to discipline. It would simply amount to an attempt to force upon the naval authorities the rules and regulations of other organizations, and to govern the Naval Establishment thereby. It might as well be said that a person in the naval service could justify his refusal to fire on the enemy when ordered so to do because to obey such an order would be contrary to the religious beliefs of the person so ordered.

In this connection, the following extract is quoted from Winthrop's Military Law and Precedents, 1896, page 890:

"Unjust or objectionable commands.—That the order was merely unjust or unreasonable would, it need hardly be added, constitute no defense to a charge of disobedience of orders under this article. The plea that the order was opposed to the religious scruples of the accused and that he was therefore warranted in disregarding it is one which has been considerably discussed in England, where it was held wholly insufficient as a defense. It would of course be held equally untenable in our practice."

The department can not subscribe to the statement that any officer can refuse to obey a lawful order and resign, and have his resignation accepted. The department has the right, and has frequently exercised it, of refusing to accept an officer's resignation.

Referring to paragraph 2 of your letter, the order for court-martial was issued by the department itself after careful consideration of the best interests of the service. It was an order which it was the duty of the commanding officer of the Delaware to see carried out. The department itself preferred the charge against Kapsa of refusing to obey the lawful order of his superior officer, and it was the duty of the naval officer who sat upon the court to make a finding in accord with the evidence adduced at the trial. Having arrived at a finding of "guilty," which was the only finding possible under the circumstances, it became the duty of the court to award a sentence adequate to the offense. The President of the United States established the limitations of punishments that a general court-martial may adjudge in time of peace, and the limitation so established by the President for the offense of refusing to obey the lawful order of a superior officer, as shown in the Navy Regulations for the past 12 years, has been imprisonment at hard labor for two years, corresponding forfeiture of pay, and dishonorable discharge.

If there are matters which appear to the court to warrant clemency, they can only be considered in connection with a recommendation to the reviewing authority that clemency be exercised in the particular case; but the court, as above stated, is required to adjudge an adequate punishment. Clemency was recommended by the court in this case to the reviewing authority—the department—and has been exercised, as previously explained.

The fact that Kapsa was a petty officer of experience is one reason why he should not escape punishment, as petty officers are expected to set a good example in the matter of discipline and obedience to men of inferior rating. The commanding officer of the Delaware gave Kapsa exceptional opportunities to reconsider his refusal to obey orders, but he deliberately and willfully continued in his disobedience, the fact was well known on board to all the crew of the ship, and discipline would have been at an end or seriously impaired on board that ship had he been permitted to escape with no punishment.

The department does not consider medical treatment administered to protect the health of the naval service as religious persecution; nor can it concede that any officer, even of the lowest rating, can claim the right to personally decide whether or not he will obey a lawful order. If the order is unlawful or illegal, of course no one can be compelled to obey it; but if it is a lawful order, it must be obeyed by all persons to whom it applies. General Order No. 133 was an order issued by the Navy Department itself and is considered a lawful order, and anyone in the naval service refusing to obey it renders himself liable to the penalties prescribed for the offense of refusing to obey the lawful order of his superior officer.

In order to demonstrate the efficacy of inoculation against typhoid fever and the necessity of prevention and precaution for the safety of the lives of the military forces, I inclose a copy of a statement of the Surgeon General of the Navy.

I should be very glad indeed if the circumstances of the case warranted further clemency than that previously mentioned, but regret, for the reasons stated, that the department would not be justified in permitting Kapsa to be simply discharged as undesirable and thereby escape punishment for the offense of which he was convicted.

Faithfully yours,

BEEKMAN WINTHROP,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

JUNE 29, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Referring again to the case of Joseph J. Kapsa, seaman, United States Navy, who was court-martialed for refusing to submit to serum treatment for typhoid fever and sentenced to a punishment that should shock the sense of justice of all men, and in response to the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Navy, in which he justifies the sentence in this case, I have this further to say:

The most of the Acting Secretary's letter is devoted to an effort to refute a claim that I did not make, namely, that Kapsa might disobey an order of the Secretary of the Navy because it conflicted with his religious convictions. Not only did I not make any such claim, but expressly waived it in my letter. I said further:

"If his conscientious scruples prevented him from accepting the treatment he should have expected that he would be discharged from the service. I have so advised a number of Christian Scientists who were likely to be placed in this same situation. The result of it will be that Christian Scientists, who, I imagine, make as good seamen as you have in the Navy, will be deprived of their right to enlist because of the orders requiring the kind of treatment that was proposed in this case, and which is obnoxious not only to Christian Scientists but to thousands of other good people in this country and all of those now in the service will be compelled to waive their conscientious religious scruples and accept the treatment or undergo such punishment as was inflicted in this case or some greater or less punishment, according to the views of the particular officials composing the court-martial in a given case."

My letter, as the Acting Secretary must have understood, was not intended to justify Kapsa but to have the punishment reduced, at least sufficiently to commend it to a reasonable man as just. So my letter seems to have failed of its purpose. I said in the very beginning of my letter that I thought the man acted unwisely in refusing to submit to the treatment, however loathsome and objectionable it might be, notwithstanding his conscientious religious scruples. But I am not the keeper of his conscience. You are, and may force him to violate his conscientious religious convictions—quite as well founded as your own—or suffer punishment that from a religious point of view is persecution. Of course, this can not continue very long in a free and enlightened country.

Of course, as the Acting Secretary very justly contends, a subordinate in the service could not be allowed to question the order of his superiors unless the order was unconstitutional or void for some other reason. He could not say, as I do unhesitatingly, that the order was unreasonable, unjust, and unnecessary, and the enforcement of it a violation of his religious rights. To allow him to say what I am saying, conceding the legality of the order, however unreasonable and unjust it might be, would be insubordination. It would put an end to all discipline. But this, under the circumstances, could hardly justify or excuse a sentence as severe as the one enforced in this case.

If I believed that this treatment is either necessary or efficacious I should feel quite differently about it. Or if the doctors and others claiming to have some knowledge of the supposed effects of serum therapy were agreed about it I should say that the Navy Department was justified in forcing men who are in its power to submit to it. But alleged experts do not agree about it. Many of them maintain that it is not only very uncertain as to its beneficial effects but extremely dangerous in its use.

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator.

UNITED STATES NAVAL DISCIPLINARY BARRACKS,
Port Royal, S. C., July 7, 1912.

Mr. JOHN WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I take pleasure in writing you a few lines to ask you for advice in my case, of which you were informed by Mr. Ralph K. Jacobs, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

I was court-martialed for refusing to submit to antitoxin treatment and received one year at hard labor, and was sent to Port Royal, S. C., to do my sentence.

Your letter to Mr. Meyer, it seems to me, did little good, and I would like to have you look into the matter and advise me.

I was sent for the other day and was asked to submit to the treatment by the doctor here at the disciplinary barracks, and informed him that I was doing a year at hard labor for refusing the treatment aboard the U. S. S. Delaware; but he informed me that it was orders to give the treatment to everyone that arrived here, and I was given to understand that I would have to take the treatment or I would be court-martialed again on another charge.

Am I to be made a criminal, Mr. WORKS, because I do not believe in this treatment?

I am a citizen of the United States, and still I haven't the right of a citizen, and if I am tried again I will receive two more years to my sentence and be sent to another prison, where I will either have to submit to the treatment or receive another court-martial.

Mr. WORKS, I am writing to you because I know you to be just, and if it were known that I had written and appealed to you, I would be punished for it, as it is not permitted. Our mail is read when we receive any, and it is also read before we are permitted to send any, but I will try to get these few lines to you somehow and trust you will receive them.

I may not be able to write to you again, but hope you will do me justice and look into my matter and help me, if you possibly can, as I certainly do not care to spend my life in prison.

I will close now, thanking you in advance. I beg to remain,

Respectfully yours,

JOSEPH JULIUS KAPSA.

Hon. GEORGE VON L. MEYER,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have received a telegram from Mr. Ralph K. Jacobs, of which the inclosed is a copy.

Will you kindly let me know if it is true that the Government proposes to court-martial this man continuously while he is in prison for refusing to accept the serum treatment, as indicated by this telegram, and particularly whether a court-martial has now been ordered?

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator.

JULY 13, 1912.

Mr. JOSEPH J. KAPSA,
United States Naval Disciplinary Barracks, Port Royal, S. C.

MY DEAR MR. KAPSA: You write me for advice in your case. You first refused to submit to the treatment required by the order of the Secretary of the Navy for the prevention of typhoid fever. This was a clear case of disobedience. You did so for conscientious reasons, but a soldier or sailor can not set up his own convictions, religious or otherwise, against the orders of his superiors. I have been trying to secure clemency in your case for this offense on the ground that you acted in good faith and from religious convictions, but I was bound to admit that you could not escape the punishment for a violation of orders on any such ground. Now you are confronted with another order of the same kind, or perhaps the same one, requiring you to submit to the same treatment in your present position. My advice to you is to submit to this treatment without further objection. If you had asked me in advance I should have told you to submit to the first treatment. I believe thoroughly and conscientiously, just as you do, that this order is unreasonable and unjust, but neither the Army nor the Navy could exist for any length of time if the soldiers or sailors could refuse to obey orders on any such ground as that.

I understand that you are a Christian Scientist, as I am, and that you refused to submit to the treatment because we conscientiously believe that no such treatment should be imposed on anyone, and particularly people like ourselves, who are conscientiously opposed to such treatment. But Christian Scientists are law-abiding people. They believe thoroughly in not only obeying but in maintaining law and order under all circumstances. They may use their best endeavors to change the law, as I think every reasonable and proper effort should be made to change the order of the Navy Department inflicting this sort of treatment upon their unwilling men. But so long as the law exists it should be obeyed by Christian Scientists as well as by others, and in your case orders of the Secretary of the Navy, or any other superior officer authorized to promulgate such orders, is the law so far as you are concerned, and should be and must be obeyed if order is to be maintained.

I will do everything I can to secure clemency in your case, but I can accomplish nothing for you if you continue to violate the orders of the Navy Department. I could not justify you in that course myself, and for that reason could not ask the Secretary of the Navy to reduce the punishment that has already been imposed on you so long as you continue in disobedience. So you will understand that your future punishment depends wholly upon your own conduct. If you obey the order now sought to be enforced and express your willingness to obey the future ones, I may be able to succeed in securing pardon for you and your restoration to your former place in the Navy. But if you continue to disobey, of course I can do nothing for you. I sympathize thoroughly with your unwillingness to allow yourself to be subjected to this treatment. I am as much opposed to it as you are. But so long as you are in the Navy you must necessarily obey the orders of your superiors. My advice to you is to do so without further delay.

I note what you say about the probability of your being punished for sending me this communication. Of course I could not give you the advice you need without the knowledge of the prison authorities. I do not think that, under the circumstances, you will be punished for asking advice, in good faith, as to your rights and duties. If so, I should think less of the naval authorities than I do now. I think they are exercising what they believe to be their duty, and, as you are seeking to find out what is yours, they can hardly find reason to complain of you.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator.

JULY 13, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have had no answer from you to my last letter relating to the case of Joseph J. Kapsa. Since writing that letter I have received a letter from Mr. Kapsa himself, with whom I have had no previous correspondence or communication of any kind, informing me that he has again been required to accept treatment for the prevention of typhoid fever and is threatened with further punishment. He asks for my advice as to what he should do. The whole thing is exceedingly revolting to me. Looking at it as I do, the punishment and repeated punishment of this man is wholly unnecessary and unjust. It is a violation of the sacred rights of an American citizen. Notwithstanding this, I have written him that he must necessarily obey orders or subject himself to punishment. I am sending you a copy of his letter to me and my answer, so that you may be fully informed of the situation and my views on the subject.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, August 2, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 29th ultimo relative to the case of Joseph J. Kapsa, seaman, United States Navy.

In reply thereto you are informed that on July 31, 1912, the department directed, in view of Kapsa's excellent conduct while at the disciplinary barracks, that the unexpired portion of his sentence be remitted after he has taken the typhoid vaccination, and that he then be restored to duty.

Faithfully yours,

BEEKMAN WINTHROP,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,

NAVY YARD, NORFOLK, VA., August 11, 1912.

The Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WORKS: I take the pleasure in writing and informing you of my release from Port Royal, and that I have been restored to duty.

I have been restored as a seaman, and am waiting for transfer to a ship.

I submitted to the antitoxin treatment, as you advised me in your letter, and received the last of the treatment on August 7; so was restored to duty on the same day.

I am a Christian Scientist, Mr. WORKS, and that is the reason I refused to submit to the treatment, and not because I wished to violate orders of the Navy Department.

I only asked for my rights as a Christian and citizen, but could not obtain them because I was in the naval service.

Just because I was in the naval service I was compelled to obey the commandments of men in direct violation of the plain teachings of Christ, and if I possibly can obtain my discharge I would like to do so before a new order is issued by the Navy Department which would violate my religious scruples; so if you possibly can give me any information as to whether this is possible or not, it will be greatly appreciated.

Thanking you for your kindness, and God bless you, I wish to remain,

Yours, in truth,

JOSEPH J. KAPSA,
U. S. S. "Franklin," Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va.

AUGUST 13, 1912.

Mr. JOSEPH J. KAPSA,
U. S. S. "Franklin," Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va.

MY DEAR MR. KAPSA: I shall be very glad, indeed, to do anything I can to secure your discharge from service in the Navy. I think, however, you are taking too seriously the obligations of a Christian Scientist as opposed to vaccination and other similar treatment. Of course, we do not believe in these treatments and do believe that there is a higher mode of healing, but there is nothing in the teachings of Christian Science that would obligate you or me to violate the law or any order of our superiors in the service because we are Christian Scientists. The right thing for a Christian Scientist to do is to obey the law so long as the law exists and to know that the treatment can not do you harm. A good Christian Scientist, if compelled by law to submit to vaccination, ought to be able to prevent its having any effect upon him, and that is the course taken by Christian Scientists in cases where the law of the States requires their children to be vaccinated in order to entitle them to enter the schools. If I were you and desired to remain in the service I certainly would not ask for a discharge on that ground. You can be just as good a Christian Scientist and your conscience should be just as clear if you continue in the service and submit to such orders for vaccination and other treatment as the Navy regulations may require. If I had supposed that to accept the treatment was to violate the religion that we profess, I should not have advised you to submit to it. There are thousands of Christian Scientists in the country today who are compelled to submit to vaccination and to other material means for the prevention of disease, and the fact that they submit to the treatment or remedies is in no sense a violation of their obligations as Christian Scientists. I hope you will realize this fully and not be misled into leaving the service on that ground alone if you otherwise desire to remain.

I will not take up the matter of your discharge with the Secretary of the Navy until I hear from you further after you receive this letter. If you still think you desire to leave the service, I will, of course, do anything I can for you.

I sincerely sympathize with you and admire the stand you took in refusing to accept the treatment; but, notwithstanding, I must say that I think it was a mistake which could not do you or your religion any good, however conscientious you were in taking that course.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS.

U. S. S. "FRANKLIN,"
August 16, 1912.

The Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WORKS: Your letter received yesterday, and so answer it to-day, this being my first opportunity.

You will agree with me, Mr. WORKS, that it is for the good of the service that I leave it when you consider my position and the conditions under which I am and will be placed.

I will be looked upon as a man who refused to obey an order of the Navy Department, and that will prevent me from advancement, as it has in other men's cases.

If you will just imagine yourself in my place, you will see that I am right.

I am discontented and disgusted and make men I come in contact with feel the same unintentionally, so it is far better for me to leave and start over again somewhere else.

So if you will take the matter up and have me discharged, you will be doing the Navy as well as myself and my people a great favor, who have become worried since I have been in this trouble.

Hoping to hear from you in the near future, I beg to remain,

Truly yours,

JOS. J. KAPSA,
U. S. S. "Franklin," Norfolk, Va.

AUGUST 17, 1912.

Mr. JOSEPH J. KAPSA,
U. S. S. "Franklin," Norfolk, Va.

MY DEAR MR. KAPSA: I will at once apply to the Secretary of the Navy for your discharge. I am not familiar with the rules on the subject and do not know what may be necessary for that purpose, or whether or not the discharge can be obtained at all, but I will do the best I can for you, as you desire to take that course.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS.

AUGUST 17, 1912.

Hon. GEORGE VON L. MEYER,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: A few days ago I received a letter from Joseph J. Kapsa, the gunners' mate who was recently court-martialed for refusing to accept the serum treatment required by the rules of your department, asking me to try and secure his discharge from the Navy. I wrote him that if he had no other reason than that he was conscientiously opposed to accepting these enforced preventive remedies because of his religious scruples, I thought he had better consider seriously whether it was a wise thing for him to leave the Navy, where, as I understand, he has made an excellent record. This morning I received the inclosed reply from him, which will fully explain his views and his feelings on the subject. I am satisfied that under the circumstances, if his discharge can be arranged it will be, as he says, best both for him and the service. I am therefore asking you whether under the rules and regulations of your department he can be discharged from the service; and if so, upon what terms? An early reply will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, August 22, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have received your letter of August 17, 1912, inclosing a communication herewith returned from Joseph J. Kapsa with regard to his discharge.

As Kapsa is now in his third enlistment he could only be discharged by special order of the department, and I would suggest he be advised to make an official application to his commanding officer for discharge, and, in view of the circumstances in the case, the department will be glad to give it favorable consideration.

As Kapsa is now in the third year of his present enlistment, he would be required to refund one-half of the honorable discharge gratuity paid to him at the time of his enlistment April 28, 1910.

Faithfully yours,

G. VON L. MEYER.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

AUGUST 23, 1912.

Mr. JOSEPH J. KAPSA,
U. S. S. "Franklin," Norfolk, Va.

MY DEAR MR. KAPSA: I have just received the inclosed letter from the Secretary of the Navy, which will explain itself. You will see that it is necessary for you to make application for your discharge to your commanding officer and also that you will have to refund one-half of the honorable discharge gratuity paid to you at the time of your enlistment April 28, 1910.

If these conditions are complied with I feel quite sure, from the Secretary's letter, that you can procure the discharge.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator.

Mr. President, I heard no more from Kapsa on the subject, and do not know whether he was discharged from the service or not. I have had a number of complaints just like his, but this one will sufficiently disclose the conditions that prevail in the Navy. They are the same in the Army. This same coercive system exists in the case of school children. They must be vaccinated and be inoculated with such vile serums as the doctors prescribe, and the school authorities may order or lose their school privileges. They are not sent to prison as the soldiers and sailors are, but they are penalized. In the same way the rules of the Public Health Service are enforced by criminal prosecutions or in other objectionable ways.

When the people living along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers were driven from their homes by floods last year, and were being furnished with rations by the Government, they were forced to submit to vaccination as a condition upon which they would be furnished with food. They must comply with the order of the health department that they be vaccinated or starve. To compel compliance with the order placards were posted on the relief boats, announcing in big letters, "No vaccinations, no rations." It was a brutal proceeding, that was denounced in many newspapers.

Many cases of disastrous consequences resulting from serum treatments have been brought to my attention. I can not refer to all or to any considerable number of them. They can be found in almost every community. The trail of the serum treatment is the trail of disease and death wherever it is practiced. In Los Angeles eight deaths occurred in the county hospital at one time from the use of what is called neosalvarsan, supposed to be a cure for syphilis. This case excited public attention because of the number slain at one time. In East New York the family of Robert E. Mercer, wife, and three children were given typhoid serum, and all died. The antitoxin used was procured from the health board. The following account of the case, given in the Los Angeles Tribune after the death of Mrs. Mercer and while the children were still living, sufficiently discloses the facts:

NEW YORK, June 16.

Friends of Robert E. Mercer, who died of typhoid fever at his home in New York on May 16, are determined that an investigation shall be made of the death of Mrs. Mercer and the pitiful plight of their two children, Herbert, 10, and Ruth, 5 years old, who have been dangerously ill since they were inoculated with serum at the same time as their mother.

Mrs. Mercer died Monday morning. The two children have steadily wasted away, and their condition is so serious that they have not been told of the death of their mother. Friends of the father, who was an employee of the Mergenthaler Linotype Co., will see that the children are well taken care of, and meantime they are instituting an investigation, which may result in a suit against the city.

Dr. Sydney E. Smith injected the antityphoid serum into the mother and two children after the father had been stricken with typhoid. He obtained the antitoxin from the board of health.

The Mercer children are now under the constant care of a nurse. They were perfectly normal children before they were inoculated. Now their bodies are wasted and so sensitive that they can hardly endure to be touched by those caring for them. Neither child is expected to live.

The death of Mrs. Mercer makes interesting the assertion of Charles H. Higgins, treasurer of the Antivaccination League of America, who claims it can readily be proven from death certificates and other statistics that there are more deaths caused every year in city and State from lockjaw and septicemia in vaccination wounds than by smallpox. He declares that among children the proportion is 3 to 1 in some years; in a published statement he challenges the board of health to disprove this assertion, and also challenges the board to permit a representative company of citizens to examine their death records.

About the same time Private Bellinger, of Troop A, First Regiment of Cavalry, died from the same cause, from serum procured at the same place.

At Rockford, Ill., a young child of Mrs. Frank Lagona died from diphtheria antitoxin a few minutes after it was administered. Indignation ran so high that the doctor who administered the drug was threatened by a mob and escaped from his office. In Greensburg, Ind., on October 25, 1911, the 9-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Woodhill died from the diphtheria antitoxin 15 minutes after it was administered. On January 29 last Norman Fusselman, aged 20 years, died suddenly from diphtheria antitoxin. This was in Philadelphia. Here is another case, taken from Medical Freedom, reproduced from the Lancet-Clinic:

In the Lancet-Clinic for April 25 Dr. S. P. Kramer told of a 5-year-old girl who was in good health March 29, became ill that night, and the following evening died when about 3 cubic centimeters of the second tube of antimeningitis serum were being injected. Dr. Kramer commented upon the child's death as follows:

"It is now a year since I called attention to the danger of injecting serum containing ticresol into the subarachnoid space. This report has certainly gained enough publicity, and one might be justified in inquiring how long these accidents are to continue. As you are doubtless aware, all the manufacturers and distributors of serum are licensed by the Secretary of the Treasury. I brought this matter to the attention of the United States Public Health Department a year ago, but have been unable as yet to obtain any definite answer as to whether or not I am right in my contention. The distribution of the serum has gone on as before.

"I therefore shall take the liberty to appeal to my colleagues to aid in this matter and submit the following resolution, the adoption of which I hereby move: 'Resolved, That the Academy of Medicine of Cincinnati respectfully requests the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to institute an immediate investigation on the toxity of the antimeningitis serum.' Seconded and carried."

I do not know what action, if any, was taken by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Cases of death from the use of serums and antitoxins of various kinds might be cited by the hundreds, but I need not pursue the subject here, because it is a fact well known to all intelligent people.

Mr. President, is this great sacrifice of the lives of innocent, unsuspecting, and unprotected people by such means necessary or justifiable? If we had any assurance that the lives of the comparatively few were sacrificed for the benefit of the many, and that the remedy that destroyed their lives saved many others, the use of these serums might be justified, or at least excused. But we have no such assurance. The use of them has met with the most strenuous opposition from doctors and others as not only useless, but dangerous. A serum for tuberculosis was one much boasted about as a remedy for that dread disease, but it has proved a failure and great disappointment. As showing how complete the failure has been, I quote from Medical Freedom of October, 1912, commenting upon the report made on the subject published in the Journal of the American Medical Association:

An extended report published in the Journal of the American Medical Association for August 3, 1912, of 150 cases of pulmonary tuberculosis treated with tuberculin affords typical illustration. This report is prepared by Dr. H. L. Barnes, M. D., superintendent of the State sanatorium, Wallum Lake, R. I. In opening his paper, this physician, enjoying such exceptional advantages for testing the treatment, states that the material for the report was derived from 150 cases of tuberculosis treated at the Rhode Island sanatorium extending over a period of five years from 1907 to 1912, inclusive. The report is very full and is plainly the work of a painstaking scientist earnestly striving to test the virtue of a treatment from which so much was expected. The concluding lines of his paper give the result of his experiment in the following words: "This analysis furnishes no evidence that these 150 patients, taken as a whole, were influenced by the tuberculin treatment."

Even the Federal health authorities have at last come to realize the worthlessness of this treatment that was formerly heralded as one of the great medical discoveries of our time, for in the Public Health Reports for August, 1912 (issued by the National Government), in the official utterance of the Public Health Service tuberculosis sanatorium at Fort Stanton, Surg. F. C. Smith says:

"The use of tuberculin was discontinued at this station after the last series of cases reported in the 'Transactions of the Seventh Annual Meeting of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.' * * * I believe, moreover, that there is a growing skepticism among sanatorium physicians as to the therapeutic efficacy of tuberculin and a general limitation of its use to private practice and those sanatoria where some special effort is needed on the part of the practitioner to keep in intimate touch with his patients; and, in short, that the benefit of tuberculin is limited chiefly to the effect of its administration on the mental condition of the patient."

It will be noted that there are no regrets expressed for the injuries resulting in many cases from the use of tuberculin.

Now, if we turn to the medical literature shortly after Dr. Koch made his hope-inspiring statements regarding his discovery of a lymph alleged to be a specific in the cure of this dread disease we will see how this supposed wonderful discovery, considered at that time as one of the greatest scientific achievements of the age, was merely an ignis fatuus. And yet so late as the autumn of 1908 we find the eminent Dr. J. Hammer, of Heidelberg, in an address delivered before the Sixth International Congress of Tuberculosis, held in Washington, D. C., speaking of the great importance of "bringing about a general use of tuberculin," which he describes as a "precious and successful remedy," whose use "will always prove a strong weapon in the combat against tuberculosis."

Serum therapy is as much the fetish of the old-school profession to-day, as was the inoculation with smallpox virus the death-dealing fetish of the same school in Great Britain during the eighteenth century. For though from the above recent citations it would appear that this treatment, as it relates to tuberculosis, is ready for the scrap heap the profession to-day is as much dominated by the supposed virtue of typhoid antitoxin as were the enthusiasts of earlier years with tuberculin.

Dr. W. H. Smith, formerly a member of the American Medical Association, writing in Medical Freedom, has this to say on the subject:

Official statistics published by Bertillon give a greater mortality rate under serum treatment than has ever been known during any preceding year before the discovery of this celebrated specific. Drs. Sevestra, Gaucher, and Legendre have been courageous enough to make known to the Société Medicale des Hopitaux the serious and frequent accidents to which the antidiphtheria serum gives rise, even when applied to the very simple cases of sore throat.

Rosenbach, the eminent German pathologist, says:

The bacteriologists, by means of fallacious conclusions, have established the dogma that all infectious diseases are caused by bacteria, and that all diseases in which so-called specific bacteria are found are infectious diseases. Since this unsubstantiated teaching has become so popular, and is matter of such common comment in the daily press that all the world is driven to really dangerous bacteriophobia, I fully appreciate the value of bacteriology as a biological science, but I raise my voice against the unjustified, the unwarranted claims of bacteriologists, especially of those whom one calls "nothing-but-bacteriologists"—the diagnosticians in absentia—with their disinfectants and measures based on unsupported theory.

The pictures and statements are fallacious and misleading, because they relate to an unproved theory and not to fact, as the vitiated evidence offered as statistical proof in favor of medical theories. Here are some wise words from the Medical Brief:

"The Pasteur Institute at Paris records 26,165 persons bitten by dogs and treated by Pasteur's treatment. Of this number 107 died. The institution thereupon assumes, and claims, that all the rest were saved by the Pasteur process. There is absolutely no evidence to show that any of the other patients would have developed hydrophobia—an exceptionally rare disease, the existence of which is doubted by some of our ablest men.

"There is no proof to show that the dogs which inflicted the wounds were mad; neither is it shown that infection always follows contamination. Susceptibility and immunity are things not yet fully understood. The same method has been used to support other theories. Large numbers of children suffering from a variety of throat troubles, from the most insignificant sore throat to genuine diphtheria, have been treated with antitoxin in conjunction with the usual supporting remedies. All those who recovered were indiscriminately classed as antitoxin cures. The deaths were ascribed to the unavoidable fatality attending a grave disease. Where the cause of death points so plainly at antitoxin as not to be misread by anyone the death is explained away by argument, which forever condemns its use to an unprejudiced mind.

"Upon analysis of statistics, and comparison with previous death rates ruling at different periods, it is clearly shown that serum therapy has not lowered the death rate one particle. The much-quoted 10 per cent mortality has been the prevailing rate, except in isolated epidemics, for years. Flint, one of our best authorities in diseases of children, warns us that nothing is more misleading than statistical evidence as to the fatality of diphtheria, varying so widely at different times and in various epidemics. Also in this disease the diagnosis is very apt to be erroneous."

It is very well understood that these numerous serum remedies have been ineffectual. They have not been beneficial to the many, as statistics show. It is said by those who have investigated the question that the use of such remedies has not reduced the death rate in the least. I quote the following on the subject from the Pawtucket (R. I.) Chronicle:

NO DECREASE IN DISEASE.

Speaking of disease, here is another deplorable confession from no less an authority than the Medical Record. In spite of the army of physicians, their discoveries, and their hecatombs of vivisected guinea pigs, we may doubt, says the Medical Record, whether the sum total of diseases is any less than it was before the medical profession reached its present high standing. Preventive medicine has made "little headway," and "in the opinion of some medical men diseases are on the increase." In the deeper recesses of our consciousness we had suspected something of the kind ourselves, but such heterodoxy on the part of a layman would have exposed him to excommunication with bell, book, and candle, or at least with bacteria, serums, and antitoxins. But with the Medical Record behind us, we can afford to creep out into the open.

In Brain and Brawn, published in Los Angeles, this is said in its issue of October, 1913, on the subject of diphtheria antitoxin:

DIPHTHERIA ANTITOXIN.

Antitoxin does not cure diphtheria. Like the manufacture of other serums, it is a commercial enterprise that pours millions and millions into the coffers of the National Drug Co. Its use is encouraged by garbled statistics, every case of suspected diphtheria or of diphtheretic sore throat now being reported as diphtheria. With a few old horses the manufacturers of this stuff can get enough serums to infect all the boys and girls in the United States. It is more profitable than a gold mine.

Perhaps you doubt what I say, or may even disbelieve what I say, about diphtheria antitoxin. Well, then, let me refer you to the highest medical authority in the United States—to the Journal of the American Medical Association, the bible of the serum-injecting school. That publication recently said:

"Our present methods of prevention of diphtheria are admittedly far from satisfactory. * * * The use of diphtheria antitoxin for preventive purposes is not a practical success, because the antitoxin is eliminated too rapidly."

And this after we have been told for years that diphtheria has been entirely conquered by medical "science."

And the same publication has this to say on microbes and fear:

THE GERM SUPERSTITION.

Of all the negative conditions the race is subject to fear is the greatest. We are born cowards. Our mothers feared for us before we were born. We came into earth life with a wail of fear. All who had anything to do with us feared something evil would happen to us. They were afraid we would "catch" cold or the measles or whooping cough or diphtheria or die of "summer complaint." Somebody feared all the time that we would get scalded or frozen or fall out of bed or downstairs or into the well.

When we were old enough to be afraid we feared our parents, our teachers, the minister, the dark, the devil, and even feared God, whom St. John says is Love. Later we were afraid of failure in business, of fire; afraid the election would start some one to tinkering with the tariff or our blessed money system. We were afraid on land or sea, or of fire and water, cold and heat, wind and hail, lightning and cyclone, earthquake and tidal wave, and yet we wonder why there are so many sick people.

The silliest of all fears is the fear of microbes. We laugh at the elephant because it fears a mouse, but the ignorance of the elephant in that respect is pure wisdom when compared with man's fear of contagious diseases and his senseless efforts to "stamp them out" by quarantine, disinfectants, germicides, lymphs, and serums. We constantly hear parents commanding children to wrap up in warm clothing during cold or stormy weather in order that they may not "catch" grippe or diphtheria, as though a microbe cares a flip how you are clothed. Some noted person goes for a month with his colon clogged with half-digested food all around from the cæcum valve to the sigmoid flexure. The doctors dose him with 17 varieties of drugs and mixed drinks, any one of which would make a healthy person sick unto death, and the patient dies "in spite of the very best medical attendance." The relatives, the press, the people, demand a name for the disease. A name! A name! My kingdom for a name! So the doctors say grippe or influenza or typhoid or appendicitis, and everyone is satisfied that the patient died in a perfectly regular, orderly, and proper manner.

But the following publication in the New York Times of January 21, 1911, with quotations, is one of the most severe arraignments of the medical profession and practice that has come to my attention:

It is now some four or five years since physicians in the Eastern States, and more particularly in the city of New York, began to complain that it was becoming more difficult for them to make a living. These complaints at first were sporadic, and found voice at comparatively infrequent intervals in the medical publications, appearing in the form of letters to the editor, reprints of addresses delivered before medical societies, and editorial comments upon the views expressed therein.

Various reasons were assigned for this shrinkage of incomes. The consensus of opinion, however, attributed the trouble to a combination of circumstances, which included overcrowding of the profession, the abuse of medical charity, lodge and contract practice for ridiculously small fees, and the increase of specialization with its attendant ridiculously large fees.

The outlook for the general practitioner's pocketbook grew rapidly worse. The complaints—based on fact, it must be admitted—became more insistent and remedies were demanded. Conditions to-day are so intolerable that it is well-nigh impossible to find an issue of a publication devoted to general medical topics which does not contain a disquieting reference to them. One such journal contained the statement in one of its issues of last summer that the incomes of physicians in this city had been reduced one-half in the two preceding years.

It is a fact that the profession is overcrowded. France has a population of some 37,000,000, and yet there are nearly as many doctors in the State of New York as there are in that country. The United States and Canada, with fewer than 100,000,000 inhabitants, support 120,000 physicians; but Great Britain, with 40,000,000 inhabitants, has only 32,000.

Dr. Norman Barnesby, of this city, has recently written a book bearing the title "Medical Chaos and Crime," which one might quite properly expect to have either of these effects if it should be widely read. It may result in reducing the incomes of the majority of medical and surgical practitioners to the vanishing point, or it may create such an upheavel that the profession, stimulated thereto by an outraged and indignant public, will purify itself by eliminating the grafter, the incompetent, and the quack, and put medical education and hospital administration on a sounder basis.

This book of Dr. Barnesby's scatters tradition to the winds in that it is the most terrible arraignment of a profession by one of its members that could be conceived. It stands alone in the history of muckraking. Stockyard revelations and shameful civic exposures are tame and trivial incidents in comparison with the unspeakable horrors contained in its pages. Surgeons, both great and small, are charged with crimes ranging from minor mutilations to murders. The book reeks with stories of the coarsest brutality and the most refined cruelty, while the details of countless hideous blunders are of a character to make the honest and capable doctor blush with shame for the incompetence of certain of his fellows.

The author states that his book "is a criticism of the present standards and practices of the medical profession." In the prefatory chapter he states that the work "is mainly an exposure of the abuses that exist in the medical profession in this country—abuses that not only degrade the practice of medicine but contribute not a little to the physical and moral deterioration of the American people." Dr. Barnesby inveighs against what he declares to be the false standard of ethics which fetters the profession, and he has broken the shackles, so far as they may have bound him, in the publication of this work.

This is not the place to catalogue his monstrous disclosures. It is sufficient to explain that the reader does not have to take the author's word alone for them; he quotes liberally from the published adverse criticisms of scores of honest physicians.

Mr. President, the physicians need not look far to find reasons for the falling off of their practice and their fees. They have largely lost the confidence of the people. Their attacks upon their own profession, its practices, and its motives have done much to destroy public confidence in their work and their remedies. It is not to be wondered at that in their distress they are appealing to Congress and other legislative bodies for laws that will hold them up and destroy all other methods of healing. And Congress has responded to this appeal. The regular or allopathic school of medicine is in a very great degree living off the blind and unthinking support of the National Government. A large percentage of them are in the Government employ to the exclusion of everyone else. Other modes of healing have come into existence, because most people have come to know that the so-called regular doctor with his drug remedies is a failure. Whether they are better or worse than he they divide practice and fees with him, and do as much or more good than he and most of them much less harm. If they do not heal more people than the "regular" doctor, they take fewer lives, make fewer invalids, and burden less victims with deadly drug habits.

And this brings me to a brief consideration of this subject of habit-forming drugs administered by the regular doctors. I have said that I believed the doctors were responsible for more of the unfortunate drug fiends than any other cause. I am by no means alone in this opinion. I call attention to a few opinions by the doctors themselves bearing out this assertion.

I quote the following from the Milwaukee Free Press of October 18, 1912, quoting, in part, from Dr. A. H. Levings:

"I believe thoroughly with the convention of the National Druggists' Association that doctors are largely responsible for the drug habit, only I would put it more strongly and say that nine out of every ten cases are due to doctors," said Dr. A. H. Levings yesterday.

"The one class of patients to whom morphine should never be administered are those who get it most and where it does the most ultimate damage—nervous, hysterical, and, in some cases, undisciplined women. This kind of woman has a pain and the doctor gives her morphine, and the trouble is started.

"Of course it is an easy way for the doctor, and saves him a great deal of trouble to pull out his hypodermic syringe and quiet his patient, but it is this that makes morphine fiends.

"Doctors can avoid this and should avoid it by never using morphine except in most urgent cases, and in these cases not repeating the dose and never telling the patient what it is," said Dr. Levings.

"The exceptions to this general rule are found in those cases where the patient is afflicted with an incurable disease and tormented by terrific pain. Then it is the part of mercy to quiet the suffering, for the formation of the habit is not of great importance when a patient can live but a few weeks in any event.

"The great fault of doctors is that of giving morphine for inconsequential ailments."

Also, on the same subject, I take from the Chicago Post of its issue of December 11, 1912:

WASHINGTON, December 11.

The medical profession is doing more to spread the drug habit among the American people than all other agencies combined, was the indictment made by Dr. L. F. Kobler, Chief of the Drug Division of the Department of Agriculture, in an address before the forty-second annual meeting of the American Society for the Study of Alcohol and Other Narcotics.

Dr. Kobler declared that the hypodermic needle, which had been regarded as a great boon to mankind, has proved to be one of its greatest curses. He said the amount of opium used in the United States had increased about 100 per cent in the last 40 years, and charged that many physicians were drug users themselves.

And the Chicago Tribune of February 6, 1914, carries this dispatch from the city of New York:

NEW YORK, February 5.

Habit-forming drugs are sold here in "appalling quantities," Carl E. Whitney said to-day, speaking before the county medical society. Mr. Whitney, as assistant United States district attorney, had charge of enforcing the laws regulating the sale and use of these drugs. He asserted that upward of 100 doctors and druggists in New York are engaged in a drug traffic which threatens health and morals. One physician in a single month purchased on prescription $2,500 worth.

"The drug habit," he said, "can be cured by legislation. It does not need segregation and societies for social uplift."

He recommended that the manufacture and importation of "dope" drugs be limited and the traffic regulated by a system of registration, which would make it possible to trace a container from the manufacturer to the dispenser.

Mr. President, these are tragic stories for which the doctors are responsible. Why should they wonder that intelligent people are afraid of them and that their practice is falling off. I have shown that while they are making drunkards and drug fiends Christian Scientists are healing them. Why, then, should they wonder that thousands of their former patients have left them and now go to Christian Science practitioners for their healing. And why, in the name of common sense and justice, should Congress, or any other legislative body, enact laws making it a criminal offense for a Christian Scientist to save the unfortunates whom the "regular" doctors have started on the downward road to ruin. I submit the following statement of conditions by Dr. Charles V. Chapin, superintendent of health at Providence, R. I., as reported in the Boston Journal of March 24, 1914:

"There is no evidence that quinine cures malaria; that pollution of a water supply is a cause of typhoid; that the typhoid germ is the cause of typhoid; that vaccination prevents smallpox; that antitoxin has decreased diphtheria to a great extent." These were the assertions of Dr. Charles V. Chapin, superintendent of health at Providence, R. I., in a lecture on preventive hygiene and medicine at the Harvard Medical School yesterday.

"There is no real reason for saying that bad air is bad," he continued. "We have no reason to assert that district nursing causes the decrease of infant mortality. We have advocated the school inspection, though it proves to have no appreciable effect on the severity of infectious diseases in a community.

"Public health officers are likely to follow any plausible-sounding measure for sanitation like sheep. The way we have been removing adenoids and tonsils wherever we find them is an example of that. We need less faith and more careful, scientific study in our methods of municipal sanitation.

"All established forms of preventive medicine should be questioned. The more established and older they are the more they should be questioned. In fact, when consensus of public opinion is strong in support of any one method of treatment that method should be immediately investigated."

Dr. John B. Murphy, one of the leading physicians and surgeons of the country, has declared that vaccines are very "dangerous and wicked weapons to play with." He is quoted in the following forceful editorial in the Jersey Journal of September 5, 1911:

COMPULSORY VACCINATION.

"At the present time," said Dr. John B. Murphy, the retiring president of the American Medical Association, in an address at the recent medical convention at Atlantic City, "our knowledge of vaccines is extremely limited, and they are very dangerous and wicked weapons to play with."

Other scientists of the highest authority, among them Metchnikoff, have taken a similar position. Is it not extraordinary, then, that the Navy Department should adopt a policy of punishing seamen who refuse to be inoculated with the antityphoid vaccine? Recently a seaman named J. M. Holloman was ordered to the prison ship Manila for one year because he refused to be inoculated.

This was not only an instance of cruelty and oppression, but a demonstration of rank stupidity.

The New York Medical Journal takes the view that the claims put forth with so much confidence by the advocates of a compulsory use of the antityphoid vaccine in the Army and Navy may in reality rest upon improved conditions in sanitation. It says: "The exclusion of typhoid from the Texas maneuver camps last year may be credited to the same wonderful sanitation as in India and as in other camps freed from typhoid in seriously infected territory years before inoculations were tried."

Clearly there should be no compulsion about the adoption of alleged medical remedies which are only in an experimental state and in regard to whose virtue our best authorities differ.

And now the doctors are quarreling among themselves as to the virtue of quarantine in case of infectious diseases. Dr. L. M. Holn, State bacteriologist of Michigan, scouts all the old ideas, and declares quarantine causes more deaths than it prevents. On the other hand, Prof. Clyde Ross Newell, bacteriologist of the University of Illinois, takes just the opposite view. And a special committee of the Massachusetts Association of Boards of Health condemns the methods and extent of quarantines by the boards of health of the State and recommends radical changes in this respect.

So, Mr. President, wherever we look into the work of the medical practitioner we find incompetency, negligence, uncertainty, confusion, and differing views among themselves. Most of them are honest and sincere. Many of them are competent and skillful. Many of them are doing their best to elevate their profession and make it worthy and an instrument for good. But the great fundamental trouble is that their principle of healing is wrong. Their remedies are not only inadequate and ineffectual, they are dangerous to life and health. Doctors help by their presence and the confidence their patients have in them, but their drugs and the surgeon's knife kill and maim. There is a higher law of life and health than this, and they, in common with all mankind, must find it. There is a principle of health and harmony that they have not found, nor have their unfortunate patients, who suffer and sorrow and die under a system of healing that ignores this principle and leans on material means. It is a broken reed. It has cost many precious lives that might have been saved. It has brought into the world and perpetuated many sorrows and much suffering. And yet, strange as it may seem, in an enlightened and Christian country this material and deadly system is being blindly imposed upon a protesting and suffering people by harsh and unjust laws and by placing over them with autocratic powers the men who have mistakenly devised and are practicing this ineffectual and dangerous system. Thousands, yea, millions of people, are crying out against these unjust and coercive laws, but Congress heeds them not. The hands of their oppressors are being strengthened day after day by new laws. Their rules and regulations, by which men's lives are guided and forced into wrong and dangerous ways, grow more and more unreasonable and harsh. Men, women, and children are being sacrificed by a false system, that violates the divine laws of health and harmony.

Mr. President, this is a matter about which there should be no coercion. It is as sacred as religion. And any law or regulation that forces action contrary to the honest convictions of a citizen is a violation of his most sacred rights and of the Constitution of the United States. I protest earnestly against such laws. I appeal to Congress to awaken and inform itself on this great question affecting life, health, and liberty, and afford relief to the people who are suffering under these unjust and oppressive laws. I am not asking for laws in favor of any class or mode of healing. I am asking only for freedom to follow their convictions of what is best for them. There should be no class legislation on the subject. I am only asking that they shall not be deprived of their rights and their liberties by adverse and restrictive laws in favor of and at the dictation of some other class.

RADIUM.

Mr. President, I come now to consider, briefly, the question of radium as a cure for cancer. A few months ago it was heralded by some doctors as a sure remedy for that fearful disease. It was hailed with joy as the deliverer of those who suffer a thousand deaths from its dreadful ravages. A sympathizing world was ready to accept it. Congress was appealed to to enact such laws as would preserve the precious metal produced in this country in the Government, to be applied to healing purposes. If Congress could be assured that radium is indeed a cure for cancer, it could do no less than comply with this request and pass the bill for that purpose, now pending in the Senate. But the claim that radium is a cure for cancer has been effectually exploded by actual experience and declared by numerous competent authorities on the subject to be ineffectual for that purpose. I have already shown that there is a remedy for this disease that has healed many cases, but the doctors and the surgeons still maintain their position that there is no cure for cancer but the surgeon's knife, and when the knife can not be used the disease is incurable. If radium is not a specific for cancer, the passage of the radium bill would be an act of inhuman cruelty. It would be taken as an indorsement by the Government of that remedy and would bring additional suffering, disappointment, and sorrow to sufferers from the disease, their relatives and friends, and bring no compensating results.

Briefly, I want to call the attention of the Senate to some of the announced opinions of doctors and others to the effect that the belief that radium will cure cancer is a delusion and that the claim for it is being made for speculative and commercial purposes. The following from the Los Angeles Times of date April 12, 1914, contains, in a brief way, the opinions of some of the most eminent members of the medical profession on the subject:

NEW YORK, April 11.

All hope of curing cancer by radium has been abandoned by some of the foremost surgeons and research workers of the country, who declared at last night's meeting of the American Society for the Control of Cancer that the failures of radium outnumber cures 100 to 1.

That nothing is of avail against the most dreaded disease but use of the knife was the opinion advanced by Dr. William H. Mayo, of Rochester, Minn.

Operation is the only cure, but radium or ray treatment is in order as a temporary palliative, where operations are impossible, according to Dr. Francis G. Wood, director of cancer research at Columbia University. "Failures from radium outnumber the cures 100 to 1," he said. "Another generation will be required," he said, "to furnish knowledge on the real cause and actual nature of cancer. Experiments for 35 centuries show that heredity plays small part if any at all in its appearance."

That a change in the habits and customs may reduce the disease to some extent was a ray of hope held out by Dr. Mayo, who also said any cancer could be cured if operated upon in its early stages.

"If we could only tell how to avoid it I would be glad, because I am frank to admit that we do not know," he asserted. He said that the statement that the use of meat was one of the habits to be avoided in connection with cancer prevention had been wrongly attributed to him.

The only optimistic note at the meeting was struck by Dr. J. Collins Warren, chairman of the Harvard Cancer Commission, who, after reviewing its work, stated that the prospect for progress in combating cancer had never seemed so bright as now. "Immediate discovery of the causes of cancer could scarcely be expected, but the scientific commission in research work had entered upon a field where progress was sure though slow," he declared.

The same paper, of date January 18, 1914, carries the following dispatch from London, England:

LONDON, January 17.

Apropos of Dr. Lazarus Barlow's report on radium treatment for cancer at the Middlesex Hospital this week, the Lancet protests against the publication in the lay press of optimistic statements which are not only inaccurate but also raise false hopes among the sufferers from this disease, and expresses regret that medical men should encourage such publication.

"In many instances," says the Lancet, "grievous disappointment and serious financial embarrassment have been needlessly added to the sufferings of the victims of the malignant disease by the publication of ill-understood medical evidence.

"The critical question is, How many cases of undoubted and inoperable malignant diseases have been completely relieved by radium treatment and remained apparently cured sufficiently long to give reasonable hopes of permanent relief?

"The number must be small, we think, and permanent relief probably only occurs where circumstances are unusually favorable. Up to the present radium has brought us little, if any, nearer to the discovery of a definite cure for the malignant disease, and we feel that science is not benefited by allowing enthusiasm to outrun discretion."

The Lancet adds that no stress should be laid on Dr. Barlow's recent statement.

"It is of a pathologist having no responsibility for the treatment of any patients. The figures given are incorrect, and the statement has been repudiated by the surgical staff of Middlesex Hospital.

"The time has not come for any public announcement, however guarded, pointing to radium as a cure for cancer. Meanwhile any statement of the results obtained at the hospitals should clearly come from the medical staff who carry out the treatment and watch the results."

The following from the Journal of the American Medical Association, of date March 21, 1914, shows how the claim that radium carries remedial medicinal qualities is being commercialized as well as the unproved fact that it is effective as a cure for cancer:

STATUS OF RADIUM.

To the editor:

I have recently received several circulars from the Radium Chemical Co., Forbes and Meyran Avenues, Pittsburgh, Pa., which seems to be introducing radium drinking water, radium bath water, radioactive earth for external applications, radium compresses, and radium in ampules for intravenous injection.

The company and its methods are new to me, and I should be glad if you have any information on the subject to give to the profession, especially in regard to the efficacy of radioactive water and radium baths, of which the newspapers are saying so much of late and which I find are being adopted by some members of the profession.

WILLIAM H. VAN DER BURG, M. D.,
New York.

Answer. Radium is still on trial in all its forms. Water containing radium emanations is presumably radioactive and may produce the milder effects of radium on the animal organism, but it must still be held as undemonstrated that these effects are of value in the treatment of constitutional diseases. While some clinical evidence has been introduced to show a favorable effect from these preparations, the interpretation of such evidence is always beset with difficulties; it is hard to separate the improvement which arises from psychic influences from that which rests on an objective basis.

It is notable that the conditions in which radium emanations are used, such as rheumatism, are liable to psychic impressions and are readily influenced by new forms of treatment which later lose their beneficial influence.

Like many other applied remedies, or supposed remedies, the use of radium has been an experiment that has hastened the death of many patients thus experimented upon. It has not only hastened, it has caused such deaths, that, as I have shown, could have been prevented by other means. The following brief extract from the Chicago Record-Herald, in its issue January 27, 1914, tells how it works in actual practice:

WASHINGTON, January 26.

Radium as a cure for cancer is still in an experimental stage, and its use in the treatment of internal cancer results fatally in a large percentage of cases, according to testimony given before the House Mines Committee to-day by William H. Campbell, director of the radium clinic of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Campbell told the committee that, so far as the deeper cancers were concerned, "we can not tell to-day what the outcome of the radium treatment will be."

"We can tell," he said, "that there is a disappearance of the tumor; that the radium causes the disintegration of the tissue of the cancer; but something is created in that disappearance which is absorbed by the blood and which kills my patients. Nobody can tell for four or five years what the ultimate result will be."

"How many of your patients have died as a result of your treatment?" asked Representative BYRNES of South Carolina.

Dr. Campbell said that two out of five of the cases treated ended fatally. He added that all were cases which would have resulted in death in a few months without treatment.

"I simply feel," he said, "that I've shoved those patients over a little bit sooner."

Here also comes the voice of Germany, through one of its medical experts, as reported in the Chicago Tribune of date January 3, 1914:

BERLIN, January 2.

"A gigantic swindle" is the vigorous description applied by Prof. Ernst Schweninger, of Munich, to the theory, prevalent throughout the world, that radium and mesothorium are the long-sought cure for cancer.

Prof. Schweninger, who is famous as the private physician of Prince Bismarck, airs his views in the January number of the Neu Runschau. He says he can not and will not believe that the much-vaunted radioactive substances are the panacea medical men have been hunting for generations.

All the means hitherto used in treating cancer, he says, produce temporary amelioration but no cure.

"Radium and mesothorium," he says, "are simply new auxiliary means of treating cancer; they are certainly not a cure. In the last analysis they are no better than other inadequate means at our disposal."

Prof. Schweninger goes further and asserts that radium and mesothorium even have positively dangerous properties. They are often "too aggressive" and involve the risk of "entirely destroying adjacent tissues or neighboring organs."

Prof. Schweninger's article concludes:

"The whole business can only be described as madness."

Not only have the most capable experts declared that radium does not cure cancer, but at least one competent authority is reported to have declared that it actually causes cancer.

The following from the Denver Post of October 4, 1914, gives the views of Dr. Rovsing on the subject that should challenge attention:

RADIUM MAKES SOME CANCERS WORSE.

That radium may promote cancer, instead of checking it, is the conclusion forced on Dr. Rovsing, a well-known surgeon, by his tragic experiences in a number of cases. He found that exposure to radium apparently fanned into rapid malignant growth many small superficial growths which had hitherto been not at all serious.

Dr. Rovsing says he was unable to find any authentic case of an actual cure of a cancer under radium, but the chorus of encouraging reports overcame his first misgivings, and he began to apply radium himself in 1912. His extremely unfavorable experiences made him fear that his technic was at fault, so he took a trip to Heidelberg to study the technic in vogue there, and found that he had been applying it strictly according to rule in every respect.

Yet in many instances the exposure was followed by the transformation of an indolent growth into a rapidly gnawing cancer, becoming too serious for an operation in the course of a few days. He gives the details of 10 such cases. They were selected for radium treatment on account of the apparently peculiarly favorable conditions for this.

In one case a small tumor in the cheek, the recurrence of one which had been removed with the knife less than three months before, could easily have been removed, but as it seemed to invite radium treatment, this was applied for 20 hours. The tumor became in a few days much worse, and all who saw it were convinced that this was the direct result of the radium exposure, especially as case after case showed this same course.

The growth often became intensely painful shortly after the radium exposure. This was particularly evident in the case of a man of 29, who had been given the radium treatment at Omaha for a suspicious lump on his lower lip, which had been noticed for two years.

After the radium exposure the lump began to grow rapidly, and when cut out it quickly returned.

This occurred again after a second operation.

The small ulceration in the scar and two slightly enlarged glands under the jaw were then treated with radium. The glands had been thus enlarged for two years without change, but after the last radium exposure the whole region at once became a rapidly fatal cancer.

Mr. President, I could go on indefinitely quoting opinions from competent experts declaring against the efficacy of radium as a remedy for cancer. But I desist. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], when the radium bill was up for discussion at the last session, cited a number of these adverse opinions. I am not so much concerned about the restriction of the sale by the Government of radium-bearing lands. But I am greatly concerned about the avowed purpose for which such lands are to be reserved, for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. President, I have done. My appeal has been made to the sense of justice of the Senate and the American people. I would not abolish or overthrow the Public Health Service if I could. I would make it broader, more tolerant, more humane. I would have it presided over by a man of broad, tolerant, and humanitarian views, who could look beyond the dead line of the so-called regular school of medicine and seek for, find, and apply for the common welfare all that is good in every school of medicine, old and new, and all other methods of healing, saving none, favoring none. I would not allow any medical or any other professional practitioner of any other school of medicine or other mode of healing to preside over the Public Health Service. I would allow no preference to rule or control the service. As it is now governed, it is an auxiliary of the American Medical Association, and of course is biased, narrow, and unjust. The by-laws of the American Medical Association provide:

* * * Commissioned medical officers of the United States Army, United States Navy, and the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service shall be members of this association so long as they are engaged actively in their respective service and thereafter, if they have been retired on account of age or physical disability. These members shall not be required to pay dues, and shall not receive the Journal of the American Medical Association, except by personal subscription.

Thus are all of the medical officers of the Government made members of the association, and I am informed that none of them have declined to accept such membership. I do not question their motives or their good faith, but I do seriously question their judgment and the propriety of the health officers of the Government belonging to an association operated for the benefit of its own members. For every annual meeting of the association the following certificate is sent to such medical officers:

This is to certify that Dr. ——— ——— is a fellow in good standing of the American Medical Association for 1914, and he is entitled to register at the Atlantic City session on presentation of this card. (United States Health Service.)

———— ———, Secretary.

The Government should see to it that the service is removed from any such influence and made the unbiased and honest searcher for the best that can be found as a means of preventing disease and preserving the public health. I ask no more than this, and I ask it for and in the name of the American people. The Government should grant them no less. I appeal to Congress for a fair, unbiased, and patriotic consideration of this great question that involves the health and happiness, the lives of our people.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20241) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and prior years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to strike out the language which appears in the bill on page 3, beginning with line 22, and going down to and including line 26.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state that I gave notice yesterday that I intended to withdraw the amendment rather than have it voted upon. I offered it only for the purpose of having something before the Senate to speak to. If there is no one else to speak upon the question, I will gladly withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah withdraws the amendment heretofore offered by him. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Raleigh, N. C. Rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer another committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina offers a further amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

Panama Canal: The balances of the appropriations heretofore made under the headings "Fortifications, Panama Canal," are hereby consolidated so as to constitute one fund in the Treasury, to be disbursed and accounted for under the appropriation title of "Panama fortifications," for the objects specified in the several appropriation acts and in accordance with such allotments as may be authorized by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, at the close of the remarkable address of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] I felt in humor to make some observations, somewhat extended, by way of response, but on reflection I think I will take but a few minutes of the Senate's time to-day.

There are one or two things discussed by the Senator that I shall desire later on to have something to say about, but not now. I refer first to his broad assertion that it is impossible to expect the organization of an orderly government on popular lines in Mexico, and that anything looking to that end is but a dream impossible of realization. Mr. President, that is an old, old story that has been told by many men in different ages of the world. The pages of the world's history are replete with efforts made by different peoples to throw off the chains of oppression, to strike for greater liberty, to struggle out of the darkness into the light of better things, and to form a government in which the individual man would have a more potent and effective voice. Never has a struggle of that kind been undertaken that other men, inspired with a different spirit, have not arisen to speak in denunciatory terms against the effort of the great masses to progress upward. All such struggles have been denounced as absurd and impossible of success by men actuated by the spirit which seems to control the Senator from Massachusetts. But despite all such disparagement, whether originating at home or abroad, men have continued to fight their way through hardships, suffering, and bloodshed to the point where success was not only possible but certain, and the things they risked their lives for were established. No free government has ever been organized and maintained where the men who took the hazard, as well as the cause they struggled for, were not denounced very much in the same way in which the Senator from Massachusetts has to-day spoken of the people of Mexico. The world is too full of those who in their hearts are out of sympathy with efforts made by men who are oppressed for a larger measure of individual liberty and opportunity.

I intend, Mr. President, at another time in the near future, to take up this subject and go into it more at length and to discuss it not only with reference to its general application to the mighty struggles that have been waged at different periods throughout the world, but with special reference to the Republic and people of Mexico. But to undertake that task at this moment and perform it intelligently would, I feel, take more time than I would be authorized to devote to it in view of the immediate pressure of other important measures upon the attention of the Senate.

One other thing about which I shall take occasion to express myself later on has reference to what the Senator from Massachusetts had to say about the religious aspects of the conflict so long raging in Mexico. The remarks of the Senator in this behalf may be regarded and treated as a supplement to the remarkable, and I think most execrable, screed recently promulgated by ex-President Roosevelt, in which he sought, almost without attempting to disguise his purpose, to inject the passion and prejudice of religious partisanship into our international affairs. The Senator has not only indorsed the utterances of the former President and made himself a party to them, but he has had this entire Rooseveltian fulmination inserted in the RECORD so that it may be scattered broadcast under the franking privilege. I can not characterize such action as it deserves without violating the proprieties of this forum. It is detestable and unpardonable that any man, in or out of the Senate, and especially that any Senator or ex-President of the United States, should use his commanding influence to arouse religious passions and to excite men who may be swayed by intolerant influences to make of themselves an organized force to be exerted in the conduct of grave and delicate international relations. Mr. President, I intend in a short while, when I take up this subject again, to express without fear or favor my opinion of and to enter my protest against the introduction of religious questions, opinions, or influences as a factor in the political and civil affairs of the American people. I regret to say that too much of that kind of thing is being done at this time, alike by Catholics and Protestants. In my view everything of this kind merits the condemnation of thoughtful and patriotic men of all parties and of all religious sects. I can not think of anything more dangerous to our peace and progress, or more hurtful to our public and civic life, or more to be regretted and condemned than this; and it amazes me that gentlemen of the high standing, importance, and influence of Col. Roosevelt and his coadjutor, the senior Senator from Massachusetts, should become the voluntary instrumentalities through whom a propaganda of this nature is to be given impetus in this country. I think the time has come when right-thinking, liberal-minded, patriotic American Senators should begin to express themselves with great deliberation and with the utmost freedom upon this subject and to do whatever they can to arouse a just public opinion throughout the country that will check the onward movement toward a political-religious conflict in this land of ours. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] says, sotto voce, that anything like that tends to revive the conditions which prevailed in the Dark Ages, upon which we have hitherto looked with horror. This is not the age nor this the country where a propaganda of that kind should be permitted to go unscathed, much less to be encouraged.

I shall say nothing more on that subject at this time, but will deal with it extensively at a later date. But aside from the two matters to which I have adverted, I would have been astonished anyhow that a Senator of the distinction and influence of the Senator from Massachusetts should have made on this floor such a deliverance as fell from his lips this morning. I think that most all who heard him were astonished that this Senator, especially, should have done that thing; and yet there were Senators on the Republican side who seemed to be in sympathy with his performance, if we are to judge by the haste with which they clustered around him with handclasps and congratulations upon what he had done, foremost among them being the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. That was, indeed, a most amazing spectacle. This is the first time in my experience as a Senator that I have known of any Senator making a partisan speech on international questions, and especially at a time when the relations between Governments and peoples are acute and when the administration in charge of our diplomatic and executive affairs is making every effort to bring about more peaceable and better conditions.

The Senator says the President was animated by animosity in his opposition to the Huerta régime; that animosity was the underlying basis of his policy. Why should the President have entertained a feeling of personal animosity or hatred or hostility against Victoriano Huerta? The question answers itself far enough to say that the assumption of the Senator is a bald absurdity.

The Senator complains that the President did not refer to Mexican conditions in his last annual message, and from that he draws some sinister conclusion. It was only a short time before that the President had delivered a special communication of considerable length before the two Houses of Congress assembled, in which he reviewed the whole situation as to our relations with Mexico and as to his ideas with respect to them. It is to be presumed that every Member of Congress has kept himself reasonably familiar with the events occurring in Mexico during the last few weeks, and therefore the President very properly concluded that as he could not discuss every question of public moment in a single message he might for the time being pass by the one which he had so exhaustedly discussed so short a time before. Still, if the Senator felt aggrieved by this course of the President and felt called upon to supplement the message by a discussion of his own, no doubt he is within his right. I shall not complain of that; but it is the character of the discussion indulged in by the Senator that amazes me, and it is of that that I make complaint. Evidently the Senator from Massachusetts has had an overdose of partisan animosity toward this administration, long stored away and pent up in the bowels of his wrath, and it may be that he felt obliged to do something with it; and now that he has relieved himself of the overcharge, I hope he will be able to sleep more soundly and to enjoy more refreshing dreams hereafter than I imagine have visited him as he tossed upon his downy pillow last night and for many nights before.

The Senator says that he would, if necessary, take armed forces into Mexico, compel peace and restore order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the Senator saying anything about me he likes, but he must not misquote me. I stated explicitly that I was against putting armed forces into Mexico.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, of course I have no wish to misquote the Senator, but I was listening with wide open and astonished ears to what he was saying, and I understood him to say that it was better at least to resort to armed intervention——

Mr. LODGE. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. STONE. Or words to that effect.

Mr. LODGE. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. STONE. Then I now understand the Senator to be opposed to the use of force.

Mr. LODGE. So I stated in my speech. I said there were only two policies; that one was to refrain absolutely from intervening and that the other was to intervene effectively—which the United States had no desire to do and I did not desire to do—and that neither course was followed by this administration.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I know the Senator said that neither course had been followed by this administration; but I understood the Senator also to insist—it may be I am wrong about that—that it was the duty of this Government to protect the life, liberty, and property of American citizens in Mexico, and——

Mr. LODGE. I certainly said I thought that was its duty, and I thought that we ought to have exhausted every resource of international law, every resource given us by our treaties, to bring about that protection.

Mr. STONE. And if it failed to bring about the desired protection, what then?

Mr. LODGE. I said unfortunately there was nothing to do then but to avoid as far as possible going into war.

Mr. STONE. But following what the Senator advises would lead us inevitably to the employment of armed forces. He says that there are but two policies that can be followed—one to keep your hands off and do nothing and the other to take your Army across the border. For the last four or five years, under both President Taft and President Wilson, we have been following the policy of keeping our hands off, but it has not resulted in the saving of American lives or the protection of American citizens from imprisonment or the despoilation of their property. Therefore, according to the logic of the Senator, that policy has proved to be a failure. If that be true, then the Senator has led us up to stand before a wall blindly. Would the Senator have us, and did he to-day advise us, that we continue to stand against that wall, impotent and helpless, or did he mean to say that we should go over the wall? We can not scale the wall without carrying men with guns in their hands. If the Senator did not mean that, then his speech is without meaning and must be treated merely as a partisan outburst of idle criticism and denunciation.

Mr. President, I recall another occasion not wholly dissimilar to the one presented here to-day. During the Sixty-second Congress, while the Republicans were in control of the Presidency and the Senate, the same turbulent unrest, disorder, crime, and anarchy prevailed in Mexico as prevails to-day and has prevailed since Mr. Wilson became President. The Mexican situation came down as an inheritance from President Taft to President Wilson. At that time there was shooting across the border by Mexicans into Douglas, Ariz.; El Paso, Tex., and other points. American men, women, and children were killed or seriously injured by Mexican bullets. I then thought it was bad that such a condition should be permitted without any action upon our part to prevent it. I introduced a resolution in the Senate relating to the subject which I desire to repeat, as follows:

Whereas in conflicts between the military forces of the Mexican Government and revolutionists near the border line between the United States and Mexico several American citizens on the American side of the boundary line have been slain as the result of Mexicans firing across the line and other American citizens while peaceably pursuing their avocations or while in their homes have been wounded; and

Whereas a great and important public work on the Colorado River in Lower California is being constructed by Americans, for which work Congress has made a large appropriation, and which work is being constructed on the Mexican side by American engineers and contractors under an agreement made with the Mexican Government, and is being obstructed and endangered by repeated interferences of lawless bands of Mexican revolutionists who have at different times appropriated property of the contractors engaged in the work, and have so seriously delayed the work as to greatly endanger it by threatening the lives of workmen and thus disorganizing the working force: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, directed to make speedy inquiry into the facts recited in the preamble hereto and into such other facts as said committee may deem necessary to a complete explanation and exposition of the actual conditions prevailing in Mexico; and said committee is directed to make report of its findings, with such recommendations as the committee may deem advisable respecting the duty of the United States in the premises, and which report may be made to the Senate in open or executive session as the said committee may deem most expedient in the public interests.

That resolution was intended to have the Committee on Foreign Relations, through its own processes, ascertain the facts and bring them before the Senate for such consideration as this body might see proper to give them. The resolution was mild in terms and conservative in its requirements, but it was strongly opposed on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Missouri state on what date the resolution was introduced?

Mr. STONE. It was introduced on April 17, 1911. In the course of the debate on the resolution the Senator from Massachusetts delivered a highly conservative and patriotic address, as did the distinguished senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who was the first this morning to congratulate the Senator from Massachusetts on his volcanic, if not magnificent, outburst. I will read those speeches in the order in which they were delivered. I shall read from page 442, volume 47, part 1, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sixty-second Congress, first session:

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, before the subject is passed over and the resolution laid upon the table, I wish to express my entire dissent from the assumption which seemed to me to be carried by the expression of opinion on the part of the Senator from Missouri. Granting that injuries have been done to American citizens which ought to be redressed, that wounds have been inflicted, that lives have been taken, that property has been destroyed, it does not follow, sir, that we should begin the process of securing redress for those injuries by a threat of force on the part of a great and powerful nation against a smaller and weaker nation. That, sir, is to reverse the policy of the United States and to take a step backward in the pathway of civilization.

There is no reason whatever, sir, to assume, if injuries have been done of the kind described, that the Government of Mexico is unwilling to make due redress upon having those injuries and claims for redress presented to her in the ordinary course of peaceful negotiation; and the passage of such a resolution as has been described, equivalent to a declaration of war, would be to preface the ordinary demand—the demand which it is the duty of every civilized power to make upon a friendly nation—with a threat that if the demand is not complied with force will be used.

Sympathy with the people of Mexico in their distress, a just sense of the duties that we owe to that friendly people, and the duties that we owe to the peace of the world must forbid our assenting to or yielding to any such course.

Then came the Senator from Massachusetts, supporting the Senator from New York as usual. I say "as usual," for it generally happens that these two able and distinguished Senators play as Jonathan and David in every political game.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not rise with any purpose of discussing the question which has been before the Senate, for I deprecate all such discussion, and I regret that there should have been any discussion about it. I think it most desirable that the condition of affairs in Mexico and our relations with those affairs should not be discussed in Congress at present. It seems to me to be in the interest of peace and of harmonizing the difficulties that now exist in Mexico that there should not be discussion in either branch of Congress about it.

What a wonderful change has come over the spirit of the dream of the Senator from Massachusetts. He not only now discusses Mexican affairs, but he does it in an extremely violent partisan spirit and manner. He continued:

I desire to call attention to one important point that has been somewhat overlooked. When the President remits to Congress a question of difference with another country, the last step but one has been taken before a declaration of war. The Congress can carry on no negotiations; it can do nothing of a diplomatic character. Congress has but one power in dealing with another nation, and that is the war power. And when a President remits to Congress a question of that character and Congress gives him the power to intervene, it is a practical assertion of the war power.

That is the exact course which was pursued in relation to Cuba when the war with Spain began. President McKinley remitted the question to Congress, saying substantially that diplomatic methods had failed, and we conferred upon him the right to intervene, and that amounted to war.

Mr. President, we have nothing but the kindest of feelings toward the Republic of Mexico. We all, I think, universally regret the disturbances that now exist there. We have no outstanding grievances against Mexico. We have no questions between the two countries. The unfortunate incidents at Douglas and on the border are the results of the disturbed conditions in our neighbor to the south, and it seems to me that in every possible way we should use our best efforts to help Mexico to settle those differences; that we should show the greatest consideration, and that we should avoid in every possible way anything that looks like a threat or a resort to force.

I sincerely hope that the question will not be discussed in Congress, because when the time comes that it must be discussed in Congress we shall have reached a very serious point, indeed, and therefore I trust that the matter may end here, for the present, at least.

What has so changed the attitude of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. Perhaps the same events that have changed the attitude of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have not changed my attitude. I thought at that time, as I do now, that if I controlled the situation I would employ the forces of the United States to whatever extent might be necessary to prevent firing across the international boundary to the great danger of our people; that I would not permit our people to be slaughtered in that way in their own homes in their own country. I have not changed my position as to that, but I wish to say that some time after the resolution I have read had been debated and laid on the table I went at his request to see the President, Mr. Taft, for whom I have always entertained and now entertain not only a great respect but a genuine affection. The whole subject was discussed between us with the utmost freedom on his part as well as on mine. Mr. President, when I learned that utterances unfavorable to the course of the administration made in Congress were telegraphed to the City of Mexico or to the leaders of revolutionary forces and that they tended to embarrass the administration in the effort it was making to bring about better and more peaceable conditions, not only along the border but throughout Mexico, I determined then to refrain, as far as possible, from saying anything or doing anything that could be construed as being antagonistic to the policy of the President. I believed in his sincerity and patriotism, and I had no doubt as to his earnest desire to promote international peace, which every right-thinking man desires, and hence thereafter I uttered no word nor took any step that was not designed to support the laudable desire and purpose of the Chief Executive. I felt that I ought to take that course as one upon whose shoulders rested in some part the great responsibility cast upon the membership of this body. But now the administratiion has changed, and I am sorry to see that the Senator from Massachusetts, with the apparent hope of securing some partisan advantage, would stir up bad blood among our people; aye, that he would even arouse religious as well as political hostility toward the President and his policies with respect to this international situation, apparently forgetting that they are the same policies followed by President Taft and then so earnestly supported by the Senator from Massachusetts. There can be but one purpose in all this, and that purpose is far from commendable. I hope now that the Senator has relieved himself from his surcharge of partisan bile, and after he has had time to reflect he will regret his utterances of to-day. I can not expect him to come here before us in sackcloth and ashes and make public profession of his repentance, but I have such a good opinion of the Senator's intelligence and of his regard for the proprieties that I feel confident he will not very long be proud of his performance, although he may be a little elated for the time being by the warm congratulations he received at the hands of his fellow partisans. Mr. President, for the present that is all I care to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has informed us that it was not his purpose to discuss the Mexican question at length to-day, but that he would do so in a few days and present the matter fully to the Senate and to the country from his viewpoint. I had expected to discuss the matter this afternoon, but I think I shall follow the course outlined by the Senator from Missouri and defer my remarks until I shall have before me all the facts, and especially the views of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I shall not, therefore, at this time discuss the subject as I had intended to do, although I am very much of the opinion that the time has come when it is not only proper but a duty upon our part to discuss it.

Before dismissing the subject to another day, however, I desire to call attention to an error into which the Senator from Missouri has, in my judgment, fallen in regard to the views entertained by the Senator from Massachusetts on one particular subject, namely, intervention, and the views which the Senator from Missouri entertains, for, as I understand, he has not changed his opinion upon that same subject. It seems to me that the Senator from Missouri in discussing the question mistook his views for the views of the Senator from Massachusetts upon that subject. I find that in discussing the resolution which he introduced in the Senate on April 17, 1911, he gave expression to this view:

Nevertheless, we can not close our eyes to the unfortunate conditions now existing in Mexico; and, moreover, we not only can not close our eyes, but we can not remain passive and inactive and permit disorder to run riot to the peril of the lives, liberty, and property of American citizens lawfully resident in that Republic. There is unquestionably a solemn duty resting upon us in this regard which we can not ignore, however delicate it may be or however great the responsibility it may impose.

Further on, on the same occasion, he said:

A few weeks ago the governor of the State of Jalisco made a most inflammatory public speech at Guadalajara, accusing Americans of inciting and participating in the revolution, thus accentuating the strong anti-American feeling already existing there, and tending to foment riotous outbreaks. As a consequence, Americans in Guadalajara were in a state of fear amounting almost to panic, and naturally they sought the protection of their own Government. There are thousands of Americans scattered over the Mexican Republic, engaged in numerous employments and without means of self-defense. Numerous instances have been reported of the forcible confiscation and appropriation of the property of Americans by revolutionists or by bands of men supposed to be of the revolutionary party—

And so forth.

Having stated the facts upon which he had formed his conclusion, he proceeded to advise the Senate as to what, in his opinion, should be the course of action upon the part of the Government, not only with reference to and because of the unfortunate disturbance at Douglas and at other points along the border, but by reason of the treatment which had been received at the hands of the Mexicans upon the part of our people residing in Mexico, and he said:

Nevertheless, I am going to say, whether I do right or wrong in saying it, that the Congress should at once and without delay authorize the President to employ whatever force may be necessary to prevent a repetition of the bloody outrage committed at Douglas, Ariz., and a repetition of which is threatened at El Paso, Tex. The President should be authorized by formal action, and the Congress should express its opinion in positive terms that it is his duty to use whatever force the circumstances may require to protect our people on their own territory and in their own homes from danger. His authority in this behalf should be extended far enough and have sufficient latitude to fully warrant him in using our military forces in whatever way he may deem expedient and necessary to accomplish the desired end, even though it should lead to an intrusion upon Mexican territory. Moreover, if any act done under this authority by the President for the proper protection of our own people on our own soil should lead to hostile demonstrations against American citizens resident in the interior of Mexico, the President should be authorized, not now perhaps, but later on, to use the military forces of the United States, if that is found to be necessary, to protect the lives and liberty of peaceable American citizens, wherever domiciled in any quarter of Mexico.

Mr. President, I have no doubt, just as the Senator from Missouri now states, that he uttered at that time his views as a citizen and gave voice to his patriotism; that in all probability he yet entertains that view as a citizen.

I desire, next, to call attention to the views of the Senator expressed after, I assume, he had the interview with President Taft to which he has referred. This is on May 9, 1911. The speech from which I have quoted was delivered by him on April 20, 1911. In discussing affairs in Mexico he said, on May 9, 1911:

I say all we can do is to wait for news, for, judging to-day by yesterday and the future by the past, our Government does not intend to lift a hand for the protection of its own people in their own homes. It is the misfortune of these good people that they live in Texas on the American shore of the Rio Grande. It may be that, in addition to Mauser bullets, this fair city of the Lone Star State may be swept by shrapnel and canister, by Gatling guns, and cannon balls. For mercy's sake, I hope not, but as our Government does not intend to lift a hand for the protection of our people, the Mexican soldiery can work their bloody havoc apparently without fear of responsibility to us.

Mr. President, this is a repetition of the frightful tragedy enacted at Douglas, Ariz., a few weeks ago. At that time I raised my voice in denunciation of that crime and in vehement protest against permitting its repetition. I was surprised and mortified that in that denunciation and protest I not only stood alone, but I brought down upon my head a shower of criticism and reproach from distinguished Senators on this floor. I proposed a resolution at that time authorizing the President to use force, if necessary, to prevent injury to our people as the result of battles on the border. My proposition was that the President should notify the responsible authorities of both the federal and insurrectionary forces that outrages like that at Douglas would not be permitted, and that if the same thing should be again attempted and persisted in, the President should instantly employ such military force as might be necessary to stop it. I did not propose to invade Mexico with the object of remaining and occupying the territory of that country, but to carry across the line only so much of our Army as might be required to accomplish the immediate end in view, and after it had been accomplished to withdraw our forces from the Mexican side. I insisted then, as I insist now, that we have the right to do that much in the interest of humanity, for our own protection, and for the preservation of public order on the border line, where disorder concerns the lives and property of our people, as well as the lives and property of Mexicans.

We were told that to send a military force across the border for any purpose or on any provocation is war, and that a step of that kind would precipitate a conflict between the two countries. I was called to sharp account for what I said and for the resolution I offered, and I was gravely advised by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] that any such act on our part as that I suggested would be a step backward in the march of civilization. Other Senators indulged in observations of the same general nature. I asked what should be done and what we could do for the safety of our own people, and was told there was nothing we could do. In other words, it seemed that these distinguished Senators looked upon the United States as helpless, bound hand and foot by some refined and altruistic considerations that are beyond the comprehension of ordinary men.

My speech of protest and appeal is buried in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and my resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate the facts and report what action should be taken by Congress is buried in the archives of the committee room. The newspapers report the President as saying that he will take no affirmative action until he is authorized to do so by the Congress, and Senators say that Congress can not, without violating some red-tape precedent, take any action until the President first calls upon the Congress for its advice and direction. And so, between the upper and nether millstones of this disgraceful governmental inaction, peaceable American citizens residing on the border are being ground to ashes.

Mr. President, in the address I made to the Senate some weeks ago I took occasion most heartily to approve the action of the President in mobilizing a military force along the Mexican border. I then gave what I considered, and still consider, ample and sufficient reasons to justify what the President did. But I supposed, when the President went to the trouble and expense of calling these troops from their barracks throughout the country and hurriedly transported them to the border, that he meant to make that force effective for the protection of American citizens, if unhappily an occasion arose for using them in that behalf. I did not dream that the Government of the United States was merely engaged upon a game of bluff.

* * * * * * *

I wish again, although I may still stand alone, to record my earnest and solemn protest against this inaction of our Government—a degree of inaction so pronounced that it smacks too much of something I do not like to name. Speaking for myself, I am more sensitive about the lives of American men, women, and children, peaceably pursuing the even tenor of their way on their own soil and about their own homes, than I am about the pride and sensibilities of other men who have on their hands the innocent blood of our people. I am more concerned about the American flag being in fact an emblem of protection to American citizens than I am about offending those who themselves display but little respect for our rights and our sovereignty. I would at all hazards defend and protect our people against such monstrous outrages as those at Douglas and El Paso, let the consequences be what they might, and hence I appeal to the Committee on Foreign Relations to at once consider the resolution I offered and make some recommendation as to the duty of this Government.

On the 2d of August, 1912, nearly a year afterwards, the Senator from Missouri said:

We seem to be very much concerned all of a sudden about a danger that is not, in fact, a danger; something up in the air; some remote possibility. At the same time Senators have not been so careful of the rights of American citizens themselves in South America or in Mexico. Here we have before us an example. I have to-day received a telegraphic request or invitation, as other Senators have, to visit the city of El Paso to see and interview 2,500 or 3,000 American citizens who have been driven from Mexico in destitution. They have been compelled to abandon their homes and possessions, and we are now about to pass a joint resolution to take money out of the Public Treasury—and that joint resolution I shall vote for—to send these wretched people to some place. I do not know whether they have homes to go to, but to send them to some place of refuge at the public expense.

I can not forbear at this juncture from drawing a contrast between that anxiety in a particular case upon the part of Senators to protect American people against a danger that is at least exceedingly remote in its possibilities while we remain silent when our own people, under our treaties domiciled in Mexico, are being ruthlessly mistreated, in many instances losing their lives, and are being driven from their homes in that country. We remain silent, except to authorize the use of the public money to transport them to the interior of the country.

Mr. President, I read this, not for the purpose of seeking to involve the Senator from Missouri in a contradiction; that is the least of my concern. As I said before, I have no doubt that he was expressing then the views of a citizen. It may be he is now in a large measure expressing the views of a partisan. But my principal object in reading these paragraphs is that the Senator from Missouri may not with consistency, when we come in a few days to the discussion of this matter in all its fullness, seek to charge the Senator from Massachusetts or other Senators who desire to speak upon this question with simply desiring to raise a partisan question. It has passed beyond that. It can not be said to be a partisan question, and a fair discussion ought not to be charged to partisanship. It has reached the time when it involves the protection to the lives of hundreds of our people. It involves the question whether we shall remain inactive while these conditions which the Senator from Missouri has heretofore portrayed are continued, not merely from month to month but from year to year.

To show that the precise conditions which the Senator described three years ago continue, I call his attention to a statement made only a few days ago by one who will not be charged at least with partisanship, although no doubt he will be charged with having some radical views. This is a statement from Gov. Colquitt. Speaking about the entrance to Vera Cruz, it says:

It set all Mexico aflame against the Americans, not only in Mexico but in Texas, where along the north bank of the Rio Grande there are 10 Mexicans for 1 American. It brought on a reign of terror all along the Texas border, so that when the Federal Government refused to afford protection for our people in their own State I was forced to send 1,200 Texas troops down there to give it.

Mexican bandit gangs were crossing the border into Texas, raiding and terrorizing our scattered people. Women and children were huddled together in brick houses, menaced with murder and worse. My desk was flooded with telegrams from chambers of commerce, bankers, stock men, and other responsible citizens praying for protection all along our 1,200-mile frontier.

STATE TROOPS TO BORDER.

The Federal Government had only 60 troopers at Brownsville to cover more than two-thirds of that long border. When I rushed the Texas State troops down there, stationing a company at each of the principal border towns, I instructed them not to cross the river nor in any way to violate the neutrality law, but at all costs to protect the lives and property of Texas people.

Mr. President, with inserting that in the RECORD, I shall not go further with the discussion. I insert all these quotations to silence the charge made by the Senator that it is appealing to partisan prejudice in the discussion of a matter of this kind, for I shall not discuss it in that light. I shall discuss it in the light of the obligation of this Government to protect American citizenship wherever that citizenship is found, whether in Mexico or in any other foreign country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, any question of personal inconsistency or consistency of the Senator from Missouri or of myself is not of any great consequence so far as the merits of the question are concerned. The Senator has read what I said and what he said. The Senator from Idaho has added to the reading what the Senator from Missouri said four years ago. Many things have happened in four years, and the situation in Mexico is very much altered. At that time, just at the opening of hostilities, I thought it unwise to do anything which would inflame feeling down there and in any way impair our influence in bringing about a conclusion of hostilities. I think I was right in taking that view at the time, and I have not changed my view. I am still anxious to avoid armed intervention in Mexico. The Senator has not changed his view.

Mr. President, as to not wishing the matter debated at that time, as I say, that was four years ago. For two years, since this administration has been in power, I have refrained from discussing it. This side has refrained, with the single exception of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who, owing to the position of his State, had the question very sharply brought home to him. Nothing was done here to thwart or to hamper the President. The President's policy, which consisted in the removal of Gen. Huerta, so far as it is possible to learn, has come to an end. If he has any further policy, he did not take us into his confidence in his annual message. As he is silent I think a subject of that sort may be properly discussed, not for the sake of partisan advantage or disadvantage, but because it is a subject of great moment to the United States; and if anything can be done it ought to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri gave notice on yesterday that he intended to ask the Senate to-day to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the unfinished business, Senate bill 6856, may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the Senator to ask the Senate to proceed to the further consideration of that bill to-day?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to proceed with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, Mr. President, there are absent Senators who have requested me to make the point of no quorum, so that they may be present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. Let the Secretary call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Gronna	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Stephenson
Brandegee	Hollis	Overman	Sterling
Bristow	Hughes	Page	Stone
Burton	James	Perkins	Sutherland
Camden	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thomas
Clapp	Kern	Reed	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Robinson	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Tillman
Culberson	Lodge	Shafroth	Vardaman
Cummins	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.	White
Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Md.	Williams

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH], and further to announce that he is paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. JONES. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of indisposition.

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness in his family. He has a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to state that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that Senate bill 6856 may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 6856, the so-called shipping bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States, or of a State thereof, or of the District of Columbia, to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order heretofore taken the committee amendments will be first considered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the report may be read. I do not know whether the bill has been read or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read.

Mr. LODGE. Then I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say to the Senator, however, that it was not read to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it that that is immaterial, Mr. President. Perhaps it would be better at this point to suggest that the committee has agreed upon certain amendments to the bill, not changing it in any vital respect but making plainer and more clear certain of its provisions.

I move, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, as a substitute for the bill, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert what I send to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. I asked for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report. It is in order and is a proper request.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a rule that when the reading of a paper is called for and objection is made, the matter is submitted to the Senate. If the Senator from Florida does not desire to have the report read at this time, an objection will necessitate submitting the matter to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Does that apply to reading a committee report accompanying a bill under consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is a doubtful matter.

Mr. SMOOT. That applies only to a request——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not been able to find an instance where objection was made when a Senator asked for the reading of a report.

Mr. LODGE. It has been our practice, I think, to read, when called for, reports accompanying bills.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Chair will permit me to be heard for one minute——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to hear the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will save all this trouble and all this confusion. I am not attempting to discuss the bill. What I rose to say was that the Senate Committee on Commerce have agreed upon a number of rather small amendments to the bill, as far as their vital effects are concerned, but which tend to clarify the bill, and they have added one or two items which are of consequence. Those amendments are so numerous that it would be confusing to offer them, perhaps, as we went on in the discussion of the bill; and I now offer all those amendments in the form of a substitute for the bill, and have the substitute printed. I offer it now, from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That may be done by unanimous consent. The regular order, however, is the reading of the report. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent to take that action?

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to take that action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator asks to have the amendments printed?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Why, certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. The request is to offer now an amendment to the bill from the committee, in the form of a substitute, which will have the effect of striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what can be read now and printed. If that is done I shall not insist upon proceeding further with the bill to-night, if that is agreeable to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the request of the Senator will be granted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair called for objections, and did not hear any objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah objects. The question is, then, Shall the report be read? The Chair is doubtful as to whether it is not the right of an individual Senator to have the report read, and the Chair is going to rule that a report must be read on the request of any Senator. It seems that that will be the way to present the matter definitely and fairly to the Senate. Let the Secretary read the report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. BURTON and Mr. STONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. STONE. I interrupt simply to ask the Senator from Florida to lay the bill aside for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio was recognized.

Mr. BURTON. It seems to me we are causing unnecessary confusion and delay here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not the slightest confusion.

Mr. BURTON. The reading of the report at this time will hardly be apposite. A bill modified in vital particulars is to be considered——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That results from the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. And the reading of the report would more naturally follow the presentation and printing of the substitute bill, as I understand the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order!

Mr. BURTON. I understand it is not intended to proceed with the discussion of the bill to-night. I trust the request for the reading of the report will be withdrawn, and that the objection will be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the request of the Senator from Massachusetts is withdrawn, the regular order is the reading of the report.

Mr. LODGE. I will withdraw my request for the reading of the report.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, Mr. President, on behalf of the committee I renew the motion to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the matter I send to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Senator to ask that those amendments be printed, but he is now taking substantive action.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask to have them printed, of course.

Mr. LODGE. To that I have no objection at all. I do not want to have them adopted until I have seen them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have the right to offer them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I prefer not to yield just at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida declines to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to ask a question of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator yields for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I find on my desk here a committee print, Order of Business No. 737, Senate bill 6856. Is that the print the Senator desires to have printed again?

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to have it printed, so as to have a clean print showing precisely what the substitute will mean. This indicates what it is, but there are some lines stricken out and others inserted. The original bill is set out, with the proposed amendments in connection with it, and in order to make it one proposition I offer this from the Committee on Commerce as a substitute for the bill, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert. I offer it, including the amendments attached to the bill, as one substitute for the bill under consideration.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? The Senator does not intend to substitute it now, but only to have it printed?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I am offering it now in order to have it printed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will come to order. The Senator from Florida may introduce his substitute as an amendment to the bill as a matter of right, without anybody's consent except his own.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I supposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will send it to the desk, and the Secretary will read it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what appears there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that the Senator from Florida now offers this as a substitute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He offers it as a substitute bill.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be printed, I understand; but the Senator does not offer it to be acted upon at this time?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see why we should take the time of the Senate in reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not insist on having it read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading is the regular order when an amendment is offered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading and that it merely be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks that the amendment be printed without reading. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment moved by Mr. FLETCHER on behalf of the Committee on Commerce is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the following:

That the United States, acting through the shipping board hereinafter created, may subscribe to the capital stock of any corporation now or hereafter organized under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof or of the District of Columbia to meet the requirements of the foreign commerce of the United States, or to charter vessels for such purposes, and to make charters or leases of any vessel or vessels owned by such corporation to any other corporation, firm, or individual to be used for such purposes: Provided, That the terms and conditions of such charter parties shall first be approved by the shipping board, the initial capital stock of which corporation shall not be over $10,000,000, of the par value of $100 per share.

SEC. 2. That the United States shall subscribe to 51 per cent of the initial capital stock of such corporation at par and the remainder thereof shall be offered for public subscription at not less than par; and the United States may then further subscribe at par for any amount of such stock not taken by public subscription, but such corporation may begin business as soon as 51 per cent of said stock has been subscribed and paid for by the United States. The shipping board, with the approval of the President, may consent to or may cause an increase of the capital stock from time to time as the interests of the corporation may require, but the United States shall subscribe for 51 per cent of each and every such increase.

SEC. 3. That the United States, through the shipping board and with the approval of the President, is authorized to purchase or construct vessels suitable, in the judgment of the shipping board, for the purposes of such corporation, with a view to transferring them to such corporation, and for this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the request of the shipping board and the approval of the President, may issue and sell or use for such purchases or construction any of the bonds of the United States now available in the Treasury of the United States under the act of August 5, 1909, the act of February 4, 1910, and the act of March 2, 1911, relating to the issue of bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal, to a total amount not to exceed $30,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing or constructing such vessels: Provided, That the bonds issued and sold or used under the provisions of this section may be made payable at such time after issue as the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may deem advisable, and fix, instead of 50 years after date of issue, as in said act of August 5, 1909, not exceeding 50 years: Provided further, That payments for such purchases or construction from proceeds of sales of bonds, or delivery of bonds in payment thereof, shall be made only as ordered and directed by the shipping board.

SEC. 4. That the shipping board is authorized to transfer the vessels purchased or constructed as herein provided to any such corporation in which the United States has become a stockholder as hereinbefore provided, and such corporation shall issue to the United States in payment thereof its gold bonds bearing interest at not less than 4 per cent per annum, and upon such further terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the shipping board, such bonds to constitute a first and paramount lien upon such vessels thus transferred and upon all the property of such corporation: Provided, That the amount of bonds received by the United States in payment for such vessels shall not be less, at the then par value, than the total amount expended by the United States in the purchase or construction of such vessels; and the same may be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion and with the approval of the President, to reimburse the Treasury for expenditures made in the purchase or construction of vessels. Such corporation shall make suitable provision for sinking fund and for the depreciation charges under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by such shipping board; and all vessels acquired under this act, or in which the United States shall otherwise be interested as owner in whole or in part, or upon which the United States shall have or hold any mortgage, pledge, lien, or other security, shall, when and while employed solely as merchant vessels, be in all respects subject to the rules, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels under the principles of international law, in like manner and to the same extent as merchant vessels in private ownership when duly registered under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 5. That vessels purchased or constructed by such shipping board and conveyed to such corporation as herein provided shall be entitled to registry under the laws of the United States, and shall be deemed vessels of the United States and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining to such vessels, except such vessels shall engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila. Such vessels shall be subject to the navigation laws of the United States except as herein provided.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce are hereby constituted a board to be known as the shipping board, with full power, subject to the approval of the President, to vote the stock of the United States in said corporation, either as a body or by one or more of its members duly authorized by a majority, and to do all things necessary, whether specifically enumerated or not, to carry out the purposes of this act and protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 7. That, with the approval of the Congress, such shipping board may at any time sell the stock of such corporation owned by the United States.

SEC. 8. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to charter, lease, or transfer such naval auxiliaries now belonging to the Naval Establishment of the United States as are suitable for commercial use and which are not required for use in the Navy in time of peace, and vessels belonging to the War Department suitable for commercial uses and not required for military transports in time of peace, and to direct or cause to be chartered, leased, or transferred vessels now owned and operated by the Panama Railroad Co. to any corporation now or hereafter organized as in this act provided under such terms and conditions as the shipping board, with the approval of the President of the United States, shall prescribe. The vessels purchased or constructed by the United States through the shipping board, with the approval of the President of the United States, shall be of a type, as far as the commercial requirements of the foreign trade of the United States may permit, suitable for use as naval auxiliaries in the Naval Establishment of the United States.

SEC. 9. That the President of the United States, upon giving to any such corporation in which the United States shall be a stockholder, through its president, vice president, secretary, or manager, notice in writing for such reasonable length of time as in his judgment the circumstances require and will permit of his intention so to do, may take possession, absolutely or temporarily, for use as naval auxiliaries, of any vessel or vessels owned or leased by or otherwise in the possession of said corporation, and said corporation shall be entitled to a reasonable price or rental therefor, to be fixed by the shipping board with the approval of the President: Provided, That if in the judgment of the President an emergency exists requiring such action he may take possession of any such vessel or vessels without notice.

SEC. 10. That the shipping board shall make to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a report of expenditures and receipts under this act and of the operations of any corporation in which the United States may have become a stockholder hereunder.

SEC. 11. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000; but the corporation in which the United States shall become a stockholder as herein provided shall pay all necessary expenses of the shipping board in this behalf.

SEC. 12. That the President is hereby authorized and empowered to designate from time to time such ports of the United States as he may for the purposes of this section deem advisable at which the several collectors of the ports so designated shall for such periods of time as the President may prescribe inspect all goods, wares, and merchandise of whatever description offered for shipment from any such port to any foreign port upon any vessel directly or indirectly owned in whole or in part by the United States or in which the United States may have a proprietary interest when employed solely as a merchant vessel, or upon any vessel whatsoever when duly registered under the laws of the United States. It shall be, and is hereby made, the duty of the collector of the port at each of the ports so designated, and authority is hereby granted to such collector for that purpose, to make such inspection and examination before the same shall be loaded and stored aboard ship of all goods, wares, and merchandise of whatever description offered for shipment from such port to any foreign port upon any vessel defined by this section as may be necessary to inform him as to the exact character and description of the goods, wares, and merchandise so offered for shipment. It shall be unlawful for any person, whether as principal or agent, to load and store aboard ship, or attempt to load and store aboard ship, any goods, wares, or merchandise subject to inspection under this section before the same have been duly inspected and examined as herein required; and it shall be unlawful for the master or other chief officer of any vessel defined in this section to receive and store aboard ship any goods, wares, or merchandise subject to inspection under this section before the same have been duly inspected and examined as herein required. Any person who shall knowingly violate the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction before any court of competent jurisdiction shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than $5,000, and shall be committed to prison until such fine and the costs of the prosecution shall be paid; and clearance shall not be granted to any vessel whose owners or chief officers shall knowingly violate the provisions of this section: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce may upon hearing and for satisfactory reasons permit and direct the clearance of any such vessel, stating his reasons therefor in a written opinion to be filed as a public document in the Department of Commerce.

It shall be, and is hereby made, the duty of the collector of the port from which any such vessel clears to inspect the manifest or cargo invoice of each vessel subject to the provisions of this section to ascertain whether the manifest or cargo invoice sets forth a true exhibit of all goods, wares, and merchandise aboard ship at the time of sailing; and if the collector of the port shall be satisfied that the manifest or cargo invoice does set forth a true exhibit of all goods, wares, and merchandise received aboard ship at the time of sailing, he shall in every such case attach to the manifest or cargo invoice his official certificate under seal, setting forth that he has inspected and examined the goods, wares, and merchandise aboard such ship, and that the manifest or cargo invoice sets forth a true exhibit of the same. No such vessel shall be granted a clearance at any such port until after the certificate, herein required to be issued under his official seal by the collector of the port, has been issued and delivered by him to the chief officer or other proper officer of such vessel.

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Navigation, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, to make and promulgate all needful and proper rules and regulations for administering the provisions of this section; and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 13. That this act shall take effect from its passage.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m., Wednesday, January 6, 1915) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, January 7, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 6, 1915.

ASSISTANT TREASURER.

George Fort, of Georgia, now Deputy Assistant Treasurer of the United States, to be Assistant Treasurer of the United States, to fill an existing vacancy.

MEMBER OF THE COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 6, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, open Thou our understanding, that we may have a broader, clearer conception of Thine almightiness and know the eternal values and be lifted into the higher realms of thought and action in the daily duties of life, that we may leave behind us a trail which others may follow with impunity and so fulfill the law of Christ: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SAFETY ON RAILROAD TRAINS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill and the report of H. R. 16875, to promote the safety of employees and passengers on railroads engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. That bill with the report has been printed without all of the amendments reported by the committee. I therefore ask for a corrected print of the bill and the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for a correct reprint of the bill H. R. 16875. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of denatured alcohol and also upon the subject of franchise for women.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I would say that of course these are two separate subjects.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address on Inland Waterways and Coast Defenses, delivered by one of my constituents, Mr. Justice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of inland waterways and coast defenses by inserting an address delivered by one of his constituents. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the maker of the speech an ex-Member of Congress?

Mr. MOORE. No.

Mr. BARNHART. Who is the gentleman?

Mr. MOORE. He is a gentleman who made an address before the Rivers and Harbors Congress, which met in Washington a short time ago. The address was not published. It is one of considerable interest to the people along the coast. The address is not very long.

Mr. BARNHART. How long is it?

Mr. MOORE. I suppose it will take about a column and a half of the RECORD.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Indiana takes his seat, will he allow me, with the permission of the House, to ask him a question?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from a correspondent whom I do not happen to know, but I am getting every day a number of requests for material upon the question of the preparedness of this country for war. I am sending circular answers, and sending them also other matter, and telling them to get the reports of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, and the Secretary of the Navy. This correspondent notifies me that he is unable to get them because of exhaustion of supply. What step ought to be taken to replenish those supplies?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, the regular procedure would be for the gentleman to introduce a bill and have it referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GARDNER. Would the gentleman think this the most practical way of doing it? I am asking for information.

Mr. BARNHART. That would be the only way that the chairman of the Printing Committee could advise. That is the legal way, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARDNER. That means getting a bill through Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, the department is supposed to print its own report out of its own appropriation, is it not?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes. I would say that in numerous efforts to get bills through providing additional prints of reports of departments I have found that the Appropriation Committee insists that it makes most liberal provision for printing for the departments. That committee gives them all of the appropriations for that purpose that they ask, and yet they keep coming to Members of Congress from time to time asking that we print more. They get these reports out largely for their own use, of course.

Mr. GARDNER. These are mostly joint debaters who are writing to me for them.

Mr. BARNHART. The departments seem to utilize all of these prints for their own use. I do not know for what purpose. I am not prepared to say, for I have never investigated; but they ask liberal appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress allows it to them. Yet they keep coming to the House from time to time asking for more and more, and frequently when a Member of Congress asks for some of these documents to supply demands that he has he is notified by the department that the supply is exhausted and that he must go to Congress to get what he wants.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman from Indiana knows that it is not a practical thing to get through a bill and have it signed by the President for additional printing, or a concurrent resolution.

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, yes; that can be readily done.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the bill H. R. 6143. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana to object to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FERGUSSON, for the remainder of this week, on account of personal illness.

To Mr. IGOE, indefinitely, on account of a death in his family.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for this week on behalf of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7107. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Metropolis, Ill.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing the minerals kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, china clay, and china ball clay within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry.

ACTION FOR DEATH ON THE HIGH SEAS.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, taking up the bill H. R. 6143, relating to the maintenance of actions for death on the high seas and other navigable waters, I desire to say, as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that when the bill was reported by the committee to the House it was agreed among the members of the committee that we should have a provision in the bill reserving to the various States whatever rights they may now have with reference to suits for death on the high seas. The committee has now prepared such an amendment, and I desire to offer it on behalf of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, line 4, by striking out the word "to" and inserting the word "by"; strike out all of page 3 after line 7 and all on page 4 and insert the following:

"SEC. 6. That the right under this act to recover damages for the death of a person caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas, the Great Lakes, or any of the navigable waters of the United States, wherever such death may occur, shall be deemed to be a right of recovery within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, but nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the right of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in such cases."

Mr. WEBB. Now, Mr. Speaker, the committee amendment strikes out of the pending bill section 6, which is as follows:

That this act shall not affect the rights of shipowners and others to avail themselves of the provisions of the laws of the United States relating to limitation of liability.

We strike that out because it is useless language. The proposed bill does not repeal or change the present limiting liability laws, and this section has no practical force, so we strike it out of the bill entirely. We strike out sections 7 and 8 and substitute the matter which I have just had read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the effect of the substitution of his amendment? I assume the amendment has not been printed for the use of Members. It is an important amendment as it affects three sections of the bill.

Mr. WEBB. I am going to explain it in a moment. I had just begun to explain that we had stricken out section 6 of the bill because it adds nothing to the bill and takes nothing from it. We therefore strike that out entirely because it is needless. Section 7, as originally drawn, made this right of action for death on the high seas exclusive in admiralty. This section, the committee agreed among themselves when the bill was originally reported, should be so amended as to preserve all remedies which the States now give suitors for death from negligence on the high seas, and also gives a remedy to the suitor in a court of admiralty for such death. Section 8 is covered by the amendment which I have just had read, because that is in reference to reserving to citizens of the States the right to bring suit for personal injuries. The right under the laws of a State to sue for damages, resulting from negligence causing death, has heretofore been recognized, and all such suits for personal injuries are left as they are now and are not affected by this bill at all.

In other words, gentlemen, the only thing this bill will do, if passed with the amendment suggested, is to give the suitor the right to go into a United States court of admiralty and sue for death caused by negligence on the Great Lakes, navigable waters, and the high seas. It is rather an anomalous thing that the United States Government has existed since 1787 and yet during all that time no citizen of the United States had a right to go into an admiralty court and sue for death caused by negligence on the high seas. He has been able to sue for breaking a finger or for breaking a leg, but he has never been able to bring a suit in an admiralty court for the highest injury that can occur to a human being, and that is death.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not see the proposition to amend, to which the gentleman refers, referred to in the report.

Mr. WEBB. I have just had it read, and I will read it again if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. TOWNER. I will be glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. WEBB. Section 6 takes the place of sections 7 and 8, and is as follows. This is the new section 6:

SEC. 6. That the right under this act to recover damages for the death of a person caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, occurring on the high seas, the Great Lakes, or any of the navigable waters of the United States, wherever such death may occur, shall be deemed to be a right of recovery within the admiralty and maritime jurisdictions of the United States; but nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the right of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in such cases.

Mr. TOWNER. What I am getting at is this: Is it the gentleman's understanding now that the jurisdiction of all cases be transferred to the admiralty court?

Mr. WEBB. Not at all.

Mr. TOWNER. Will not this proposition do that? Merely because a remedy or because, for instance, a right is declared in the statute of a State does not necessarily mean that the jurisdiction shall be within the State by any means, and this declaration here by the gentleman's amendment may—I will say to the gentleman I have not time to consider it carefully—still transfer the jurisdiction of all cases to the United States court. Let me say this to the gentleman, if he will pardon me for the interruption: As we all understand, I think, just as soon as the United States assumes this jurisdiction the States will lose it. It is only theirs now by sufferance, and, as I understand the gentleman, it is not the intention to transfer the jurisdiction of these cases or the trial of these cases exclusively to the admiralty court. It is only the intention to add the jurisdiction of the admiralty court to the State courts. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; in a sense that is correct.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman I very much doubt whether his amendment will be sufficient to accomplish it.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that Congress has undoubtedly the power to prescribe the jurisdictional limits of courts that it creates. We reserve to the States the remedy which they now have in such cases and only give an additional remedy in admiralty, and if the plaintiff brings his suit under this act it simply adds a new forum. He can go to the State court and bring his action for death on the high seas, or if he prefers he can go into the admiralty court under this bill and pursue his remedy there. It is simply giving an additional remedy in the national courts, a remedy that has been delayed for a hundred years. I can not understand why it has not been done long ago.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman's amendment says something about rights given in the State courts. Does that apply to rights hereafter to be given by the State courts?

Mr. WEBB. I think so, undoubtedly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Would it not be better to add the words "given or to be hereafter given"?

Mr. WEBB. The subcommittee that went over that question discussed that matter, and they were of the opinion that any remedy given hereafter would be included by this provision.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It does not seem so to me. It seems to me very doubtful. The words "given or to be given" would cover it.

Mr. WEBB. If the remedy is added next year, it is "given" and comes under this provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in reading the proposed amendment that it only extends to cases where death results, whereas the bill under consideration also provides for jurisdiction in cases not resulting in death. Your amendment merely provides that, so far as those cases resulting in death are concerned, it shall not supersede the authority of the State court.

Mr. WEBB. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. But you do not provide for cases where injury is suffered that do not result in death.

Mr. WEBB. Certainly not; because this bill does not affect anything but death on the high seas, and so forth. It refers strictly and solely to deaths and has nothing to do with personal injuries. Injuries are already taken care of under present laws, both in State and admiralty courts.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask whether under section 4 suit can not be brought merely for injuries resulting from wrongful act, neglect, or default?

Mr. WEBB. I did not quite catch my friend's remark.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression from the reading of the bill that in cases pending in courts by the injured person for the wrongful act, neglect, or default of the shipowner in case of death the action would survive.

Mr. WEBB. That is true. You can sue now, I will say to my friend. Under the present laws you can sue for personal injury, for breaking your finger, your leg, or for any other negligence which causes personal injury. You can sue either in admiralty or in State courts if the State laws give you that remedy. Now, in order to preserve the right of a man who should go into admiralty and sue for damage for personal injuries, who afterwards dies from those injuries before the suit is terminated, we have added section 4.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I would like to ask the gentleman whether in the studies of the committee they went into the subject as to the forum in which the suit might be brought in case the accident, say, happened to a foreigner on the high seas or happened to a citizen of our own country on a foreign bottom on the high seas? I understand that actions for death are not transitory as between our respective States. If a citizen of the United States happens to drown while on a foreign vessel, in what forum would the suit have to be brought, negligence being assumed?

Mr. WEBB. If he were drowned, I should think in order to have a wider jurisdiction the plaintiff, or the representative of the decedent, would bring his action under this act in admiralty. However, he can bring action in the State court if he can get jurisdiction. But that might give him little advantage, because he might not be able to get hold of the foreign res or any personal representative of it.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I have not made myself clear. Would he be able to sue in American courts at all? Would he not in that case go to foreign courts, too?

Mr. WEBB. He could sue in American courts, if he chooses, with the hope of getting jurisdiction of the vessel itself. If he thought he never could get jurisdiction or possession of the vessel so as to enforce an action in res, he would probably go to a foreign country where he might get that possession or jurisdiction.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Another question. Of course the treatment given the subject by this bill would apply only to cases where negligence could be proved and burden of proof would be on the plaintiff. Suppose an accident at sea, where the shipowners have actually been negligent, let us say, but the corpus delicti is entirely lost, the vessel has gone down and all on board with it, only the common-law standard will be applicable there, and no proof would be made of negligence? Is that correct?

Mr. WEBB. Of course if no proof could be had, there would be nothing to support an action for negligence.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. That leads me to the principal question I have in mind. Would it not be better in our day, when nearly all our States and all the foreign countries have taken up this subject of accidents, to organize a system for indemnification of all of them, where the victim has suffered, and would it not be better if they had reported a compensation for accidents at sea without reference to the proof of a fact of negligence in the case?

Mr. WEBB. That would be, I think, an entirely different subject from the one we are legislating about now. We are trying to give suitors or claimants in the United States a right to bring a suit for negligent death on the seas in a United States court—something they have never before had the right to do—and we are confining it exclusively to death on the high seas, Great Lakes, and navigable waters. The rule of damages as expressed in section 5 says damages shall be apportioned according to negligence of one or the other. In other words, contributory negligence on the part of the deceased shall not bar recovery, which is a very liberal rule for recovery of damages—more liberal than a number of the States have.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. The reply of the gentleman to the question of the gentleman from Maryland brought out the difficulty of obtaining service or jurisdiction upon a foreign steamship company. I want to ask the gentleman whether any suggestion had been made to the committee that foreign steamship companies operating to and from American ports be required to file some sort of appointment of agency, or something of that nature, in order that service might be had on them in these cases?

Mr. WEBB. No; we have not considered that.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman knows that is customary between the different States of the Government; that they require a foreign corporation, frequently a foreign insurance company or railroad company, to provide some person in the State where they do business upon whom service may be had, in order that the local citizen injured may have some rights within the States where injuries really occur. Has any suggestion been made in regard to that feature to this bill?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that we have had only one thing in mind in this bill, and that is to create the right on behalf of the citizens of the United States that they have never had heretofore, and that is to go into a United States admiralty court and sue for damages for death caused by negligence on the high seas.

And in that suit I will say you have this remedy, which in a degree does away with the necessity of having the agency you desire, and that is, that if a vessel ever touches a port of the United States it can be seized, because in admiralty you bring your action in rem and take the vessel. Whether you have the persons to serve the process on or not, you can seize the vessel and with the proceeds pay the damages.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand that is true—that you can bring your suit in admiralty directly against the vessel in rem. But suppose the vessel for some reason does not touch a port of the United States from that time on, or suppose the vessel is lost wholly; and suppose it does touch a port of the United States, and it is found that the accumulated claims are greater than the value of the vessel and cargo, then what?

Mr. WEBB. Well, under the limiting liability laws they would bring it into court and sell the vessel and pay all the claims they could out of it.

Mr. BORLAND. Suppose the vessel has gone down. Would not the American claimant be without remedy?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; unless something is left over from the vessel and its freight.

Mr. BORLAND. I realize that this is a step in advance of the present law. I was just making the inquiry for information.

Mr. WEBB. We are not undertaking to revise the maritime laws of the United States. That is the most difficult maze of legislation that a man can walk into. We men who live in the hills know very little about maritime law. It is a most difficult, scientific, expert part of our law, and this committee did not want to undertake to revise that which some people call the antiquated maritime law, but we did want to cleave to one idea, and that is to give this additional right to the families of men killed on the high seas.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would like to know why you provide that suits shall be instituted by the personal representative? Why not provide that it shall be instituted by the wife, husband, or other real party in interest?

Mr. WEBB. Well, has your State a law like the one you suggest?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. In most jurisdictions you have to have a personal representative appointed by the court to represent all the parties, instead of having all parties sue as individuals.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. May I suggest that the United States Government has a law like that? The Federal law provides for the wife first, and then for others. It does not bunch them as this shipowners' bill would do. This bunches them all together, so as to make it everybody's money and practically nobody's money, and thereby the ship will get out of it.

Mr. DICKINSON. In our State the law requires that the suit shall be instituted in the name of the real party in interest. Now, if I interpret this correctly, if a personal representative is entitled or required to bring this suit, then a personal representative other than the real party in interest would have to be appointed, and thereby the wife or the husband or the children might be at the mercy of a personal representative.

Mr. WEBB. I think the gentleman is wholly mistaken. Practically, every State in this Union has its law with reference to the appointment of executors and administrators, and in the case of a husband most of the State laws provide that the wife shall have the first right to administer the estate. If she disclaims the right, then the oldest son, and if he disclaims, then the next one, and so on. That is usually covered by State laws. You do not want to change those.

Mr. DICKINSON. But do you appoint executors or administrators except for the purpose of paying debts? Here the money recovered goes absolutely to the wife or husband free of any other duty.

Mr. WEBB. The court appoints a representative in my State and other States usually both to pay and to collect debts and to look after everybody in interest.

Mr. DICKINSON. Here you make it the duty of the wife or the husband.

Mr. WEBB. Suppose there was a family with a lot of children, and the older boy should sue for himself and not as the personal representative, and he should "gobble up" all the recovery and allow the others to shift for themselves? We provide here that the personal legal representatives have the right to sue for all the parties entitled to share in the recovery.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like the gentleman to consider this proposition: Suppose that under the State law suit is brought for $25,000, but the defendant is a citizen of another State, and on the ground of diverse citizenship the action is removed. What becomes of it then?

Mr. WEBB. It goes as any other case of diverse citizenship would go. In other words, State laws would govern the trial, because we expressly provide that the remedies under the present State laws shall not be touched.

Mr. TOWNER. In your judgment the laws of the State would follow into the admiralty court?

Mr. WEBB. Not at all. The suit would not go into admiralty at all. It would go into the United States court, on account of diverse citizenship, and would be tried by a jury just as any other case of diverse citizenship is tried now.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. If that is the gentleman's intention, is he not willing to change his amendment so that it will not abridge any remedy that your suitors may now have? It limits it to the remedies they may have in the courts of a State.

Mr. WEBB. Well, I will say to my friend that the whole committee and the subcommittee and everybody connected with the bill went over that provision very carefully. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANFORTH], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITZHENRY], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETERSON], and, in fact, the whole committee went into it, and we concluded that this language would preserve to every suitor his present rights under the State laws or his rights that would be given hereafter, and this is the language:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge—

That is, lessen or minimize—the rights of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory, or in the courts of the United States other than in admiralty, to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory—

In such cases.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue that a moment. Did the gentleman or his committee consider the question where the rights of diverse suitors were involved?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; certainly. We considered it and discussed it.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman as a lawyer make the statement that where it is limited to the rights of a court in a State it goes as far as the gentleman now states—that it preserves every remedy that a suitor now has?

Mr. WEBB. I undoubtedly do. We do not propose to take away the right of diverse citizenship from a man. If a suit is removed from the State court into the Federal court because of diversity of citizenship, the gentleman knows that it is tried according to the laws of the States, and that is the case in this instance.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. The bill by its terms refers to actions in rem, I think.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for one more question?

Mr. WEBB. I should like to yield first to my friend from New York [Mr. TALCOTT], because I told him I would.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. The bill by its terms relates to actions in rem?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; and in personam.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Why would it not be better to give the jurisdiction to the district courts of the United States which the State courts now have, so that the action would not be confined to a proceeding in rem?

Mr. WEBB. You can not do that. For one reason the United States has no common law, and we have no power to give to the Federal courts common-law jurisdiction unless it is based on some provision in the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution of the United States gives to the Federal courts admiralty jurisdiction, and also jurisdiction over interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. This is enlarging the admiralty jurisdiction; that is all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. By giving it to the State courts?

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. No; by giving it to the district courts of the United States.

Mr. WEBB. The State courts have no right of action in rem, and that is why this bill ought to be passed. If a man is killed on a vessel by wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas, if you pass this bill you can go into the admiralty court and seize the vessel; that is, begin an action in rem.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Why not give the State jurisdiction over the vessel?

Mr. WEBB. I do not understand that we want to undertake to harmonize the various laws of 48 States. We expressly preserve to each individual suitor the right that he now has under his State laws, and only superadd a new remedy which gives him the right to go into admiralty for death on the high seas.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. But this bill is incomplete, because you can only proceed against the ship or the property itself. Take a case like the Titanic——

Mr. FITZHENRY. This gives a remedy against the vessel, person, or corporation.

Mr. WEBB. You can bring a personal suit in the Federal court if diverse citizenship is shown; but the main reason for going into admiralty is to give jurisdiction over the res, the vessel itself, because that is usually all the property that a shipping corporation has. When the vessel goes down everything goes down. If a man is injured or killed, all that his dependents usually have to proceed against is the ship itself. That is why you want the action in rem. You seize all the property they have, namely, the vessel.

Mr. BRYAN. This helps some, because it wipes out half the statute, and if we could wipe out the other half that would be what we ought to do. Now, the bill refers to the Federal court those cases that arise in the State courts under State law. The gentleman says that the jury will follow it, and that it will have the same procedure. We had here a short time ago in the Titanic case practically the same proposition that was raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. WEBB. Will not the gentleman ask his question? The gentleman has spoken an hour on the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. There is no need to hurry. There are a great many proctors in admiralty who want to hurry this along. All the attorneys for the big ship companies want to hurry it along.

Mr. WEBB. I do not yield to my friend to make that sort of a statement, because that is a reflection on the committee.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not mean to reflect on the committee.

Mr. WEBB. And it is a reflection on the honorable gentlemen who have appeared here on behalf of this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. The committee had another meeting to reconsider the bill yesterday, after it had been pending a long time, and the committee were misled honestly in the matter.

Mr. WEBB. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The committee were not misled. When the bill was originally reported it had been agreed with Mr. McCoy, who is now a justice on the bench of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, that we would preserve the remedies of the States that they now have. Yesterday we got together and invited the gentleman from Washington by courtesy to appear before the committee, and we, as previously agreed, framed this amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. That is all right, but in the case of the Titanic, which was referred to a moment ago, the Supreme Court held that they would apply the remedy and the procedure of this country, and would not apply the remedy and procedure of England at all. I think the point that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] makes is absolutely correct, that when you get into the Federal court the procedure of that court will be regarded. I have here the Titanic case, from which I quote just these lines:

It clearly limits the remedy, as we have shown, in cases where it has nothing to say about the rights.

Now, if you do create this jurisdiction, you are creating a jurisdiction that does not exist in England or in Canada. The admiralty court has no jurisdiction of these death claims. They are like ordinary cases. They are tried before juries in England and tried before juries in Canada, and they are not admiralty cases at all, notwithstanding the fact that the cause of action occurs on the ocean.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did not the gentleman take the distinct position the other day that they were admiralty cases, and that the admiralty laws applied to the procedure in the form of a jury trial?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I did not; I took the position that they were tried in England——

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman from Washington stated the other day that they had jury trials in admiralty in England.

Mr. BRYAN. If I did, I ought not to have said it. I do not think I did say it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask the gentleman if he did not say the other day that the admiralty courts in England had under their procedure jury trials?

Mr. BRYAN. If I did, I was wrong. Mr. Putnam, in this report, when he was the head attorney for the Old Dominion Steamship Co., appeared before the United States Supreme Court and made the argument that there was no admiralty jurisdiction. He was trying to avoid liability for death. He said in England it was under law jurisdiction there and cited the Vera Cruz case. He said there was no law jurisdiction in Canada and cited a case from a case in the Canadian Supreme Court. He said there was no admiralty jurisdiction in the United States and that you could not allow a death claim. The court said that they could because there was a State statute, and turned Mr. Putnam and his company down.

Then, the shipowners have come with one accord from the Great Lakes and the coast, and are trying to get admiralty jurisdiction where they can get away from the State statute and get their claims tried by the admiralty court without a jury. It is a new jurisdiction you are creating, and it has no precedent among the English-speaking countries. Mr. Putnam says we ought not to lag behind England, but England has no such jurisdiction. The Titanic cases were brought in the law courts before juries, as the report shows. The gentleman is not offering anything new to the claimants, but is taking away from them what they now have.

Mr. WEBB. Well, the House will decide whether the gentleman from Washington is right or whether the Judiciary Committee is right. We say they have no right to bring a suit now in admiralty for death on the high seas, and so forth, and we are giving them that right in this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in relation to the Titanic, that was a case where they surrendered the vessel under the limited-liability law. The gentleman from Washington is complaining because we have not put something into the bill, but does not seem to complain at what the bill actually contains.

Mr. BRYAN. I am complaining about the contents of the bill. If you are going to confer admiralty jurisdiction, give the claimants as much right as they have in the Federal courts with the right of jury. The idea of going into admiralty and applying the assumption of risk doctrine and the old provisions as to negligence that are antiquated is absurd.

Now, the very first section of my bill provides—

That every person, firm, or corporation engaged in transporting of passengers or freight by water, or who shall own or operate any vessel or sailing craft on the nigh seas, Great Lakes, or any navigable water of the United States within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while such person is employed on any such vessel, or is a passenger thereon, or is on or upon any such vessel under any other conditions, or in case of death of any such employee, passenger, or person, to his or her personal representative, for the legal benefit of the surviving widow or husband or children of such person; and if none, then of such employee's parents——

Mr. WEBB. That is as far as I can yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me read the rest of the section—and if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such person, firm, or corporation, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its engines, appliances, machinery, works, boats, wharves, or equipment.

Mr. WEBB. The amendment of my friend would include vessels of all foreign nations and countries. The admiralty law can do it because we can seize the vessel itself, but the gentleman's remedy would seem to be incomplete.

As far as jury trials are concerned in admiralty in England, they do allow a jury to fix the amount of damages, but they do not allow a jury to fix the responsibility. If you put a provision for jury trials in this bill, you would have Filipino juries. What do they know about the course and direction and speed and the conduct of a great modern steamship? I do not believe that you want Filipino juries. This bill applies to the Philippines, Panama, and to continental United States, and you could not well put a provision for a jury trial into it. It has never been provided for in an admiralty court in the world's history.

Mr. BRYAN. And that is why I want to keep these cases out of admiralty courts, the same as England has.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. In a moment. We do give them the right. If they want to keep out of admiralty, they do not have to go in. If they want to bring a suit in the admiralty court, they can do so. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS. I was going to ask the reason why you exclude the right of the suitor to submit to the jury the quantum of damages since you have the power of shaping this bill?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that admiralty law is just as abstruse to the average juror as it is to the average lawyer. The average juror knows very little about the course, the direction, about the mechanism of these great steamships, and in addition to that these suits usually require a great deal of time; they take the testimony by deposition of witnesses that go from one foreign country to another, and sometimes the suits are in court from two to three years. It would be almost impossible to have a jury trial in these cases.

I want to say this to my friend. If the plaintiff does not want to go into the admiralty court under this bill, he need not. He can choose the remedies given him by his own State, and he can not complain if the United States does not give him any better remedy than his own State gives him.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. I understand the difficulty of a jury determining liability. My question was not that, but was this, that in framing this law you do not submit to a jury the question of the quantum of damages.

Mr. WEBB. I will tell my friend that there are two reasons. One is that we did not want to inject a new principle into this bill. We had only one idea in mind, and that is to give that right to a suitor to bring action for death on the high seas. The other was that the admiralty judge can now call in a jury, if he desires to, to pass on both liability and damages.

Mr. SUMNERS. Why do you not make it as a matter of right?

Mr. WEBB. Why do you not have jury trials in equity cases? This is equity on the high seas, just as we have equity on the dry land. I am willing to have a jury trial, but we are trying to hew to one idea and not try to amend the entire admiralty law in this one simple bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I notice that the rule on contributory negligence has been substantially modified.

Mr. WEBB. That is correct.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. May I ask the gentleman whether the fellow-servant rule, as we know it by decisions, so far as inland courts are concerned, applies to cases at sea?

Mr. WEBB. I think it does.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The bill contains no provision eliminating or modifying that.

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. It seems to me that it would be in line with the gentleman's purpose to have a provision eliminating the fellow-servant rule in this bill.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend that there are a great many inequalities and injustices, in my opinion, in the shipping laws of the country. We are gradually picking them off and changing them one by one, but we can not do it all in this one bill. I think a great many gentlemen would be glad to abolish peonage on steamships. I believe that slavery on steamships is the only class of slavery that the Supreme Court of the United States held was not intended to be abolished by the adoption of the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution. We would like to abolish that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], a member of the committee, to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is an amendment pending that ought to be first disposed of.

Mr. WEBB. I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman going to shut off any discussion?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no. I did not know that the gentleman from Wisconsin desired to discuss the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. WEBB. I would be glad to grant the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Can we not agree on time for debate on the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to offer an amendment to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes, 5 minutes of the time to be used by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], a member of the committee, 5 minutes by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on the amendment that he offered be limited to 15 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] to have 5 minutes, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to have 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] to have 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. VAUGHAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question.

Mr. WEBB. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VAUGHAN. The general purpose of the bill, as I understand it, is to give a remedy in rem, in addition to the remedy in personam that is now allowed by the States.

Mr. WEBB. It is to give a remedy in rem, and in addition thereto a remedy in personam in the admiralty courts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a suggestion, and I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to what I am about to suggest. It will probably remove, especially from the minds of those near me here on this side of the House, the criticisms that have been made with reference to the pending amendment. The last clause of the proposed amendment reads:

But nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the rights of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in such cases.

If the gentleman is following the text, he will readily perceive the suggestion that I am about to make. Could not the committee accept these words in lieu of those that are in the amendment?—

But nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the right to sue and pursue any remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in such cases.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I will be frank with my friend and say that that is just saying the same thing in different language, it seems to me.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No. The objection here is to the use of the words "in the courts of any State or Territory," that that might not include the transfer of cases to the United States courts, and other incidental things; but the language which I suggest by striking out a few words from the sentence the gentleman has in his amendment would make it so broad that there could be no question or objection made to it, and I think would answer the criticisms that have been made here.

Mr. WEBB. We do not undertake to prevent suits of diverse citizenship, and we do not intend to.

Mr. MANN. This clearly accomplishes what the gentleman had in mind. There is no question about the amendment he offered.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. This would remove all criticism from the amendment which I have heard thus far.

Mr. WEBB. I would have to object to accepting the amendment, Mr. Speaker, because I think the amendment the subcommittee worked on all day yesterday—and I wish my friend from Pennsylvania had been there and perhaps we could have got his consent to this amendment—covers the ground agreed upon and preserves all the rights of suitors.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from North Carolina or the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit, the amendment that the gentleman offers uses the term "any suitor," while the question is whether he is going to be a suitor or not. You do not abridge the rights of any suitor. But can he become a suitor? That is the question.

Mr. WEBB. The moment he institutes a suit he is a suitor, and that is the language the Judicial Code uses in all expressions, and that is why we embody it here.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes now to give the right to sue or pursue any remedy authorized by State law.

Mr. WEBB. That is exactly what we do.

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman is aiming to do, but there is a question about it. There is no question about this.

Mr. WEBB. I think I understand the English language very well. We preserve to the suitor, any individual in any State, the rights he now has under existing or future laws. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not offer his amendment, because I think it is already covered.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would say I do not desire to stand in opposition to my own committee upon this question, and in making this suggestion I am striving to remove certain differences that seem to exist to my mind and in the minds of the critics of this amendment. If they exist here, they will exist elsewhere, and if by the elimination of a portion of a sentence we can remove this doubt, we may hope that we will accomplish the same result in other places, and I would therefore offer this amendment. I move to strike out, in section 6 of the proposed amendment, the following words: "but nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the right of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in such cases," and in lieu thereof to insert the following: "but nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the right to sue and pursue any remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in such cases."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the proposed amendment the language, "but nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the right of suitors in the court of any State or Territory to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in such cases," and insert the following: "but nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the right to sue and pursue any remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in such cases."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to favor the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee, as he feels so certain that this amendment does not change the effect of his amendment. Now, the gentleman, as every other lawyer, knows that the courts, in construing any law, give effect and meaning, if possible, to every word that is written into the law. Now, the construction of the gentleman from North Carolina of his amendment results in the conclusion that the words "in the courts of any State or Territory" mean nothing. Now, the courts, when they come to construe this law and give effect, if they can find a purpose in it, to the words "in the courts of any State or Territory," they can only give it effect and give it meaning by construing it as limiting the rights of suitors to a remedy, so long as they are confined within the courts of the State or Territory. That in the case of diverse citizenship a citizen has a right in certain cases to removal to the Federal court, and the moment he gets into the Federal court the remedy given by the State court is gone. Now, the gentleman, good lawyer as he is, must concede that the courts will strive to find purpose and meaning in the words

"in the courts of any State or Territory," but the gentleman says they mean nothing. If they mean nothing, they ought not to be there.

Mr. WEBB. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. WEBB. I do not understand what the gentleman means by saying that "they mean nothing." What means nothing?

Mr. LENROOT. What does the gentleman think it means?

Mr. WEBB. It means exactly what it says and exactly what the amendment the gentleman is advocating says. It is only the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. The amendment preserves to the suitor and individuals in any State such rights as those States give them now to sue for death on the high seas.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think if the words "in the courts of any State or Territory" were stricken out the amendment would have the same construction it has now?

Mr. WEBB. Why, of course it would not. Listen to the language.

Mr. LENROOT. Then what is the purpose of putting in the words "in the courts of any State or Territory"?

Mr. WEBB. Because it confines your rights and remedies to the laws within the State in which the suit may arise.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it does not; it is the rights of suitors within the courts of any State.

Mr. WEBB. It is the right of every suitor asserted in the State courts.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the point exactly; and if they are asserted anywhere else than in the courts of a State, then the remedy is gone. Now, if that is the gentleman's construction, which he has just placed upon it, the amendment ought not to be defeated. His amendment does not do that which the gentleman has been telling the House for an hour it does do.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If the statement of the chairman of the committee is correct, it would be tried in the United States court according to the State laws upon transference, and the language here, as the gentleman states, is that these remedies shall be preserved to a man only, in fact, within the State where the suit is brought.

Mr. LENROOT. Absolutely.

Mr. WEBB. If my friend will permit an interruption, I wish to say that if a suit were brought in a State court and transferred to the United States court the State law would apply.

Mr. LENROOT. If it is not in there; certainly.

Mr. WEBB. If it is not in there.

Mr. LENROOT. What is the purpose of the language "in the courts of the State" unless it is intended to limit the right of the suitor to a remedy only so long as he remains in the courts of the State?

Mr. WEBB. If the suit is transferred to the Federal courts, his remedies under the State law are applied just as they are now on account of transference because of diverse citizenship.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman takes two positions. The words "in a State or Territory" mean something or they do not. If they mean something, they do abridge the right of a suitor the moment he goes outside of a State court.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. Is that only where directly or inferentially that says the remedies given here shall be carried from the State courts into the United States courts?

Mr. LENROOT. Absolutely not.

Mr. WEBB. My friend from Iowa knows that there is a general United States statute which covers that and provides that State law shall apply in the Federal courts.

Mr. LENROOT. If this word "abridge" means anything, it only means saving the remedy so far as it states it in the amendment itself, and so far as any other statute may give a suitor a remedy that statute is amended to just that extent in this amendment.

Mr. WEBB. The Federal statute itself makes that application. We need not reenact it here.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be admitted by the chairman of the committee that this involves only the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum; that the gentlemen over here are right so far as their amendment goes, but they are wrong in their contention that it would interfere with what the chairman of the committee wants. The chairman of the committee says if the contention of the gentleman from Wisconsin and the contention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are right as to their amendment he would be for it, and so he would yield nothing, for he supports the purpose of the amendment, but believes it is already in the act. Then, what is the difference whether we accept tweedledee or tweedledum, since a great many of the Members here are anxious for one or the other, and all are anxious to accomplish what the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to accomplish.

Mr. WEBB. If it is tweedledee and tweedledum, I do not care to have the action of Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. DANFORTH and a half dozen other members of the subcommittee set aside.

Mr. BRYAN. If it be assumed it is only a matter of pride of authorship——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In connection with that statement I will say that I called attention to this very thing and tried to have an amendment along this line.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman from Minnesota says he called attention to this very thing and tried to get the committee to allow an amendment of this very kind, but that the committee did not allow it. Then, so far as Mr. VOLSTEAD is concerned, the pride of authorship is gone.

Mr. FITZHENRY. I would like to say that the gentleman from Minnesota did not discuss this phase of the proposed amendment. He asked to have stricken out the words "of death" and insert "such" before "cases" in the last line of the proposed amendment, and that was finally agreed upon.

Mr. BRYAN. Now, we are establishing a new jurisdiction. As already stated, there is no admiralty jurisdiction in England in death-claim cases. Unless the shipowner gives up the ship and goes into a kind of bankruptcy, there is no admiralty jurisdiction. There is none in Canada and none in this country. Of course, if they do as they did out here with the recent wreck off the coast of Virginia, and come in and give up the ship, they may go into the admiralty court, because the proceedings in admiralty alone provide procedure for giving up the ship and escaping personal liability. And when you go into admiralty, that court is very jealous of its jurisdiction and procedure. There is a sort of Freemasonry among admiralty proctors. They love to get cases there with which ordinary lawyers do not have anything to do, and where ordinary suitors are more or less afraid to go. And so I think that since it is plain on both sides that this amendment will certainly not interfere with the plans or purposes of the committee, it ought to be adopted; and then we ought to defeat the bill, because we do not want to create any such jurisdiction. This country does not want death claims tried in admiralty without a jury. We want them tried as law cases, like they are tried in England, before juries.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "compensation," insert "for the pecuniary loss sustained."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the word "two" and insert "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

In line 7, strike out the word "pecuniary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

In line 10, strike out the words "one year" and insert the words "two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

In line 15 strike out the words "one year" and insert the words "two years."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BRYAN. I rise to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. For what?

Mr. BRYAN. To make some remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Are we under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the previous question has not been agreed to as yet.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I asked a while ago unanimous consent that all debate on this committee amendment——

The SPEAKER. This is not your amendment at all. This is a committee amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. I shall not take the whole hour. I will see that it is parceled out. [Laughter.] How long am I recognized for, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for an hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition. The gentleman had an hour the other day, and he is not entitled to another hour.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman from Washington has already spoken a full hour, and then an hour more.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the rule in reference to recognition for an hour apply to a case where a bill was under consideration three or four weeks ago and then comes up later?

The SPEAKER. It is forever and forever.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well. I do not want to take up an hour, anyway.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that a gentleman is not entitled to take two hours if anybody else wants one.

Mr. BRYAN. I would like to use a little time.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much time I have remaining, Mr. Speaker. I used very little of my hour. How much time would the gentleman from Washington like to have?

Mr. BRYAN. I would like 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois yields to the gentleman from Washington how much?

Mr. MANN. Fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, in the question here under the amendment the proposition of the lien on the vessel comes up. In my State of Washington we have a statute that has been recognized by the Federal courts that gives us a three-year lien on the vessel. We have a three-year lien from the time we make the demand under the State statute, and we have the right to trial before a jury. The court has recognized that right, and that statute is valid and binding.

Then, under the terms and provisions of this section and these other sections now pending, a very weak relief is provided. In the employers' liability law, for instance, you have a provision that wherever the train or wherever the company is guilty of the violation of the safety-appliance act or any law with reference to the safety of employees, in such case the company can not plead negligence.

Here is the Federal employers' liability law and its rule of negligence:

That every common carrier by railroad * * * shall be liable * * * for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

SEC. 3. That in all actions hereafter brought against any such common carrier by railroad under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee: Provided, That no such employee who may be injured or killed shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee.

SEC. 4. That in any action brought against any common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for injuries to, or the death of, any of its employees, such employee shall not be held to have assumed the risks of his employment in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee.

SEC. 5. That any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void: Provided, That in any action brought against any such common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, such common carrier may set off therein any sum it has contributed or paid to any insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employee or the person entitled thereto on account of the injury or death for which said action was brought.

Here are the provisions of the pending act as to negligence of which Mr. Putnam says "This is also the doctrine of the Federal employers' liability act":

SEC. 5. That in suits under this act the fact that the decedent has been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar recovery, but the court shall take into consideration the degree of negligence attributable to the decedent and reduce the damage accordingly.

The above is all about the negligence rule; but those who drew this bill incorporated in it the following choice provisions:

SEC. 2. That the recovery in such suit shall be a fair and just compensation for the pecuniary loss sustained to the persons for whose benefit the suit is brought, and shall be apportioned among them by the court in proportion to the damage they may severally have suffered by reason of the death of the person by whose representative the suit is brought.

* * * * * * * *

SEC. 6. That this act shall not affect the rights of shipowners and others to avail themselves of the provisions of the laws of the United States relating to limitation of liability.

While I am discussing the Federal employers' act I desire to submit this suggestion. Section 1 of that act reads as follows:

That every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories, or between any of the States and Territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the States or Territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the States or Territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and if none, then of such employee's parents; and if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

It will be seen that this act applies to all death claims or personal injuries committed through negligence by railroad owners anywhere and everywhere. Note the last provisions of the first section of the act above quoted:

* * * or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

Railroad companies own ferries as part of their main lines and as freight and passenger feeders, and they own ocean carriers. These ferries take passenger and freight trains aboard and ferry them across rivers, and the vessels carry on a general business. Such vessels owned by railroads come under the employers' liability act, it would seem. But if you pass this act, the employers' liability act would be repealed, so far as it affected these railroad vessels. On the high seas, including the Great Lakes, such vessels would go under admiralty jurisdiction exclusively. As to the ferries across rivers and inland waters, it would seem that the employers' liability act has already divested State jurisdiction. This pending shipowners atrocity only reserves to the States such jurisdiction as they now have. As they have no jurisdiction over railroad-owned boats and ferries in any waters, it would follow that hereafter admiralty jurisdiction, without a jury, and under this pending act, would apply exclusively to railroad-owned ferries and boats in inland waters if this bill is enacted into law. Does anybody want this to occur? This is only one of many unconsidered complications likely to occur if this bill is passed.

Mr. Putnam says in his letter:

In some States the recovery is limited to the conscious suffering before death—a matter difficult of proof in matter of drowning at sea.

This evidently refers to Massachusetts, as the case of Robert Graham Dunn is referred to. (70 Fed., 271.) Mr. Putnam in 1914 based a statement as to present conditions on the conditions existing 21 years ago, in 1893. There was at that time no death liability statute in Massachusetts—merely a statute for the survival of actions for personal injuries. The statement is not a true one. Massachusetts now has a very adequate death liability statute. Other statements about present statutes in the States being antiquated, I think, are rather unfounded. I have examined the statutes of practically every State in the Union, and I find a public conscience on this subject has greatly advanced the standard of State statutes.

And then you have in the Federal law the widest and most carefully safeguarded provision for the relief, first, to go to the widow, then to go to the children, and then to the collateral relations. Here you have a provision that bunches all of these claimants and gives it to them to be apportioned by the Federal judge, to be apportioned by the judge in admiralty.

Now, I think that is wrong, and I think that the whole purpose of this bill, so far as it is lobbied for by the steamboat interests outside of Congress is to get away from the provisions of the State laws and to make it possible for the admiralty court to apply this statute instead of the State statute.

Now, you say you reserve——

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. I want to say that the two gentlemen who had as much to do with preparing and perfecting this bill as any two men in the world are Mr. Louis FitzHenry, jr., of Boston, who never represented a corporation in his life——

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; but he said yesterday that he hoped to be soon, and he wished he could get that business——

Mr. WEBB (continuing). And Mr. George Whitelock, a high-class gentleman in the practice of his profession in Baltimore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is insisting upon spreading some sort of prejudice or pouring some sort of gall into the minds of Members of the House, as if the Committee on the judiciary had been guilty of an improper act. I think those reflections on the part of the gentleman are hardly in keeping with the gentleman's dignity and character.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I have no purpose in the world of reflecting on the purposes or intentions of the Committee on the Judiciary or any of these gentlemen. I think the members of the Committee on the Judiciary that recommended this bill in its original form were hoodwinked. Otherwise they would not have recommended it, and they would not have come in to-day and moved to strike out half of it.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I will say that when Mr. McCoy first reported the bill it was understood by the members of the Committee on the Judiciary that we would put a provision in the bill reserving to the States their present rights. There was no hoodwinking and no attempt to do any hoodwinking, and nothing dark about it.

Mr. BRYAN. The committee, of course, had no intention of assisting the shipping interests, or anything of that kind, but before the committee here appeared several men representing the big interests. One was a gentleman who said, "I represent all the shipping interests from Maine on down." Another said, "This is no two-sided matter. All the shipping interests on the coast have considered it." That was at the hearing two years ago. Another man said he represented the shipping interests along the Lakes, and said they were satisfied. Then the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has been so kind and generous as to yield me time to-day, submitted a letter here from Mr. Kremer, of Chicago, who wanted the bill passed by all means. Mr. Kremer is president of about three different shipowning companies and of the Lake Carriers' Association.

The reason why they wanted this bill was for their relief. Never do you hear of steamboat companies coming in and trying to create a liability against themselves. Who ever heard of a steamboat company trying to create such a liability against itself? The truth is that Mr. Putnam appeared before the Supreme Court in behalf of the Old Dominion Steamboat Line and tried to avoid any statute in this country, and cited the fact that there was no jurisdiction in this country or in Canada. That was in 1907; and the United States Supreme Court said, "We will apply the State law of the State of Delaware"; and the very minute that the steamboat companies found out that the State laws were going to be applied, they got busy right, they got industrious, indeed. Away back yonder, in 1900, Mr. Boutell, of Illinois, introduced a bill here providing for this, but he had in it a provision for jury trials. Then, later on Senator Depew introduced a bill, and that said "Federal courts." They were not interested yet. But in 1907 Mr. Putnam lost in the Supreme Court, and State statutes were applied even on the high seas, and then they got a bill, and they said that was just the way they wanted it. All the shipping interests of the Atlantic coast were satisfied with the form of the bill, the shipping interests of the Lakes were delighted in the hope of escaping juries, and the shipping interests of the Pacific coast were pleased; and then they got a report; not, in fact, a report from the committee, but a report from Mr. Harrington Putnam, who was the hired attorney for the Old Dominion Steamship Co. in the case referred to in 1907.

Mr. Putnam further says in the letter quoted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB]:

> The fact that the several States have followed Lord Campbell's act, in so far as actions in the courts of common law are concerned, shows that public opinion in this country favors recovery for death. The Titanic disaster is still fresh in mind.
> There is no reason why the admiralty law of the United States should longer depend on the statute laws of the States and lag behind the general law of Europe. Congress can now bring our maritime law into line with the laws of those enlightened nations which confer a right of action for death at sea.

He thus endeavors to throw these cases out of the hands of the States and juries into the admiralty courts, and pretends that action would—> bring our maritime law into line with the laws of those enlightened nations which confer a right of action for death at sea.

A DIFFERENT VIEWPOINT AND A DIFFERENT VIEW IN 1907.

He does not want us to "lag behind" on this subject, yet in 1907, when Mr. Putnam was serving for pay the Old Dominion Steamship Co. he appeared before the Supreme Court of the United States and said:

> The system of law on the Continent of Europe in some form also gives a recovery for loss of life. Yet in no case have the courts of Great Britain or the United States regarded the law of the flag upon the high seas as authorizing such a recovery in the admiralty courts.
>
> Even in Canada the admiralty court has no jurisdiction for loss of life. (Monogon v. Horn, 7 Du Val, Supreme Court, Canada, 409.)
> The same rule was reached in England, notwithstanding Lord Campbell's act, that admiralty has no jurisdiction for loss of life. (The Vera Cruz, 10 App. Cases, 59.)

Admiralty has no jurisdiction in England. All cases must be tried under the Lord Campbell act with a jury. Admiralty has no jurisdiction in Canada. All cases must be tried under the local laws of the Provinces—States—before a jury.

At the trial before Judge Bailbache the jury found answers to the following questions on the question of negligence: Was the navigation of the Titanic negligent in respect of (a) lookout? Answer. No. (b) Speed? Answer. Yes. (Rept. of Titanic trial in England, Times Law Repts., vol. 110, p. 643.)

Yet Mr. Putnam sends in this act transferring jurisdiction to admiralty and away from juries, so we in America will not "lag behind" England. He was working for the Old Dominion Steamship Co. when he said what he did before the United States court in the case cited above—the Hamilton—and what he said was true. (207 U. S., 398.)

This great corporation proctor lost his case before the Supreme Court. The court said, in effect: "Yes; there is no admiralty jurisdiction in England, Canada, or America, but there is law-court jurisdiction in England under the Lord Campbell act and in Canada under the laws of the several Provinces and in the United States under the laws of the several States. Your client, the Old Dominion Steamship Co., is here seeking to limit its liability by giving up its ship, the Hamilton, out there in the ocean. This admiralty court has jurisdiction of this limiting liability case, and it becomes necessary for us to know what you owe these claimants. In order to learn what you owe for death claims we will apply the law of your State—Delaware."

Mr. Putnam labored hard and long to try and bring the Supreme Court around to his view, but he failed; and the case became an unquestioned precedent that the death liability exists in this country the same as in Canada and England, and that the only way a shipowner can get away from ordinary liability under State laws before juries the same as a sawmill, a cotton gin, or a railroad train, is to give up the ship under the limitation statutes. If the claims are less than the value of the ship, of course it will not pay to give up the ship. If the thing sinks and many claims exist, the case is different.

Mr. WEBB. Will my friend permit an interruption?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. With reference to Judge Harrington Putnam, I never met the gentleman in my life. I do not know him; but this bill was agitated by the Maritime Law Association and by the American Bar Association in 1903.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Benedict is secretary of the Maritime Law Association, and his name appears here in cases as one of the attorneys of the big steamship companies.

Mr. WEBB. Judge Harrington Putnam has been for several years a very distinguished judge on the bench in the State of New York. I do not know whether he is a good man or a bad man.

Mr. BRYAN. He is a good man.

Mr. WEBB. I know he is an able man.

Mr. BRYAN. He is able, too.

Mr. WEBB. And he ought not to be reflected on by the gentleman because he appeared for a steamboat company.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not reflect on him. I think he is all right. I have no doubt he got a fee of $10,000, and he earned his money, if he did lose in the Hamilton case.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman ought to attack the bill and not attack Judge Putnam.

Mr. BRYAN. All right, here goes. In this bill you provide for the reenactment of the old common-law rules. You provide a negligence provision that would not pass any State legislature, that is entirely out of date, and you give the ship-owning companies protection behind which they can seek refuge and help themselves in every way. You will not permit the negligence rules that have been recognized by the Federal Government here in its employers' liability law to be applied to these steamboats. I tried to get that. I am discussing the bill on its merits, and I want again to repeat that, as far as Judge Harrington Putnam is concerned, I believe he is all right. I do not believe there is anything dishonest about him. I have no thought of that; but he has been for a long time a proctor in admiralty, just like Mr. Whitelock, who was before your committee yesterday, and like Mr. FitzHenry Smith, jr., who wanted to be a corporation proctor in admiralty, as he himself said, and this other man, Mr. Benedict, secretary of your Maritime Law Association, whose name is repeatedly carried in these Supreme Court reports as attorney for the shipping interests. All these men are honest; but you do not go to railroad lawyers to find out how to fix up a liability law for the railroads. Why should you go to steamboat lawyers to fix up steamboat legislation?

The railroad lawyers are honest and the steamboat lawyers are honest. I do not say they are dishonest.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. FitzHenry Smith, jr. is as high-minded and honorable a man as I know of.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; a member of the legislature in Massachusetts.

Mr. WEBB. He never was attorney for a steamboat company in his life. He came all the way down here in the interest of this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. And I have no doubt he paid his own expenses, too. He is that much interested in it, and he says he hopes he will get some corporation practice.

Mr. WEBB. He says he would like to have some, and I have no doubt the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] would like to have some, too.

Mr. BRYAN. Members of the legislature do not usually get such employment. They are politicians, and do not have the time. Now, the proposition is that I think this bill is wrong in its conception, because it creates an admiralty jurisdiction that does not exist in England, that does not exist in Canada, and ought not to exist in the United States. Then, I think it is wrong, because on the merits it is not up to date, and it is fathered by the people who are interested from the side of the shipowner.

Mr. Putnam makes the statement, "The Titanic disaster is still fresh in mind," which I think is entirely misleading. The Titanic case would not be affected one way or the other by this act. No question has ever existed about the liability of the Titanic owners, an English corporation, for such deaths of passengers or crew as were occasioned through negligence. That liability is as complete under American law as under English law. And in this case admiralty has jurisdiction both in America and England. Why? Because this English ship-owning corporation has no hesitancy in giving up the ship out there at the bottom of the ocean at 40–40 or somewhere else. Let the claimants have the ship. That company gets back its millions invested in the vessel through insurance policies. The shippers of freight get theirs through insurance. Now let the widows and the orphans and the other claimants take the ship, if they can raise it. They may also have the lifeboats, "the trimmings," and the current freight and passenger revenues of the trip. In the Titanic the Supreme Court has plainly indicated that English law—the Lord Campbell act—establishes the right to damages, but the liability limitation laws of this country will govern as to the remedy or as to the procedure.

When Mr. Putnam tries to get help in the passage of this act by reference to the Titanic case, I can not believe him sincere or else he did not think. I have read carefully the briefs in the Titanic case so far as that case has been litigated, and I have studied the decision of the court. If any proctor had suggested that there was no death liability—and in the admiralty court in this case—he would have been hooted at. There is death liability in all cases, domestic or foreign, and in England, Canada, and the United States the admiralty court acquires jurisdiction by statutes of the sovereign government in each case as to the limiting of liability whenever the shipowner elects to give up the ship and applies to a Federal judge in admiralty to save him from the dependents of the men and women he has drowned and killed.

This ought to be plain. A suit for death liability incurred on the high seas in an American forum is before the State court, with jury trial, subject to transfer to the Federal court, with jury trial, under the same conditions as any other action may be transferred from State to Federal court unless the owner of the ship or the ferryboat or the barge on a river or other American water or on the high seas gives up the vessel and seeks to limit his liability by admiralty procedure. Think of it. They can kill a man on a barge or flatboat on an inland creek and escape by giving up the barge or flatboat, even if it is sunk or destroyed by fire. That comes under the statutes preserved by section 6 of the pending shipowner's plea for more safety from widows and orphans and other claimants. "Safety first" is their plea, but a rather unusual application is made.

In the Titanic case it will be admitted that no death claim has yet come to final adjudication in America. But that death liability exists in much more full and complete measure than is proposed by this act is admitted and is absolutely without question. The only reason why awards have not been made is on account of these uncivilized limitations of liability laws and rules of court. Yet this bill seeks to reenact and make effective those very rules and laws. All the death claimants in the Titanic case have been enjoined in admiralty court from appearing in State courts or elsewhere before juries because the English company has appealed to admiralty to let them limit their liability to the present value of the ship and other charges as stated.

Several suits had already been filed, one by Louise Robins, evidently a surviving widow, as administratrix for the death of George Robins. This suit was commenced in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Another was commenced in the State of Minnesota, in the district court of Ramsey County, by Carl Johnson for personal injuries and loss of baggage. Another in Chicago by John Devine as administrator for death of A. Willard. Federal Judge Holt, in "admiralty"—oh, that blessed word for shipowners—ordered all these claimants to quit at once and come to him at New York, for the English corporation which owned the Titanic had come to this judge with its petition to limit its liability by giving up the ship yonder at the bottom of the ocean. Mind you, the English corporation selected this Judge George C. Holt to try these cases, and then by injunction all other courts are forbidden to hear or consider a claim against the English company.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The other day the gentleman cited two cases, one of which he said was decided by Judge Taft.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And the other, as I recall it, by Judge Addison Brown.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In which, the gentleman said, the juries assessed the damages.

Mr. BRYAN. No; I did not. There was no jury in either of those cases. I do not know anything about the case in the lower court, but Judge Taft's decision was a circuit judge's decision.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My recollection of the gentleman's argument was that he cited those cases as showing the beneficial effects of a jury trial.

Mr. BRYAN. No; in each of those cases, as I remember, the owner of the boat came in and wanted to give up the boat and let the claimants go out in the middle of the ocean or the lake and take the boat. He gave up the boat under the limited-liability law, and therefore he got into the admiralty court. There is the provision in the bill to preserve that, and I understand you are to take out the section, but you say it is still a law and will not hurt it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman said the other day that there was a jury trial in the admiralty jurisdiction.

Mr. BRYAN. I did not say that, but I said there was admiralty jurisdiction where they gave up the ship.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman's memory is a little different to-day from what it was then.

Mr. BRYAN. And the memory of the gentleman from Virginia is a little different now. He said there was no jury trial under the Lord Campbell act.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I said that the Lord Campbell act did not confer admiralty jurisdiction.

Mr. BRYAN. The Lord Campbell act refers to death on the water the same as on the land, and the ordinary courts have law jurisdiction. If they have law jurisdiction there, why do you want admiralty jurisdiction here?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not stating what I want; I am stating what the gentleman and I differed about. I understood the gentleman the other day to say that there was jury trial in admiralty cases in England. I asked him if there was a jury within the admiralty jurisdiction of England, and he said yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And he said that the Lord Campbell act extended over the high seas.

Mr. BRYAN. I did.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And that the admiralty jurisdiction applied to the Lord Campbell act.

Mr. BRYAN. I say it does now whenever they give up the ship, whenever the owner of the boat comes in and says, "The boat has gone down to the bottom, and for goodness sake take it and relieve me from liability in the admiralty court." The admiralty law comes in and says, "We will, because you can not get relief in any other court."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the gentleman ever read the Vera Cruz case?

Mr. BRYAN. I have; and Mr. Putnam quoted it to the Supreme Court in the Old Dominion Steamship Co. case, and that case declares the admiralty court has no jurisdiction in case of death at sea, but the ordinary jury courts do have such jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, indeed, that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] has seen fit to make the speech which he has made on this bill, for its only effect will be to becloud the issue that is before the House. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina and the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania be adopted, then we certainly do have this, if the bill shall then pass in its present form with the amendments adopted—we have a very substantial relief for a large class of people. To make assaults on motives behind the bill can have no good purpose at this time.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I am sorry, indeed, that he takes the position that because the subcommittee has agreed upon this identical language, because the amendment happens to be offered from this side, it should not be adopted, although he admits that he has no objection to it. I want to say, first, that his subcommittee ought not to feel any pride in the authorship of this language, because he and his subcommittee were not the authors of it at all. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] has introduced a bill on this subject. I examined his bill to see what provision he had made to protect the remedy now given, and to my utter amazement I find that, notwithstanding his opposition to the amendment now, in the bill of the gentleman from Washington is the identical language that the Committee on the Judiciary now proposes in this bill. I will read it.

Mr. WEBB. I think the gentleman from Washington copied it from the Judicial Code. I am not on the subcommittee.

Mr. LENROOT. I will read:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the rights of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in case of injury or death from injury received on the high seas or elsewhere.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this language—that ought not to be in the bill—does not really emanate from that side at all, but emanates from this side of the House—Mr. BRYAN, of Washington—I sincerely hope the subcommittee and the chairman may not feel that pride of authorship and pride of opinion that necessitates them longer continuing to oppose the amendment, which certainly should be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the committee to this particular fact, which it seems to me has not been comprehended in its full force by gentlemen who have considered this proposition. It must be remembered that the admiralty courts have never given consideration to any suit brought for death, because of the fact that in the admiralty court you can not bring a suit for damages for death.

Section 6, which is the substitute offered in the first sentence, does give this remedy for death. Standing alone, that would transfer exclusive jurisdiction for damages for death to the United States courts whenever it occurred on the high seas and in navigable waters. Then as a necessary consequence it would follow that all the rules of admiralty would follow it as well; so while the remedy would allow for damages, the manner and conduct of the trial—which would exclude the right of trial by jury—would be tried in the admiralty court under the admiralty rules.

It is sought by a proviso, by an exceptional clause, to prevent this occurring, and in doing so this language, which has been under discussion for such a length of time, has been considered with such object in view. Again, let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when the bill provides that nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the rights of a suitor in the courts of any State or Territory from the rights that he then has, that means that only in such cases where under the State law now the right of action exists up to $3,000 for damages, in case of diverse citizenship, as most of these cases are, the suitor can maintain and keep his rights in the State courts. There is no question about that, but suppose, as is the case in most instances where damages for death are sought, the amount sought to be recovered is more than $3,000, ten or twenty-five thousand dollars, or whatever it may be, the amount is not limited in this bill; and suppose, as is nearly universally the case, that the suit does involve a question of diverse citizenship, what do you have? If the suit is brought in the State court, immediately the action is removed to the United States court by the defendant. The gentleman says that it comes then under other rules. I think the gentleman when he makes that statement makes it unadvisedly, for the reason that there is nothing in this language that so provides. This language here only preserves these rights in the courts of the States where the action is brought. It does not carry, and there is no language to carry, these rights into the United States courts, and certainly it will not be presumed that they exist unless it is distinctly specified they are to apply.

Mr. FITZHENRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. FITZHENRY. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Iowa that a common-law suit commenced in a State court by an administrator of a deceased person when removed to a Federal court should become an admiralty suit?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know. I do not know what will become of it.

Mr. FITZHENRY. If it does not become an admiralty suit under what rules would it be tried?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know, and I do not know what would become of the suit.

Mr. FITZHENRY. Would it not be tried under the same rules it would be tried under to-day?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; not in this case, because you have legislated with regard to this matter. It is exclusively the jurisdiction of the United States to legislate whenever it attempts to do so. Gentlemen forget that this jurisdiction belongs to the United States courts; it does not belong to the State courts and only exists in the States by sufferance; and when we assume the jurisdiction, when we say affirmatively that the right of action for death may be brought in the admiralty courts that is exclusive, except as to the very language and text of any exception we put into it, and when this text of the exception says that these rules only apply in the State courts, then I say, if it ever does get into the admiralty court, it will have to be tried under admiralty rules. This language is not nearly sufficient to carry that which the gentlemen contend for.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. A while ago, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina in charge of the bill offered an amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] offered an amendment to that amendment. By unanimous consent debate on that amendment was closed, and while it is true the Speaker recognized me and I took the floor, is not the parliamentary situation that the vote shall now be taken on these amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. What, then, becomes of the other committee amendment upon which we were about to vote when interrupted by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN]?

Mr. MANN. My point is that the gentleman in charge of the bill, this being the House Calendar bill and not being considered under the five-minute rule, can offer an amendment at any time and have it voted on, and the vote on the committee amendments reported in the bill is taken later.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I have conferred with the members of the subcommittee who presented this amendment which I presented this morning, and it is entirely agreeable to them, and is certainly so to me, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania should be accepted as an amendment to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, then, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the Webb amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who desires to offer an amendment, the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as section 7 the following:

"In all cases now pending or hereafter brought to limit liability where the loss occurred upon the high seas, and only a vessel or vessels of foreign ownership are involved, and the laws of the foreign country to which such vessel or vessels belong provide for limitation of liability in an amount greater than that fixed by laws of the United States, the owner of such foreign vessel or vessels shall be permitted to limit liability only in accordance with the laws of the foreign country to which such vessel or vessels belong."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I hope that amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say but a few words on this amendment, because I think it speaks for itself. Under the existing law and under the law which we now propose to enact, a vessel owner may at any time file a petition in the admiralty court for the purpose of limiting liability. When that is done and the proper petition is presented, the court may limit the liability and the question arises, which law shall be applicable to the particular case that is before the court. Where it arises with respect to an American vessel, of course the policy and law of the United States would apply, and where it arises with respect to a foreign vessel or vessels, exclusively, the foreign law has been held in the last utterance of the Supreme Court of the United States on that question not to be applicable. That decision creates this anomalous condition. Take, for instance, the case of the Titanic. The policy and rule in the United States is that the liability shall be limited to the vessel or the salvage from the vessel which would at the most in that case amount to $50,000 or $60,000, and yet the person who sues in the courts of England under the liability fixed by the laws of England would get the right to a limited liability fixed at so many pounds per ton, £15 per ton——

Mr. BRYAN. Amounting to nearly $3,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. And in that case would give a limit of liability of nearly $3,000,000. Why should we in America, when we can get service upon a foreign corporation here and bring our suit in our courts, be limited to a small amount when a suitor in a foreign court is entitled to a larger amount. This amendment is simply applicable to cases of negligence in which foreign vessels alone are concerned, and therefore does not impair or disturb the policy of the United States with respect to its own vessels or the vessels that are owned or registered here. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the amendment.

Mr. WEBB. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that. I wish to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's motion is limited to this particular amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. It is only on this amendment that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question on this particular amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that there is merit in some of the suggested amendments to this bill, but I think the subjects of the particular criticisms can better be taken care of in substantive legislation in the way of amendments of existing statutes that now appertain to those particular questions. I rise, however, to make one or two suggestions. It is a very humiliating fact to American citizens who may come in contact with foreign Governments to ascertain that such Governments give this remedy which our Government does not give. In Europe—in Holland, which was at one time the maritime rival of Great Britain; in France, and in Germany—persons are entitled to recover damages for death occurring upon the high seas. Here the common-law remedy applies, by reason of which the remedy dies with the person, and therefore no remedy is afforded for the damages caused by death. It was that which brought me to my feet on the 16th day of December, when I understood or misunderstood the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] to say that Lord Campbell's act was enforceable in the admiralty court for damages resulting in death upon the high seas. I then said:

> The proposition I submitted was that the original Lord Campbell act did not apply to death occurring by negligence on the high seas.

And further on the context of my remarks will show—

> as asserted in the admiralty court or in admiralty procedure.

Now I desire to read from Hughes on Admiralty what is known as the Hornbook series, section 3, page 99, this language:

> 3. In England there is no right of action in admiralty for injuries resulting in death.
>
> The English courts recognized no such right in the admiralty equally as at law. Lord Campbell's act did away with this doctrine of the common law and gave a right of action to the personal representative for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, or child for the injury done to them; not for any injury to the deceased inherited by them. The act expressly excepted Scotland, for the reason, above explained, that the right already existed there.
> It was long a question in England whether this statute was intended to apply to the admiralty courts. After much fluctuation it was finally settled by the House of Lords in the case of the Vera Cruz, decided in 1884, that the language of the English act contemplated only suits in the common-law courts, as was evident from the provisions in relation to juries, and that neither that act nor the other acts giving the admiralty courts jurisdiction in case of "claims for damage done by a ship" gave the latter courts cognizance in rem over death claims. This is still the law of England.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand the gentleman is reading that in confirmation of my statement. That confirms my statement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am reading that, if the gentleman will pardon me, in confirmation of my statement and in contradiction of his statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. That is what I said—there is no admiralty jurisdiction in England.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, I misunderstood the gentleman, or I never would have injected myself into the debate on the 16th of December.

I wish a further word, because the question was suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], in reference to jurors. The bulk of the damages occurring in cases of this sort result from collisions at sea. The determination of negligence by virtue of collisions at sea rests upon rules of navigation and seamanship that have been worked out through centuries and to the average landsman and average juror are most difficult to appreciate and to apply. In England they have what are called "Trinity masters," who sometimes even advise the admiralty court on questions relating to or growing out of collisions at sea and cases of marine disasters. Moreover, in admiralty, as in courts of chancery, nearly all the evidence is taken in the form of depositions. When you seize the ship a bond is given, the ship goes away, and the witnesses go with it. Therefore, to enforce that explanation, I desire to read from a letter which I have received from Mr. Robert M. Hughes, of Norfolk, Va., the eminent author of the book from which I have just read.

Mr. SUMNERS. Would it interrupt the gentleman from Virginia if I asked him a question?

Mr. MONTAGUE. If you will give me time, I shall be glad to answer, if I can.

Mr. SUMNERS. I can understand the reason why the question of liability in the first instance should not be submitted to a jury, but I am not able to appreciate why the quantity of injury suffered by the plaintiff should not be submitted to the jury as in the ordinary suit. And I would like to direct your attention to that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's suggestion, and I would like to see the jury given appropriate jurisdiction in that particular matter; but I say to the gentleman that if you undertake to give it there without full consideration of its bearings upon other cognate matters, we may introduce unutterable confusion in admiralty proceedings.

I will read now from the letter of Mr. Hughes:

> It is true that juries try death cases in England, but this is for the very reason that death cases do not go into the admiralty courts.

Mr. BRYAN. They go into the law courts.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will continue:

> In the Vera Cruz case, 10 Appeals Cases, the House of Lords held that Lord Campbell's act did not apply to the admiralty courts at all, and, consequently, all of those suits are necessarily brought in the common-law courts. I can not conceive of anything more uncertain and unsatisfactory than to turn a jury loose in passing upon the rules of navigation in a collision case. I have had that experience several times where counsel brought a common-law action, as they have a right to do, and it is like tossing pennies. Even in that case, however, we at least have the common-law procedure and a definite method of work. The great objection, after all, however, is the evanescent character of testimony. We have to take most of our evidence by deposition; and even when we save a few of the crew to produce on the trial we would have to let them go in case of a hung jury or a reversal. Try an admiralty case before a jury, then take it to an appellate court, then reverse it and send it down for a new trial, and your witnesses may have scattered all over the world by the time it gets back.

I am in sympathy with having somewhat of this done, but I am not willing to vote against a bill because I can not have everything in it I would like to have in it. What I say is that we are now giving an additional remedy where we had none heretofore. I will not vote against what is good because I can not at this time get something better.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 2, line 10, strike out "one year" and insert "two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 15, strike out "one year" and insert "two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "shall," insert the word "not."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 17, strike out the word "within" and insert the word "until."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 3, line 5, strike out the word "taken" and insert the word "take."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has a vote been taken on section 6 amended as proposed by the chairman of the committee?

The SPEAKER. That was taken some time ago. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read a third time.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the bill be recommitted to the committee from which it came with instructions to report back the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion and instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRYAN moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following substitute.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, because it is in the RECORD, and we have had it read before.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we ought to have a thing read that we are going to vote on.

Mr. WEBB. It will go in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. To read it to-morrow will not help the vote to-day.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] withdraw his request?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRYAN moves to recommit the bill on the judiciary, with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following substitute:

"Be it enacted, etc., That every person, firm, or corporation engaged in transporting of passengers or freight by water, or who shall own or operate any vessel or sailing craft on the high seas, Great Lakes, or any navigable water of the United States within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while such person is employed on any such vessel, or is a passenger thereon, or is on or upon any such vessel under any other conditions, or in case of death of any such employee, passenger, or person, to his on her personal representative, for the legal benefit of the surviving widow or husband or children of such person; and if none, then of such employee's parents; and if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such person, firm, or corporation, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its engines, appliances, machinery, works, boats, wharves, or equipment.

"SEC. 2. That in all actions hereafter brought against any such person, firm, or corporation under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not be considered.

"SEC. 3. That in any action brought against any such person, firm, or corporation under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for injuries to or the death of any of its employees, such employee shall in no case be held to have assumed the risks of his employment to prevent or limit recovery.

"SEC. 4. That any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any such person, firm, or corporation to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void: Provided, That in any action brought against any such person, firm, or corporation under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, such person, firm, or corporation may set off therein any sum it has contributed or paid to any insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employee or person entitled thereto on account of the injury or death for which said action was brought.

"SEC. 5. That no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued, or within two years from the death of the decedent, unless during that period there has not been reasonable opportunity for securing jurisdiction of the vessel, person, firm, or corporation sought to be charged: Provided, however, That after the expiration of a period of two years from the decedent's death the right of action hereby given shall not be deemed to have lapsed until 90 days after a reasonable opportunity to secure jurisdiction has offered.

"SEC. 6. That any receiver or receivers of any person, firm, or corporation liable under this act may be sued under the provisions of this act without first obtaining the consent of any court under whose jurisdiction such receivers may have been appointed.

"SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the rights of suitors in the courts of any State or Territory to a remedy given by the laws of any State or Territory in case of injury or death from injury received on the high seas or elsewhere.

"SEC. 8. That the personal liability of any shipowner or person sued under this act shall not be subject to any form of limitation on account of the provisions of Congress or general admiralty law as to limiting liability of shipowners."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, the point of order is made too late. The Chair has announced the result.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two Members are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEBB. Is this a vote on the bill or on the point of no quorum? The Chair has declared the vote on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair did declare the vote on the bill, but he will give the gentleman another opportunity. This vote is on the bill itself. Those in favor of the passage of the bill will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 284, nays 14, not voting 129, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

ST. PAUL, MINN., January 6, 1915.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Washington, D. C.:

I have to-day resigned the office of Representative to the United States Congress from the second congressional district of Minnesota.

WINFIELD S. HAMMOND.

THE SPEAKER'S MANUAL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to make an announcement of some interest to himself, and that is that somebody has—inadvertently, no doubt—carried away from the desk two copies of the Manual, annotated in lead pencil both by the parliamentary clerk and by the Speaker. If the gentlemen who have them will bring them back, we will give them two more copies, and it will save a good deal of hard work. The Chair wishes each Member would examine the copy of the Manual in his possession.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was called.

STANDARD BARREL FOR FRUITS, ETC.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4899) to fix the standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities other than cranberries shall be of the following dimensions when measured without distention of its parts: Length of stave, 28½ inches; diameter of heads, 17⅛ inches; distance between heads, 26 inches; circumference of bulge, 64 inches, outside measurement; and the thickness of staves not greater than four-tenths of an inch: Provided, That any barrel of a different form having a capacity of 7,056 cubic inches shall be a standard barrel. The standard barrel for cranberries shall be of the following dimensions when measured without distention of its parts: Length of staves, 28½ inches; diameter of head, 16½ inches; distance between heads, 25½ inches; circumference of bulge, 58½ inches, outside measurement; and the thickness of staves not greater than four-tenths of an inch.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful to sell, offer, or expose for sale in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to ship from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia or to a foreign country, a barrel containing fruits or vegetable or any other dry commodity of less capacity than the standard barrels defined in the first section of this act, or subdivision thereof known as the half barrel, and any person guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty of $1 and costs for each barrel so unlawfully sold or offered for sale or shipped, as the case may be, to be recovered at the suit of the United States in any court of the United States having jurisdiction: Provided, however, That no barrel shall be deemed below standard within the meaning of this act when shipped to any foreign country and constructed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser if not constructed in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which the same is intended to be shipped.

SEC. 3. That reasonable variations shall be permitted and tolerance shall be established by rules and regulations made by the Director of the Bureau of Standards and approved by the Secretary of Commerce. Prosecutions for offenses under this act may be begun upon complaint of local sealers of weights and measures or other officers of the several States and Territories appointed to enforce the laws of the said States or Territories, respectively, relating to weights and measures: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall apply to barrels used in packing or shipping commodities sold exclusively by weight or numerical count.

SEC. 4. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after the 1st day of July, 1915.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 18, strike out "subdivision" and insert "subdivisions."

Page 2, line 18, after the word "the," insert "third," and after the word "half," insert "and three-quarters."

Page 2, line 20, strike out the words "liable to a penalty of $1 and costs for each barrel so unlawfully sold or offered for sale or shipped, as the case may be, to be recovered at the suit of the United States in any" and insert in lieu thereof the words "deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable to a fine not to exceed $500, or imprisonment not to exceed six months, in the."

Page 3, in lines 1 to 7 inclusive, strike out the following words:

"Provided, however, That no barrel shall be deemed below standard within the meaning of this act when shipped to any foreign country and constructed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser if not constructed in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which the same is intended to be shipped."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to provide a standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities. The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures have had this bill and also the bill S. 2269, which passed the Senate last January, under consideration for a long time. Extensive hearings were given to many persons who appeared before our committee. The hearings disclosed the fact that there is practically no opposition to this bill. A bill somewhat similar, relating exclusively to apples, and known as the Sulzer bill, was passed in 1912. The Sulzer bill has created no complaint on the part of the trade. It has given satisfaction to such an extent that not only the producers but the commission merchants desire that it be extended to include all dry commodities.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman state whether the measurements given in this bill have the approval of the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. ASHBROOK. They have, and the bill has the approval of the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is the word "fruits" as used in this bill intended to be limited to dried fruits?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; dry commodities.

Mr. WINGO. Why does not the bill specifically state that?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Perhaps I do not understand the gentleman. I understand that dried fruits are sold by weight.

Mr. WINGO. Would this apply to fresh apples and fresh peaches?

Mr. HAY. Of course.

Mr. WINGO. Fruit fresh from the tree and ready to be shipped for market?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does that mean that peaches would have to be shipped in barrels?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think the gentleman is aware that peaches are not shipped in barrels. They are shipped in baskets and crates.

Mr. WINGO. Does the word "fruits" mean preserved fruits?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not believe anyone would ship fruit in a standard barrel simply because this bill was the law, if it become the law, if the fruit was of a kind that could not be shipped in a standard barrel. In other words, fruits that are now shipped in crates or baskets will not be affected in anywise by this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Peaches might be shipped in a barrel. It would be possible, but not practicable. They might be hauled to a local market in a barrel.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It could be done if the shipper wished to do it.

Mr. WINGO. The point I am trying to make is that you have not placed any definition at all on "fruits." "Fruits" would include any kind of fruit in any condition, dry, fresh, or preserved.

Mr. ASHBROOK. No one is compelled to ship fruit in a barrel.

Mr. WINGO. Section 2 says:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful to sell, offer, or expose for sale in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to ship from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia or to a foreign country, a barrel containing fruits or vegetables or any other dry commodity of less capacity than the standard barrels defined in the first section of this act.

The "dry" might be interpreted as a limitation on the word "fruits."

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think if the gentleman will refer to paragraph 3 where it says "Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall apply to barrels used in packing or shipping commodities sold exclusively by weight or numerical count," it will answer his question.

Mr. WINGO. What difference would that make? That would not be a limitation; they sell some commodities by weight, numerical count, or by package.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am not certain but that the contention of the gentleman is right.

Mr. WINGO. I have not seen this bill until this morning, but it seems to me that it might include canned fruit.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman means dried fruit?

Mr. WINGO. No; I mean canned fruit.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not think canned fruit is sold in any other way except by the can.

Mr. WINGO. In my district they sometimes sell it by the carloads. I will say that canned peaches, as a rule, are sold in carload lots by the larger canneries.

Mr. ASHBROOK. They are in tin cans.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; and they are put in boxes or cases, as they are called. Now, unless they are sold by the dozen or weight they would have to put canned peaches in a barrel.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will first yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks this is constitutional.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am not a constitutional lawyer, but I believe that it is.

Mr. THOMAS. The second clause provides—

That it shall be unlawful to sell, offer, or expose for sale in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to ship from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, a barrel containing fruits or vegetables or any other dry commodity of less capacity than the standard barrels defined in the first section of this act.

Does the gentleman think that Congress has the right to pass a law defining what kind of barrels people in the various States shall use in shipping their apples from one town to another within the State? That is what this bill does. This bill is seeking to control intrastate commerce.

Mr. TUTTLE. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, Solicitors of the Department of Commerce have said in a written opinion that this is constitutional, that it applies to intrastate as well as interstate commerce.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not care what he says. I have a right to my own opinion.

Mr. TUTTLE. That opinion is backed up by ex-Attorney General Bonaparte, who was Attorney General in 1907, and there are a long line of cases cited by Charles Earl, the Solicitor of the Department of Commerce, which I will put in the RECORD, all agreeing that it is constitutional and that there is no question about the right of the Government to fix the standard for intrastate as well as interstate commerce.

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1907.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

SIR: My opinion is requested, by your reference of a letter from the Bureau of Standards, as to whether, under the fifth clause, section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, Congress may enact a law which shall define the standard of weights and measures to be used throughout the several States and Territories of the United States, require all such weights and measures to bear a prescribed stamp, and make it a misdemeanor to use in trade any weights or measures departing from such standard or without such stamp.

I have the honor to answer this question in the affirmative on the following grounds:

In enumerating the powers granted to Congress, the Constitution provides (sec. 8, Art. I):

"The Congress shall have power: * * * To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures."

The proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, as recorded, add nothing to the simple words of this grant, as brief as they are comprehensive and as clear as they are precise. In the earlier drafts of the Constitution no mention was made of weights and measures. The clause, precisely as it now appears, though standing alone, was first introduced in the draft reported by the committee on detail August 6, 1787, and it was adopted by the convention August 16, 1787, without debate. It was combined with the clause granting the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof in the draft reported by the committee on style and arrangement September 12, 1787 (3 Doc. Hist. Const., 449, 545, 724; 8 Fed. Stat., An., 152). In the Federalist the power in question is noticed only by Madison, who says merely, "The regulation of weights and measures is transferred from the Articles of Confederation and is founded on like considerations with the preceding power of regulating coin" (Federalist No. 42). Referring to the Articles of Confederation, it is found that the power was there granted in the following terms (Art. IX):

"The United States, in Congress assembled, shall also have the sole and exclusive right and power of * * * fixing the standard of weights and measures throughout the United States."

The power to fix the standard of weights and measures having been granted to Congress without limitation, and the clause containing the grant having been "transferred" from the Articles of Confederation, where it was exclusive in terms, the view has been taken that it remains now as formerly a power exclusively vested in Congress, and it has been regarded as "doubtful whether the enactments of any State on the subject are of any validity whatever, even though Congress have wholly neglected to attend to this regulation." (The Miantonomi, 17 Fed. Cas., 9521.) This view, however, is not accepted either by the State courts or by general writers on the Constitution. (See Weaver v. Fegely, 29 Pa. St., 30; Caldwell v. Dawson, 4 Met. Ky., 123; Harris v. Rutledge, 19 Iowa, 390; Higgins v. Petroleum Co., 109 Cal., 310; and see remarks of Justice Woodbury in the Passenger cases, 7 How., 282, 562; but see Thompson v. District of Columbia, 21 Ap. Cas. D. C., 395, 402, where the court intimated that this grant to Congress "effectually prevented the several States from fixing standards that might vary and hence prove a hindrance to trade and interchange of commodities.") The view more widely held is that the power in regard to weights and measures is exclusive in Congress only when it is exercised, and that, pending such exercise, the several States may fix their own standards, or at least enforce existing standards. This is the position taken not only in the cases last cited, but by such commentators as Story, Pomeroy, Burgess, and Cooley, as shown by the following extracts:

"The other power 'to fix the standard of weights and measures' was doubtless given from like motives of public policy for the sake of uniformity and the convenience of commerce. Hitherto, however, it has remained a dormant power, from the many difficulties attendant upon the subject, although it has repeatedly been brought to the attention of Congress in most elaborate reports. Until Congress shall fix a standard, the understanding seems to be that the States possess the power to fix their own weights and measures, or, at least, the existing standards at the adoption of the Constitution remain in full force." (2 Story, Const., sec. 1122.)

"The power to fix the standard of weights and measures was left in the hands of the States, as well as of the General Government. As long as this power remains dormant in the National Legislature the local Commonwealths may fully exercise it. Although the standard of weights and measures is connected with the general subject of the trade, business, and commerce of the country, and although uniformity in this standard throughout the Union is demanded by considerations of expediency, yet it is evident that such a uniformity is by no means as essential as a common standard of coined money. Without the latter business would be interrupted and, in great measure, destroyed; without the former some inconveniences have been and are felt. * * * Should the National Legislature, however, change its policy and fix a standard for the whole country, all inconsistent State legislation would be a nullity." (Pomeroy, Const., sec. 410.)

"This can not be claimed as an exclusive power of the Legislature of the General Government as against the Commonwealths. Congress may occupy the ground whenever it sees fit, and the acts of Congress will displace the acts of the Commonwealths upon this subject; but until Congress acts, the Commonwealths may regulate the system of weights and measures." (2 Burgess, Pol. Sci. and Const. L., 141.)

"When this power is exercised, it is exclusive, or there would be no 'standard.'" (Cooley, Prin. Const. L., 85.)

Where, however, as in this case, a power is vested in Congress which is neither made exclusive by the terms of the grant nor expressly prohibited to the States, the true test of determining whether or not it is exclusive was long ago laid down by Chief Justice Marshall in Sturgis v. Crowninshield (4 Wheat., 122, 196, 191), in considering the power to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States. "The power granted to Congress," it was observed, "may be exercised or declined, as the wisdom of that body shall decide. If, in the opinion of Congress, uniform laws concerning bankruptcies ought not to be established, it does not follow that partial laws may not exist, or that State legislation on the subject must cease. It is not the mere existence of the power, but its exercise, which is incompatible with the exercise of the same power by the States. It is not the right to establish these uniform laws, but their actual establishment, which is inconsistent with the partial acts of the States. * * * The principle laid down by counsel for the plaintiff, in this respect, is undoubtedly correct. Whenever the terms in which a power is granted to Congress, or the nature of the power, requires that it should be exercised exclusively by Congress, the subject is as completely taken from the State legislatures as if they had been expressly forbidden to act on it." As already pointed out, the power to fix the standard of weights and measures, by the weight of opinion, is not in its "nature" one which "requires" that it should be exercised exclusively by Congress.

But it is not necessary that the power should be exclusive in order that Congress may deal with the subject in the manner suggested by the present inquiry. All the authorities are agreed that the power of Congress with regard to the standard weights and measures is plenary and complete, that it is only while it lies dormant that the States may act, and that once it is exercised State laws are displaced and, so far as inconsistent, nullified. It is clear, therefore, that Congress has ample power to enact a law which shall fix the standard of weights and measures to be used throughout the several States and Territories of the United States and require all such weights and measures to bear a prescribed stamp.

And it is no less clear that Congress may make it a misdemeanor to use in trade any weights or measures departing from the standard fixed or without the stamp prescribed. "Whenever Congress may adopt any particular measure, may require anything to be done or anything to be forborne, in carrying out the specific grants of the Constitution, it may declare acts of disobedience, or acts which tend to interrupt the accomplishment of the proposed design, to be crimes and may fix such punishment as it deems proper." This principle is not only sustained by the uninterrupted practice of Congress in the passage of enumerable statutes providing for the definition and punishment of crimes, but it has received the explicit sanction of the Supreme Court. In United States v. Marigold (9 How., 559, 566) the question was as to the validity of a statute which made it a crime to utter or circulate spurious or counterfeited coin. The decision sustained the validity of the law, although there was no express constitutional authority to enact it on the ground that such a law was one of the necessary and proper means for carrying out the power "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin."

"The power to coin money being thus given to Congress, founded on public necessity, it must carry with it the correlative power of protecting the creature and object of that power. * * * We admit that the clause of the Constitution authorizing Congress to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States does not embrace within its language the offense of uttering or circulating spurious or counterfeited coin (the term 'counterfeit,' both by its etymology and common intendment, signifying the fabrication of a false image or representation); nor do we think it necessary or regular to seek the foundation of the offense of circulating spurious coin, or for the origin of the right to punish that offense, either in the section of the statute before quoted or in this clause of the Constitution. We trace both the offense and the authority to punish it to the power given by the Constitution to coin money, and to the correspondent and necessary power and obligation to protect and to preserve in its purity this constitutional currency for the benefit of the Nation. Whilst we hold it a sound maxim that no powers should be conceded to the Federal Government which can not be regularly and legitimately found in the charter of its creation, we acknowledge equally the obligation to withhold from it no power or attribute which, by the same charter, has been declared necessary to the execution of expressly granted powers, and to the fulfillment of clear and well-defined duties." (9 How., 559, 566, 567, 568.)

In the Legal Tender cases (12 Wall., 457, 535) it was said:

"Congress is expressly authorized 'to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States, and to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the laws of nations.' It is also empowered to declare the punishment of treason, and provision is made for impeachments. This is the extent of power to punish crime expressly conferred. It might be argued that the expression of these limited powers implies an exclusion of all other subjects of criminal legislation. * * * Yet Congress, by the act of April 30, 1790, entitled 'An act more effectually to provide for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States,' and the supplementary act of March 3, 1825, defined and provided for the punishment of a large class of crimes other than those mentioned in the Constitution, and some of the punishments prescribed are manifestly not in aid of any single substantive power. No one doubts that this was rightfully done, and the power thus exercised has been affirmed by this court in United States v. Marigold."

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES EARL, Solicitor.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1908.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

SIR: In reply to your letter of February 11, 1908, in which you request my opinion upon the question as to whether under the fifth clause, section 8, Article I of the Constitution, Congress may enact a law which shall define the standard of weights and measures to be used throughout the several States and Territories of the United States, require all such weights and measures to bear a prescribed stamp, and make it a misdemeanor to use in trade any weights or measures departing from such standard or without such stamp, I have the honor to advise you that the question appears to be one of great importance, but not of much difficulty.

The fifth clause of Article I of section 8 of the Constitution, to which you refer, authorizes the Congress to "fix the standard of weights and measures." In the opinion of the solicitor of your department, of which you inclose a copy, the question is discussed as to whether this is to be considered an exclusive power, rendering any exactment which establishes a standard of weights or measures by any State legislature unconstitutional, or is one which will supersede such State laws when exercised, but leaves the subject matter open to legislation by the several States so long as the Congress shall deem it unnecessary or inexpedient to exercise the power conferred.

I express no opinion on this subject, because I do not see that it is embraced within the terms of your question or that it constitutes a question of law arising in the administration of your department. The above-mentioned clause of the Constitution empowers the Congress to fix the standard of weights and measures. This language implies necessarily that there shall be the one standard and only one, and the same conclusion is reached if we consider the meaning of the term "standard." This is defined by Webster's International Dictionary as follows:

"That which is established by authority as a rule for the measure of quantity, extent, value, or quality; especially the original specimen weight or measure sanctioned by government, as the standard pound, gallon, or yard."

In the nature of things, therefore, the standard fixed by the Congress will be the only legal standard as soon as the power to fix it shall have been exercised, and since this power has no territorial limitations, such as those conferred by the seventeenth clause of the same section, it must be understood as coextensive with the territory subject to the legislative power of the United States.

The Congress, having the authority to establish an exclusive legal unit for weights and measures, it can, under clause 18 of the same section, "make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing power," and if it shall make a provision that weights and measures shall bear a prescribed stamp and that the use of unstamped or incorrect weights or measures shall constitute a misdemeanor, it has clearly, in my opinion, constitutional authority to make laws to such effect. I have the honor, therefore, to advise you that the question asked in your letter on February 11, 1908, should be answered in the affirmative.

I approve of the publication of the opinion of the Solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and remain, sir,

Yours, very respectfully and truly,

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney General.

Mr. THOMAS. It makes no difference how many courts have said to the contrary, the bill on its face is plainly unconstitutional in that it seeks to control commerce purely within the State.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman from Kentucky, of course, is entitled to his opinion. The gentleman from New Jersey has stated that, in the opinion of high authority, it is constitutional.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman state who gave the opinion referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. TUTTLE. The first opinion was given by Solicitor Earle, of the Department of Commerce, in 1907. That was written, after a careful and exhaustive investigation, in reply to an inquiry as to whether laws of this character applying to intrastate commerce were constitutional. That opinion was confirmed at that time by ex-Attorney General Bonaparte. When this bill was under consideration it was submitted to the Solicitor of the Department of Commerce, and, in his opinion, there was no question about the validity or constitutionality of this act, and we have his written opinion, which I will be glad to insert in the RECORD:

IN RE SENATE BILL NO. 2269, TO FIX THE STANDARD BARREL FOR FRUITS, VEGETABLES, AND OTHER DRY COMMODITIES.

The above bill has passed the Senate and is now being considered by the House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. In the deliberations of this committee objections have been raised to certain provisions of the bill. At the suggestion of the Bureau of Standards, the opinion of this office has been requested as to whether these objections have been well taken, and, if so, what amendments should be offered to remedy the defects.

The objections referred to are stated by the bureau, as follows:

"First. It was contended that the exception made for barrels 'constructed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser' might be found an excuse for the possession of barrels which were not standard.

"Second. The provision that prosecution for offenses may be begun upon complaint of local sealers of weights and measures or from officers of the States is said to prevent action being started by anyone else.

"Third. Objection was made to the word 'prosecution,' because the actions were all civil and 'prosecution' applies to criminal cases.

"Fourth. There still remains a feeling that there should be no exception made for cranberries.

"Fifth. The general contention that this legislation is a function of the States rather than of the Federal Government."

1. Relative to the first objection, it may be stated that the bill does not prohibit the having in possession of barrels which are not standard. It merely makes it "unlawful to sell, offer, or expose for sale * * * or to ship * * * a barrel containing fruits or vegetables or any other dry commodity of less capacity than the standard barrels," etc.

(Sec. 2.) Not only could a person lawfully have in possession empty barrels which were not standard, but he could also lawfully have in possession barrels, not standard, containing the articles enumerated. Until he sold, offered, or exposed for sale, or shipped barrels, not standard, containing such commodities, he would not be subject to the provisions of the proposed act. Even if the bill were amended so as to prohibit the having in possession of barrels which were not standard, the proviso "that no barrel shall be deemed below standard when shipped to a foreign country and constructed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser," etc., would probably be construed as excepting such barrels from the preceding prohibitive provisions, for, it being lawful to ship such barrels to foreign countries, it could hardly be regarded as unlawful to have them in possession for that purpose. Were it otherwise, the proviso would be rendered nugatory.

I am, therefore, of opinion that, as the bill stands, the proviso to section 2, by impliedly permitting the possession of barrels which are not standard, does not afford an opportunity for violating any other provision of the bill, for the bill nowhere prohibits the mere possession of such barrels; and, furthermore, that even if the bill were amended so as to prohibit the possession of such barrels, so long as the proviso remains as it is, it would be lawful to possess barrel which are not standard, if intended for shipment abroad in accordance with the terms of the proviso.

2. By section 771, Revised Statutes, Congress has provided that:

"It shall be the duty of every district attorney to prosecute in his district all delinquents for crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, and all civil actions in which the United States are concerned * * *."

The authority conferred upon the local sealers of weights and measures or other officers of the States to institute proceedings under the proposed act is, in the absence of explicit language to the contrary, plainly to be regarded as supplemental to, rather than exclusive of, the authority vested in the various United States district attorneys by the above statute.

3. The objection here is to the use of the word "prosecutions," in the clause of section 3, which reads: "Prosecutions for offenses under this act may be begun upon complaint of local sealers of weights and measures," etc. It is urged that the word "prosecutions" applies only to criminal cases, and the suits to be brought under the proposed act are to be civil in their nature. I do not think this objection is well taken. As the bill declares the act against which it is directed to be "unlawful," and that "any person guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty * * * to be recovered at the suit of the United States," etc., the United States could, at its option, recover the penalty in a criminal action against such offender, or bring a civil suit of debt against him for the amount of the penalty. (Hepner v. United States, 213 U. S., 103; United States v. Stevenson, 215 U. S., 190.) But a civil suit in the name of and for the benefit of the United States can be instituted only by the proper district attorney, under the supervision and control of the Attorney General. As stated in United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co. (125 U. S., 273, 279):

"There must, then, be an officer or officers of the Government to determine when the United States shall sue, to decide for what it shall sue, and to be responsible that such suits shall be brought in appropriate cases. The attorneys of the United States in every judicial district are officers of this character, and they are by statute under the immediate supervision and control of the Attorney General."

In criminal cases, however, the proceedings preliminary to prosecution may be instituted by a "complaint" made by a private individual. The word "complaint" is of technical import. In some jurisdictions it is the name given to the first pleading in a civil suit, ordinarily termed a "declaration." It is certainly not used in this sense in the above bill, for the Government and not the local State officers will be the party to file the first pleading in any civil suit brought thereunder. In criminal actions a "complaint" is a sworn statement, usually in writing, made before a judge, magistrate, or other committing officer, charging the accused with the commission of an offense, which may be followed by the issuance of a warrant of arrest, and the preliminary examination and binding over of the accused. (12 Cyc., 290.) In Hale v. Henkel (201 U. S., 43, 49) the functions of a "complaint" are thus described: "An accused person is usually charged with crime by a complaint made before a committing magistrate, which has fully performed its office when the party is committed or held to bail."

There would appear to be no objection, therefore, to the use of the word "prosecutions" where it appears in the bill, for it is only in criminal proceedings that a "complaint" may be made by anyone. But the statement in the bill, that "prosecutions * * * may be begun upon complaint," would seem to involve an inaccuracy, for it has been held that a "complaint" does not begin the prosecution which may follow it. Thus in Virginia v. Paul (148 U. S., 107, 119) the court says:

"Proceedings before a magistrate to commit a person to jail, or to hold him to bail in order to secure his appearance to answer for a crime or offense, which the magistrate has no jurisdiction himself to try, before the court in which he may be prosecuted and tried, are but preliminary to the prosecution, and are no more a commencement of the prosecution than is the arrest by an officer without a warrant for a felony committed in his presence."

The provision in question should, therefore, be amended. If the purpose is to authorize local State officers to initiate criminal proceedings against offenders, I would suggest that the provision be amended to read:

"For any violation of the provisions of this act the offender may, upon complaint of local sealers of weights and measures or other officers, etc., be arrested and imprisoned or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before any court of the United States having jurisdiction."

If, however, the purpose is to require that proceedings for the recovery of the penalty, either civil or criminal, shall be instituted whenever the aforesaid State officers have information that the act has been violated, the following should be substituted:

"It shall be the duty of each district attorney to whom any local sealer of weights and measures or other officer of a State or Territory appointed to enforce the laws of the said State or Territory, respectively, relating to weights and measures, shall present satisfactory evidence of any violation of this act, to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States for the enforcement of the penalty herein provided."

4. This objection does not involve any question of law. It is purely a matter of legislative policy to be determined by Congress.

5. The Constitution provides (Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 5) that "the Congress shall have power * * * to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and to fix the standard of weights and measures." Relative to this clause the Attorney General, in an opinion rendered to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, dated February 13, 1908, said:

"The above-mentioned clause of the Constitution empowers the Congress to fix the standard of weights and measures. This language implies necessarily that there shall be the one standard and only one, and the same conclusion is reached if we consider the meaning of the term 'standard.' This is defined in Webster's International Dictionary as follows:

"'That which is established by authority as a rule for the measure of quantity, extent, value, or quality; esp., the original weight or measure sanctioned by the Government, as the standard pound, gallon, or yard.'

"In the nature of things, therefore, the standard fixed by the Congress will be the only legal standard as soon as the power to fix it shall have been exercised, and, since this power has no territorial limitations such as those conferred by the seventeenth clause of the same section, it must be understood as coextensive with the territory subject to the legislative power of the United States."

And in Ex parte Siebold (100 U. S., 371) Mr. Justice Bradley, in discussing the question whether an act might be an offense against both the Federal and State laws and punishable under both, said (p. 391):

"So if Congress, as it might, should pass a law fixing the standard of weights and measures and imposing a penalty for sealing false weights and measures, but leaving to the States the matter of inspecting and sealing those used by the people, would not an offender filling the office of sealer under a State law be amenable to the United States as well as to the State?"

In view of these authorities, there would seem to be no question that Congress may, as soon as it sees fit to do so, exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the subject of weights and measures throughout the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

ALBERT LEE THURMAN,
Solicitor.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

Referred to the Bureau of Standards.

———, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, when I first examined the bill it occurred to me that the committee had undertaken to standardize the containers in which the shipments are made, but on a more careful examination of the bill it disclosed that it has merely undertaken to standardize the barrel. If the chairman of the committee will permit me to make an observation, I will say that there is very great demand in the trade and the country generally for the standardization of the containers in which fruit is shipped. If a man does not want to ship his peaches in a barrel—and we do not ship them that way in Texas—he does not come within the provisions of this bill. The bill merely says, as I understand, that if you ship your fruit in a barrel it must be in a standard barrel which is defined in this bill, and for that reason it seems to me that the bill ought to pass, because you not only standardize the cubic contents, but you standardize the quality, and the lack of standardization is one of the greatest difficulties that the honest producer has in protecting himself against the dishonest man who puts his in containers that do not contain the full amount, and thereby short-weights the people.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio this question. In the report he says the bill would standardize the barrel for interstate and foreign commerce, and for intrastate traffic as well. Here you have Congress absolutely attempting in this bill to regulate intrastate traffic, and that is to take away the rights of the fruit growers in a State to ship their products in the kind of barrels they desire within the State. And yet the other day in this House I heard a great deal of discussion about the rights of the States. Now you come and want to take away the right of the States even in the shipment of their fruits. I do not care if all the ex-Attorneys General in the United States and all the lawyers in the United States and all the courts in the United States declare that this bill is constitutional, it is plainly unconstitutional.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman would not take the decision of the courts?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, as to the binding decision of the courts of this country, they cross their own tracks as often as that of a fox pursued by a pack of hounds. This bill is plainly unconstitutional.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it is only necessary, to answer the objection of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS], to read the Constitution, which, evidently, he never has done. Among the powers expressly granted to Congress is that to fix the standard of weights and measures. It is not one of the reserved powers of the States and never has been. It is expressly given to Congress to fix the standard of weights and measures for the whole United States, and because it has not before been done is only because Congress has not chosen to exercise the power given directly to it by the Constitution of the United States. Whenever Congress does so choose to exercise that power every State law in existence will go out of effective operation if it conflicts with the provisions of the act of Congress made in pursuance of the power given to it by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] has the floor.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether this bill, if passed, will in any way affect the shipment of apples or any character of fruit that the producer may desire to ship in any other way—in a box or in any other kind of a receptacle?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If he cares to ship it in a tub, he may do so; but if he ships it in a barrel and says it is a barrel, then it must contain the cubic contents provided for in this bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. If a farmer wanted to ship apples in a box, this would in no way affect him?

Mr. ASHBROOK. In no way at all, if he ships it as a box.

Mr. RUSSELL. But when he ships in a barrel, the purpose of this is to standardize the barrel?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If he sells a barrel of apples, it must contain 7,056 cubic inches, if he represents it to be a barrel of apples.

Mr. RUSSELL. I notice in the report that it is stated that this bill has been advocated by various associations engaged in the fruit and produce business. Does the gentleman know whether those associations represent the men that handle the fruit, the commission merchants, or do they represent the producers, and do they, the producers, favor the passage of this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. We have had before the committee representatives not only of commission merchants but of the producers and, so far as my knowledge goes, there is no opposition on the part of the producer or the trade from any section of the country.

Mr. RUSSELL. It seems to be generally desired, then, you think, by all concerned to standardize the barrel?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It does.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield.

Mr. HAY. I just want to call attention to the argument made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] as to the constitutionality of this law. Of course, there is no question about the fact that Congress has the right to fix a standard, but the point made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] was, as I understood him, that Congress did not have the right to interfere with the commerce within a State. The second section of this bill has nothing to do with fixing the standard of the barrel, but it says that it shall be unlawful to sell, offer, or expose for sale, in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, a barrel containing fruits or vegetables or any other dry commodity of less capacity than the standard barrel defined in the first section of this bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If it is sold as a barrel or as a part of a barrel.

Mr. HAY. Wait one moment. Under that law if a man had a barrel that did not hold as much as a standard barrel and exposed for sale any fruit in that smaller barrel in a State, even upon his own farm, he would be liable under this law to be prosecuted and put in jail.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Or if it was a larger barrel.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Oh, no.

Mr. HAY. If it is a smaller barrel. That has nothing to do with the standardization of the barrel. That has to do with exposing for sale within a State of the fruit or any other product provided for to be sold in a standard barrel. If you undertake to ship it from one State to another, that is another proposition, and Congress, of course, has the right to control the shipments of any product in interstate commerce, but not within a State itself. It does seem to me that the committee ought to amend this bill so as to avoid the constitutional objection, which has been raised, and I think properly so, by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to the fact that the clause of the Constitution which empowers Congress to fix the standard of weights and measures also empowers Congress to coin money. In other words, both provisions are in one clause, and that clause gives to Congress the power—

To coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coins, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

Now, as to money, there is no question but that Congress has the absolute power to say what money can be and what can not be used as legal tender in a State.

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. COOPER. Nor can there be any question that under the provision of the Constitution that I read Congress has the power—power unrestricted and without qualification—to coin money and to fix the standard of weights and measures.

Mr. HAY. I do not deny that.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman admits that this power to fix the standard of weights and measures is without restriction or qualification. But the mere fixing of a standard—the mere calling a thing a standard measure—is of absolutely no avail unless there be attached a penalty for the use of any other than the standard measure for the purpose for which it is established, just as it would be of no avail for Congress to coin a standard gold dollar, if the States at the same time were at liberty to coin other kinds of standard dollars and make them legal tender in the payment of debts.

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes; the Constitution especially prohibits the coinage of money by the States.

Mr. COOPER. There used to be State-bank bills everywhere, and we taxed them out of existence.

Mr. HAY. That was not coined money.

Mr. COOPER. No; but it was paper money.

Mr. MANN. We only stopped it by a tax upon it.

Mr. COOPER. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. We never attempted to prohibit it.

Mr. COOPER. The power to tax is the power to destroy. But the point which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] makes against this clause of the bill is that it would prohibit the sale of apples from or the exposure of apples for sale in a barrel of any except the certain standard size specified in the bill.

Mr. HAY. In a State.

Mr. COOPER. But in my judgment the gentleman is clearly wrong in his reading of the bill. It does not prohibit the sale, nor the offering for sale, of apples from a barrel. It prohibits the sale, or the offering or exposing for sale, of a barrel containing fruits, and so forth, unless it be a standard barrel. The language is:

That it shall be unlawful to sell, offer, or expose for sale in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to ship from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia or to a foreign country a barrel—

Containing so-and-so. Not that it shall be unlawful to expose apples in a barrel for sale, but unlawful to offer to sell a barrel containing apples unless the barrel is of lawful standard size. That is the point. It is exposing for sale a barrel containing apples. It proposes to regulate the selling of the barrel and its contents. That is what it means. It does not relate to the exposure for sale of apples from or in a barrel or in or from a paper bag; not at all, but to the sale or to the exposure for sale of the barrel itself and its contents.

Mr. HAY. Containing fruits or vegetables.

Mr. COOPER. Well, a barrel. You shall not expose that barrel with its contents for sale as a barrel, except it be of standard size.

Mr. HAY. That is the very thing I say; this bill will prohibit it.

Mr. COOPER. It ought to prohibit it. This bill is, in my judgment, clearly constitutional and ought to be enacted into law; for not only do we need what we have long enjoyed, a uniform system of money for all the States, but we need also what this bill seeks to provide, a national uniform system of standard weights and measures which knows nothing of State lines.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I want to call attention to the fact that the confusion seems to be that the section is ambiguous; that if you should expose apples in a barrel not of a standard size, not to be sold by the barrel, you might incur this penalty. What is the objection to amending section 2 so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful to sell by the barrel, or offer or expose for sale by the barrel, in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to ship from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, a barrel containing fruits or vegetables, etc.

Mr. COOPER. In reply to the gentleman from Missouri I have to say that I never saw this bill until it came up for consideration a few minutes ago. I think, however, that it is drawn as it ought to be drawn.

Beyond all doubt the business of the country needs a uniform national system of standard weights and measures. Then why not have a standard barrel? It could not work a hardship upon any person, but, on the contrary, would be of much benefit to producers and consumers everywhere.

The language of the clause under discussion is, I think, entirely correct.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Speaker, I am not a constitutional lawyer, and I would like to read from some constitutional authorities. I cite Solicitor Earl in 1907——

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for a brief interruption right there? To show that my contention was correct. I call attention to the proviso which my friend from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] has brought to my notice—the proviso, page 3, line 16, as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall apply to barrels used in packing or shipping commodities sold exclusively by weight or numerical count.

Mr. TUTTLE. That covers the ground.

Mr. COOPER. It covers it exactly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TUTTLE. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Conceding the constitutional authority that has been referred to, which I do not question, what authority does the gentleman find for undertaking to say what shall be the thickness of the stave?

Mr. TUTTLE. That has been established by custom and by usage. As the gentleman knows the standard measurements are the development of custom.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The standard of measure refers to contents. What constitutional authority does the gentleman find for undertaking to say that a stave shall not be more than four-tenths of an inch? I question the right to fix that.

Mr. TUTTLE. Well, that is not important, the circumference——

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TUTTLE. I will.

Mr. SISSON. In my State we are not so much interested in the apple proposition as in the thickness-of-the-stave proposition. Now, you will find one character of timber, white gum, out of which you can make very thin staves; but red gum, which is more easily split and one of the most plentiful timbers in the South, you require a very much thicker stave to make a barrel. Now, it is immaterial to the stave people and timber people about the cubical contents of the barrel, nor would there be much objection, perhaps, to the size and thickness of the head, but when you endeavor to prescribe the thickness of the stave you may eliminate from the barrel industry certain timber that is now being used and cause barrels to greatly advance in price.

Mr. TUTTLE. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that this bill provides for that contingency.

Mr. SISSON. Where?

Mr. TUTTLE. In the next provision:

That any barrel of a different form having a capacity of 7,056 cubic inches shall be a standard barrel.

In case that thinner staves are used, it must have the cubic capacity.

Mr. SISSON. Would the gentleman have any objection to eliminating from his bill the clause in reference to the thickness of the staves? It strikes me that is utterly immaterial as to the good your bill will accomplish, and that is the most serious objection in my mind, because a man getting apples wants to know this and this only—that his barrel will keep the fruit intact and that he is receiving the cubical capacity. It is a matter of great concern to the man who is manufacturing staves.

Mr. TUTTLE. I want to say to the gentleman that these measurements have to be taken on the outside circumference of the barrel. If a man used staves an inch thick he would be beating his customers that much.

Mr. SISSON. You will find that the stave or the barrel maker will never do it, because they will make the barrel as thick as they can in order to get them on the market.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will permit, it says:

And the thickness of staves not greater than four-tenths of an inch.

Mr. SISSON. From some of the timber out of which they make barrels it would be difficult to make staves that would be perfectly good, unless you made them thicker than two-fifths. Now, if you leave the cubical contents of the barrel in your bill—the inside measurement of your barrel—intact, there could be no objection whatever on the part of thousands of people who are engaged in manufacturing staves. The classes of people who must be consulted here are the public which buys the fruit, the dealer, and the people who furnish the barrels.

Mr. TUTTLE. I will say to the gentleman that representatives of all the cooperage industries from all over the United States have appeared before our committee. The language of this bill meets their approval entirely, and there has been no objection so far as I know. This bill has been under consideration, and this language has been known for the last four years, and no one ever appeared in opposition.

Mr. SISSON. I have my doubts whether all the cooperage people have or not.

Mr. TUTTLE. Well, through their organization.

Mr. SISSON. I have great doubt about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TUTTLE. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume then that the physical content of the standard barrel is the same as is stated here in the bill for those barrels that are not of the same thickness as prescribed in the bill?

Mr. TUTTLE. They must have those contents.

Mr. STAFFORD. That the cubic content of the standard barrel is the same as stated on page 2 for those barrels that are not of the same dimension, of the thickness of the standard barrel.

Mr. TUTTLE. Of the standard barrels; that is true.

Mr. SUMNERS. Would the committee have any objection, in order that we who favor the general plan may all support this bill, to describing the barrel by its cubic capacity and leave out this detail with reference to how the barrel shall be constructed? After all, it is the contents of the barrel that the committee is concerned about and which the country is concerned about.

Mr. TUTTLE. I think the chief objection to it would be the difficulty of administration. It appears it is a very, very difficult matter to ascertain the cubical contents of a barrel or cylinder, and if you should make that provision, it would be difficult of administration and slight changes would cause a good deal of fraud.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TUTTLE] having yielded the floor, what was the evidence before the committee as to the practice of the coopers in making of barrels. Is it or is it not true that an overwhelming percentage of the barrels now made by coopers and sold to the trade comply to the provisions we propose to enact here?

Mr. ASHBROOK. A very large percentage now comply with the conditions described in this bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not that approximately as large as 90 per cent?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is my recollection.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman state what producers came before the committee—I mean producers of fruit; particularly, say, apples—and announced themselves in favor of this bill, and will you give the names of some of those who did so appear?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will have to refer to the hearings.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman state, while he is looking it up, whether anybody came from Michigan or not and said that they were satisfied with this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not recall whether there were any representatiives from the State of Michigan or not. We had hearings for four or five days.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman ought to be able to give the names of some of the producers.

Mr. THACHER. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that Mr. Westcott, of Virginia, representing the Eastern Virginia Produce Exchange, with a membership of about 3,000 farmers, appeared and supported the bill very strongly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. From Virginia?

Mr. THACHER. From the eastern shore of Virginia.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I would like to know whether the producers of the West expressed an opinion in regard to this bill?

Mr. THACHER. I believe you will find their names in the hearings. I can not recall them.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Here is Mr. H. R. Pennington, of Evansville, Ind. He says:

I represent the Western Fruit Shippers of America.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. He is a shipper and not a producer.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if this attempt to fix the standard of weights and measures of apples is not a departure entirely from the ordinary way in which we fix the standard of weights and measures of all other products? For instance, we fix the measure of wheat, oats, and corn, and everything of that kind, by the bushel or pound, so many pounds constituting a bushel. Now, you say in your bill that a certain space shall constitute a barrel of apples. If you stopped right there nobody would object to it, but you go beyond that and provide that if anybody attempts to ship a barrel of apples containing a less quantity than that he shall be subject to penalties.

Now, suppose you take the case of those regions or countries where the large companies go out and buy the fruit on the trees. They are the ones, as I understand, who are behind this project to fix the standard of the barrel. A man who has an orchard may not want to sell his apples to those people, and he may prefer to pack his apples in sugar barrels or salt barrels or other barrels, and by this act he would be cut off. Why not establish a standard barrel of apples and stop right there, and not punish the man who attempts to give something else than that?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It might be that the enactment of this law would work some hardship to some farmer who had a few bushels of apples to sell, but in my judgment and in the judgment of the committee if the standard is fixed it is likely that all the barrels will be made of this standard size, and there will be no trouble for the people to quickly adjust themselves to it.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Right in connection with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT], I want to say that it will be possible for the men who control the barrel industry to prevent small farmers and apple raisers from shipping their apples at all. I would like to know if anybody has come here representing the fruit growers of Arkansas and advocated the passage of this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I can not tell the gentleman the localities of all who appeared before the committee.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Does the gentleman know of any fruit growers of Arkansas who have advocated the passage of this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that at the time the committee had hearings there was a convention of some sort held here in this city, and representatives of that convention came before the committee and indorsed this bill. And I will say further that of course while I do not know to what extent the people of the country are aware that this bill is pending, no complaint has ever been made against the bill on the part of any, so far as I know.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. JACOWAY. I wish to say to the gentleman that in various parts of Arkansas a man could not get a barrel, perhaps, of the prescribed size. He would use a hogshead or some other kind of container. Then, in that case, he would be subject to a fine under this bill, would he?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If he shipped a barrel and it did not contain the number of cubic inches prescribed by this bill, he would be subject to prosecution.

Mr. JACOWAY. This bill prescribes a certain number of cubic inches in the barrel?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. JACOWAY. Is not this bill drawn in favor of the buyers of the apples that are on the trees?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is in favor of the people. The object of the bill is to benefit the people and prevent short changing the consumer.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Under this bill suppose a farmer not desiring to ship his apples out of the country at all finds that when he comes to market his apples in the local market, these very buyers, who have great organizations and control the whole buying industry of fruits for shipment, have a monopoly of all the barrels of this standard variety, and he can not buy them; and they are buying fruit on the trees, and he goes to the village store or somewhere else where he can get flour barrels or barrels of a different description, and proposes to sell his apples in the local market, not as barrels of apples but apples contained in barrels for purposes of sale. Would he be liable? It might be that he would have to use coal-oil barrels.

I think the gentleman's bill is wrong in this: A barrel of apples or a barrel of any commodity has a technical meaning just like a bushel has, a meaning denoting measure, apart from its meaning simply as a container. Now, he says, "Here is a barrel containing certain fruits or vegetables, but not representing same as a standard barrel or unit of measure." Your bill ought to be so worded that if a man sells a barrel as a barrel in a technical sense, when in fact it contains a less quantity, he would be guilty of the violation of the law, and if he simply had his fruit contained in some sort of a barrel and sold it as fruit in a barrel he ought not to be liable. I think the wording of the bill is unfortunate.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that we have a standard bushel, and yet if you have corn or potatoes to sell and wish to sell them in a barrel and do not represent the number of bushels therein, you can sell them in that way.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. You would sell the contents in that case?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes. Let me illustrate my idea of the fault in the wording of this provision: What you are trying to prevent here is the perpetration of a fraud by a dealer selling by the barrel apples in barrels that do not contain a barrel, taking the standard barrel as the measure of its contents, weight, or measure. I think the bill should read somewhat in this way: "It shall be unlawful to sell, offer, or expose for sale in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to ship from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia or to a foreign country, by the barrel, fruits or vegetables or any other dry commodity in barrels of less capacity," than prescribed in the bill.

You see, the word "barrel" has two meanings. A barrel might contain 100 bushels of apples, if you made the barrel large enough. It might contain the unit of measure known as a barrel, a barrel in contents, or 20 such barrels. What you desire to prohibit, as I understand, if you are going to legislate upon the subject, is the misuse of a barrel used as a unit of measure, just as a bushel is used as a unit of measure in a technical sense. You might have a large coal-oil barrel. In one sense it would be a barrel and it would contain fruits or vegetables, and yet under your bill a man could not sell fruits and vegetables in such a barrel.

Mr. ASHBROOK. He could sell them in a crate or a basket.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Your bill does not say so. It says "a barrel containing fruits and vegetables." It would be a barrel containing fruits and vegetables, and yet you prohibit its sale, although the man who sold it made no pretense of selling the fruit by the barrel

Mr. ASHBROOK. A barrel containing fruits or vegetables or any dry commodity of less capacity than the standard barrel defined in the first section of this act——

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Suppose a barrel had the capacity of 1 bushel.

Mr. ASHBROOK. He has the right under this bill to sell one-third, one-half, three-quarters, or one barrel.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I understand that; but suppose it was of less quantity and not the exact proportion described in the bill. You are imposing all kinds of difficulties upon the fruit producer. You are giving the fruit buyer and the men in control of the fruit market the advantage in this proposition. It is a barrel maker's bill and a vegetable and fruit buyers' bill, not a fruit grower's bill, in my judgment.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If your contention is right, the fact remains that we must always legislate in the interest of the majority, and the majority of the people are consumers and not producers.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I do not object to legislating in the interest of the majority, and I do not object to defining the technical barrel, in order to prevent men from perpetrating frauds in the sale of any apples or any other commodities; but here you define what shall be a technical barrel, the length of the staves, and so forth, and then you provide that if anyone sells apples or other fruits or vegetables in a barrel not corresponding with those dimensions he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, although he may be selling to a neighbor who has full knowledge of the irregular contents of the barrel. He may not have a box or any other container in which to put them, and so he dumps them into a flour barrel, and under this bill the sale is prohibited. I am opposed to the bill in its present form.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for a very brief question.

Mr. THOMAS. Is that all?

Mr. ASHBROOK. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 50 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like five minutes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will ask the Speaker to call my attention when I have used 55 minutes. I desire to reserve 5 minutes of my time.

Mr. THOMAS. I only want five minutes.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Three minutes. I promised to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, the author of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is true that Congress has the right to legislate concerning weights and measures. That seems to have been a new discovery on the part of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] to-day. But this bill goes beyond that. If it simply fixed a standard of measure I do not suppose anyone would object to it, but it absolutely prevents the producer from exposing for sale or offering for sale any fruits or dry commodity in a barrel, except it be in that kind of barrel set out in this bill; and I submit that Congress has no constitutional right to pass any such law.

I am sorry the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] makes a personal matter of this thing. He says that I have never read the Constitution. He may have read the Constitution many times. A man may read forever and never understand. [Laughter.] If I had read the Constitution of my country only one time I believe I would be more familiar with it than the gentleman from Iowa, who pretends to have read it many times. Mr. Speaker, if self-esteem was the measure of intelligence, the gentleman from Iowa would be a wiser man than ever Solomon was in his day and generation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, it has been intimated, if it has not been charged in so many words, that this bill is written in the interest of the barrel makers of this country. I wish to say that no such statement as this is warranted by the facts. The farmers of the State of Virginia—at least those with whom I have conversed upon the subject—favor the passage of this bill. A large number of the farmers of the district which I have the honor to represent, to my certain knowledge, are urging its passage, and will be greatly disappointed if it should fail of passage.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JONES. In a moment. There are two counties in my district that I am informed raise about 5 per cent of all the Irish potatoes produced in the United States. The potato growers of these counties sent a representative to this city, who appeared before the committee having charge of this bill and most forcefully urged the passage of a measure providing for uniformity in the size of barrels. Had I the time, I would read his statement to the House, for it is both illuminating and convincing. There is on the eastern shore of Virginia a cooperative farmers' association known as the Eastern Shore of Virginia Produce Exchange. It is composed of a large number of farmers who are engaged in growing potatoes that are shipped all over the United States, and they are deeply interested in this proposed legislation. For years they have been urging the passage of a bill of this character, and I believe that this bill, if enacted into law, will greatly promote the interests of the farmers of every section of our country. I know that the lack of uniformity in the requirements of the various States as to the size of barrels has caused much confusion and great loss to the farmers whom I represent here, for the Eastern Shore potato is shipped into perhaps as many as 40 of the States of the Union. There can be no constitutional objection to this character of legislation, for the Constitution itself expressly confers upon Congress the power to fix the standard of weights and measures.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TUTTLE], the author of this bill.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Speaker, the House is asked to pass this bill under the authority of clause 5, section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, which gives Congress the power to "fix the standard of weights and measures." Although the language of the Constitution is very plain and very explicit, and although the early Presidents—Washington, Adams, and Jefferson—repeatedly urged the importance of the subject, Congress during all these years has failed to establish any standard of weights and measures. Even the yard, the pound, the gallon, and the bushel have never been ordained by Congress, but were adopted by the Treasury Department, and have been voluntarily accepted by the States.

Owing to the failure of Congress to enact this needed legislation from time to time the several States have undertaken to fix their own standards, with the result that we have to-day a mass of diverse, inconsistent, and contradictory laws. Business has suffered greatly from the lack of uniform standards as bases of contracts and our domestic and foreign commerce is seriously hampered by the conflicting laws of the various States.

There has grown up in recent years a tremendous demand for a uniform and honest system of weights and measures. This demand has been met in part by the State legislatures, which have recently passed many progressive laws along these lines, and many States have provided for the standard fixed in this bill. Others have hesitated because there has been a question even as to the constitutionality of State laws fixing the standard of weights and measures or because they have anticipated that Congress would exercise the power granted it by the Constitution. As a result there is confusion and confliction all over the country.

The demand for a standard barrel started many years ago. It is not instigated by the coopers or the barrel makers. It comes from the growers and distributors of merchandise everywhere. The association of which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] has just spoken is a typical organization of producers who demand this legislation. Here are three or four thousand potato growers on the eastern shore of Virginia who have small truck farms. They can not pack their potatoes in barrels and ship them to Massachusetts or New York or New Jersey or the Western States, because they may have trouble with the size of the barrel.

The legal barrel of Virginia is 1 inch shorter than that of Massachusetts, New Jersey, and New York. A legal barrel at point of shipment becomes a fraud barrel at destination. The producers have appealed to us from all parts of the country for a national standard. Commission merchants, organizations of fruit growers in the West and on the Pacific coast, have come before the committee for the last four years urging this legislation. It has been advocated by the merchants in the great cities; it has been urged by State and municipal weights and measures officials. The national conference of sealers of weights and measures, which meets annually at the Bureau of Standards in Washington, has indorsed the measure.

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TUTTLE. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. Are the requirements in this bill the same as that in the New York law?

Mr. TUTTLE. They are exactly the same as in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, and a number of other States, which have tried to pass uniform legislation in conformity with the recommendations of the Bureau of Standards here in Washington. Dr. Stratton, the director of that bureau, is earnestly in favor of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from New Jersey, and in the meantime I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on the bill or who may speak on it may have five legislative days in which to extend remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on the bill, or may speak upon it, shall have five legislative days to extend remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. At this time I shall object.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I made the request at the suggestion of gentlemen who had only one or two minutes' time and who wished to have more time.

Mr. MANN. That does not do the House any good. Let us pass the bill, and then I do not care who extends remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the same dimensions of the barrel as the Sulzer bill, which was passed by the Sixty-second Congress. It provides for the barrel which is in common use for dry commodities. It is the legal barrel in many States. It has been demonstrated to be the most practical package. It is the universal flour barrel. This bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the Sixty-second Congress and by the same committee of this Congress. It has passed the Senate without a dissenting vote, and it is a practical, wise, and useful measure.

Objections have been offered that the bill should not be mandatory. It has been suggested that its provisions should be permissive and optional instead. I submit that this Congress does not desire to pass an optional or permissive standard bill. We can not have a permissive gallon, bushel, or yard. A law, if it is going to be effective, if it can be enforced at all, must be mandatory.

The object is to carry into execution the power of Congress to fix a standard of measure, and "in the nature of things," observes Attorney General Bonaparte, in a carefully prepared opinion, "the standard fixed by Congress will be the only legal standard as soon as the power to fix it shall have been exercised." In other words, an act of Congress fixing a standard of measure is a mandatory law. It could not, nor should it, be anything less. A permissive law would in no way remedy the existing evils; something more rigid and positive and direct is absolutely necessary in order to accomplish the good that is aimed at. A permissive law would not provide for a uniform standard. On the contrary, it would contemplate the maintenance of a diversity of standards. It would permit by inference the continuance in use of the various types of smaller barrels, which now give rise to much confusion in the produce business. It would not supplant or supersede the present conflicting State legislation. It would not supply the element of uniformity which is so essential to orderly and fair dealing between sellers and buyers. It would not furnish a safe basis of contract.

The vast majority of producers, distributors, and those having to do with the administration of weights and measures' laws desire mandatory national standards, to the end that fraud may be prevented, that uniformity may be insured, and that trade may be facilitated.

There has been some fear expressed that the interests of the small producer may be injured by the mandatory standard barrel, and that he will be hampered in his dealings with his neighbors. In my judgment, this fear is unfounded. A standard-sized package has a definite, well-defined market value, while packages which are irregular in size and shape are exceedingly difficult for the honest merchant to dispose of, and they afford the unscrupulous dealer an opportunity for robbing the producer of his just due.

The grower, of course, desires to pack his produce in honest and marketable containers, but it is to-day impossible for him to pack in compliance with the laws of the different States. His greatest protection would be a national standard container, which could not be questioned in any market to which his goods may be shipped. Under this proposed law the small producer will not be interfered with in the least so long as no fraud is attempted or perpetrated. He may sell by the pound, the peck, the bushel, the wagon load, or whatever unit is most convenient, but if he uses the barrel as a unit of measure and value, it must be a standard barrel. Moreover, it will be difficult for him to obtain any but barrels of standard dimensions, because practically all barrels available for the shipment of produce are of these dimensions or of greater capacity, as, for instance, the sugar barrel.

But the interests of these small producers are insignificant when compared with the great bulk of producers, both large and small, of all kinds of fruits and vegetables throughout the country, the marketing of whose product involves not only intrastate but interstate movement as well. Fully 90 per cent of our agricultural output enters interstate commerce, and here the trouble begins. Those who ship in barrels are confronted with the difficulties and the embarrassment which arise from the great variety of legalized sizes used in the several States.

A Michigan barrel has a capacity of less than 80 per cent of the lawful Massachusetts barrel. The Virginia barrel is 1 inch shorter than the New Jersey barrel. The Tennessee barrel of potatoes must hold 2½ bushels; a Connecticut barrel 172 pounds; but 160 pounds will go in Kentucky, or 165 pounds in Maine. A North Carolina barrel must have three nails to the hoop, but over in Tennessee four "flour" nails are required. Maryland has one standard for fruits and another for potatoes and other vegetables. Ohio generously provides for a barrel of 2 inches greater circumference than other standard barrels. Some States require that barrels shall be marked standard, others are silent on this point. More than half of the States have not bothered to pass any weights-and-measures legislation at all, and presumably their citizens accept any kind of a package that is handed them.

It is true that we have "gotten along" without this legislation, but it is also true that the extensive interstate exchange of perishable fruits and produce is of comparatively recent origin, and its more recent prodigious growth has made Federal action absolutely necessary. Owing to the inaction of Congress State laws are multiplying which will be a serious handicap to interstate trade, and there is pressing need of national legislation.

Another objection is that this bill is unconstitutional because it applies to intrastate transactions. I can only refer those who feel that we are stretching our authority to the opinions of Charles Earle, Solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor, written May 15, 1907; Charles J. Bonaparte, Attorney General of the United States, February 13, 1908; and Albert Lee Thurman, Solicitor of the Department of Commerce, May 5, 1914. These opinions appear in another place in the records of to-day's proceedings and effectively dispose of any contention that Congress has no jurisdiction over the standard measures used in intrastate commerce.

A separate standard is provided for cranberries, because they are the only berries or small fruit shipped in barrels and are decidedly different in character from all other commodities marketed in barrels. It appears that the cranberry can not be packed in the ordinary barrel without serious loss and deterioration, and the container described in this bill is deemed by those familiar with the trade to be the most desirable. The dimensions are those fixed by law in the three States which produce the bulk of the cranberry crop, namely, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and Wisconsin, and the cranberry business has been developed upon the basis of this measure.

The adoption of these standards will be a distinct step forward and will mark the beginning of what I hope and believe will be the establishment of an honest and uniform system of weights and measures applying in all of the United States. It is high time that we act; it is high time that we respond to the wishes of the great body of our countrymen that the present conflicting, inconsistent, incompatible, and contradictory State laws be superseded by such a system of Federal laws as was contemplated by the founders of the Republic. I hope that the House will pass this measure and by so doing add to its reputation for sound, practical, and useful legislation.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I understand gentlemen on the other side wish to be recognized, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRAMTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. CRAMTON. I wish to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us has really two purposes, first, to prescribe what shall be a standard barrel, or, rather, what shall be two standard barrels, and, second, to prohibit the sale of certain commodities in any other kind of a barrel smaller than stipulated in the first section. I am entirely in sympathy with the general purpose sought to be secured by the proposed bill. I have no question as to the power of Congress to pass this kind of legislation. I do submit, however, that the bill proposed is more radical and far-reaching than is either necessary or desirable, and hence I am opposed to this particular measure.

It is significant that, although the power to prescribe a standard has existed in the Constitution since the time the Constitution was framed, we have never until this time passed legislation prescribing standards of this kind. It is easy to understand that when we consider the different methods of doing business that have come about because of changes in conditions. Originally the producer and consumer were near together, and because of their nearness and acquaintance they could do business much differently than is possible now when potatoes in Virginia are sought to be shipped all over the country, and apples from Oregon are likewise shipped East. Hence there has grown up, I admit, the need for a standardizing, so that when a contract is entered into for a certain number of barrels of apples it shall be possible for those who are drawing the contract to refer to some kind of a measure that will be well defined and which both parties may understand alike. Also, when the buyer goes into the open market and buys a certain number of barrels of apples, that he may know what he is getting, if he desires to know it. That need brought into existence two years ago a law known as the Sulzer law, which defined a standard apple barrel. That law has been in effect only since the 1st of July a year ago, and still to-day the beneficent operations of that law are the basis not only for this bill, but for the one which follows it from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the standard apple box bill.

The strange thing, however, is that while, as you will hear when the standard-box bill comes before you, there is universal satisfaction with the operation of the Sulzer barrel law in the apple trade, as was testified in the hearings, and as will be urged upon you, and while this satisfaction with the operation of the Sulzer law is the basis of all argument for the Raker box bill—and the Raker bill is patterned after the Sulzer law—and for this barrel bill for other dry commodities, still they have absolutely changed the form of the Sulzer law in extending it in this barrel bill. The Sulzer law is permissive. The Raker standard-box bill which comes before you from this Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures with a favorable report is likewise permissive, and still the same committee comes out with this standard-barrel bill, urges in behalf of it the successful operation of the permissive Sulzer law, and yet makes it absolutely mandatory; and it is because of that mandatory provision that I am now opposing the bill.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. TUTTLE. The gentleman understands, of course, that the Sulzer law was primarily to fix the grades of apples and to prevent fraud in the apple trade rather than to fix the standard of weights and measures. It would be manifestly impractical to make compulsory grades and to compel shippers to ship their apples according to grades.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand that the Sulzer law did refer to the grades as well as to the standard of measure, but I do not understand and I do not find anywhere in the hearings that that was the primary object of the bill.

Mr. TUTTLE. I do not think the gentleman has read the hearings very carefully.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have read all of them that I could find. The Sulzer law, as the gentleman said, did provide for other things than the standard measure, but these features of the bill do not especially concern us here; but it did specify a permissive standard of measure just as we propose to do in the Raker box bill. In this bill you propose an absolutely mandatory provision, so that this bill before us extends the Sulzer law in two directions. First, it makes the requirement of the use of the standard barrel mandatory instead of permissive, and then, second, it extends it to all kinds of dry commodities except those excepted in the proviso in section 3, so that not only is this mandatory measure to apply to apples, as did the Sulzer law, but it is to apply to cabbages, potatoes, or any other vegetables or fruit, to sugar, to flour, to crackers, to any other kind of commodity that you can think of that is not sold absolutely exclusively by weight or by numerical count.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Very briefly.

Mr. TUTTLE. The gentleman understands that those articles which he has just enumerated are all sold by weight and by numerical count.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not exclusively. Does the gentleman not recollect ever of hearing of people buying a barrel of flour or a barrel of sugar?

Mr. TUTTLE. Flour is sold by weight.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have heard of sugar, and sugar quoted by the barrel, and if it is sold by weight, it is not sold exclusively by weight or by numerical count. The Sulzer law being of a permissive nature and this being mandatory, it becomes incumbent upon me, perhaps, to show something as to what has been the operation of the Sulzer law. My contention is that the thing that is necessary now is to take a moderate, reasonable step, and as that proves satisfactory and the trade in all these various lines becomes accustomed to it, then we can take other steps as we think best, but it is neither desirable or necessary to take a headlong plunge all at once. The Sulzer law, being permissive in terms, has not caused any inconvenience or trouble to the small dealers, who are not interested in the proposition, but has, through the demands of interstate trade, proven mandatory, so that the result desired is accomplished without causing serious inconvenience, criticism, or opposition, which we should avoid where possible. Jobbers in Chicago or New York who desire to buy Oregon apples under the Sulzer law will insist in their contracts that the barrel be branded in accordance with the law.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I understand that they do not sell Oregon apples by the barrel, but by the box.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is correct, but if the gentleman will substitute Michigan for Oregon, the example will hold just as well; and there may be some one even in Oregon who would prefer to use barrels. The demand of the trade forces the man who wants to sell in large quantities in interstate trade to comply with the Sulzer law. That is not a matter of theory. There are a lot of enthusiasts in this movement, a lot of officials who, because they become sealers of weights and measures, forthwith want to put their ideas into law and force them into the law of the country. There are other enthusiasts in the produce and fruit business who want to force their ideas on the country. On the other hand, there are some men who ought to know what they are talking about, who are practical men, who speak from experience, and who tell us that the operation of the Sulzer law, so far as apples are concerned, after only a year of operation has brought about wonderful results. At the risk of being tedious I want to refer to what some of those gentlemen have stated. Mr. Whisler, of Medford, Oreg., is acknowledged to have been the author of the standard-box bill that is coming before you. He is president of the Oregon State Horticultural Society and known throughout the country wherever horticulture is known, one of its authorities in this country, and he said before the committee when asked about this matter that he could not say of his own knowledge as to the operation of the Sulzer law, but that he met at the convention of commission merchants in Kansas City a purchaser of Maine apples from Maine, and this man said to him, "I wish I could go before that committee of the House of Representatives in order that I might testify to them as to the advantage which the apple-barrel trade throughout the State of Maine has received from that legislation." That was the permissive Sulzer bill.

Again, hear Mr. S. L. Lupton—president of the Eastern Fruit Growers' Association, Winchester, Va. His statement here is of some length (see Hearings Feb. 12, 1914, p. 60), but the point of it is that in the year that the Sulzer bill has been in effect "practically one-half," he says, "of the apples in our section this year were packed and sold by contract under the provisions of the Sulzer bill." Half of them in the great fruit-growing section of Virginia went under it in the first year. He further says "they were a little timid, not about the barrel feature, but about the packing provision, and hence they did not all go in the first year, because they were afraid they might unconsciously, unintentionally violate the law," but he says "that has worked off, and we expect next year a great many of our growers will overcome that feeling." The permissive form is producing results.

Again, Mr. R. G. Philips, of Rochester, N. Y., secretary of the International Apple Growers' Association, and I am only quoting men who have been brought here by the advocates of this bill and the Raker bill, says:

I could cite you one of the Rose Cliff fruit farm, of Waynesboro, Va. In picking auction sheets of apples that were sold on the Liverpool market in October last, my attention was called to the remarkably high prices that the apples put out by that firm were bringing on the Liverpool market. I looked along down and found "Standard grade, minimum size 2½ inches." All of those apples put out from that farm were packed under the provisions of the Sulzer bill. I know on that one particular shipment of 160 barrels, it brought anywhere from 3 to 10 shillings over any other apples sold at that sale on the Liverpool market, with the exception of 6 barrels of Kings which came from Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. And you think the guaranty to the merchant and the consumer that these apples did come up to those standards established by law had a great deal to do with that?

Mr. PHILIPS. There is absolutely no question about it, and the former president of our association, Mr. Loomis, last year, when the bill had not even gone into effect, packed over 50,000 barrels in accordance with that bill, and his testimony was that in not a single instance among those 50,000 barrels thus packed did he have any complaint or rejection, or any allowances to make, while on the other apples which he handled, which were packed in the old way and branded in the old way, there were constant rejections and constant allowances demanded.

Now, I know apples have been packed in Illinois under the Sulzer bill with excellent results, and every one who has tried it has reaped the reward of doing so; he has been amply paid for it. There is no question but what it was a splendid bill and that the principles of it were sound, and that as soon as we can have a little time—it all takes time to get these things in operation—but there is no question that as soon as we can get a little time to get it going and thoroughly understood it is going to be of tremendous influence in the advancement of the apple industry in the United States.

That is the permissive Sulzer bill. They only want a little time, men who know what they are talking about, to get it in operation and get the desired results, and still this bill before us is to be thrust upon every dry commodity industry in the United States, mandatory; got to get it going inside of a few months. It is ridiculous.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I do not want to divert the gentleman from the line of his argument if he has got anything further on that line, but if the gentleman intends to begin a new line of thought——

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not quite finished.

Mr. SISSON. I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the enforcing clause of this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will take that up later. I would rather continue on this now.

Mr. SISSON. I did not desire to interrupt the gentleman, but I want to hear what the gentleman had to say in reference to the enforcement of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think there could be a great deal of improvement of the bill as to its provisions.

Mr. SISSON. Take, for instance, a small shipment of apples from the State of Oregon to New York. I desired to know whether or not the prosecution in New York might not make it dangerous for a man to ship apples unless he had his barrel absolutely right.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say now I believe the law is so severe in its mandatory form that a man who only has a small business will keep out of interstate trade and lose that trade rather than run the risk of prison or fine for an unintentional violation of its provisions, just as shown in the testimony of Mr. Lupton I read from, who said that they had been timid about this in Virginia even under the permissive Sulzer bill. I now yield to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I simply wanted to ask my colleague whether there is any difference in the cubical contents prescribed by the Sulzer law from those prescribed in this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think they are the same. I will say, in this connection, that in both cases it is absolutely an arbitrary standard that has been arrived at. It is not 3 bushels, although we generally think of a barrel as being 3 bushels. It is not 3 bushels, but it is an arbitrary standard which has been arrived at by the wide experience of the apple growers as a desirable standard; and at this time I might say, also, that one of the industries it was urged to force the apple standard upon was the cranberry industry.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In a moment. But the cranberry people were well organized and were wide awake, and they made known the facts about their industry and stated that they could not use this standard, and showed why; and so we have likewise in this bill a cranberry standard barrel and the other standard barrel, and this is what I prophesy, because there was not before that committee a single witness to testify as to the needs or wishes of any industry in this country except the fruit industry and the potato growers of Virginia; and hence, because of a lack of information, after this law has been in operation and forced upon these other industries—the sugar people, the cracker people, and others—we will discover cases where we have imposed a terrible hardship on some industry unintentionally, and they will be coming back here, and there will be a demand for some other barrel that shall be used by some other industry; and hence, instead of having, as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] would have us have, a standard barrel, this bill provides for two standard barrels, and in the future I can see other standard barrels on their way.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan whether there is any law in his State standardizing a barrel?

Mr. CRAMTON. There has been some legislation, but I am not entirely familiar with it.

Mr. JONES. Can the gentleman state whether or not a barrel in Michigan is smaller than the barrel provided for in this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Perhaps the gentleman from New Jersey can give that information.

Mr. JONES. I have been informed that it is smaller, and I want to say to the gentleman it is also true of my own State that at first, if the gentleman will permit me, the farmers in my State were opposed to this bill because it provided for a larger barrel than is provided for in my State.

But they have come to the conclusion that the important thing is uniformity, and therefore favor this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not time to yield further, Mr. Chairman. If the gentleman intended to infer at all that my opposition to this bill was because the farmers of my State were using smaller barrels than other States were using, I want to say he is entirely wrong in his inference. I wrote to a number of people in my State—the secretary of the State grange, the head of the Gleaners, and to others, and wanted to get their opinion about this bill and did not receive an answer either for or against.

Mr. JONES. I distinctly said to my friend that my State had a barrel that was smaller as well as his State.

Mr. COOPER. You say that your State has a barrel prescribed?

Mr. CRAMTON. I said I thought so.

Mr. COOPER. The law is mandatory?

Mr. CRAMTON. I said I did not know what the law was.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman would not be in favor of a law in Michigan which would leave it optional with men to fix the size of a barrel?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not asking to have Michigan excused from the operation of any Federal law that is a good law. I feel it incumbent to impress it upon you that the Sulzer bill, which is a Federal law, in its permissive form is accomplishing that which it was aimed to accomplish, and so would the Tuttle bill if it followed the form of the Sulzer bill.

In a letter from Mr. Pennington, of Indiana, he says:

> We appreciate so much the good that has been done by the Sulzer bill that we feel that we can not urge too strongly your early and favorable consideration of this box bill, which will, in a measure, put box apples on the same level with barrel apples and protect the interests of all in the same manner

There are many other letters similar.

Also, Mr. C. C. Willis, who is a member of the State Board of Agriculture of Montana, says:

> This bill is of vital importance to the fruit growers of the entire Northwest, as it gives them a standard package, as does the standard barrel to the eastern growers.

Mr. TUTTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Just for a question.

Mr. TUTTLE. May I inquire if the gentleman has received any protest against the passage of this bill from any grower, any producer, any distributor of these commodities which are covered?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I may reach wrong conclusions, but I want to say to the gentleman that it is not necessary for me to get a bunch of protests against the bill before I can form a conclusion concerning it. As I just stated a moment ago, I wrote to the men in my State who I thought might be interested, and got no replies for or against. My position on this is absolutely because of my own judgment as to its provisions.

Now, if I can go back again to the operation of the Sulzer bill, Mr. Wagner—and I can not just tell you who he is, but it having been stated by Mr. Reichman before the committee that the Sulzer bill was not worth the paper it was written on, Mr. Wagner stated in part:

> Now, to qualify as an expert, I will say that I have been so engaged for 32 years in handling all of these commodities packed in barrels. As Mr. Reichman has said, as applied to the general subject, this thing is largely theory. We have got to get down to the practical features of it, and I just want to straighten up one or two matters.

And one of them was what Mr. Reichman had said.

> I do want to take exception to one thing that Mr. Reichman said and the gentleman from Vermont, and that is as to the workings of the Sulzer bill. The Sulzer bill, while permissive, has nevertheless worked a revolution in the apple business; and I will take issue with even the gentleman from New York relative to the comparative quantity of short-measure barrels in the city of New York within the past two years as compared with years prior. I come from Chicago, where we have millions of barrels of apples—not quite so many as in New York City—and I want to say that there has not been brought to my attention in the past two years—and I have watched for it—one single case of short-measure barrels for apples.

That is under the permissive Sulzer bill.

Again, there was an additional statement from Mr. R. G. Philips, secretary of the International Apple Shippers' Association, of Rochester, N. Y.:

> Mr. PHILIPS. Mr. Chairman, I feel obliged to make one little statement so that no misapprehension may arise with reference to the Sulzer bill.
> At a previous hearing before this committee, as you know, several of us gave our testimony with reference to that bill, and I must take issue with the statement of Dr. Reichman this morning that it is not worth the paper that it is written upon, and what I have said heretofore I am ready to repeat and to prove.

And, again, in the hearings I find the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, now the chairman of the committee, Mr. ASHBROOK, saying:

> I was about to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Sulzer bill is optional, and my understanding is, and I believe it is the understanding of the members of this committee, that that bill is working out very satisfactorily; and this present bill is patterned along the same lines as the Sulzer bill, but embraces all other commodities.

This bill is not entirely along the lines of the Sulzer bill, being mandatory instead of optional.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will my colleague permit me to submit an inquiry? This bill provides a standard cranberry barrel and a standard apple barrel?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; a standard for all other commodities except cranberries.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In reality it does not fix a standard barrel, then?

Mr. CRAMTON. It fixes two standard barrels.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Is it not liable by fixing two standards to produce confusion? Does this, after all, fix a standard? Why should there not be the same standard for cranberries as for other things?

Mr. CRAMTON. The favorite argument of those favoring a mandatory standard is this: "We do not want a yard that is not a yard; we do not want a foot that is not a foot; why permit a barrel that is not the standard barrel?" And still facts shown before the committee absolutely proved that the cranberry people could not do business successfully under this other standard, and we had to give them their kind of a barrel in order to fit their case, and so we are offered in this bill two standard barrels, and there will be some other industry that will find its toes pinched just the same and call for another.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I was going to ask the gentleman if that is not likely to happen?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Have not the people who wanted a pork barrel been satisfied yet? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. That is rather personal to many here, I am afraid.

I believe I have submitted sufficient testimony to show that the Sulzer bill, so far as the industry it was intended for is concerned, has proven a success; that it has accomplished what it was expected and desired it should accomplish, and therefore that all of the results urged in behalf of this new bill could likewise be accomplished by a similarly permissive bill.

Now, on the other hand, I submit that by a radical, mandatory bill like this we are running all kinds of risks. We are plunging head length into something that we know very little about. As a result we are going to endanger the welfare of lines of business to-day we are not thinking about.

Furthermore, you are going to stir up unnecessary opposition in the minds of people against this whole standardization proposition. For instance, if I should write to my good friend Bullock, up in Lapeer County, and ask him to ship me a barrel of apples, if he did not happen to have at hand just the particular kind of barrel that this bill provides for he would go to the grocery store and get instead a cracker barrel or a cranberry barrel, and by so doing he would be subject to a fine and imprisonment in sending that barrel of apples to me, even though he was satisfied and I was satisfied that he had sent me just as many apples as I had paid for.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. If this bill should not go into effect until July 1, does not the gentleman think that between now and July 1 his friend Bullock would have time to obtain a standard-sized barrel?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to my friend from Wisconsin that my friend Bullock is getting into the habit of using boxes just as people out West are using them. But other farmers needing just a few barrels for the purpose of shipping things to town would not know about the law, and would not know about it the 1st of July next, and they would be caught; and fellows who did not happen to have a lawyer would think they would be obliged to go out of the shipping business because they did not feel sure what all the requirements of the law might be.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be desirable to amend the bill as to the time at which it takes effect? And will not the general effect of such a law be that the people who manufacture barrels will comply with the law, so that the people who use the barrels will get the right kind of barrels provided for them?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that even under a permissive law that would be the case, and even in the case of a permissive law that would work out so far as the great bulk of the trade is concerned. But the small shipper, the man with a few barrels of apples, doing business at home within a small radius, would be the last one to know about the law, and he should be the last one who ought to be required to conform to it unless he wants to.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the small shipper of apples does not make his own barrels?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; he gets them by going to the cooper or going to the grocery store and getting a few barrels there that are available.

Mr. MANN. So that if you passed a law of this kind the effect will be that all the great manufacturers will comply with the law?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; in the course of time, whether it is permissive or mandatory.

Mr. MANN. Would it in the course of time be so where it is merely permissive, because in some of the States now the standard of barrels of various articles is different from that provided for in this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not feel like taking the time just now to repeat all that I have said, but I will say to the gentleman that, in my judgment, in compliance with the demands of the trade, the jobbers in Chicago will specify in their contracts, when we have once defined what a standard barrel is, that their apples will have to be packed in the standard-sized barrels, and that will govern the action of the producers and of the coopers alike.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. CRAMTON. I regret I can not yield. I want to get through, in order to give way to my friend from South Dakota.

Mr. TUTTLE. I wanted to inquire of the gentleman if there were any standard-sized barrels made in Michigan in accordance with the Michigan law?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think we have a law, but I do not know what it is.

Mr. TUTTLE. The standard barrel prescribed there is somewhat smaller and longer than the ordinary flour barrel.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield further to the gentleman.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hardship and inconvenience and annoyance that this bill is going to cause to the small producers unnecessarily is going to give rise to a feeling of antipathy to the entire proposition of Federal supervision of these matters. I say we ought to go slowly and surely and have each step approved on its merits before we take another step.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HELGESEN. As to these small shippers that the gentleman is defending, when they go to the grocery and can not get the standard-sized barrel are they to be prevented from disposing of their products? Is there anything to prohibit the small shipper from selling his apples by the bushel? If he sold them by the bushel, in that case he would comply with the law.

Mr. CRAMTON. No. This bill provides that it shall be unlawful to sell a barrel of apples or fruits of less than the standard capacity of the barrel. It says it is "unlawful to sell * * * a barrel containing fruits or vegetables or any other dry commodity of less capacity than the standard barrels," even if the buyer and the seller and everybody else knows that it is a fraction under the standard barrel. Except for the fractional barrels, the third, the half, and the three-quarters expressly authorized, it is unlawful to fill a barrel smaller than the standard with apples and sell it to anybody, even if you mark all over it the words "This is not as big as the standard barrel," and your invoice bills them by the bushel.

Now, I shall not at this time take up any time in discussing the amendments that I have to offer. I intend to offer one that will make the bill permissive in its operation. There are some other suggestions that I want to make, but at this time I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves 25 minutes.

Mr. DILLON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DILLON. I am a member of the committee, and I want to discuss this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to it or in favor of it?

Mr. DILLON. I am in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for one hour.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, the Tuttle bill has my hearty support; the Raker bill my opposition. The Tuttle bill proposes a mandatory standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities. The bill as reported by the committee permits barrels of any form having a capacity of 7,056 cubic inches. It allows the fractional three-fourths, one-half, and one-third barrels. It also establishes a standard cranberry barrel containing 100 pounds.

It prohibits the sale of these commodities in any barrel of less capacity than the standard barrel specified and provides a criminal penalty for those who violate its provisions. The provisions of the bill apply to interstate and intrastate shipments. The bill allows reasonable variations and tolerance under rules and regulations of the Bureau of Standards. It further provides that the provisions of the act shall not apply to commodities sold by weight or numerical count.

The important question is, Shall we have mandatory laws for standard measures or permissive makeshifts? Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution gives Congress the absolute power to fix the standards of weights and measures. For 125 years this congressional power has for all practical purposes remained dormant, during which time the States, under police power, have taken over the governmental function pertaining to weights and measures until 48 legislative bodies are now passing diverse, inconsistent, and chaotic laws.

This is a great national subject which affects the interest of every citizen in the land. Let us set our faces like flint against permissive legislation in reference to standards of weights and measures and enact mandatory laws or none at all.

It will not be amiss to call attention to some of the inconsistent and contradictory laws that are now strangling our commercial and national life. Bills of exchange and commercial paper follow the commercial transactions of our people into all the States. The merchant in Chicago transacts business with the citizens of all the States, yet the law governing his commercial paper is controlled by the laws of 48 States.

The makers of the bill of exchange may live in one State, the payee in another, while the indorsers may live in a half dozen States. In one State the holder must protest the paper at maturity, in another he need not do so; in one State he must sue at the first term of court, in another he must pursue his debtor with diligence; in one State his paper is illegal, in another it is valid; in one State his rights are barred by the statute of limitations, in another there is no bar.

The marriage and divorce laws ought to be uniform, because they are national in character. Yet in one State a common-law marriage is valid, while in another it is invalid. A marriage of cousins in one State constitutes holy wedlock, while in another it is made criminal. In one State the colored man may lawfully marry a white woman, while in another such a marriage is prohibited.

The laws of the States in reference to divorce are still more inconsistent and are as diverse as it is possible to make them. The State of South Carolina permits no divorce. New York allows an absolute divorce for adultery only, while many of the States allow the decree on diverse and numerous grounds. Uniformity is nowhere to be found.

The Court of Appeals of New York in People v. Baker (76 N. Y., 78) held:

A State may adjudge the status of one of its citizens toward a nonresident, and may authorize to that end such judicial proceedings as it sees fit, but the judgment can have no effect within the bounds of another State so as to fix upon a citizen of the latter a status against his will and without his consent, which is in hostility with the laws of the sovereignty of his allegiance.

In this case the wife obtained a divorce in the State of Ohio, the husband remaining in New York State, thinking the divorce so obtained by the wife was good as to him; he remarried in the State of New York, and on trial for bigamy the court held that the Ohio decree of divorce in favor of the wife did not affect or change his status in New York, and his conviction of bigamy was sustained.

Thus the great court of New York reached the conclusion that the defendant was guilty of bigamy; because his status was not changed by the Ohio divorce he was still married, while his Ohio wife was single; she was restored to the condition of a single person, but he was still married to her; he was not her husband, but she was his wife.

The results of these decisions are such that one may be a married man in one State, but when he crosses the boundary line of the State he suddenly finds himself a single man. The marriage in one State is holy wedlock, but in another State it opens the prison doors for him as a bigamist.

What progress have the States made in establishing uniformity in these matters? Absolutely none. Discord and inconsistencies constitute the fruits of their labors.

No power is adequate, except the national power, to protect our people against the inconsistent laws on subjects that are wholly national in character. The diversity and conflict will continue, and greater will be the peril as the Nation grows older.

THE BUSHEL AS A MEASURE.

The States have certainly juggled the weight of the bushel measure. Here, again, is a shining example of the diversity of our State laws.

A bushel of salt in 10 States is 50 pounds and in 7 States it is 80 pounds. A bushel of onions in Indiana weighs 48 pounds, in Pennsylvania and Rhode Island 50 pounds, in Delaware, Maine, South Dakota, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Hampshire, North Dakota, and Vermont 52 pounds, and in 20 other States 57 pounds.

A bushel of parsnips in Iowa and Minnesota weigh 42 pounds, while Indiana says they shall weigh 55 pounds. A bushel of dried peeled peaches in Tennessee weigh 26 pounds, while Virginia fixes the weight at 40 pounds. A bushel of pears in Oregon, Montana, and Washington weigh 45 pounds, while in New Hampshire they weigh 58 pounds.

North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and Virginia potatoes are sold at 56 pounds per bushel, while in 37 States they sell at 60 pounds per bushel. Maine fixes the weight of apples at 44 pounds per bushel, while Arkansas, Minnesota, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio, Tennessee, and Wisconsin say they weigh 50 pounds per bushel.

In Louisiana barley weighs 32 pounds per bushel, while in California it weighs 50 pounds per bushel. Beets are sold in 5 States at 50 pounds per bushel, while 8 States must sell at 60 pounds per bushel. The weight of buckwheat in California is 40 pounds per bushel, while in Kentucky it weighs 56 pounds per bushel. Broom-corn seed in North and South Dakota weighs 30 pounds per bushel, while across the line in Minnesota it takes 57 pounds to make a bushel.

Shelled corn in many States is 60 pounds per bushel, while ear corn is 70 pounds per bushel, yet you could not get into a bushel more than 30 pounds of ear corn. The weight is evidently based on a sufficient amount of ear corn to make a bushel of shelled corn. Nine States fix red-top grass seed at 14 pounds per bushel. Virginia fixes it at 12 pounds per bushel, yet the clean seed weighs 30 pounds per bushel.

Notwithstanding the fact that 20 States had fixed a bushel of onions at 57 pounds per bushel, Minnesota a few years ago, finding that the actual weight was 52 pounds, made that the weight of a bushel.

The discrepancies are further perpetuated in the subdivisions of the bushel measure. For instance, you would find it impossible to get one-fourth of a bushel of parsnips into a peck measure.

The bushel measure has by custom ceased to be a standard of measurement. In practice it hardly appears at all. The Winchester bushel was established in England in 1701 with a capacity of 2,150.42 cubic inches. In 1826 the imperial bushel was legally established in Great Britain with a capacity of 2,218.192 cubic inches. The English measure of the bushel is 3 per cent larger than the Winchester bushel. The British gallon is 20 per cent larger than the United States gallon.

The National Government in its custom work at ports of entry has adopted the Winchester bushel by custom, not by direct legislation. Some of the States rest their measures upon custom, while others have fixed the number of pounds contained in a bushel by legislative enactment.

The trouble came in defining the contents of the bushel. We have the struck bushel and the heaped bushel of various forms. The heaped bushel was intended to be 25 per cent greater than the struck bushel. By statutory law New York declared for the heaped bushel with contents of 2.815 cubic inches, while Indiana, Ohio, Mississippi, and Maryland declared for the struck bushel of 2,050.42 cubic inches. Nearly all of the other States rest their bushel measure upon custom, while the Government at its ports of entry recognize the struck bushel. The bushel in the United States ranges from 1,925 cubic inches to 2,815 cubic inches.

There is no uniformity, and there never will be any, until Congress legislates and makes mandatory standards.

THE BARREL AS A MEASURE.

The barrel measure does not tie up to any standard whatever. Sometimes it contains three Winchester bushels. The flour barrel is usually 196 pounds and the beef and pork barrel 200 pounds.

In New York the barrel is 7.056 cubic inches, or 904.74 cubic inches more than three Winchester bushels. On August 3, 1912, the Sulzer permissive apple-barrel bill became a law. This barrel contains 7,056 cubic inches. The Delaware barrel contains 11 pecks. Florida has a standard tub for clams and oysters, two of which make a barrel.

The Maine barrel contains 7,000 cubic inches. The Virginia apple barrel, containing 11 pecks, constitutes the Virginia standard. Vermont has a permissive barrel of 100 pounds, 105 pounds, and 196 pounds for flour. Massachusetts has a 150-pound potato barrel; Maine, Massachusetts, and Kentucky a 165-pound potato barrel; Wisconsin a 172-pound potato barrel; and New York a 174-pound potato barrel. Pennsylvania has a 280-pound salt barrel, and Wisconsin has a 200-pound lime barrel. South Carolina measures her beef and pork by the gallon, 30 gallons making a barrel. Many States have legislated upon the dimensions of the barrel, giving diameter at head, the circumference of the bulge on the outside, and diameter of the bulge on the inside.

We look in vain for uniformity in any of our weights and measures. King Solomon 3,000 years ago declared the diverse weights and measures were an abomination to Jehovah. Like grievances led to the declaration in the Magna Charter that there should be but one weight and measure throughout the kingdom.

The States will never establish uniformity in our weights and measures. They have been trying for 100 years and have made a mess of it. The National Bar Association, the governors of the States at their annual meetings, and commercial associations everywhere are demanding uniform laws on subjects that are national in character.

Many of the laws that ought to be uniform will never become so through the activities of the State legislatures. Nothing except an amendment to the Constitution will uproot the evil growing out of inconsistent legislation. However, we have no difficulty except indifference upon the subject of a uniform system of weights and measures because express power has been given to Congress to establish for the people a uniform system of weights and measures.

What authority is capable of coping with these evils except the strong power of congressional legislation? The framers of our Constitution more than 125 years ago declared that the weights and measures should be controlled by the national power. The States have been justified, under their police power, in legislating upon this great national question, but the time is now at hand when the National Government must step forward and bring order and uniformity out of chaos and end for all time an intolerable condition.

On January 4, 1915, I introduced H. R. 20525, a bill fixing the number of net pounds of various commodities required to make a bushel. If Congress will enact this legislation it will establish uniformity in all of the States for practically all commodities and thus forever put to rest the conflict of State laws that is now hampering and strangling commerce between States.

The Sulzer apple-barrel act was approved on August 3, 1912. It is based upon the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, and is permissive only. It permits three grades of apples. The bill under consideration is mandatory in its terms, and the barrel is of the same size specified in the Sulzer Act. It is not confined to interstate shipments, but provides for a standard barrel in intrastate as well as interstate shipments, not only for apples but for all vegetables and dry commodities.

Some 25 or 30 persons interested in standards appeared before the committee and gave their views upon this subject. They were practically unanimous in demanding a mandatory standard.

Mr. Hugh H. Henry, of Chester, Vt., commissioner of weights and measures, said:

If you have not made it mandatory, you have not prescribed a standard; you have simply allowed everybody to have a standard for himself.

Mr. Lucius P. Brown, Knoxville, Tenn., superintendent of weights and measures, said:

Permissive legislation is worse than no legislation at all.

Mr. F. Reichman, of New York, a delegate to the conference on weights and measures, said:

I am thoroughly in favor of mandatory legislation.

Mr. L. A. Fischer, of the Bureau of Standards, said:

I am in favor, of course, of mandatory legislation. * * * We have had more or less permissive legislation in this country, I think, for over a hundred years, and we are in almost the state that China is at the present time so far as our standards for weights and measures are concerned.

Hon. E. E. BROWN, Representative in Congress from Wisconsin, said:

Practically all the cranberry-producing States, all the dealers, all the associations, and all who handle cranberries are unanimous in asking this Congress to fix a standard barrel and make it mandatory and not simply optional.

Hon. T. C. THACHER, Representative in Congress from Massachusetts, said:

I wish to indorse the Tuttle bill and its mandatory features.

Mr. N. P. Wescott, representing the Producer's Exchange of Olney, Va., said:

The only way to establish a uniform standard is to establish a uniform standard by a mandatory enactment which will make this the uniform and only standard for the entire United States.

Mr. William L. Wagner, representing the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association, Chicago, Ill., said:

There is only one place to start anything of this kind, and that is here. What we need absolutely is a national standard.

Mr. A. U. Chaney, of American Cranberry Exchange, New York, said:

We do not care whether you say "standard" or not, so you give us a mandatory standard, whether you call it a standard or a barrel. We do not care what you call it, so it is mandatory and will protect us against these other State laws.

Mr. J. C. Makepeace, of Wareham, Mass., said:

I can not myself see how any harm could come to any man, be he grower or dealer, by a compulsory mandatory bill, not only for cranberries but for all other commodities of a like nature.

Mr. Joseph J. White, New Lisbon, N. J., said:

The people need a national standard, but to be effective for interstate business it should be mandatory, otherwise it would be of no value in relieving the shippers of fruit from the increasing difficulty of trying to conform to conflicting State laws.

Mr. Andrew Bissig, Grand Rapids, Mich., said:

The Wisconsin growers prefer to have a mandatory law on account of the other States.

Out of 25 or 30 persons appearing before the committee not a single person opposed the mandatory features of this bill. The voice of all who gathered at the hearing was to the effect that a permissive law would not remove the existing evils.

The pure-food act was passed for the purpose of protecting the trade on the contents of the package. The law at first was made permissive, requiring the manufacturers to make correct markings on the packages as to contents. Its supporters then claimed that the trade was anxious to comply with the permissive features. What was the result? The trade largely failed to make any markings at all and in numerous instances removed the old markings.

Thus the permissive law proved a failure, so Congress at a later date came to the rescue of the consumers and passed a mandatory law which is now giving fairly good satisfaction.

Massachusetts at first passed a permissive law in reference to the berry basket whereby the contents was fixed, but if the "standard" was not used it should be marked "short." What was the result? Most of the trade put out a basket short in contents and marked it short. The law was a failure, and then the State passed a mandatory standard basket law.

A national permissive barrel would have no effect upon the Virginia standard barrel of 11 pecks. Neither would it have any effect whatever upon the standard barrel prescribed by other States. We would thus have the example of the National Government making permissive laws while the States are making mandatory laws on these same subjects.

If the law is permissive, will the States that have adopted mandatory standards abandon them and take up the Government's permissive barrel? Evidently not. These States would still brand their standard barrel like Virginia does—"Virginia standard."

President Washington in January, 1790, called the attention of Congress to the great importance of uniformity in currency, weights, and measures, and again in December, 1790, called attention to the importance of this subject.

President Adams also called the attention of Congress to uniformity in weights and measures. Yet we now have persons who are advocates of and who are insisting on permissive legislation.

Permissive standards will never make a landing—never will get anywhere. The States are making and will continue to make mandatory standards under their police power, while the National Government, in a sleepy way, is passing permissive laws and proclaiming to the people that they may adopt the standard or that they may have any standard they want if they will only mark it "short."

The demand of the hour is for uniform and mandatory laws that will set aside the mandatory and permissive laws of the States and that will for all time fix a national standard, not under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, but under the sovereign right that gives Congress the power to fix standards of weights and measures, and thus cure the malady that is hampering the trade. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to reserve the remainder of his time?

Mr. DILLON. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves 35 minutes. Now, if there is any member of the committee who desires to fight this bill, the Chair will recognize him. If not, the Chair will recognize any other gentleman in the House who desires time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I desire to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] yields to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Michigan in yielding time to me, because I am very strongly in favor of the bill.

The need for this bill is almost self-evident. When it is known that there is a considerable diversity in the States with regard to their various standards of barrels for fruits and vegetables, and when it is remembered that a very large part of the commerce with regard to such fruits and vegetables is interstate, it becomes evident at once, it seems to me, that there ought to be a uniform-standard barrel.

It is said here by way of objection that this bill, which is drawn for the purpose of securing uniformity in the barrel, would interfere in some way with the rights or the sales of small producers, farmers, and truckmen. It certainly would not interfere with the rights of small dealers, farmers, truckmen, or others unless they proposed to sell by the barrel. It only regulates barrel sales. Gentlemen may argue that the language means otherwise, but, I think, with no effect when they come to examine the terms of the bill carefully.

Section 2 provides that it shall be unlawful to sell a barrel containing fruits, vegetables, or any other dry commodities unless the barrel conforms to this standard. It is regulative only of sales by the barrel. If a man desires to sell a peck or a bushel or any other amount from an open barrel that is not under any circumstances regulated by the terms of this bill, and it seems to me that when gentlemen come to think about the question carefully they ought to agree that if a barrel of anything of this kind is to be sold the men who purchase it ought to know what they are getting. The men who contract to purchase a certain number of barrels of fruit ought to know what they are getting, so that the contract may be interpreted with accuracy. That is now impossible under existing law. We have the right, as has been said—and it can not be contradicted—to establish this standard whenever we determine so to do, and, Mr. Speaker, the time has come when we ought to do so with regard to these transactions.

This is not the result of the committee's endeavor. This campaign for the procurement of the standard barrel has been going on for some years. It has been difficult to bring all of the parties interested to a degree of unanimity of sentiment with regard to the size of the barrel. Finally, however, that has been secured. There is a general agreement now among all of those interested as to the barrel that is proposed here. Many of the States, merely for the sake of securing some degree of uniformity, have adopted this standard, and there are now more States using it than any other admitted standard. But it is desirable, as all must see, that we have this universal standard throughout the United States. I know of no action that has been taken by any agricultural or horticultural society, or any other body interested, board of trade or otherwise, that has not unqualifiedly approved this legislation. I know of no general interest in this country that has expressed itself that has not favored this legislation. It can harm no one.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. TOWNER. No injury can follow to any person under any circumstances that I can imagine who desires to do a legitimate business. Men who desire to sell ought to be as anxious to know what they are selling as men who desire to buy are anxious to know what they are purchasing. We are not legislating here for the purpose of assisting those who attempt to defraud the people who are buying from them; and if we are not, then to establish a standard can work no injury to any legitimate industry or trade or commerce. Therefore it seems to me that gentlemen should hesitate long before they record themselves as voting against a proposition of this kind, so universally desired by the farmers, so universally desired by the fruit growers, so universally desired by the dealers in these commodities. It seems to me that we shall do no more than our plain duty if, in response to that desire, we to-day pass this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] made a very interesting and learned address on this subject, which, so far as the pending bill is concerned, I think is conclusive. In the course of his remarks, however, he referred to the pure-food legislation and stated that at the time of the passage of the pure-food law it contained a permissive quantity of contents provision and that the supporters of the bill stated at that time that a permissive quantity of contents mark would be sufficient and would be generally made use of. It was very natural for the gentleman to make that statement, because the pure-food law contains the right to mark the quantity and contents on the package, but did not require it.

However, as the bill was reported to the House it had a mandatory provision in it for marking the quantity and contents on the package, and the supporters of the bill at that time were in favor of a mandatory provision. It went out because a large number of manufacturers of the country induced their Representatives in Congress to believe that a mandatory provision was not workable. Subsequently the very manufacturers and wholesale dealers who had fought that mandatory provision in the pure-food bill as originally reported to the House waited upon me in my committee room, for I was then still the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and asked me to prepare a mandatory bill, which they thought was absolutely essential for carrying on the business of the country properly, and that it was workable. That bill afterwards, under the leadership of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] when he became chairman, was written into the law and is now the law. It shows progressive ideas in regard to these matters.

I think the present bill and I think both bills pending ought to be passed. I prefer the mandatory provision to apply throughout the country. The people who raise this produce that is put in barrels and the dealers throughout the country who deal in them are generally in favor of a uniform provision. The Constitution of the United States authorizes us to fix the standards of weights and measures. Years ago we passed a law for the use of the metric system, making it permissive. There have been at different times bills reported to the House making the metric system mandatory throughout the United States. These bills have not passed because of the confusion they would work, and because many Members thought it was desirable to first teach the children the use of the metric system instead of imposing it upon us who are older and who can not think in the metric system; but that question is not involved here. It is desirable, in my judgment, to have a uniform standard of weights and measures so far as it is practicable, and it is practicable as to fixing the standard for barrels and, I believe, of other containers of apples.

So that I hope the bill will be passed, although I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that this bill was introduced in 1913 and was reported to the House last June. As introduced it provided for its taking effect the 1st of July next, which was the proper date at the time the bill was introduced. I do not think the bill ought to take effect as to next year's crop. After all, the fixing of standards is directly addressed to the people who manufacture the barrels, and the pack next year ought not to be obligatory under this law either for the packing or the use of the apples during the following winter, because they will be put in barrels next fall for use the following winter.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I expect to offer an amendment making it July 1, 1916, one year later.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think that this bill will have served a very excellent purpose, whether it is enacted or whether it is defeated, in that it has at least drawn the attention of the American Congress to the fact that we have a chaotic system of weights and measures. Notwithstanding the mandate of the Constitution to provide a national standard of weights and measures, we have, as was shown in the learned address by the gentleman from South Dakota, Judge DILLON, a lot of laws from various States differing in a degree which is perfectly amazing, as revealed in his statement.

Now, I believe that we ought to have and I believe that that is the point to which the committee might confine the exercise of its authority—we ought to have submitted here for the consideration of Congress a bill fixing the standard of measures and weights. I do not believe that these bills ought to be conceived in the interest of the trade in California or the trade in Michigan or the trade in Virginia or anywhere else. I believe that when we declare by law what a barrel is to be it ought to be a barrel for each one of the States in the American Union and for all countries subservient to our laws. I do not believe there ought to be, as is intended in another bill which you will be called upon to consider, a provision for short weight or short measure. I believe that if we declare that a barrel shall contain so much cubic content we ought not to make a provision for a barrel short of that, and when we declare that a box suitable especially for the apple trade shall contain such cubic content we ought not to make a provision for a short measurement, even though the law may require that it shall be branded as short. To me it seems as monstrous as if we were to declare that a pound should contain so many ounces and then specifically make provision for having another pound introduced into commercial transactions containing a fewer number of ounces.

I was not especially impressed with this bill because it was conceived very largely in the interest of the cranberry trade. A hardship perhaps has been worked in that trade, because there had been hasty enactment of laws which compelled them to abandon customs which had been accepted by and were satisfactory to the trade; but, Mr. Speaker, if I have the honor to have any longer service on this Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I promise now that I shall endeavor to come before the American Congress with a scientifically constructed bill defining our standard measure, and it will make no provision, if I can avoid it, for any departure from those standards. I think that the effort to get a standard of measure, whether it be a box, a barrel, or a pound, which will differ in some sections of the country and under certain conditions of trade, is altogether unsound. I shall support this bill, notwithstanding the fact that I objected to it in the first instance, because it is an earnest endeavor to fix a standard measure, a thing we greatly need in the trade of the country.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I have certain amendments which I desire to present, and I desire to take just enough time now to explain them. I offer them, and ask to have them read in the order they are numbered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

First amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "inch," insert: "Barrels complying with the provisions of this section may be branded 'United States standard barrel' or 'United States standard cranberry barrel,' as the case may be. In all contracts when goods are sold by the barrel the word 'barrel' shall be construed to mean a barrel of the capacity herein defined."

Second amendment:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "barrel," insert the words "branded as above provided."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the third amendment would strike out, beginning with the word "prosecutions," in line 11, down to and including the word "measures," in line 16, and substitute what I have suggested, on page 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Third amendment: Page 3, line 11, strike out the following language: "Prosecutions for offenses under this act may be begun upon complaint of local sealers of weights and measures or other officers of the several States and Territories appointed to enforce the laws of the said States or Territories, respectively, relating to weights and measures."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

"It shall be the duty of each district attorney to whom any local sealer of weights and measures or other officer of the State or Territory appointed to enforce the laws of said State or Territory, respectively, relating to weights and measures, shall present satisfactory evidence of any violation of this act to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States for the enforcement of the penalty herein provided."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, these amendments have in view this——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins, will he yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am simply proposing to explain these amendments.

Mr. FOSTER. In connection with that, let me ask this question: A barrel of these dimensions is marked a standard barrel. If the gentleman's amendment should be adopted, could you ship apples in another barrel that was not marked standard barrel?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of these amendments would be to secure this situation. It would first provide a definition of what a standard barrel is in this country, so that if you and I desired to enter into a contract and use that term, the definition is in existence, and it is understood what we mean. In the second place, it would authorize you to brand a barrel, complying with the law, as being a United States standard barrel or a United States standard cranberry barrel. It would also permit you, if you did not so brand the barrel, to use any kind of a barrel that you wanted to. The penalty would be directed to those who use a barrel smaller than the standard barrel provided, but still misbrand it, and therein commit a fraud, and the penalty would be addressed to that fraud. The other amendment is simply a suggestion which came from the Solicitor for the Department of Commerce as to what he thought would be a more satisfactory way to secure the enforcement of the law, and I present it just as he suggested it in a letter to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TUTTLE]. I do not care to argue these amendments, because they are in line with what I said before, but I wish by them simply first to secure the definition of what a standard barrel is, and then to punish the misbranding of barrels under that.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the chairman of the committee some questions about this bill before I vote on it. In the description of a barrel here I find this:

Length of staves, 28½ inches; diameter of head, 16½ inches; distance between heads, 25¼ inches; circumference of bulge, 58½ inches, outside measurement; and the thickness of staves not greater than four-tenths of an inch.

The form, I suppose, does not apply to the thickness of the stave, but to the shape of the barrel. Is that correct?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think that is correct.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, then, a penalty is fixed for a violation of this act if it should become the law; that is, if some person should be so unfortunate to ship apples or other commodities of that kind in a barrel with staves which were a little over four-tenths of an inch in thickness, that could not affect the quantity, as it would contain the cubic inches required for a standard barrel, yet he could be haled into court and punished. Now, I ask the chairman of the committee if he wants to have that kind of a penal statute written upon the statute books here? I will wait for the gentleman's answer.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that I think the thickness of the stave is a matter of very minor consequence, and, as far as I am personally concerned as a member of the committee, I would have no objection whatever to have stricken out lines 9 and 10.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, that is just of enough minor concern that some rival in business might bring an honest producer in court and have him fined four or five times the value of the commodity he had shipped from one State to another. I think the parts suggested by the gentleman from Ohio should be stricken out of the bill. It would help it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield——

Mr. CULLOP. Now, if that is the kind of legislation that is to be enacted here, it will meet the derision of the public instead of its commendation.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. In a moment. Here is proposed to be enacted a statute that would punish a man who would be so unfortunate as to place his commodities in a barrel for shipment and perchance the staves of which the barrel is made should be a hair's breadth more than four-tenths of an inch in thickness. This would be an instrument used to harass honest producers.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me ask the gentleman if he will be kind enough to read the first sentence in section 3 and see if he does not think that meets exactly the situation to which he refers. It says:

That reasonable variations shall be permitted and tolerance shall be established by rules and regulations made by the Director of the Bureau of Standards and approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, if that is to be construed as the gentleman from Iowa construes it, the whole statute is worthless. It would leave it open to a town meeting to be a court to pass upon a standard barrel.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman is mistaken there.

Mr. CULLOP. I do not think I am.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It says:

Shall be established by rules and regulations made by the Director of the Bureau of Standards and approved by the Secretary of Commerce—

Not by a town meeting.

Mr. CULLOP. Then, you will take the enactment of a penal statute out of the hands of the legislative body and put it in the hands of a bureau, make this a bureau government not only in civil procedure, but in criminal as well. It seems to me that if a statute is to be written upon this subject it ought to be written so that it would be easily understood, free from ambiguity, and that a matter of this kind in the thickness of the staves of a barrel should not be the basis of a prosecution. It does not add in any way to the value of the measure.

The purpose of this is to have a uniform standard of measure and not the particular kind of a barrel in which commodities should be shipped. If you were to name the thickness of the stave, why not name the quality of the stave? Why not name what it should be made from and what kind of wood shall be used for it? Why put in four-tenths of an inch in thickness? Would it be injurious if it was five-tenths of an inch or six-tenths of an inch or perhaps three-tenths of an inch? And yet that is the kind of statute that is proposed here on this subject. It seems to me that the reading of the measure as it will naturally be construed by the courts would make it an instrument of injury and harm and in aid of monopoly, a source from which petty prosecutions could be instituted, to vex and harass rivals in business. I doubt its wisdom, and fear it will prove a great disappointment to its sponsors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one other thought occurs to me while on this subject. I know not who is urging the passage of this measure. I am not aware of any urgent demand among the producers of commodities for such containers as are here proposed and as this bill requires; but one thing is apparent—it might work a great hardship to those least able to bear it. If this measure is enacted and enforced, it will require considerable cost on the part of certain producers to comply with it, and which cost thereby made necessary will in the end be paid by the ultimate consumers. It will have a tendency to increase the cost of living rather than reduce it. It will add to the cost of production, which must be paid by the consumer. It might be well to consider whether it should be imposed at this time. But if its enactment is necessary, I for one think it advisable to postpone it for a while, and then it could probably be presented in a more satisfactory form.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ASHBROOK, Mr. SAUNDERS, and Mr. FOSTER rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] is recognized.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment and move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I want to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr CULLOP] yielded five minutes to me.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I was recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana had quit. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. He had quit, and I was recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] is recognized.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, as follows:

In section 4, line 20, strike out "fifteen" and insert "sixteen."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ASHBROOK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. WINGO. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. If the previous question is ordered, that will shut off all other amendments?

The SPEAKER. If anybody wants further debate, he can vote against the previous question.

Mr. WINGO. We have had members of the committee controlling most of the time. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Regular order will be the point of no quorum. And I make it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, pending that I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. WINGO. The point of no quorum was made.

Mr. MANN. The point of no quorum was not declared.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] withhold his point, so that the gentleman can offer a resolution?

Mr. WINGO. I will if the gentleman from Ohio will withdraw his motion for the previous question. Just so long as the parliamentary status is maintained——

The SPEAKER. It will be maintained. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

LATE REPRESENTATIVE PAYNE AND LATE REPRESENTATIVE MERRITT.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 697.

Resolved, That Sunday, February 7, be set apart for services upon the life, character, and public services of the Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE, late a Representative from the State of New York, and of the Hon. EDWIN A. MERRITT, Jr., late a Representative from the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] makes the point that there is no quorum present, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, January 7, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.
